THE WORKS

OF

THE LATE REVEREND

JAMES HERVEY, A. M.

RECTOR OF WESTON-FAVELL, IN NORTHAMPTONSHIRE.

CONTAINING

MEDITATIONS AND CONTEMPLATIONS.
THERON AND ASPASIO.
ASPASIO VINDICATED.

SERMONS.
MISCELLANEOUS TRACTS.
A COLLECTION OF LETTERS.

WITH

A PARTICULAR ACCOUNT OF THE LIFE, CHARACTER, AND WRITINGS OF THE AUTHOR.

TO WHICH IS ANNEXED,

A TABLE OF THE SCRIPTURES EXPLAINED,

AND A COMPLETE INDEX OF THE PRINCIPAL MATTERS CONTAINED IN THE WHOLE.

I AM NOT ASHAMED OF THE GOSPEL OF CHRIST: FOR IT IS THE POWER OF GOD UNTO SALVATION, TO EVERY ONE THAT BELIEVETH.——ROM. I. 16.

DO WE MAKE VOID THE LAW THROUGH FAITH? GOD FORBID: YEA, WE ESTABLISH THE LAW.——ROM. III. 31.

NEWCASTLE UPON TYNE,

PRINTED BY M. BROWN, AT THE BIBLE, IN THE FLESH-MARKET.

M.DCC.LXXXIX.

THE LIFE OF THE REVEREND JAMES HERVEY, A. M.

A REGARD to eminent writings, which diſplay genius, learning, orthodoxy, and piety, naturally excites a deſire to be acquainted with the writer; and this deſire is the ſtronger, when theſe writings are not only truly excellent in themſelves, but are univerſally admired, eagerly read by good people of all denominations, and calculated to promote the beſt intereſts of mankind. Hence one is fond to know the author in private life, how he ſpent his time, how he ſuſtained his character as a public teacher of religion, what influence the doctrines of grace, which he ſo warmly inculcated on others, had on his own heart and converſation; and finally, how he cloſed the laſt ſcene. Abundant ſatisfaction, as to all thoſe particulars, will be obtained from the following account.

Mr JAMES HERVEY was born on Friday the 26th of February, 1713-14, at Hardingſtone, a country-village, one mile from Northampton; his father being then miniſter of the pariſh of Collingtree, within two miles of Hardingſtone. His firſt inſtruction was from his mother, who taught him his letters and to read. Under her tuition he continued till he was ſeven years of age; when he was ſent, as a day ſcholar, to the free grammar-ſchool at Northampton, of which the Rev. Mr Clarke, Vicar of St Sepulchre's in the ſaid town, was at that time maſter.

At this ſchool he remained till he was ſeventeen years old, and learned the Latin and Greek languages; in which his genius and memory would have enabled him to have made a much earlier progreſs, if it had not been prevented by his ſchoolmaſter, who would not ſuffer him, or any of his ſcholars, to learn faſter than his own ſon. Whilſt Mr Hervey was at ſchool, though he ſhewed a remarkable dexterity at all the innocent games uſual among children; yet he had a perfect indifference for the acquiſitions he made by his ſkill in theſe games, which he practiſed only for exerciſe and amuſement.

In the year 1731; at the age of ſeventeen, he was ſent by his father to the univerſity of Oxford, and entered of Lincoln college there, under the tuition of the Rev. Mr Hutchins, Doctor, and Rector of that college. He reſided in the univerſity ſeven years, and took the degree of Bachelor of Arts. The firſt two or three years were ſpent by him with ſome degree of indolence, or rather leſs application to his ſtudies than he afterwards uſed. But in 1733, about his nineteenth year, becoming acquainted with ſome perſons, who began to diſtinguiſh themſelves by their ſerious impreſſions of religion, and their zeal for the promotion of it, he was engaged, by their influence, in a ſtricter attachment both to piety and learning. He made himſelf maſter of Dr James Keill's Anatomy, Dr Derham's Phyſico-theology and Aſtro-theology, the Spectacle de la Nature [Nature Diſplayed] as tranſlated by Mr Humphreys; which laſt work he read with a peculiar ſatisfaction. Nor was he leſs delighted by the Eſſay on Pope's Odyſſey, written by the Rev. Mr Spence, Prebendary of Durham; to which elegant and judicious diſcourſe Mr Hervey often acknowledged that he owed more of his improvement in ſtyle and compoſition, than to any other which he had ever read.

In 1734, at the perſuaſion of a much valued friend, he began to learn the Hebrew language without any teacher, by the Weſtminſter grammar itſelf; but ſoon found that grammar too conciſe and difficult for the inſtruction of a learner; and therefore then deſpaired of ever attaining a competent knowledge in the Hebrew, though he afterwards made himſelf ſo thorough a maſter of that ſacred language.

It appears from his letters to his ſiſter in 1733 and 1734, that though he then ſhewed a pious and ſerious turn; yet theſe letters either ſpeak a language different from free grace, for which we find he was afterwards ſo powerful an advocate, or at leaſt they treat very confuſedly of it. The truth is, he was then a ſtranger to, and had ſtrong prepoſſeſſions againſt the doctrine of juſtification by faith in imputed righteouſneſs. And he acknowledges, in a note on his Deſcant upon Creation, that Mr Jenks's excellent treatiſe, entitled, Submiſſion to the righeouſneſs of God, was the inſtrument of removing his prejudices, and reducing him to a better judgment.

He entered into holy orders, as ſoon as his age, and the canons of the church, would allow. And though the preciſe time of his taking orders cannot be aſcertained, yet it appears to have been in the end of 1736 or the beginning of 1737; at leaſt, it appears from one of his letters, that he had a curacy in the beginning of the latter year. Whilſt he was at Oxford, he had a ſmall exhibition of about 20l. a-year; and when he was ordained, his father preſſed him very much to take ſome curacy, in or near Oxford, and to hold his exhibition: but this he would by no means comply with, thinking it an injuſtice to detain it, after he was in orders, from another perſon, who might more want the benefit of that proviſion. On his leaving Oxford in 1736, he went to his father, and became his curate. He afterwards went to London; and after ſtaying ſome time there, became curate at Dummer. Here he continued about twelve months; and, upon his leaving that curacy, in the year 1738, he was invited and went to Stoke-Abbey, in Devonſhire, the ſeat of his worthy friend, the late Paul Orchard, Eſq. Here he lived upwards of two years, in great eſteem and friendſhip with that worthy gentleman, who valued him very much for his piety. A remarkable proof of the great regard he had for him on that account, he ſhewed on the following occaſion.——When his eldeſt ſon, Paul Orchard, Eſq; to whom the ſecond volume of his Meditations is dedicated, was to be baptized, he inſiſted that Mr Hervey ſhould be one of his godfathers, that he might have an eye to his Chriſtian education; and this he did in preference to many gentlemen of large eſtates in that neighbourhood, who would have thought themſelves honoured to have ſtood ſponſors for Mr Orchard's ſon.

In the year 1740, he undertook the curacy of Biddeford, fourteen miles from Stoke-Abbey, where he lived greatly beloved by his people. His congregation was large, though his ſtipend was ſmall: his friends, therefore, fore, made a collection yearly for him, which raised his income to 60l. per annum, so highly did they esteem him. At Biddeford he was curate about two years and a half, and remained so until there was a new rector of that church, who dismissed Mr Hervey from his curacy, against the united requests of his parishioners, who offered to maintain him at their own expence. During the time that Mr Hervey lived in the west, viz. from 1738, till the latter end of 1743, his family heard very little of him, by reason of the great distance he was from them; though he laboured diligently in the service of his Master. Here it was that he planned his Meditations, and probably wrote some part of them. He says in his first volume of Meditations, that it was on a ride to Kilkhampton, in Cornwall, that he went into the church, where he lays the scene of his Meditations among the Tombs.

In August 1743, or thereabouts, he returned from Biddeford to Weston-Favell, leaving behind him many disconsolate friends, and officiated as curate to his father. Here he paid the greatest attention to his duty, and faithfully preached the gospel of Christ.

The first of his writings which raised the attention of the public, was his Meditations among the Tombs, Reflections on a Flower-Garden, and, a Descant on Creation, published in February 1745-6. Of this kind of writing we had before an example from no less a man than the great philosopher Mr Boyle *, in his Occasional Reflections on several subjects, written in his younger years.

Mr Hervey's performance was so well received by the public, that it has already passed through about twenty editions in London, besides many surreptitious ones in Ireland. A second volume, containing Contemplations on the Night and Starry Heavens, and, A Winter-piece, was published in December 1747 †.

In June 1750, his health being much impaired by his great attention to duty, and his family and friends judging that the change of air might be of benefit to him, they formed a design, which they executed, of conveying him to London, under a pretence of his riding a few miles in a friend's post-chaise, who was going thither, and of which he pleasantly complains in a letter, dated June 28, 1750, to a friend upon his arrival there.

He staid in London until April or May 1752, during which time he was visited with a severe sickness, which had well nigh put a period to his painful life. But he recovered; and, upon his father's death in 1752, he returned to Weston, where he constantly resided till his death.

Mr Hervey took his degree of Master of Arts, at Cambridge, in 1752, when he entered at Clare-hall; and as he was of sufficient standing at Oxford, he staid only the few days required by the statutes to perform the university-exercise.

It may be thought strange, that he who had refused to hold his exhibition at Oxford, along with a curacy, should, upon his father's death, accept of the two livings of Weston-Favell and Collingtree, and hold them during his life. It was very far from being his choice, and it was what he had for a long time refused to do. He was determined against being a pluralist; and notwithstanding his father kept him at Oxford, with a design that he should take his degree of Master of Arts, and constantly urged him to do it; yet he could not be persuaded to yield to such a request, though he was of a sufficient standing to have taken the same, looking upon that step as a qualification intended for his future holding both his father's livings. When his father died, he remained determined to have Weston-Favell only and this he frequently declared to his family and friends, and refused to accept of Collingtree, or to qualify himself for the same; insomuch that it was in danger of lapsing to the Bishop. But at length, through the earnest and constant entreaties of his family, and of his friends, who, unknown to him, had sent to, and procured from Oxford, the necessary certificates of his being a Batchelor of Arts, in order to his taking his Master's degree at Cambridge, he was, after much importunity, prevailed on to comply with their requests, hoping that he might be thereby enabled to do so much the more good. And when he waited upon Dr Thomas, the then Bishop of Peterborough, for institution to Collingtree, which was near six months after he had been inducted into Weston, he said to him, "I suppose your Lordship will be surprised "to see James Hervey come to desire your Lordship to "permit him to be a pluralist; but I assure you, I do it to "satisfy the repeated solicitations of my mother and my "sister, and not to please myself." In November 1752, he published his Remarks on Lord Bolingbroke's Letters on the study and use of history, so far as they relate to the history of the Old Testament, and especially to the case of Noah, denouncing a curse upon Canaan: In a letter to a lady of quality *.

The year following, having been called upon to preach, on the 10th of May, the sermon at the visitation of the Rev. Dr John Browne, Archdeacon of Northampton, at All-Saints church in that town; he permitted it, the same year, for the benefit of a poor diseased child, to be printed, under the title of The Cross of Christ the Christian's glory. He had preached before this another sermon at the same church, which he had been solicited to print; but could not then be prevailed upon to do it: but since his death it has been published under the title of The ministry of reconciliation, &c. †

The same year he wrote a recommendatory preface to Burnham's Pious Memorials; or, The power of religion on the mind in sickness, and at death; exemplified by the experience of many eminent persons at those important seasons.

His Theron and Aspasio, published in January 1755, in three volumes octavo, met with the same approbation from the public as his Meditations; and the demand for this work likewise was very uncommon; it having passed through three editions in one year ‡.

In 1756, Mr Hervey being informed of the design of reprinting The gospel-mystery of sanctification, by the Rev. Mr Walter Marshall, and of prefixing to it, by way of recommendation, what he had said in its favour in Theron and Aspasio, he wrote a letter, dated Nov. 5, 1756, to his bookseller, giving his consent, and enlarging on that recommendation. This he did the more readily, as Mr Marshall's book might (for so he has declared) be looked upon as no improper supplement to the dialogues and letters contained in Theron and Aspasio.

His Theron and Aspasio was attacked by several writers, particularly by Mr Robert Sandeman, a congregational preacher at Edinburgh, in a book, entitled, Letters on Theron and Aspasio; wherein the doctrine of the gospel, under the title of the popular doctrine, is most abominably misrepresented, and its tendency aspersed. The Arminians too objected to that work; and Mr John Wesley in

* See Boyle's Life, by the late Dr Birch.

† There are few books in the English language, which in so short a time have ever passed through such numerous and very large editions, as Mr Hervey's Meditations; which not only please, but improve us; and were written with a view of familiarizing to our minds those sublime objects, which will be the Study and Delight of a glorious Eternity. How many have they transportingly entertained in their retirements and lonely walks, and how often elevated them to those lofty heights, from whence they could look down on all things below (the delights of good men's friendship excepted) with an easy indifference! A strain of the most serious piety and ardent devotion runs through them, and they tend to inculcate some of the most distinguished doctrines of the gospel, such as the necessity of regeneration, the utter impotency of fallen man to help himself, the efficacy of the grace of God for that purpose, and the justification of a guilty sinner through faith in the blood of Christ.

* The Rev. Mr Peter Whalley, Vicar of St Sepulchre's in Northampton, has published, by way of supplement to this piece of Mr Hervey's, a vindication of the evidences and authenticity of the gospel, from the objections of the late Lord Bolingbroke.

† A defence of this sermon, from the groundless objections raised against it by some inconsiderate readers, will be found among Mr Hervey's tracts in this edition.

‡ This is the most valuable book, written in any language, on that grand and distinguishing doctrine of Christianity, the justification of a sinner before God by the righteousness of Christ imputed to him; which spreads itself through the whole system of divinity; and which Luther justly calls articulus stantis vel cadentis ecclesiæ. In Mr Hervey's own words, "the beauty and excellency of the scriptures,—the ruin and depravity of human nature,—its happy recovery, founded on the atonement, and effected by the Spirit of Christ, are some of the chief points vindicated, illustrated, and applied in this work. "—But the grand article, that which makes the principal figure, is the imputed righteousness of our divine Lord; from whence arises our justification before God, and our title to every heavenly blessing: An article, which, though eminent for its importance, seems to be little understood, and less regarded; if not much mistaken, and almost forgotten."

particular

ticular wrote against it. Mr Cudworth wrote a defence Theron and Aspasio; and Mr David Wilson, minister the Scots congregation in Bow-lane, London, published ook, entitled, Palæmon's creed reviewed, &c. in which he dicates Mr Hervey's doctrine, and exposes that of Mr ndeman.

Mr Hervey's own defence of Theron and Aspasio against objections of Mr John Wesley, was transcribed fair for press from his short-hand copy, within a few pages; l would have been published in a volume of the same with Theron and Aspasio, had he lived a few weeks ger. The manuscript was left in the possession of his other, Mr William Hervey, wine-merchant in Miles's-e, London; who published it in 1766, for the reasons en by him in a preface prefixed to it *.

In August 1757, Mr Hervey obliged the public with ree sermons preached by him on the late public fast-days. which, in the third edition, in 1759, were added his itation-sermon preached in 1753; his posthumous ser-on on the ministry of reconciliation; and his considera-ns on the prevailing custom of visiting on Sundays. In posterior edition of these were given his Remarks on rd Bolingbroke's letters, and a treatise on the religious ucation of daughters †.

In the same year likewise, he published a new edition his favourite author, Mr Jenks's Meditations, in two lumes octavo; to which he wrote a very strong re-mmendatory preface, shewing the use of those medita-ns, and the reason for such republication ‡.

He intended to have wrote a treatise on gospel-holiness, a supplement to Theron and Aspasio; and actually rote a very excellent and judicious plan of it, which he mmunicated in letters to some of his correspondents; but e did not live to finish it, to the very great loss of the blic.

His labours, both in his ministerial office, and in his udy, were pursued by him as long as possible, under the disadvantage of a very weak constitution of body; which, gether with the severity of his last illness, he supported ot only with incredible patience, but without a single ex-ression of peevishness. That illness had long been coming n him; but greatly increased in the beginning of October 758, and grew very formidable in the December follow-ng. For on Sabbath the 3d of that month, in the even-ng, after prayer in his family, he seemed to be arrested with the messenger of death; so that the united assistance f his sister and servant, with difficulty, enabled him to et up stairs into his room, from whence he never came own. His illness gaining ground every day, he soon be-ame sensible that his end was approaching. He had fre-quent and violent returns of the cramp, which gave him most acute pain. He had likewise a hectic cough, which afflicted him so grievously in the night, that he could sel-dom lie in bed till four‖ in the morning; and was often obliged to rise at two, especially as opium (how much so-ever guarded by other medicines) would not agree with him. On the 15th of that month, he complained of a pain in his side; for which, at his own desire, he was blooded, though his physician, Dr Stonhouse, in whom he placed the greatest confidence, had objected to it, apprehending him too weak to bear any evacuation of that kind. When the surgeon came, he could scarcely perceive any pulsa-tion, and therefore took away no more than four ounces of blood; intimating to his relations and friends, that the case was desperate, and that he had blooded him very un-willingly, and merely to satisfy Mr Hervey's desire, who had some hope that the pain might possibly be relieved by it. His curate, the Rev. Mr Abraham Maddock, being much with him in the afternoon of that day, Mr Hervey spoke to him in strong and pathetic terms of his assurance of faith, and of the great love of God in Christ. "O!" said he, "what has Christ, how much has Christ done for "me; and how little have I done for so loving a Saviour! "If I preached even once a-week, it was at last a burden to "me. I have not visited the people of my parish, as I "ought to have done; and thus have preached, as it were, "from house to house. I have not taken every opportu-"nity of speaking for Christ."

These expressions being accompanied with tears, which were too visible not to be observed; and lest his tears should be misinterpreted, as they had been conversing about his expected end, and of his assurance of happiness, he proceeded thus: "Do not think, that I am afraid to "die. I assure you I am not. I know what my Saviour "hath done for me, and I want to be gone. But I won-"der and lament to think of the love of Christ in doing so "much for me; and how little I have done for him." And in another conversation, discoursing also of his approaching dissolution, which he did with the utmost calmness and se-renity; and of the little which we know of God's word; he said, "How many precious texts are there big with the "most rich truths of Christ, which we cannot compre-"hend, which we know nothing of; and of those we do "know, how few do we remember? Bonus textuarius est "bonus theologus. "A good textuary is a good divine;" "and that is the armour; the word of God is the sword. "Those texts are the weapons which I must use, when "that subtile spirit, that arch-adversary of mankind, comes "to tempt and sift me in my last conflict. Surely I had "need be well provided with these weapons; I had need "have my quiver full of them, to answer Satan with texts "out of the word of God, when he assaults me. Thus did "Christ when he was tempted in the wilderness."

On the 19th the pains of his body abated, and he grew drowsy and lethargic; but in the night following his im-mediate death was apprehended.

The next day, the 20th, he was visited by Dr Ston-house, who declared, that, in his opinion, Mr Hervey could not live above three or four days; and happening to speak of the many consolations through Christ, which a good man enjoys in the prospect of death, and discour-sing on the emptiness of worldly honour to an immortal, and on the unprofitableness of riches to the irreligious; Mr Hervey replied, "True, Doctor, true; the only valu-"able treasures are in heaven. What would it avail me "now to be Archbishop of Canterbury? Disease would "shew no respect to my mitre. That prelate * is not "only very great, but, I am told, he has religion really "at heart. Yet it is godliness, and not grandeur, that "will avail him hereafter. The gospel is offered to me a "poor country parson, the same as to his Grace. Christ "makes no difference between us. Oh! why then do "ministers thus neglect the charge of so kind a Saviour; "fawn upon the great, and hunt worldly preferments "with so much eagerness, to the disgrace of our order? "These, these are the things, Doctor, and not our po-"verty, or obscurity, which render the clergy so justly "contemptible to the worldlings. No wonder the service "of our church, grieved I am to say it, is become such a "formal, lifeless thing, since it is, alas! too generally exe-"cuted by persons dead to godliness in all their conversa-"tion; whose indifference to religion, and worldly-mind-"ed behaviour, proclaim the little regard they pay to the "doctrines of the Lord, who bought them."

When the Doctor was going away, Mr Hervey, with great tenderness, observed to him, that as not long ago he had a dangerous fall from his horse, by which he was much bruised; and as he had been lately ill, and then looked very pale, he hoped he would think on these nar-

* This treatise contains the best, the most evangelical, and the most elaborate account of that righteousness, which is imputed to a sinner for his justification; and will be read with the highest delight, by every one that adores the Son of God as the Lord our righteousness.

† These sermons and tracts are so valuable and excellent, that every one who reads them, will lament that he did not enrich the library of Christianity with more of those precious treasures; which shew the accomplished gentle-man, the learned scholar, the orthodox divine, the pious Christian, the cham-pion for the distinguishing doctrines of Christianity, and the foe to self-depen-dence, and every species of vice and infidelity.

‡ This preface, with that to Burnham's pious memorials, his letter to the publisher of Marshall on sanctification, one to the publisher of Mr Traill's works, &c. are annexed to his tracts in this edition.

‖ When Mr Hervey was in tolerable health, he rarely lay in bed after six, even in the winter; and rose still earlier in the summer.

* The late Dr Thomas Secker, who died Aug. 3, 1768.

row escapes, so often fatal to others, as a kind of warning from God to him, and remember them as such; adding, "How careful ought we to be to improve those years "which remain, at a time of life, when but few can re-"main for us *?"

The day before his death, Mr Hervey went a few steps across his room; but immediately finding his strength failing him, he sunk rather than fell down; his fall being broken by his sister, who observing his weakness, ran and caught him; but he fainted away, and was in all appearance dead, it being a considerable time before any pulse could be perceived. When he came to himself, his brother Mr William Hervey, who was come from London to visit him, said, "We were afraid you were gone."—He answered, "I wish I had." And well he might wish so, for his strength was quite exhausted, his body extremely emaciated, and his bones so sore, that he could not bear any one to touch him, when it was necessary to move him about. Yet, under all this calamity, he was ever praising God for his mercies †, and for enduing him with patience ‡.

On the 25th, (Christmas-day) on which he died, Mr Maddock paying him his morning visit, Mr Hervey lifted up his head, and opening his eyes, as he sat in his easy chair, (for he could not lie in bed) to see who it was, and said, "Sir, I cannot talk with you." He complained much all this day of a great inward conflict which he had, laying his hand upon his breast, and saying, "O! you "know not how great a conflict I have." During this time, he almost constantly lifted up his eyes towards heaven, with his hands clasped together in a praying form, and said, two or three times, "When this great conflict is over, then—" but said no more; though it was understood he meant that then he should go to rest.

Dr Stonhouse came to him about three hours before he expired. Mr Hervey urged strongly and affectionately to the Doctor the importance and care of his everlasting concerns, as here is no abiding place; and entreated him not to be overcharged with the cares of this life ‖, but to attend, amidst the multiplicity of his business, to the "one "thing needful §:"

Which done, the poorest can no wants endure,
And which not done, the richest must be poor ¶.

The Doctor seeing the great difficulty and pain with which he spoke, (for he was almost suffocated with phlegm and frequent vomitings) and finding, by his pulse, that the pangs of death were then coming on, desired that he would spare himself. "No," said he, "Doc-"tor, no; you tell me I have but a few moments to live. "O! let me spend them in adoring our great Redeemer." He then repeated the 26th verse of Psal. lxxiii. Though my flesh and my heart fail me, yet God is the strength of my heart, and my portion for ever; and he expatiated in a most striking manner on these words of Paul, 1 Cor. iii. 22. 23. All things are yours; life and death; for ye are Christ's . "Here," says he, "is the treasure of a Christian. Death "is reckoned among this inventory; and a noble treasure "it is. How thankful am I for death, as it is the passage "through which I pass to the Lord and Giver of eternal "life; and as it frees me from all this misery you now see "me endure, and which I am willing to endure, as lo "as God thinks fit; for I know he will, by and by, in h "own good time, dismiss me from the body. Th "light afflictions are but for a moment, and then com "an eternal weight of glory. O! welcome, welcom "death!—Thou mayst well be reckoned among the tre "sures of the Christian. To live is Christ, but to die "gain." After which, as the Doctor was taking his fi leave of him, Mr Hervey expressed great gratitude for h visits, though it had been long out of the power of me cines to cure him. He then paused a little, and wi great serenity and sweetness in his countenance, thou the pangs of death were upon him, being raised a little his chair, repeated those words, Lord now lettest thou servant depart in peace, according to thy most holy and co fortable word, for mine eyes have seen thy precious salvati "Here, Doctor, is my cordial! What are all the cordi "given to support the dying, in comparison of that whi "arises from the promises of salvation by Christ? Th "this supports me." About three o'clock he said, "T "great conflict is over.—Now all is done."——Af which he scarce spoke any other words intelligibly, exce now and then precious salvation.

During the last hour he said nothing, but leaned h head against the side of an easy chair, and without a sig groan, struggle, or the least emotion in the world, he shu his eyes and died, between four and five in the afternoo on Christmas-day 1758, in the forty-fifth year of his ag God grant, that we may all live the life, and die the dea of the righteous;—and that our last end may be like his.

When his body was conveyed to church, it was cove ed, by his express desire, with the poor's pall, and he wa buried under the middle of the communion-table in th chancel of Weston-Favell church, on Friday Dec. 28, i the presence of a numerous congregation, full of regre for the loss of so excellent a pastor. His funeral was in deed a most awful and very affecting sight.—Mr Mad dock his curate, who buried him, was himself in tears.— Some were wringing their hands, others sobbing, many were silently weeping, but all were inwardly and sincere ly grieved, as their looks sufficiently testified;—and h attendants then bore a visible witness, that he had no been altogether unserviceable in his generation.—Th poor thankfully acknowledged; and, as they looked int his grave, seemed to say within themselves, "There lie "the man whose unwearied kindness was the constan "relief of my various distresses; who tenderly visited my "languishing bed, and readily supplied my indigent cir-"cumstances."—Others, once ignorant and ungodly, look-at his grave, and seemed by their expressive sighs to say, "Here are the last remains of that sincere friend who "watched for my soul.——I tremble to think into what irre-"trievable ruin I might quickly have been plunged, had "not his faithful admonitions and his repeated exhorta-"tions arrested me in the wild career. I was then unac-"quainted with the gospel of peace; but now enlightened "by his instructions, I see the all-sufficiency of my Sa-"viour. His discourses are still warm on my heart, "and I trust will be more and more operative on my "life *."

It may truly be said of Mr Hervey, that few lives have ever been more heavenly, and few deaths more triumphant. ——He died in the Lord, and is now at rest; where even the wicked cease from troubling. His name is recorded in the annals of eternity; and the honours conferred on him by Christ, will for ever continue blooming and incorruptible in the world of glory.

His character, both in his public and private capacity, was of the most exemplary kind.

As a minister, he performed all the duties of that office with the greatest strictness. In the pulpit he was earnest and fervent, and shewed that he felt the efficacy of what he preached. Nor did he think it sufficient to preach on the Lord's day only, but set up a weekly lecture every

* See Meditations among the tombs.

Wednesday

* Dr Stonhouse and Mr Hervey being then between forty and fifty years old. The Doctor lately entered into holy orders in the church of England, and got a good living in the country.

† He never received a bit of lemon to moisten his mouth, without thanking God for his bounty and goodness, in creating so many helps and refreshments to a sick and decaying body.

‡ A few years ago Mr Hervey had a terrible fever at his brother William's house, in which he had several blisters.——On this occasion Mr William Hervey wrote as follows to one of his intimate friends: "My brother is indeed an "example of patience.—He has not spoke (during the whole of his severe ill-"ness) one single word of peevishness.—I am persuaded he prays for you, and "remembers you, now he lies sick upon his bed. I hope this will find you "and yours well, walking in the fear of the Lord, and the comforts of his Holy "Spirit."

‖ See Luke xxi. 34. § Luke x. 42.

¶ Mr Hervey used frequently to repeat these lines with such an emphasis, and significant look, as conveyed their important meaning in a manner not easily to be forgot.

 This passage is illustrated in a very instructive manner by Dr Doddridge, in his Family-Expositor, and contains the substance of what Mr Hervey said, and to which he referred.

Wednesday evening *, at Weston-Favell church, which was very well attended. His zeal for the performance of his duty, was however, for some time before he died, much interrupted by the ill state of his health, which would not permit him personally to take due care even of the parish of Weston, where he resided. A circumstance that gave him inexpressible concern.——The last two or three years of his life he could scarce do any thing more than preach once on the Lord's day, when people from many miles around flocked to hear him. His Wednesday evening-lecture at seven he discontinued for the last year. He had not been able for some time to preach at Collingtree †, or to visit his parishioners at their own houses, as his custom had been: but he encouraged them to come to him, and to converse freely on the subjects relating to their eternal interests; and on such occasions he would speak with a force and propriety peculiar to himself. He would frequently lament his inability to serve his people, comparing himself to a bleeding, disabled soldier, and only not slain.

He always preached without notes, except on some very particular occasions; but his method was judicious, clear, and not encumbered with too many subdivisions. His weakness rendered him for several months before his death incapable of speaking to his congregation as usual, he shortened his discourses, and took a most useful method of inculcating his instructions: for after he had expounded his text, and divided his sermon into two heads, (rarely into more, and never exceeding three) he would speak briefly, and at the conclusion of each head enforce what he had said, by a pertinent text of scripture, desiring his congregation (which was generally very numerous) to turn to their Bibles, and double down that text. "Now," added he, "my dear brethren, if you forget my sermon, "you cannot forget God's word in this text, unless you "wilfully throw your Bibles aside. Shew these to your "children, or the absent part of your family; when you "return home." Then he gave a striking exhortation, and at the end of it another text for them to double down; so that they had always three texts: in order to their finding of which, he paused in the pulpit two or three minutes. This method was attended with another good effect:—it obliged the generality of his hearers to bring their Bibles along with them; for those who were without a Bible lost the benefit of the texts, and were unemployed, while the majority who had one were busy in looking for the passages referred to in his sermon.

He endeavoured as much as possible to divest himself in his public discourses of his usual elegancy of style, and to adapt his language to the lowest capacity. In this he followed the example of Luther, who in his Table-talk says, "If in my preaching I were to pay a regard to Philip Me-"lanchthon and other learned divines, then I should do "little good. I preach in the plainest manner to the illi-"terate, and that gives content to all. Hebrew, Greek, "and Latin, I spare, till we learned ones come together." Mr Hervey thought perspicuous language and evangelical doctrine of much more importance to his parishioners, than elaborate or ornamented discourses; though few men living, perhaps, were more capable of satisfying a polite or learned audience.

His method of catechising children in church, and of speaking to them in private, was very engaging and useful. He would put little questions to them, after they had repeated the words of the catechism: as for instance, "Well, my little maid, let me hear if you understand "what you said. If you do understand the meaning of "these words, you will then be able to answer the ques-"tions I shall put to you ‡." He would at these times ask not only such questions as were suitable to the words of the catechism, but also such as would strike at the capital vices of his parishioners, yet without giving personal offence *.

He did not forget that he was a minister in his house; for he worshipped God with his family twice a-day. He supped at eight every night, and at nine he expounded a text of scripture for about a quarter of an hour, and seldom longer, except when some friend was present, to whom he thought his discourse might be useful, or when particularly requested to enlarge. After this he concluded with prayer.

He breakfasted at nine, and about eight he called his family together, and required each of his servants to repeat by heart the text which he had explained the preceding evening, and then he would recapitulate his exposition: by which method, both his text and commentary were imprinted on their memories. After this he had prayers.

In the afternoon, when he was called down to tea, he used to bring his Hebrew Bible or Greek Testament with him, and would speak (as he was ever studious how he might promote the glory of God, and improve time) either upon one or more verses, as occasion offered, in the most instructive and entertaining manner imaginable. And in the summer-season he would now and then drink tea, when his health would permit him, with some of his most serious parishioners; and then five or six of the neighbours were invited, and Mr Hervey's conversation was remarkable affecting, as he had a happy talent at spiritualizing almost every incident, and was naturally of a most obliging and chearful disposition.

He was a member of an assembly formed for Christian improvement, which was established in his neighbourhood on the 7th of July, 1747, and constantly attended it so long as he was able to ride to the place of meeting. A short account of the rules of this assembly is given at the end of his tracts, together with two prayers composed by him for the use of the members thereof.

In the exercise of his charity, Mr Hervey chose to clothe the poor rather than to give them money; and he would get some judicious person to buy linen, coarse cloth, stockings, shoes, &c. for them at the best hand; alledging that the poor could not purchase on such good terms what they wanted at the little shops, and with small sums of money. "I am, said he, God's steward for the "poor, and I must husband the little pittance I have to "bestow upon them, and make it go as far as possible." But when money would be really serviceable to a family, as to a prudent housekeeper, distressed by sickness or misfortunes, he would give five or more guineas at a time; taking care that it should not be known whence the money came. Pope's compliment to Mr Allen of Bath, might be justly applied to him, who would Do good by stealth, and blush to find it fame.

He was particularly desirous of getting the advice of a physician (or at least of some judicious apothecary) for the sick poor; and was ever ready to procure them the very best medicines.—A most beneficial sort of charity to mankind; and in which it were to be wished he had many imitators.—He would frequently petition such physicians of his acquaintance in different parts of the kingdom, as he apprehended thus charitably disposed, to give their advice occasionally, when they rode through a town, to such

* This lecture was held during the winter half-year at seven, as it did not then interfere with the work of the labouring people; and he illuminated the church out of his own pocket, not chusing to put the parish to any additional expence.

† Weston-Favell, and Collingtree, the two family-livings, are within five measured miles of each other; which Mr Hervey and his curate used to attend alternately, till his ill health confined him entirely to Weston-Favell.

‡ See some farther account of his manner of catechising, in one of his letters.

* Some of his parishioners having lain in bed on a Sunday morning longer than he approved,—and others having been busy in foddering their cattle when he was coming to church, and several having frequented the alehouse, he thus catechised one of the children before the congregation:

Repeat me the fourth commandment—Now, little man, do you understand the meaning of this commandment?—Yes, Sir.—Then, if you do, you will be able to answer me these questions.—Do those keep holy the Sabbath-day, who lie in bed till eight or nine o'clock in the morning, instead of rising to say their prayers and read the Bible? No, Sir.—Do those keep the Sabbath who fodder their cattle, when other people are going to church? No, Sir.—Does God Almighty bless such people as go to alehouses, and don't mind the instructions of their minister? No, Sir.—Don't those who love God read their Bible to their families, particularly on Sunday evenings, and have prayers every morning and night in their houses? Yes, Sir.—A great variety of such pertinent and familiar questions he would frequently ask in the most engaging manner, on every part of the catechism, as he thought most conducive to the improvement and reformation of his parish.

ſuch poor creatures as the clergyman of the place, or ſome ſubſtantial inhabitant, ſhould recommend as real objects of compaſſion.—Mr Hervey would then with great pleaſure, and with as much gratitude to the phyſician, as if done to himſelf, defray the expence of what medicines were wanted. He greatly diſapproved indeed of the clergy's attempting to give medicines to their pariſhioners; as he judiciouſly inferred, that it was impoſſible for them to do it with the requiſite judgment. "Let my brethren," he would ſay, "give them wine, bread, or beer, and get "good ſpoon-meats made for them; but medicines are of "too important a nature to be given indiſcriminately."—He obſerved, that by his own method the ſick poor had the very beſt medicines, as the phyſician ſaw them himſelf, and bought them very cheap, becauſe the apothecary, knowing they were for charitable uſes, charged the phyſician for them no more than prime coſt *, with ſome little allowance merely for his trouble in compounding them; and as the phyſician knew what diſeaſes were curable, there was no waſte of medicines in fruitleſs attempts to cure caſes, which, though actually incurable, perſons of leſs judgment could not pronounce to be ſo.

He gave away a great number of good books with ſuitable inſtructions for their uſe; and eſpecially Bibles. In the blank leaf he frequently wrote ſomething capable of making an impreſſion, or elſe ſtuck in a printed paper relating to the promiſes of God, in and through Jeſus Chriſt, or to creation, preſervation, and redemption †.

All the future profits of his works he has left to ſome of the charitable uſes above ſpecified, except his Meditations; the copy of which he had ſold, after it had paſſed through ſeveral editions; which ſale of the copy, and the profits of the former impreſſions, amounted to about 700l. all of which he gave away in charity. He ſaid that it was devoted to God, and that he would on no account apply it to worldly uſes; that he wrote not for profit or fame, but to ſerve the cauſe of God; and as Providence had bleſſed his attempt, he thought himſelf bound to relieve the diſtreſſes of his fellow-creatures with it.

In any expences relating to himſelf, he was extremely frugal, that he might be liberal to others; and it was always his deſire to die juſt even with the world. "I will "be my own executor," ſaid he. And as he died on Chriſtmas-day, his fund expired almoſt with his life.—What little remained, he deſired might be given in warm cloathing to the poor in that ſevere ſeaſon.

To theſe inſtances of his charity, we may properly add an incident, which, how trifling ſoever in itſelf, yet affords a very ſtrong proof, not only of the benevolence of his heart, but of his regard to practical religion, and to the doing of every good work within his power.

A day or two before his death, when he was reduced to ſuch extreme weakneſs as to be unable to read, and could with difficulty ſpeak, a little account being ſettled with him by a friend, on the balance of which he received 18s. looking on the money with great indifference, he expreſſed himſelf to this effect: "I would gladly diſpoſe of this ſmall "ſum, in ſuch a manner as may do the moſt good. It is "the only act which I now am, and probably the laſt that "I ſhall be able to perform. Give yourſelf the trouble "of looking amongſt theſe books, and you will find Mr "Richards's pamphlet ‡: at the latter end of which are, I "remember, ſome hints concerning the means of promoting religion in ourſelves or others, which (even with "ſome additions and improvements, which you might "eaſily make) will not fill more than a ſheet of paper ‖, "and, if ſtuck up or framed, might be particularly uſeful "in that form.—Let then ſuch a number of them be printed and given away, as this money will admit of."—His orders were properly executed; and the evidences of ſuch an angelic temper were equally matter of edification and comfort to his friend, as this charitable legacy, if we may ſo call it, will be to all who receive it and rightly uſe it.

This incident affords a ſtriking evidence of the happy fruits and effects of his favourite doctrine and ſtrong expreſſions of the all-ſufficient righteouſneſs of Chriſt as the ſole requiſite to juſtification before God, and acceptance with him, and ſhews that indeed his faith wrought by love. No man had ever a greater diſregard for money; which he eſteemed unworthy of his notice on any other account, than as it furniſhed him with the means of doing good. Surely we may here borrow the ſentiment and expreſſion of the celebrated Mr Pope, and juſtly conclude, that

He felt his ruling paſſion ſtrong in death.

Mr Hervey was indeed too negligent of his dreſs, which, though it could not in the leaſt leſſen the reſpect paid to him in his own pariſh, and neighbourhood, where he was ſo well known, yet he would unqueſtionably have avoided it, if he had lived in a more public ſcene, where the decency and propriety of appearance are of much greater importance.

In learning he was inferior to few. Greek was almoſt as familiar to him as his native language. He was a great maſter of the claſſics; and in the younger part of his life had written ſome copies of verſes, which ſhewed no contemptible genius for poetry. He had a critical knowledge of the Hebrew tongue, and delighted in it.

With reſpect to his private capacity, he was never known to be in a paſſion. He lived as in heaven. No worldly concerns (though he ſometimes met with very trying ones) ever affected him. His humility rendered him invulnerable.——When he was miſrepreſented and calumniated, he would ſay, "Our enemies are ſometimes our beſt "friends, and tell us truths; and then we ſhould amend "our faults, and be thankful for ſuch information: and "if what they ſay be not true, and only ſpoke through "malice, then ſuch perſons are to be conſidered as diſeaſed "in their minds, and that he would pray for them. They "are to be pitied," ſays he, "and I might be as juſtly angry with a man, who is diſeaſed in his body."

All this he ſpoke with humility, ſerioufneſs, and ſweetneſs; for it was the language of his heart, and not of affectation. In his ordinary tranſactions with others, he was ever chearful, punctual, juſt, and candid, to perſons of every denomination.

He frequently wrote religious letters to his acquaintance according to their different circumſtances, in the moſt amiable and convincing manner; and he ſeemed to make it almoſt an invariable rule, not to write a letter on any occaſion, without at leaſt one pious ſentence* in it; and that not introduced in a forced and awkward manner, but interwoven ſo as to appear naturally to ariſe from the ſubject. Of this kind ſome ſpecimens may be ſeen in the note at the bottom of the page †.

Notwithſtanding Mr Hervey lived a very holy and exemplary life, preaching Jeſus Chriſt and him crucified,

and

* Whenever he ſolicited the aſſiſtance of apothecaries on theſe charitable occaſions, he deſired the favour of them to relinquiſh their uſual profits; promiſing, on that condition, to repay what they might be out of pocket.

† See a copy of this printed paper among his tracts.

‡ This pamphlet (wrote by the Rev. Mr Richards of Northampton, and formerly of Trinity College, Oxford) is entitled, Hints for religious converſation, with the afflicted in mind, body and eſtate, and with ſuch others as ſtand in need of ſpiritual aſſiſtance, eſpecially at the times when they are confined by ſickneſs.

‖ The Hints, &c. which were printed in the ſingle ſheet of paper, are ſubjoined to Mr Hervey's tracts in this edition.

* Nulla dies ſine linea, Nulla epiſtola ſine Chriſto, were Mr Hervey's maxims.

† Theſe ſpecimens are taken from haſty meſſage-cards, or billets, to ſome of his intimate friends.

"When I ſee my dear friend, we will talk about the contents of his laſt. "My money is Chriſt's, and I only deſire that he will give me benevolence to "diſpoſe of it willingly; diſcretion to beſtow it prudently. I hope you have "quite recovered, and adapted the Pſalmiſt's reſolution, Pſal. cxvi. 8, 9. What "do you think is the meaning of that remarkable expreſſion, I will walk before the Lord?

In another billet to a perſon about retiring from buſineſs, he writes,

"Thanks for your Witſius de œconomia fœderum. The time, I hope, is coming, when you will have leiſure to read, a heart to reliſh, and a tongue to "diſplay ſuch precious doctrines."

In another he writes,

"Let us all remember, my dear friend, that time is upon the wing;—eternity is at our door; therefore what we do for our bleſſed Maſter, we muſt do "quickly."

Mr Hervey's letters were collected, and publiſhed, in two volumes octavo, in 1760. A full and particular account of them is given in the preface prefixed to them in this edition. They exhibit, in their purport, compoſition, and tendency, a ſtriking and amiable picture of the ingenuity, learning, candour, and piety of the excellent author.

and inculcating the practice of real religion and holiness in heart and life, yet his enemies (for, strange as it is, even Mr. Hervey himself, the most inoffensive of men, had enemies) have not scrupled to assert, that "his tenets "were dishonourable to God, subversive of all gospel-"holiness, destructive even of common morality, and "very injurious to society itself, by making men melan-"choly, and regardless of business." These were the very words of an abusive and anonymous letter sent to him by the post; on which, that meek and most excellent man observed to an intimate friend, with all his usual mildness, "Indeed this gentleman may be said, I think, "to write at random. Surely he has never read my "works. If I knew where to direct to him, I should de-"sire him to turn to what I have advanced in the ninth "paragraph of my Contemplations on the starry heavens *, "and such a reply I would hope might convince him of "his mistake."

Some of Mr Hervey's friends thought he carried the Calvinistical tenets so far, that consequences disadvantageous to religion might be deduced from them, and which he himself, instead of assenting to them, would have startled at and rejected with abhorrence. The fact is, the doctrine he delivered in his writings, is purely scriptural, and agreeable to that contained in all the confessions of the reformed churches; and is so far from having a tendency to weaken the obligations to purity and holiness of life, that it promotes them in the most effectual manner, and has the most happy influence on morality. When persons of judgment have pointed out to him some expressions that were liable to be misunderstood in that respect, he always disavowed any such meaning; and affirmed, that the fault was not in the evangelical doctrines so much insisted on by him, but in the misapprehension, ignorance, or inattention of those who abused them to licentiousness. He would then add, he was ready to alter or retract any sentiment or expression which he apprehended to be truly objectionable; but that to make things equally clear to every one's apprehension, or to have the same effect upon every one's mind, was an impracticable attempt; that he professed himself a Calvinist, and that consequently the Arminians would not relish some things he advanced, though what he wrote was exactly conformable to the church-articles, which are Calvinistical; yet he hoped they would not reject the whole, because they could not in every point concur with him; and that his writings in general might be useful, how much soever some of his particular (though truly scriptural) opinions might be doubted or censured. And on this head let us hear Mr Hervey himself. He, in a letter written by him a very little before his happy death, thus expresses himself: "Do they who deny faith, and extol their good works, "distinguish themselves by the practice of them?—I will "be bold to say, that, on an impartial examination, the "majority will be found on the side of those who embrace "the doctrine of the imputation of Christ's righteousness, "and who expect salvation by him alone."

Of the compliments publicly paid to his piety and genius, it will be sufficient to insert a paragraph from the Northampton Mercury, which may be seen at the bottom of the page †; and the following eulogium extracted from the Rev. Mr Dodd's poem on the Epiphany.

——Thou, HERVEY, too,
Whose page and soul alike breathe humblest love
To thy ador'd Redeemer; thou hast shewn
That piety and polish'd elegance
May well together suit; and while remains
Or piety, or elegance, thy works,
Like genuine gold, the touchstone will abide,
And grateful to thy countrymen remain!
Oh! may I to my lowly strains derive
Some merit from the friendship of thy name;
Strains, whose exalted subject fills my heart
So constant with delight; and from thy tongue
In CONVERSE pours such streams of eloquence,
That the wrapt hearer wonders at his fears
Of death 'ere while, and glowing with the love
Of JESU, caught from thee, longs to behold
His Saviour in the clouds: for who can dwell
Amidst the sweetness of Arabian groves,
And not bear thence some fragrance?—Valu'd friend,
Proceed: and (thy too feeble strength renew'd)
May to hoar age thy journey be prolong'd,
And strew'd each step with blessings to mankind!

We shall close this account of Mr Hervey's life, with the following elegy on him †:

URANIA speak! in pensive numbers tell
How ZION trembled when great HERVEY fell!
When fail'd his strength, and when his pulse beat low,
Tell how she mourn'd to see th' impending blow!
O thou, to whom all sacred themes belong,
Pour forth the sweetly-melancholy song!
"Alas! grim death hath shot the fatal dart,
Which long seem'd pointed at his languid heart.
Th' insatiate tyrant, crown'd with sun'ral gloom,
In triumph drags him to the hollow tomb:
Who now so well can paint the blooming bow'r,
Or preach from Sepulchres at midnight hour?
Who now so well the starry heavens scan,
And read the lectures Nature meant for man?
No more his voice a careless world can move,
Or tell the wonders of redeeming love;
No more shall thousands round his pulpit throng,
To hear the heavenly precepts of his tongue:
For lo! above this gross, impurer air,
Releas'd from ev'ry pain, and every care,
He soars aloft (angelic hosts his guide)
On wings new plum'd, which ne'er before he try'd.
With rapid speed his golden pinions rise
Thro' starry plains, and skim th' empyrean skies.
And now where sparkling portals wide display
The blissful regions of eternal day;
His Lord receives him 'midst celestial choirs,
Who crown his head, and strike their golden lyres!
Thro' heav'n's glad courts the greeting anthems roll,
And joys new-blooming feast his ravish'd soul;
Joys which to tell all eloquence is faint,
And which the loftiest muse can never paint."

* Some, I believe, are apt to imagine, that they must renounce society, if they devote themselves to Christ; and abandon all the satisfaction of this world, if they once become zealous candidates for the felicity of another.—But this is a very mistaken notion, or else a very injurious representation of the doctrine, which is according to godliness. It was never intended to drive men into deserts, but to lead them through the peaceful and pleasant paths of wisdom, into the blissful regions of life eternal. It was never intended to strike off the wheels of business, or cut in sunder the sinews of industry; but rather to make men industrious from a principle of conscience, not from the instigations of avarice; that they may promote their immortal happiness, even while they provide for their temporal maintenance.—It has no design to extripate our passions, but only to restrain their irregularities; neither would it damp the delights of sense, but prevent them from evaporating into vanity, and subsiding into gall. A person may be chearful amongst his friends, yet joyful in God.—He may taste the sweets of his earthly estate, and at the same time cherish his hopes of a nobler inheritance in heaven.

The trader may prosecute the demands of commerce, without neglecting to negociate the affairs of his salvation:—The warrior may wear his sword; may draw, in a just cause, that murderous weapon; and yet be a good soldier of Jesus Christ, and obtain the crown that fadeth not away.—The parent may lay up a competent portion for his children, and not forfeit his title to the treasures either of grace or glory. So far is Christianity from obstructing any valuable interests, or with-holding any real pleasure, that it evidently advances the one and improves the other.

† On Christmas day, 1758, in the afternoon, died, in the 45th year of his age, the Rev. Mr James Hervey, Rector of Weston-Favell, near Northampton, and the author of the Meditations on the tomb, flowery garden, &c.—He was one of the most eminent instances of the power of Christianity upon the human mind.—In his ministerial province, he was pious, fervent, and indefatigable.—In his ordinary connections with the community, he was ever chearful, conscientiously punctual in all his dealings, and amiably candid to persons of every denomination.—To his charities he set not bounds, scarcely leaving himself the mere requisites of his station.—Under the severest trials of infirmity for several years, he displayed the highest example of fortitude, serenity, patience, and an entire resignation to the divine will.—His writings most abundantly evidence his learning and ingenuity.—But, reader, it is not the acquisitions of his understanding, but the improvements of his heart, and his confidence in the great Redeemer, which will now avail this most excellent man.

† The reader may be assured, that these verses were wrote by a very serious and well-disposed young man, apprentice to a Jersey comber, in the town of Northampton, in a low station of life, and of no liberal education; whose mind, by Mr James Hervey's preaching and writings, had been very early impressed with the sacred ardor of piety and poetry. The original copy is now in the hands of the Rev. Mr Richard Oseley, of Clipston, A. M. master of the free school there, to whom it was lately transmitted by a friend of the author, for his inspection and correction: the alterations he has made are not many; and, upon the whole, it may be considered as a kind of Christian epitaph; or, at least, a neat elegiac garland, not altogether unworthy of being hung over that great and good man's tomb.

Verses to Mr Hervey, on his Meditations, &c.

IN these lov'd scenes, what rapt'rous graces shine,
Live in each leaf, and breathe in ev'ry line!
What sacred beauties beam throughout the whole,
To charm the sense, and heal upon the soul!
In classic elegance, and thought—his own,
We see our faults, as in a mirror, shown:
Each truth in glaring characters express'd,
All own the twin-resemblance in their breast:
His easy periods, and persuasive page,
At once amend, and entertain the age:
Nature's wide fields all open to his view,
He charms the mind with something ever new:
On fancy's pinions, his advent'rous soul
Wantons unbounded, and pervades the whole;
From death's dark caverns in the earth below,
To spheres, where planets roll, or comets glow.

See him explore, with more than human eyes,
The dreary sepulchre, where GRANVILLE lies!
Converse with stones, or monumental brass,
The rude inscription, or the painted glass:
To gloomy vaults descend with awful tread,
And view the silent mansions of the dead.

To gayer scenes he next adapts his lines,
Where lavish nature in embroid'ry shines;
The jes'mine groves, the woodbine's fragrant bow'rs,
With all the painted family of flow'rs;
There, SACHARISSA! in each fleeting grace,
Read all the transient honours of thy face.

With equal dignity, how see him rise
To paint the sable horrors of the skies.
When all the wide horizon lies in shade,
And midnight-phantoms sweep along the glade;
All nature hush'd—a solemn silence reigns,
And scarce a breeze disturbs the sleeping plains.

Still, yet not less, in majesty of phrase,
He draws the full-orb'd moon's expansive blaze;
The waving meteors, trembling from on high,
With all the mute artill'ry of the sky:
Systems on systems, which in order roll,
And dart their lambent beams from pole to pole.

Hail, mighty genius! whose excursive soul
No bounds confine, no limits can controul;
Whose eye expatiates, and whose mind can rove,
Thro' earth, thro' æther, and the realms above!
From things inanimate can direct* the rod
In just gradation, to ascend to GOD.
Taught by thy lines, see hoary age grows wise,
And all the rebel in his bosom dies:
E'en thoughtless youth, in luxury of blood,
Fly the infectious world, and dare—be good;
Thy sacred truths shall reach th' impervious heart;
Discord shall cease, disease forget to smart:
E'en malice love, and calumny commend;
Pride beg an alms, and av'rice turn a friend.

Center'd in CHRIST, who fires the soul within,
The flesh shall know no pain; the soul, no sin;
E'en in the terrors of expiring breath,
We bless the friendly stroke, and live—in death.

Oxford, April 28, 1748.

BY A PHYSICIAN.

CELESTIAL meditant! whose ardours rise
Deep from the tombs, and kindle to the skies;
How shall an earthly bard's profaner string
Resound the flights of thy seraphic wing?
When great ELIJAH, in the fiery car,
Flam'd visible to heav'n, a living star,
A seer remain'd to thunder what he knew,
And with his mantle caught his spirit too.
Wit, fancy, fire, and eloquence have long
Been lost in vicious or ignoble song:
Sunk from the chastely grand, the pure sublime,
They flatter'd wealth and power, or murder'd time.
'Tis thine their devious lustre to reduce,
To prove their noblest power, their genuine use;
From earth-born fumes to clear their tainted flame,
And point their flight to heav'n—from whence they came.

O more than bard in prose! to whom belong
Harmonious style and thought, in rhymeless song:
Oft, by thy friendly conduct, let me tread
The lofty-whisp'ring mansions of the dead:
Where the grim tyrant, calcining kings and lords,
Grins at each fond distinction pride records,
Dumb, with immortal energy they teach:
Lifeless, they threaten, moulder'ring as they preach
To each succeeding age, through every clime,
The span of life, and endless round of time:
Hence may propitious melancholy flow,
And safety find me in the vaults of woe.

While ev'ry virtue forms thy mental feast,
I glow with fair sincerity at least;
I feel (my first attention) thy heart refin'd,
And taste, with bliss, the beauties of thy mind;
Collecting clearly, through thy sacred plan,
What reverence of GOD! what love to man!
—O! when at last our deathless forms shall rise,
And stow'rs and stars desist to entertise;
Shall then my soul, by thine inform'd, survey,
And bear the splendors of essential day!
But while my thoughts indulge the glorious scope,
(My utmost worth beneath my humblest hope)
Conscience, or some exhorting angel, cries,
"No lazy wishes reach above the skies.
"Would you indeed the perfect scenes survey,
"And share the triumphs of unbounded day;
"His love-diffusive life with ardor live;
"And die like this divine contemplative."

London, July 9, 1748.

BY A PHYSICIAN.

TO form the taste, and raise the nobler part,
To mend the morals, and to warm the heart;
To trace the genial source, we nature call,
And prove the GOD of nature friend of all;
HERVEY for this his mental landscape drew,
And sketch'd the whole creation out to view.
Th' enamell'd bloom, and variegated flow'r,
Whose crimson changes with the changing hour;
The humble shrub, whose fragrance scents the morn,
With buds disclosing to the early dawn;
The oaks that grace Britannia's mountains side,
And spicy Lebanon's superior pride†;
All loudly SOV'REIGN EXCELLENCE proclaim,
And animated worlds confess the same.
The azure fields that form th' extended sky,
The planetary globes that roll on high,
And solar orbs, of proudest blaze, combine,
To act subservient to the great design.
Men, angels, seraphs, join the general voice;
And in the Lord of Nature ALL rejoice.
HIS, the grey Winter's venerable guise,
Its shrouded glories, and instructive skies‡;
HIS, the snow's plumes, that brood the sick'ning blade;
HIS, the bright pendant, that impearls the glade;
The waving forest, or the whisp'ring brake,
The surging billow, or the sleeping lake.
The SAME, who pours the beauties of the spring,
Or mounts the whirlwind's desolating wing;
The SAME, who smiles in nature's peaceful form, Frowns in the tempest, and directs the storm.
'Tis thine, bright teacher, to improve the age;
'Tis thine, whose life's a comment on thy page,
Thy happy page; whose periods sweetly flow,
Whose figures charm us, and whose colours glow;
Where artless piety pervades the whole,
Refines the genius, and exalts the soul.
For let the [illegible]
It is Religion still that makes the man.
'Tis this, my friend, that streaks our morning bright;
'Tis this that gilds the horrors of our night.
When wealth forsakes us, and when friends are few;
When friends are faithless, or when foes pursue;
'Tis this that wards the blow, or stills the smart;
Disarms affliction, or repels its dart;
Within the breast bids purest rapture rise;
Bids smiling conscience spread her cloudless skies,
When the storm thickens, and the thunder rolls,
When the earth trembles to th' affrighted poles;
The virtuous mind, nor doubts nor fears assail;
For storms are zephyrs, or a gentler gale.
And when disease obstructs the lab'ring breath,
When the heart sickens, and each pulse is death;
E'en then religion shall sustain the just,
Grace their last moments, nor desert their dust.

August 4, 1748.

AS some new star attracts th' admiring sight,
His splendours pouring through the fields of light;
Whole nights, delighted with th' unusual rays,
On the fair heav'nly stranger we gaze:
So thy fam'd volumes sweet surprise impart;
Mark'd by all eyes, and felt in ev'ry heart.
Nature, inform'd by thee, new paths has trod,
And rises, here, a preacher for her GOD;
By fancy's aids, mysterious heights she tries,
And lures us, by our senses, to the skies.
To deck thy style collected graces throng,
Bold as the pencil's tints, yet soft as song.
In themes, how rich thy vein! how pure thy choice!
Transcripts of truths, own'd clear from scripture's voice:
Thy judgment these, and piety attest,
Transcripts—read easily fairer in thy breast,
There, what thy works would shew, we best may see,
And all they teach in doctrine, live in thee.
Oh!—might they live!—Our pray'rs their fate engage;
But thy fix'd languors yield us sad presage.
In vain skill'd art practises her healing art:
Disease, long foe, entrenches at thy heart.
Yet on new labours still thy mind is prone,
For a world's good too thoughtless of thy own.
Active, like day's kind orb, life's course you run,
Its sphere still glorious, tho' a setting sun.
Redemption opes thee wide her healing plan,
Health's only balm, her sov'reign'st gift to man.
Themes sweet like these thy ardors, fresh, excite:
Warm at the soul, they nerve thy hand to write;
Make thy try'd virtues in their charms appear,
Patience, rais'd hope, firm faith, and love sincere;
Like a big constellation, bright they glow,
And beam out lovelier by thy night of woe.
Known were thy merits to the public long,
'Ere own'd this feebly in my humble song.
Damp'd are my fires; my heart dark cares depress;
A heart, too feeling from its own distress.
Proud on thy friendship, yet to build my fame,
I gain'd my page ‖ a sanction from thy name.
Weak these returns (by gratitude tho' led)
Where mine shall in thy fav'rite leaves be read.
Yet o'er my conscious meanness hope prevails;
Love gives me merit, where my genius fails.
On its strong base my small desert I raise,
Averse to flatt'ry, as unskill'd to praise.

Mile-End Green, MOSES BROWNE.
Feb. 23. 1749.

WHENCE flow these solemn sounds? this rapt'rous strain?
Cherubic notes my wond'ring ear detain!
Yet 'tis a mortal's voice: 'tis HERVEY sings!
Sublime he soars on contemplation's wings:
In ev'ry period breathes extatic thought.
HERVEY, 'twas heav'n thy sacred lessons taught.
Celestial visions bless thy studious hours,
Thy lonely walks, and thy sequester'd bow'rs.
What fav'ring pow'r, dispensing secret aids,
Thy cavern'd cell, thy curtain'd couch, pervades?
Still hov'ring near, observant of thy themes,
In whispers prompts thee, or inspires thy dreams?
JESUS! effulgence of paternal light!
Ineffably divine! supremely bright!
Whose energy according worlds attest,
Kindled these ardors in thy glowing breast.
We catch thy flame as we thy page peruse;
And faith in ev'ry object JESUS views.
We in the bloomy breathing garden trace
Somewhat—like emanations of his grace:
Yet must all sweetness and all beauty yield,
Hume's grove, and Thomson's flow'ry field,
Compar'd with JESUS: meanly, meanly shows
The brightest lily, faint the loveliest rose.
Divine Instructor! lead thro' midnight-glooms,
To moralizing stars, and preaching tombs:
Thro' the still void a Saviour's voice shall break,
A ray from JACOB's star the darkness streak:
To him the fairest scenes their lustre owe;
His cov'nant brightens the celestial bow;
His vast benevolence profusely spreads
The yellow harvests, and the verdant meads.
Thy pupil, HERVEY, a Redeemer finds
In boundless oceans, and in viewless winds:
He reins at will the furious blasts, and guides
The rending tempests, and the roaring tides.
O give, my soul, thy welfare to his trust;
Who rais'd the world, can raise thy sleeping dust!
He will, he will, when nature's course is run,
'Mid falling stars, and an extinguish'd sun;
He will with myriads of his saints appear.
O may I join them, tho' the meanest there!
Tho' nearer to the throne my HERVEY sings;
Tho' at humbler distance strike the strings;
Yet both shall mingle in the same employ,
Both drink the fulness of eternal joy.

Clerkenwell Green, JOHN DUNCH.
Feb. 24, 1749-50.

WHAT numbers of our race survey
The monarch of the golden day,
Night's ample canopy unfurl'd,
In gloomy grandeur round the world,
The earth in spring's embroid'ry dress'd,
And ocean's ever-working breast!

* An allusion to the custom of shewing curious objects, and particularizing their respective delicacies, by the pointing of a rod. † The cedar. ‡ Referring to the Winter-piece. ‖ Sunday Thoughts.

And

And ſtill no grateful honours riſe
To him who ſpread the ſpacious ſkies,
Who hung this air-ſuſpended ball,
And lives, and reigns, and ſhines, in all!
To chaſe our ſenſual fogs away,
And bright to pour th' eternal ray
Of Deity inſcrib'd around
Wide nature to her utmoſt bound,
Is HERVEY's taſk; and well his ſkill
Celeſtial can the taſk fulfil:
Aſcending from theſe ſcenes below,
Ardent the Maker's praiſe to ſhow,
His ſacred contemplations ſoar,
And teach our wonder to adore.
Now he ſurveys the realms beneath,
The realms of horror, and of death;
Now entertains his vernal hours
In flow'ry walks, and blooming bow'rs;
Now hails the black-brow'd night, that brings Æthereal dews upon her wings;
Now marks the planets, as they roll
On burning axles round the pole;
While tardy, and ſlow'ry, and ſtable, and ſtern,
Unveil their ſacred characters
Of juſtice, wiſdom, pow'r, and love;
And lift the ſoul to realms above,
Where dwells the GOD, in glory crown'd,
Who ſends his boundleſs influence round.
So JACOB, in his bliſsful dreams,
Array'd in heav'n's reſulgent beams,
Saw from the ground a ſcale ariſe,
Whoſe ſummit mingled with the ſkies;
Angels were pleas'd to paſs the road,
The ſtage to earth, and path to GOD.
HERVEY, proceed: for nature yields
Freſh treaſure in her ample fields;
And in ſeraphic extaſy
Still bear us to the throne on high.
Ocean's wild wonders next explore,
His changing ſcenes, and ſecret ſtore;
Or let dire EARTHQUAKE claim thy toil,
EARTHQUAKE, that ſhakes a guilty iſle.
So, if ſmall things may ſhadow forth,
Dear man, thy labours, and thy worth,
The bee upon the flow'ry lawn
Imbibes the lucid drops of dawn,
Works them in his myſterious mould,
And turns the common dew to gold.

London,
May 26, 1750. THOMAS GIBBONS.

DELIGHTFUL author! whom the ſaints inſpire!
And whiſp'ring angels with their ardors fire!
From youth like mine, wilt thou accept of praiſe?
Or ſmile with candour on a ſtripling's lays?
My little laurel (but a ſhoot at moſt)
Has hardly more than one ſmall wreath to boaſt
Such as it is—oh! might it farther be!
Its ſcanty foliage all is due to THEE.
Oh! if, amongſt the honours of thy brow,
This ſlender circlet may but humbly grow;
If its faint verdure haply may find place—
A foil to others; though its own diſgrace;
Accept it, HERVEY, from a heart ſmote;
And, for the giver's ſake,—the tribute wear.
Thy ſoul-improving works peruſ'd, what tongue
Can hold from praiſe, or check th' applauſive ſong?
But, ah! from whence ſhall gratitude obtain
Language that may its glowing zeal explain?
How to ſuch wondrous worth adapt a ſtrain?
Deſcrib'd by thee, cold ſepulchres can charm;
Storms calm the ſoul; and freezing winter warm.
Clear'd from her gloomy ſhades, we view pale night
Surrounded with a blaze of mental light.
Lo! where ſhe comes! all ſilent! penſive! ſlow!
On her dark robe unnumber'd meteors glow!
High on her head a ſtarry crown ſhe wears!
Bright in her hand the lamp of reaſon bears!
Smiling,—behold! ſhe points the ſoul to heav'n,
And bids the weeping ſinner be forgiv'n!
But when thy fancy ſhifts this ſolemn ſcene,
And ruddy morning gilds the chearful green;
With ſudden joy we view the proſpect chang'd,
And bluſhing ſweets in beauteous order rang'd,
We ſee the violets; ſmell the dewy roſe,
And each perfume that from the woodbine flows;
A boundleſs perſpective there greets our eyes;
Rich vales deſcend, and verdant mountains riſe.
The ſhepherds' cottages, and rural folds;
All, that thy art deſcribes, the eye beholds.
Amazing limner! whence this matchleſs pow'r?
Thy work's a garden!—ev'ry word a flow'r!
Thy lovely tints almoſt the bloom excell,
And none but nature's ſelf can paint ſo well!
Hail, holy man!—henceforth thy work ſhall ſtand (Like ſome fair column by a maſter-hand,
Which, whilſt it props, adorns the tow'ring pile)
At once to grace, and elevate our iſle.
Though ſimple, lofty; though majeſtic, plain;
Whoſe bold deſign the rules of art reſtrain.
In which the niceſt eye ſees nothing wrong;
Though poliſh'd, juſt; and elegant, though ſtrong.
June 24, 1750. ST GEORGE MOLESWORTH.

IN Pleaſure's lap the muſes long have lain,
And hung, attentive, on her Syren ſtrain:
Still toils the bard beneath ſome weak deſign,
And puny thought but halts along the line!
Or tuneful nothings, ſtealing on the mind,
Melt into air, nor leave a trace behind.
While to thy rapt'rous proſe, we feel, belong
The ſtrength of wiſdom, and the voice of ſong;
This lifts the torch of ſacred truth on high,
And points the captive to their native ſky.
How falſe the joys, which earth or ſenſe inſpires,
That clog the ſoul, and damp her purer fires!
Truths, which thy ſolemn ſcenes, my friend, declare,
Whoſe glowing colours paint as as we are.
Yet not moroſely ſtern, nor idly gay,
Dull melancholy reigns, or trifles ſway;
If wou'd the ſtrains of levity befit,
And ſullies gloom but ſadden all thy wit:
Truth, judgment, ſenſe, imagination, join;
And ev'ry muſe, and ev'ry grace is thine.
Religion prompting the true end of man,
Conſpiring genius executes the plan;
Strong to convince, and elegant to charm,
Plaintive to melt, or paſſionate to warm.
Rais'd by degrees, we elevate our aim,
And grow immortal as we catch thy flame:
True piety informs our languid hearts,
And all the vicious, and the vain departs.
So, when foul ſpreading fogs creep ſlowly on,
Blot the fair morn, and hide the golden ſun;
Ardent he pours the boundleſs blaze of day,
Rides through the ſky, and ſhines the miſt away.
O, had it been th' Almighty's gracious will,
That I had ſhar'd a portion of thy ſkill!
Had this poor breaſt receiv'd the heav'nly beam,
Which ſpreads its luſtre thro' thy various theme;
That ſpeaks deep leſſons from the ſilent tomb,
And crowns thy garden with freſh-forming bloom;
Or, piercing thro' creation's ample whole,
Now ſoothes the night, or gilds the ſtarry pole;
Or marks how Winter calls her howling train,
Her ſhows and ſtorms, that deſolate the plain;
With thee the muſe ſhall trace the paſſing ſcene,
That leads from nature up to nature's GOD;
Humble to learn, and, as ſhe knows the more,
Glad to obey, and happy to adore.

Northampton, PETER WHALLEY.
Aug. 25, 1750.

On the Rev. Mr JAMES HERVEY's Picture, by the Rev. Mr JOHN NIXON, A. M. Reſter of Cold Higham, in Northamptonſhire.

WILLIAMS! 'tis yours to bid the canvas wear,
By arts illuſive, Hervey's form and air.
Oh! with like happy labour could I trace
Each virtue, each exalted Chriſtian grace,
Each heav'nly gift, with which his ſoul was bleſt,
And fix the bright aſſemblage in my breaſt:
Then how tranſcendent far would be my plan:
You paint his mimic SHADE;—I draw the Man.

ADDRESS

Advertisement to the Third Edition.

I MUST entreat the purchasers of the former editions, to excuse the freedom I have taken, in making several considerable additions to this. It has been done at the persuasion of some judicious friends, who apprehended the piece might be more useful, and less unworthy of the public patronage, if it touched upon some very interesting subjects, hitherto omitted. As I had no views, but to render the performance more pleasing and serviceable; no reader, I hope, will be offended at my practice, or complain of it as injurious. Nevertheless, as I would willingly avoid whatever might seem to stand in need of APOLOGY, I desire leave to declare, That no future enlargements, or alterations, shall be suffered to depreciate what, with the deepest gratitude for their past encouragement, I now commit to the candour of the public.

To Miss R—— T——.

MADAM,

THESE Reflections, the ONE on the deepest, the OTHER on the gayest scenes of nature, when they proceeded privately from the pen, were addressed to a lady of the most valuable endowments: who crowned all her other endearing qualities, by a fervent love of Christ, and an exemplary conformity to his divine pattern. She, alas! lives no longer on earth; unless it be in the honours of a distinguished character, and in the bleeding remembrance of her acquaintance.

It is impossible, Madam, to wish you a richer blessing, or a more substantial happiness, than that the same spirit of unfeigned faith, the same course of undefiled religion, which have enabled her to triumph over death, may both animate and adorn your life. And you will permit me to declare, that my chief inducement in requesting your acceptance of the following Meditations, now they make a public appearance from the press, is, that they are designed to cultivate the same sacred principle, and to promote the same excellent practice.

Long, Madam, may you bloom in all the vivacity and amiableness of youth, like the charming subject of one of these contemplations. But at the same time remember, that, with regard to such inferior accomplishments, you must one day fade, (may it prove some very remote period!) like the mournful objects of the other. This consideration will prompt you to go on as you have begun, in adding the meekness of wisdom, and all the beauties of holiness, to the graces of an engaging person, and the refinements of a polite education.

And might—O! might the ensuing hints furnish you with the least assistance, in prosecuting so desirable an end; might they contribute, in any degree, to establish your faith, or elevate your devotion; they would, then, administer to the author such a satisfaction, as applause cannot give, nor censure take away: A satisfaction, which I should be able to enjoy, even in those awful moments, when all that captivates the eye is sinking in darkness, and every glory of this lower world disappearing for ever.

These wishes, Madam, as they are a most agreeable employ of my thoughts, so they come attended with this additional circumstance of pleasure, that they are also the sincerest expression of that very great esteem, with which I am,

MADAM,

Your most obedient,

Most humble servant,

JAMES HERVEY.

Weston-Favell, near Northampton,
May 20, 1746.

PREFACE.

THE first of these occasional Meditations begs leave to remind my readers of their latter end; and would invite them to set, not their houses only, but, which is inexpressibly more needful, their souls, in order: that they may be able, through all the intermediate stages, to look forward upon their approaching exit, without any anxious apprehensions; and, when the great change commences, may bid adieu to terrestrial things, with all the calmness of a chearful resignation, with all the comforts of a well-grounded faith.

The other attempts to sketch out some little traces of the all-sufficiency of our Redeemer, for the grand and gracious purposes of everlasting salvation: that a sense of his unutterable dignity, and infinite perfections, may incite us to regard him with sentiments of the most profound veneration; to long for an assured interest in his merits, with all the ardency of desire; and to trust in his powerful mediation, with an affiance not to be shaken by any temptations, not to be shared with any performances of our own.

I flatter myself, that the thoughts conceived among the tombs, may be welcome to the serious and humane mind: Because, as there are few who have not consigned the remains of some dear relations, or honoured friends, to those silent repositories; so there are none but must be sensible, that this is the house appointed for all living; and that they themselves are shortly to remove into the same solemn mansions.—And who would not turn aside for a while, from the most favourite amusements, to view the place where his once loved companions lie? Who would not sometimes survey those apartments, where he himself is to take up an abode, till time shall be no more?

As to the other little essay, may I not humbly presume, that the very subject itself will recommend the remarks? For who is not delighted with the prospect of the blooming creation, and even charmed with the delicate attractions of flowers? Who does not covet to assemble them in the garden, or wear them in a nosegay? Since this is a passion so universal, who would not be willing to render it productive of the sublimest improvement?——This piece of holy frugality I have ventured to suggest, and endeavoured to exemplify, in the second letter; that, while the hand is cropping the transient beauties of a flower, the attentive mind may be enriching itself with solid and lasting good. And I cannot but entertain some pleasing hopes, that the nicest taste may receive and relish religious impressions, when they are conveyed by such lovely monitors; when the instructive lessons are found, not on the leaves of some formidable folio, but stand legible on the fine sarcenet of a narcissus; when they savour not of the lamp and recluse, but come breathing from the fragrant bosom of a jonquil.

BRITISH MUSEUM 6 AU 89

MEDI-

MEDITATIONS
AMONG THE TOMBS.

IN A LETTER TO A LADY.

EVERY STONE THAT WE LOOK UPON IN THIS REPOSITORY OF PAST AGES, IS BOTH AN ENTERTAINMENT, AND A MONITOR.

PLAIN DEALER, Vol. I. N° 42.

MADAM,

TRAVELLING lately into Cornwall, I happened to alight at a conſiderable village in that county; where finding myſelf under an unexpected neceſſity of ſtaying a little, I took a walk to the church *. The doors, like the heaven to which they lead, were wide open, and readily admitted an unworthy ſtranger. Pleaſed with the opportunity, I reſolved to ſpend a few minutes under the ſacred roof.

IN a ſituation ſo retired and awful, I could not avoid falling into a train of meditations, ſerious and mournfully pleaſing: which, I truſt, were in ſome degree profitable to me, while they poſſeſſed and warmed my thoughts; and if they adminiſter any ſatisfaction to you, Madam, now they are recollected, and committed to writing, I ſhall juſt receive a freſh pleaſure from them.

IT was an ancient pile; reared by hands, that, ages ago, were mouldered into duſt.——Situate in the centre of a large burial-ground; remote from all the noiſe and hurry of tumultuous life.——The body ſpacious; the ſtructure lofty; the whole magnificently plain. A row of regular pillars extended themſelves through the midſt; ſupporting the roof with ſimplicity, and with dignity.—The light, that paſſed through the windows, ſeemed to ſhed a kind of luminous obſcurity; which gave every object a grave and venerable air.—The deep ſilence added to the gloomy aſpect, and both heightened by the lonelineſs of the place, greatly increaſed the ſolemnity of the ſcene.—A ſort of religious dread ſtole inſenſibly on my mind, while I advanced, all penſive and thoughtful, along the inmoſt iſle; ſuch a dread, as huſhed every ruder paſſion, and diſſipated all the gay images of an alluring world.

HAVING adored that eternal Majeſty, who, far from being confined to temples made with hands, has heaven for his throne, and the earth for his footſtool,—I took particular notice of a handſome altar-piece; preſented, as I was afterwards informed, by the maſter-builders of Stow *; out of gratitude, I preſume, to that gracious GOD, who carried them thro' their work, and enabled them to "bring forth their top-ſtone with joy."

O! HOW amiable is gratitude! eſpecially when it has the ſupreme Benefactor for its object. I have always looked upon gratitude, as the moſt exalted principle that can actuate the heart of man. It has ſomething noble, diſintereſted, and (if I may be allowed the term) generouſly devout. Repentance indicates our nature fallen, and prayer turns chiefly upon a regard to one's ſelf. But the exerciſes of gratitude ſubſiſted in paradiſe, when there was no fault to deplore; and will be perpetuated in heaven, when "GOD ſhall be all in all."

The language of this ſweet temper is, "I am unſpeakably obliged: what return ſhall I make?"—— And, ſurely, it is no improper expreſſion of an unfeigned thankfulneſs, to decorate our Creator's courts, and beautify "the place where his honour dwelleth." Of old, the habitation of his feet was glorious: let it not, now, be ſordid or contemptible. It muſt grieve an ingenuous mind, and be a reproach to any people, to have their own houſes wainſcotted with cedar, and painted with vermilion; while the temple of the LORD of hoſts is deſtitute of every decent ornament.

HERE I recollected, and was charmed with, Solomon's fine addreſs to the Almighty, at the dedication of his famous temple. With immenſe charge, and exquiſite ſkill, he had erected the moſt rich and finiſhed ſtructure that the ſun ever ſaw. Yet, upon a review of his work, and a reflection on the tranſcendent perfections of the Godhead, how he exalts the one, and abaſes the other!—The building was too glorious for the mightieſt monarch to inhabit; too ſacred for unhallowed feet even to enter; yet infinitely too mean for the Deity to reſide in. It was, and the royal worſhipper acknowledged it to be, a moſt marvellous vouchſafement in uncreated Excellency, to "put his name "there."—The whole paſſage breathes ſuch a delicacy, and is animated with ſuch a ſublimity of ſentiment, that I cannot perſuade myſelf to paſs on, without repeating it. * But will God indeed dwell on earth? Behold! the heaven, and the heaven of heavens, cannot contain thee; how much leſs this houſe that I have builded!—Incomparable ſaying! worthy the wiſeſt of men. Who would not chuſe to poſſeſs ſuch an elevated devotion, rather than to own all the glittering materials of that ſumptuous edifice?

* I had named, in ſome former editions, a particular church, viz. KILKHAMPTON; where ſeveral of the monuments, deſcribed in the following pages, really exiſt. But as I thought it convenient to mention ſome caſes here, which are not, according to the beſt of my remembrance, referred to in any inſcriptions there; I have now omitted the name; that imagination might operate more freely, and the improvement of the reader be conſulted, without any thing that ſhould look like a variation from truth and fact.

* The name of a grand ſeat, belonging to the late earl of Bath; remarkable formerly for its excellent workmanſhip, and elegant furniture; once the principal reſort of the quality and gentry of the weſt; but now demoliſhed, laid even with the ground, and ſcarce one ſtone left upon another.—So that corn may grow, or nettles ſpring, where Stow lately ſtood.

WE are apt to be ſtruck with admiration at the ſtatelineſs and grandeur of a maſterly performance in architecture; and perhaps, on a ſight of the ancient ſanctuary, ſhould have made the ſuperficial obſervation of the diſciples: "What manner of ſtones, and what "buildings, are here!"—But what a nobler turn of thought, and juſter taſte of things, does it diſcover, to join with Iſrael's king, in celebrating the condeſcenſion of the divine inhabitant! That the high and lofty One, who fills immenſity with his glory, ſhould in a peculiar manner, fix his abode there! ſhould there manifeſt an extraordinary degree of his benedictive preſence; permit ſinful mortals to approach his Majeſty, and promiſe "to make them joyful in his houſe "of prayer!"—this ſhould more ſenſibly affect our hearts, than the moſt curious arrangement of ſtones can delight our eyes.

NAY, the everlaſting GOD does not diſdain to dwell in our ſouls by his Holy Spirit; and to make even our bodies his temple.——Tell me, ye that frame critical judgments, and balance nicely the diſtinction of things, "Is this moſt aſtoniſhing, or moſt rejoicing?"—He humbleth himſelf, the ſcripture aſſures us, even to behold the things that are in heaven †.——'Tis a moſt condeſcending favour, if HE pleaſes to take the leaſt approving notice of angels and archangels, when they bow down in homage from their celeſtial thrones.——Will he then graciouſly regard, will he be united, moſt intimately united to poor, polluted, breathing duſt?——Unparalleled honour! invaluable privilege! Be this my portion, and I ſhall not covet crowns, nor envy conquerors.

BUT let me remember, what a ſanctity of diſpoſition, and uprightneſs of converſation, ſo exalted a relation demands: Remember this, "and rejoice with trembling."—Durſt I commit any iniquity, while I tread theſe hallowed courts? Could the Jewiſh high prieſt allow himſelf in any known tranſgreſſion, while he made that ſolemn yearly entrance * into the holy of holies, and ſtood before the immediate preſence of JEHOVAH? No, truly. In ſuch circumſtances, a thinking perſon muſt ſhudder at the moſt remote ſolicitation to any wilful offence. I ſhould now be ſhocked at the leaſt indecency of behaviour, and am apprehenſive of every appearance of evil.——And why do we not carry this holy jealouſy into all our ordinary life?—Why do we not, in every place ‡, reverence ourſelves; as perſons dedicated to the Divinity, as living temples of the Godhead? For, if we are real, and not merely nominal Chriſtians, the GOD of glory, according to his own promiſe, ‡ dwells in us, and walks in us.——O! that this one doctrine of our religion might operate with an abiding efficacy upon our conſciences!——It would be inſtead of a thouſand laws, to regulate our conduct; inſtead of a thouſand motives, to quicken us in holineſs.——Under the influence of ſuch a conviction, we ſhould ſtudy to maintain a purity of intention; a dignity of action; and to walk worthy of that tranſcendently majeſtic Being, who admits us to a fellowſhip with himſelf, and with his Son JESUS CHRIST.

THE next thing which engaged my attention, was the lettered floor. The pavement, ſomewhat like Ezekiel's roll, was written over from one end to the other. I ſoon perceived the compariſon to hold good in another reſpect; and the inſcriptions to be matter of "mourning, lamentation, and woe ‖." They ſeemed to court my obſervation; ſilently inviting me to read them. And what would theſe dumb monitors inform me of?—"That, beneath their little circumferences, "were depoſited ſuch and ſuch pieces of clay, which "once lived, and moved, and talked: that they had "received a charge to preſerve their names, and were "the remaining truſtees of their memory."

AH! ſaid I, is ſuch my ſituation! the adorable Creator around me, and the bones of my fellow-creatures under me! Surely, then, I have great reaſon to cry out, with the revering patriarch, How dreadful is this place §! Seriouſneſs and devotion become this houſe for ever. May I never enter it lightly or irreverently; but with a profound awe, and godly fear!

O! that they were wiſe ¶! ſaid the inſpired penman. It was his laſt wiſh for his dear people. He breathed it out, and gave up the ghoſt.—But what is wiſdom? It conſiſts not in refined ſpeculations, accurate reſearches into nature, or an univerſal acquaintance with hiſtory. The divine lawgiver ſettles this important point, in his next aſpiration: O! that they underſtood this! that they had right apprehenſions of their ſpiritual intereſts, and eternal concerns! that they had eyes to diſcern, and inclinations to purſue, the things which belong to their peace!—But how ſhall they attain this valuable knowledge? I ſend them not, adds the illuſtrious teacher, to turn over all the volumes of literature: they may acquire, and much more expeditiouſly, this ſcience of life

* 1 Kings viii. 27. But will.—A fine abrupt beginning, moſt ſignificantly deſcribing the amazement and rapture of the royal prophet's mind!—GOD: He uſes no epithet, where writers of inferior diſcernment would have been fond to multiply them; but ſpeaks of the Deity, as an incomprehenſible Being, whoſe perfections and glories are exalted above all praiſe.—Dwell: To beſtow on ſinful creatures a propitious look, to favour them with a tranſient viſit of kindneſs; even this were an unutterable obligation. Will he then vouchſafe to fix his abode among them, and take up his ſtated reſidence with them?—Indeed: A word, in this connection, peculiarly emphatical; expreſſive of a condeſcenſion, wonderful and extraordinary almoſt beyond all credibility.—Behold: intimating the continued, or rather the increaſing ſurpriſe of the ſpeaker, and awakening the attention of the hearer.—Behold; the heaven: The ſpacious concave of the firmament; that wide extended azure circumference, in which worlds unnumbered perform their revolutions, is too ſcanty an apartment for the Godhead.—Nay, the heaven of heavens: thoſe vaſtly higher tracts, which lie far beyond the limits of human ſurvey, to which our very thoughts can hardly ſoar; even theſe, (unbounded as they are) cannot afford an adequate habitation for JEHOVAH; even theſe dwindle into a point, when compared with the infinitude of his eſſence; even theſe "are as nothing before him."—How much leſs proportionate is this poor diminutive ſpeck (which I have been erecting and embelliſhing) to ſo auguſt a Preſence, ſo immenſe a Majeſty!

† Pſal. cxiii. 6.

† ——————χαριν τε θεοις' απεχεσθαι θ' απαντων, was the favourite maxim of Pythagoras, and ſuppoſed to be one of the beſt moral precepts ever given to the Heathen world. With what ſuperior force, and very ſingular advantage, does the argument take place in the Chriſtian ſcheme! where we are taught to regard ourſelves, not merely as intellectual beings, who have reaſon for our monitor; but as conſecrated creatures, who have a GOD of the moſt conſummate perfection ever with us, ever in us.

‡ 2 Cor. vi. 16.

‖ Ezek. ii. 10. § Gen. xxviii. 17. ¶ Deut. xxxii. 29.

by

by considering their latter end. This spark of heaven is often lost under the glitter of pompous erudition, but shines clearly in the gloomy mansions of the tomb. Drowned is this gentle whisper amidst the noise of secular affairs, but speaks distinctly in the retirements of serious contemplation—Behold! how providentially I am brought to the school of wisdom *! The grave is the most faithful † master; and these instances of mortality, the most instructive lessons.—Come then, calm attention, and compose my thoughts; come, thou celestial Spirit, and enlighten my mind; that I may so peruse these awful pages, as to become "wise unto salvation."

EXAMINING the records of mortality, I found the memorials of a ‡ promiscuous multitude. They were huddled, at least they rested together, without any regard to rank or seniority. None were ambitious of the uppermost rooms, or chief seats, in this house of mourning. None entertained fond and eager expectations of being honourably greeted in their darksome cells. The man of years and experience, reputed as an oracle in his generation, was content to lie down at the feet of a babe. In this house appointed for all living, the servant was equally accommodated, and lodged in the same story, with his master. The poor indigent lay as softly, and slept as soundly, as the most opulent possessor. All the distinction that subsisted, was a grassy hillock, bound with osiers; or a sepulchral stone, ornamented with imagery.

WHY then, said my working thoughts, O! why should we raise such a mighty stir about superiority and precedence, when the next remove will reduce us all to a state of equal meanness? Why should we exalt ourselves, or debase others; since we must all, one day, be upon a common level, and blended together in the same undistinguished dust? O! that this consideration might humble my own, and others pride; and sink our imaginations as low, as our habitation will shortly be!

AMONG these confused relics of humanity, there are, without doubt, persons of contrary interests, and contradicting sentiments. But death, like some able days-man, has laid his hand on the contending parties, and brought all their differences to an ‖ amicable conclusion. Here enemies, sworn enemies, dwell together in unity. They drop every embittered thought, and forget that they once were foes. Perhaps, their crumbling bones mix, as they moulder; and those who, while they lived, stood aloof in irreconcileable variance, here fall into mutual embraces, and even incorporate with each other in the grave.—O! that we might learn from these friendly ashes, not to perpetuate the memory of injuries; not to foment the fever of resentment; nor cherish the turbulence of passion; that there may be as little animosity and disagreement in the land of the living, as there is in the congregation of the dead!—But I suspend for a while such general observations, and address myself to a more particular inquiry.

YONDER white stone, emblem of the innocence it covers, informs the beholder of one who breathed out its tender soul almost in the instant of receiving it.—There, the peaceful infant, without so much as knowing what labour and vexation mean, * "lies still and is "quiet; it sleeps and is at rest." Staying only to wash away its native impurity in the laver of regeneration, it bid a speedy adieu to time, and terrestrial things.—What did the little hasty sojourner find so forbidding and disgustful in our upper world, to occasion its precipitant exit? 'Tis written, indeed, of its suffering Saviour, that when he had tasted the vinegar mingled with gall, he would not drink †. And did our newcome stranger begin to sip the cup of life; but, perceiving the bitterness, turn away its head, and refuse the draught? Was this the cause why the wary babe only opened its eyes; just looked on the light, and then withdrew into the more inviting regions of undisturbed repose!

Happy voyager! no sooner launched, than arrived at the haven ‡!—But more eminently happy they, who have passed the waves, and weathered all the storms, of a troublesome and dangerous world! who "through "many tribulations, have entered into the kingdom "of heaven;" and thereby brought honour to their divine convoy, administered comfort to the companions of their toil, and left an instructive example to succeeding pilgrims.

Highly favoured probationer! accepted, without being exercised!—It was thy peculiar privilege, not to feel the slightest of those evils, which oppress thy surviving kindred; which frequently fetch groans from the most manly fortitude, or most elevated faith. The arrows of calamity, barbed with anguish, are often fixed deep in our choicest comforts. The fiery darts of temptation, shot from the hand of hell, are always flying in showers around our integrity. To thee, sweet babe, both these distresses and dangers were alike unknown.

Consider this, ye mourning parents, and dry up your tears. Why should you lament, that your little ones are crowned with victory, before the sword was drawn, or the conflict begun?—Perhaps, the supreme Disposer of events foresaw some inevitable snare of temptation forming, or some dreadful storm of adversity impending. And why should you be so dissatisfied with that kind precaution, which housed your pleasant plant, and removed into shelter a tender flower, before the thunders roared; before the lightnings flew; before the tempest poured its rage?—O remember! they are not lost, but taken away from the evil to come ‖.

At the same time, let survivors, doomed to bear the heat and burden of the day, for their encouragement reflect,—that it is more honourable to have entered the lists, and to have fought the good fight, before they come off conquerors. They who have bore the cross, and submitted to afflictive providences, with a cheerful resignation, have girded up the loins of their mind, and performed their master's will with an honest and persevering fidelity;—these, having glorified their Redeemer on earth, will, probably, be as stars of the first magnitude in heaven. They will shine with brighter beams, be replenished with stronger joys, in their LORD's everlasting kingdom.

HERE lies the grief of a fond mother, and the blasted expectation of an indulgent father.—The youth grew up, like a well-watered plant; he shot deep, rose high, and bid fair for manhood. But just as the cedar began to tower, and promised 'ere long to be the pride of the wood, and prince among the neighbouring trees;—behold! the axe is laid unto the root; the fatal blow struck; and all its branching honours tumbled to the dust.—And did he fall alone? No: the hopes of his

* The man how wise, who, sick of gaudy scenes,
Is led by choice to take his fav'rite walk
Beneath death's gloomy, silent, cypress shades,
Unpierc'd by vanity's fantastic ray!
To read his monuments, to weigh his dust,
Visit his vaults, and dwell among the tombs!
Night Thoughts.

† Wait the great teacher Death. POPE.

‡ Missa senum ac juvenum densantur funera. HOR.

‖ His motus animorum, atque hæc certamina tanta,
Pulveris exigui jactu compressa quiescent. VIRG.

* Job iii. 13. † Matth. xxvii. 34.

‡ Happy the babe, who privileg'd by fate,
To shorter labour, and a lighter weight,
Receiv'd but yesterday the gift of breath,
Order'd to-morrow to return to death. PRIOR's Sol.

‖ Is. lvii. 1.

father that begat him, and the pleaſing proſpects of her that bare him, fell, and were cruſhed together with him.

Doubtleſs it would have pierced one's heart, to have beheld the tender parents following the breathleſs youth to his long home. Perhaps drowned in tears, and all overwhelmed with ſorrows, they ſtood, like weeping ſtatues, on this very ſpot.—Methinks, I ſee the deeply diſtreſſed mourners attending the ſad ſolemnity. How they wring their hands, and pour floods from their eyes!—Is it fancy? or do I really hear the paſſionate mother, in an agony of affliction, taking her final leave of the darling of her ſoul? Dumb ſhe remained, while the awful obſequies were performing; dumb with grief, and leaning upon the partner of her woes. But now the inward anguiſh ſtruggles for vent; it grows too big to be repreſſed. She advances to the brink of the grave. All her ſoul is in her eyes. She faſtens one more look upon the dear doleful object, before the pit ſhuts its mouth upon him. And as ſhe looks, ſhe cries;—in broken accents, interrupted by many a riſing ſob, ſhe cries,—"Farewell, my ſon! my "ſon! my only beloved! would to GOD I had died for "thee!—Farewell, my child! and farewell all my "earthly happineſs!—I ſhall never more ſee good in "the land of the living.—Attempt not to comfort "me.—I will go mourning all my days, till my grey "hairs come down, with ſorrow, to the grave."

From this affecting repreſentation, let parents be convinced, how highly it concerns them to cultivate the morals, and ſecure the immortal intereſts of their children.—If you really love the offſpring of your own bodies; if your bowels yearn over thoſe amiable pledges of conjugal endearment; ſpare no pains; give all diligence, I entreat you, "to bring them up in the nur-"ture and admonition of the LORD." Then may you have joy in their life, or conſolation in their death. If their ſpan is prolonged, their unblameable and uſeful conduct will be the ſtaff of your age, and a balm for declining nature. Or, if the number of their years be cut off in the midſt, you may commit their remains to the duſt, with much the ſame comfortable expectations, as you ſend the ſurvivors to places of genteel education. You may commit them to the duſt, with chearing hopes of receiving them again to your arms, inexpreſſibly improved in every noble and endearing accompliſhment.

'Tis certainly a ſevere trial, and much more afflictive than I am able to imagine, to reſign a lovely blooming creature, ſprung from your own loins, to the gloomy receſſes of corruption. Thus to reſign him, after having being long dandled upon your knees, united to your affections by a thouſand ties of tenderneſs; and now become both the delight of your eyes, and the ſupport of your family!—to have ſuch a one torn from your boſom, and thrown into darkneſs, doubtleſs, it muſt be like a dagger in your hearts.—But O! how much more cutting to you, and confounding to the child, to have the ſoul ſeparated from GOD; and, for ſhameful ignorance, or early impiety, tranſmitted to places of eternal torment! How would it aggravate your diſtreſs, and add a diſtracting emphaſis to all your ſighs, if you ſhould know the pale corpſe with theſe bitter reflections!—"His dear creature, though long ago ca-"pable of knowing good from evil, is gone out of the "world, before it had learned the great deſign of "coming into it. A ſhort-lived, momentary exiſtence it "received from me; but no good inſtructions, no holy "admonitions, nothing to further its well-being in "that everlaſting ſtate, upon which it is now entered. "The poor body is conſigned to the coffin, and carried "out to conſume away, in the cold and ſilent grave. "And what reaſon have I to ſuppoſe, that the precious "ſoul is in a better condition? May I not juſtly fear, "that, ſentenced by the righteous Judge, it is going, "or gone away, into the pains of endleſs puniſhment?

"—Perhaps, while I am bewailing its untimely depar-"ture, it may be curſing, in outer darkneſs, that "ever to be deplored, that moſt calamitous day, when "it was born of ſuch a careleſs, ungodly parent, as I "have been."

Nothing, I think, but the gnawings of that worm which never dies, can equal the anguiſh of theſe ſelf-condemning thoughts. The tortures of a rack muſt be an eaſy ſuffering, compared with the ſtings and horror of ſuch a remorſe.—How earneſtly do I wiſh, that as many as are entruſted with the management of children, would take timely care to prevent theſe ſcourges of conſcience, by endeavouring to conduct their minds into an early knowledge of Chriſt, and a cordial love of his truth!

ON this hand is lodged one, whoſe ſepulchral ſtone tells a moſt pitiable tale indeed! Well may the little images, reclined over the ſleeping aſhes, hang down their heads with that penſive air! None can conſider ſo mournful a ſtory, without feeling ſome touches of ſympathizing concern.—His age twenty-eight; his death ſudden; himſelf cut down in the prime of life, amidſt all the vivacity and vigour of manhood; while "his "breaſts were full of milk, and his bones moiſtened "with marrow."—Probably, he entertained no apprehenſions of the evil hour. And indeed, who could have ſuſpected, that ſo bright a ſun ſhould go down at noon? To human appearance, his hill ſtood ſtrong. Length of days ſeemed written in his ſanguine countenance. He ſolaced himſelf with the proſpect of a long, long ſeries of earthly ſatisfactions.—When lo! an unexpected ſtroke deſcends! deſcends from that mighty arm, which "overturneth the mountains by their roots; "and cruſhes the imaginary hero, * before the moth;" as quickly, and more eaſily, than our fingers preſs ſuch a feeble fluttering inſect to death.

Perhaps, the nuptial joys were all he thought on.—Were not ſuch the breathings of his enamoured ſoul? "Yet a very little while, and I ſhall poſſeſs the utmoſt "of my wiſhes. I ſhall call my charmer mine; and, "in her, enjoy whatever my heart can crave."—In the midſt of ſuch enchanting views, had ſome faithful friend but ſoftly reminded him of an opening grave, and the end of all things; how unſeaſonable would he have reckoned the admonition! Yet, though all warm with life, and rich in viſionary bliſs, he was even then tottering upon the brink of both.—Dreadful viciſſitude! to have the bridal † feſtivity turned into the funeral ſolemnity! Deplorable misfortune! to be ſhipwrecked in the very haven! and to periſh even in ſight of happineſs!—What a memorable proof is here of the frailty of man, in his beſt eſtate! Look, O, look! on his monument, ye gay and careleſs! attend to this date; and boaſt no more of to-morrow!

* Job iv. 18. לפני עש—Ad inſtar, ad modum, tineæ.—I retain this interpretation, both as it is moſt ſuitable to my purpoſe, and as it is patronized by ſome eminent commentators, eſpecially the celebrated Schultens. Though I cannot but give the preference to the opinion of a judicious friend, who would render the paſſage more literally, Before the face of a moth, making it to repreſent a creature ſo exceedingly frail, that even a moth, flying againſt it, may daſh it to pieces.—Which, beſides its cloſer correſpondence with the exact import of the Hebrew, preſents us with a much finer image of the moſt extreme imbecillity. For it certainly implies a far greater degree of weakneſs, to be cruſhed by the feeble flutter of the feebleſt creature, than only to be cruſhed as eaſily as that creature, by the hand of man.—The French verſion is very expreſſive and beautiful; à la rencontre d'un vermiſſeau.

† A diſtreſs of this kind is painted in very affecting colours by Pliny, in an epiſtle to Marcellinus; O triſte planè acerbumque funus! O morte ipſa mortis tempus indignius! Jam deſignata gener ejus juveni; jam electus nuptiarum dies; jam nos advocati. Quod gaudium quo mœrore mutatum eſt! Non poſſum exprimere verbis, quantum animo vulnus acceperim, quum audivi Fundanum ipſum (ut multa luctuoſa dolor invenit) præcipientem, quod in veſtes, margaritas, gemmas, fuerat erogaturus, hoc in thura, et unguenta, et odores, impenderetur. PLIN. lib. v. epiſt. 16.

Who

Who can tell, but the bride-maids, girded with gladneſs, had prepared the marriage-bed? had decked it with the richeſt covers, and dreſſed it in pillows of down? When,—oh! truſt not in youth or ſtrength, or in any thing mortal; for there is nothing certain, nothing to be depended on, beneath the unchangeable GOD;—Death, relentleſs death, is making him another kind of bed in the duſt of the earth. Unto this he muſt be conveyed, not with a ſplendid proceſſion of joyous attendants; but ſtretched in the gloomy hearſe, and followed by a train of mourners. On this he muſt take up a lonely lodging, nor ever be releaſed, "till the "heavens are no more."—In vain does the conſenting fair-one put on her ornaments, and expect her ſpouſe. Did ſhe not, like Siſera's mother, look out of the lattice, chide the delays of her beloved; and wonder "why his chariot was ſo long in coming?" little thinking, that the intended bridegroom had for ever done with tranſitory things! that now everlaſting cares employ his mind, without one ſingle remembrance of his lovely Lucinda!—Go, diſappointed virgin! go, mourn the uncertainty of all created bliſs! Teach thy ſoul to aſpire after a ſure and immutable felicity! for the once gay and gallant Fidelio ſleeps in other embraces; even in the icy arms of death! forgetful, eternally forgetful, of the world—and thee.

HITHERTO, one is tempted to exclaim againſt the king of terrors, and call him capriciouſly cruel. He ſeems, by beginning at the wrong end of the regiſter, to have inverted the laws of nature. Paſſing over the couch of decrepit age, he has nipped infancy in its bud, blaſted youth in its bloom, and torn up manhood in its full maturity.—Terrible indeed are theſe providences, yet not unſearchable the counſels:

——For us they ſicken, and for us thay die *.

Such ſtrokes muſt not only grieve the relatives, but ſurpriſe the whole neighbourhood. They ſound a powerful alarm to heedleſs, dreaming mortals, and are intended as a remedy for our carnal ſecurity. Such paſſing-bells inculcate loudly our LORD's admonition; "Take ye heed, watch, and pray: for ye know not "when the time is."—We nod, like intoxicated creatures, upon the very verge of a tremendous precipice. Theſe aſtoniſhing diſpenſations are the kind meſſengers of heaven, to rouſe us from our ſupineneſs, and quicken us into timely circumſpection. I need not, ſurely, accommodate them with language, nor act as their interpreter. Let every one's conſcience be awake, and this will appear their awful meaning:—"O! ye ſons of "men, in the midſt of life you are in death. No ſtate, "no circumſtances, can aſcertain your preſervation a "ſingle moment. So ſtrong is the tyrant's arm, that "nothing can reſiſt its force; ſo true his aim, that no"thing can elude the blow. Sudden as lightning, "ſometimes, is his arrow launched; and wounds, and "kills, in the twinkling of an eye. Never promiſe "yourſelves ſafety in any expedient, but conſtant pre"paration. The fatal ſhafts fly ſo promiſcuouſly, that "none can gueſs the next victim. Therefore be ye al"ways ready; for, in ſuch an hour as ye think not, the "final ſummons cometh."

Be ye always ready: for in ſuch an hour as ye think not—Important admonition! Methinks, it reverberates from ſepulchre to ſepulchre; and addreſſes me with line upon line, precept upon precept.—The reiterated warning, I acknowledge, is too needful; may co-operating grace render it effectual! The momentous truth, though worthy to be engraved on the tables of a moſt tenacious memory, is but ſlightly ſketched on the tranſient flow of paſſion. We ſee our neighbours fall; we turn pale at the ſhock; and feel, perhaps, a trembling dread. No ſooner are they removed from our ſight, but, driven in the whirl of buſineſs, or lulled in the languors of pleaſure, we forget the providence, and neglect its errand. The impreſſion made on our unſtable minds, is like the trace of an arrow through the penetrated air, or the path of a keel in the furrowed wave.—Strange ſtupidity! To cure it, another monitor beſpeaks me, from a neighbouring ſtone. It contains the narrative of an unhappy mortal, ſnatched from his friends, and hurried to the awful bar; without leiſure, either to take a laſt farewell of the one, or to put up ſo much as a ſingle prayer preparatory for the other; killed, according to the uſual expreſſion, by a ſudden ſtroke of caſuality.

Was it then a random ſtroke? Doubtleſs, the blow came from an aiming, though inviſible hand. GOD preſideth over the armies of heaven; GOD ruleth among the inhabitants of the earth; and GOD conducteth what men call chance. Nothing, nothing comes to paſs through a blind and undiſcerning fatality. If accidents happen, they happen according to the exact foreknowledge; and conformably to the determinate counſels, of eternal wiſdom. The LORD, with whom are the iſſues of death, ſigns the warrant, and gives the high commiſſion. The ſeemingly fortuitous diſaſter is only the agent, or the inſtrument appointed to execute the ſupreme decree. When the king of Iſrael was mortally wounded, it ſeemed to be a caſual ſhot. A certain man drew a bow at a venture *.—At a venture, as he thought. But his hand was ſtrengthened by an omnipotent aid, and the ſhaft levelled by an unerring eye. So that what we term caſuality, is really providence, accompliſhing deliberate deſigns, but concealing its own interpoſition.—How comforting this reflection! Admirably adapted, to ſoothe the throbbing anguiſh of the mourners, and compoſe their ſpirits into a quiet ſubmiſſion! Excellently ſuited, to diſſipate the fears of godly ſurvivors, and create a calm intrepidity even amidſt innumerable perils!

How thin is the partition between this world and another! How ſhort the tranſition from time to eternity! The partition, nothing more than the breath in our noſtrils; and the tranſition may be made in the twinkling of an eye.—Poor Chremylus, I remember, aroſe from the diverſion of a card-table, and dropt into the dwellings of darkneſs.—One night, Corinna was all gaiety in her ſpirits, all finery in her apparel, at a magnificent ball. The next night, ſhe lay pale and ſtiff, an extended corpſe, and ready to be mingled with the mouldering dead.—Young Atticus lived to ſee his ample and commodious ſeat completed; but not to ſpend one joyous hour under the ſtately roof. The ſaſhes were hung to admit the day; but the maſter's eyes were cloſed in endleſs night. The apartments were furniſhed, to invite ſociety, or adminiſter repoſe; but their lord reſts in the lower parts of the earth, in the ſolitary, ſilent chambers of the tomb. The gardens were planned, and a thouſand elegant decorations deſigned; but alas! their intended poſſeſſor is gone down to "the "place of ſkulls;" is gone down to the valley of the ſhadow of death.

While I am recollecting, many, I queſtion not, are experiencing the ſame tragical viciſſitude. The eyes of that ſublime Being,—who ſits upon the circle of the earth, and views all its inhabitants with one comprehenſive glance, even now behold many tents in affliction; ſuch affliction, as overwhelmed the Egyptians in that fatal night, when the deſtroying angel ſheathed his arrows in all the pride of their ſtrength.—Some, ſinking to the floor from their eaſy chair; and deaf even amidſt the piercing ſhrieks of their diſtracted relations.—Some, giving up the ghoſt, as they ſit retired, or lie reclined, under the ſhady arbour, to taſte the ſweets of the flowery ſcene.—Some, as they ſail, aſſociated with a party of pleasure, along the dancing ſtream, and through the laughing meads. Nor is the grim intruder mollified, though wine and muſic flow around.—Some intercepted, as they are returning home; and ſome interrupted, as they enter upon an important negociation.—Some arreſted, with the gain of injuſtice in their hands; and ſome ſurpriſed in the very act of lewdneſs, or the attempt of cruelty.

* Night Thoughts.

* 1 Kings xxii. 34.

Legions, legions of diſaſters, ſuch as no prudence can foreſee, and no care prevent, lie in wait to accompliſh our doom. A ſtarting-horſe may throw his rider; may at once daſh his body againſt the ſtones, and fling his ſoul into the inviſible world. A ſtack of chimneys may tumble into the ſtreet, and cruſh the unwary paſſenger under the ruins. Even a ſingle tile, dropping from the roof, may be as fatal as the fall of the whole ſtructure.—So frail, ſo very attenuated is the thread of life, that it not only burſts before the ſtorm, but breaks even at a breeze. The moſt common occurrences, thoſe from which we ſuſpect not the leaſt harm, may prove the weapons of our deſtruction. A grape-ſtone, a deſpicable fly, may be more mortal than Goliath, with all his formidable armour.——Nay, if GOD give command, our very comforts become killing. The air we breathe, is our bane; and the food we eat, the vehicle of death.—That laſt enemy has unnumbered avenues for his approach; yea, lies entrenched in our very boſom, and holds his fortreſs in the ſeat of our life. The crimſon fluid, which diſtributes health, is impregnated with the ſeeds of death. Heat may inflame it, or toil oppreſs it, and make it deſtroy the parts it was deſigned to cheriſh. Some unſeen impediment may obſtruct its paſſage, or ſome unknown violence may divert its courſe; in either of which caſes, it acts the part of a poiſonous draught, or a deadly ſtab.

Ah! in what perils is vain life engag'd!
What ſlight neglects, what trivial faults deſtroy
The hardieſt frame! Of indolence, of toil,
We die; of want, of ſuperfluity.
The all-ſurrounding heav'n, the vital air,
Is big with death.

Since then we are ſo liable to be diſpoſſeſſed of this earthly tabernacle, let us look upon ourſelves only as tenants at will; and hold ourſelves in perpetual readineſs, to depart at a moment's warning. Without ſuch an habitual readineſs, we are like wretches, that ſleep on the top of a maſt, while a horrid gulf yawns, or furious waves rage, below. And where can be the peace, what the ſatisfaction, of ſuch a ſtate?—Whereas, a prepared condition will inſpire a chearfulneſs of temper, not to be diſmayed by any alarming accident; and create a firmneſs of mind, not to be overthrown by the moſt threatening dangers. When the city is fortified with walls, furniſhed with proviſion, guarded by able and reſolute troops; what have the inhabitants to fear? what may they not enjoy? So, juſt ſo, or rather by a much ſurer band, are connected the real taſte of life, and the conſtant thought of death.

I SAID, Our very comforts may become killing.—And ſee the truth inſcribed by the hand, ſealed with the ſignet of fate. The marble, which graces yonder pillar, informs me, that, near it, are depoſited the remains of Sophronia; the much-lamented Sophronia, who died in child-bed.—How often does this calamity happen! The branch ſhoots; but the ſtem withers. The babe ſprings to light; but ſhe that bare him, breathes her laſt. She gives life, but gives it (O pitiable conſideration!) at the expence of her own; and becomes, at once, a mother, and a carpſe.—Or elſe, perhaps, ſhe expires in ſevere pangs, and is herſelf a tomb for her infant; while the melancholy complaint of a monarch's woe is the epitaph for them both: *The children are come to the birth, and there is not ſtrength to bring forth.—Leſs to be lamented, in my opinion, this misfortune than the other. Better for the tender ſtranger to be ſtopped in the porch, than to enter only to converſe with affliction. Better to find a grave in the womb, than to be expoſed on a hazardous world, without the guardian of its infantile years, without the faithful guide of its youth.

* Iſ. xxxvii. 3.

This monument is diſtinguiſhed by its finer materials, and more delicate appendages. It ſeems to have taken its model from an affluent hand, directed by a generous heart, which thought it could never do enough for the deceaſed.—It ſeems, alſo, to exhibit an emblematical picture of Sophronia's perſon and accompliſhments. Is her beauty, or, what is more than beauty, her white-robed innocence, repreſented by the ſnowy colour? The ſurface, ſmoothly poliſhed, like her amiable temper, and engaging manners. The whole adorned, in a well-judged medium between extravagant pomp and ſordid negligence; like her undiſſembled goodneſs, remote from the leaſt oſtentation, yet in all points exemplary.—But ah! how vain were all theſe endearing charms! How vain the luſtre of thy ſprightly eye! how vain the bloom of thy bridal youth! how vain the honours of thy ſuperior birth! how unable to ſecure the lovely poſſeſſor from the ſavage violence of death!—How ineffectual the univerſal eſteem of thy acquaintance; the fondneſs of thy tranſported huſband; or even the ſpotleſs integrity of thy character; to prolong thy ſpan, or procure thee a ſhort reprieve!—The concurrence of all theſe circumſtances reminds me of thoſe beautiful and tender lines:

How lov'd, how valu'd once, avails thee not;
To whom related, or by whom begot.
A heap of duſt alone remains of thee:
'Tis all THOU art! and all the PROUD ſhall be*!

POPE's Miſcell.

* Theſe verſes are inſcribed on a ſmall, but elegant monument, lately erected in the great church at Northampton; which, in the hieroglyphical decorations, correſponds with the deſcriptions introduced above: In this circumſtance particularly, that it is dedicated to the memory of an amiable woman, Mrs ANN STONHOUSE, the excellent wife of my worthy friend Dr STONHOUSE; who has ſeen all the powers of that healing art, to which I, and ſo many others, have been greatly indebted, failing in their attempts to preſerve a life dearer to him than his own.

Nec proſunt domino, quæ proſunt omnibus, artes. OVID.

No longer his all-healing art avails;
But ev'ry remedy its maſter fails.

In the midſt of this tender diſtreſs, he has ſought ſome kind of conſolation, even from the ſepulchral marble; by teaching it to ſpeak, at once, his eſteem for her memory; and his veneration for that religion, which ſhe ſo eminently adorned. Nor could this be more ſignificantly done, than by ſumming up her character, in that conciſe, but comprehenſive ſentence, A SINCERE CHRISTIAN. Conciſe enough, to be the motto for a mourning ring; yet as comprehenſive, as the moſt enlarged ſphere of perſonal, ſocial, and religious worth. For whatſoever things are pure, whatſoever things are lovely, whatſoever things are of good report, are they not all included in that grand and noble aggregate,——A ſincere Chriſtian?

The firſt lines, conſidered in ſuch a connection, are wonderfully plaintive and pathetic:

How lov'd, how valu'd once, avails thee not;
To whom related, or by whom begot.

They ſound, at leaſt in my ears, like the voice of ſorrow mingled with admiration. The ſpeaker ſeems to have been loſt, for a while, in melancholy contemplation; ſuddenly breaks out into this abrupt encomium; then melts into tears, and can proceed no farther. Yet, in this caſe, how eloquent is ſilence! While it hints the univerſal eſteem which attended, and the ſuperiority of birth which diſtinguiſhed, the deceaſed wife; it expreſſes, beyond all the pomp of words, the yearning affection, and heart-felt affliction, of the ſurviving huſband.——Amidſt the group of monumental marbles, which are laviſh of their panegyric, this, I think, reſembles the incomparable addreſs of the painter; who, having placed round a beautiful expiring virgin, her friends in all the agonies

Yet, though unable to divert the ſtroke, Chriſtianity is ſovereign to pluck out the ſting, of death. Is not this the ſilent language of thoſe lamps which burn, and of that heart which flames; of thoſe palms which flouriſh, and of that crown which glitters, in the well-imitated and gilded marble? Do they not, to the diſcerning eye, deſcribe the viligance of her faith; the fervency of her devotion; her victory over the world; and the celeſtial diadem, which the LORD, the righteous Judge, ſhall give her at that day *?

How happy the huſband, in ſuch a ſharer of his bed, and partner of his fortunes! Their inclinations were nicely-tuned uniſons, and all their converſation was harmony. How ſilken the yoke to ſuch a pair, and what bleſſings were twiſted with ſuch bands! Every joy was heightened, and every care alleviated. Nothing ſeemed wanting to conſummate their bliſs, but a hopeful progeny riſing around them.—That they might ſee themſelves multiplied in their little ones; ſee their mingled graces tranſfuſed into their offspring; and feel the glow of their affection augmented, by being reflected from their children: "Grant us this gift," ſaid their united prayers, "and our ſatisfactions are crowned; "we requeſt no more."

Alas! how blind are mortals to future events! how unable to diſcern what is really good †! Give me children, ſaid Rachael, or elſe I die ‡. An ardor of impatience altogether unbecoming, and as miſtaken as it was unbecoming. She dies, not by the diſappointment, but by the accompliſhment, of her deſire.—If children are, to parents, like a flowery chaplet, whoſe beauties bloſſom with ornament, and whoſe odours breathe delight; death, or ſome fell misfortune, may find means to entwine themſelves with the lovely wreath. Whenever our ſouls are poured out, with paſſionate importunity, after any inferior acquiſition; it may be truly ſaid, in the words of our divine Maſter, Ye know not what ye aſk.—Does Providence with-hold the thing that we long for? It denies in mercy; and only with-holds the occaſion of our miſery, perhaps the inſtrument of our ruin. With a ſickly appetite, we often loathe what is wholeſome, and hanker after our bane. Where imagination dreams of unmingled ſweets, there experience frequently finds the bitterneſs of woe.

Therefore, may we covet immoderately, neither this nor that form of earthly felicity; but refer the whole of our condition, to the choice of unerring wiſdom. May we learn to renounce our own will; and be ready to make a ſacrifice of our warmeſt wiſhes, whenever they run counter to the good pleaſure of GOD. For, indeed, as to obey his laws, is to be perfectly free; ſo to reſign ourſelves to his diſpoſal, is to eſtabliſh our own happineſs, and to be ſecure from fear of evil.

HERE a ſmall and plain ſtone is placed upon the ground; purchaſed, one would imagine, from the little fund, and formed by the hand, of frugality itſelf. Nothing coſtly; not one decoration added; only a very ſhort inſcription; and that ſo effaced, as to be ſcarcely intelligible.—Was the depoſitary unfaithful to its truſt? Or were the letters worn, by the frequent reſort of the ſurviving family, to mourn over the grave of a moſt valuable and beloved relative?—For I perceive upon a cloſer inſpection, that it covers the remains of a father; a religious father; ſnatched from his growing offspring, before they were ſettled in the world, or ſo much as their principles fixed by a thorough education.

THIS, ſure, is the moſt complicated diſtreſs, that has hitherto come under our conſideration. The ſolemnities of ſuch a dying chamber, are ſome of the moſt melting and melancholy ſcenes imaginable.—There lies the affectionate huſband; the indulgent parent; the faithful friend; and the generous maſter. He lies in the laſt extremities, and on the very point of diſſolution. Art has done its all. The raging diſeaſe mocks the power of medicine. It haſtens with reſiſtleſs impetuoſity, to execute its dreadful errand; to rend aſunder the ſilver cord of life, and the more delicate tie of ſocial attachment, and conjugal affection.

A ſervant or two, from a revering diſtance, caſt many a wiſhful look, and condole their honoured maſter in the language of ſighs. The condeſcending mildneſs of his commands was wont to produce an alacrity of obedience, and render their ſervice a pleaſure. The remembrance of both embitters their grief, and makes it trickle plentifully down their honeſt cheeks.—His friends, who have ſo often ſhared his joys, and gladdened his mind with their enlivening converſe, now are miſerable comforters. A ſympathizing and mournful pity is all the relief they are able to contribute; unleſs it be augmented by their ſilent prayers for the divine ſuccour, and a word of conſolation ſuggeſted from the ſcriptures *.—Thoſe poor innocents, the children, croud around the bed; drowned in tears, and almoſt frantic with grief, they ſob out their little ſouls, and paſſionately cry, "Will he leave us? leave us in a help-"leſs condition! leave us to an injurious world!"

Theſe ſeparate ſtreams are all united in the diſtreſſed ſpouſe, and overwhelm her breaſt with an impetuous tide of ſorrows. In her, the lover weeps, the wife mourns, and all the mother yearns. To her, the loſs is beyond meaſure aggravated, by months and years of delightful ſociety, and exalted friendſhip.—

agonies of grief, repreſented the unequalled anguiſh of the father, with far greater livelineſs and ſtrength, or rather with an inexpreſſible emphaſis, by drawing a veil over his face.

If the laſt lines are a wide departure from the beaten track of our modern epitaphs, and the very reverſe of their high-flown compliments, they are not without a precedent, and one of the moſt conſummate kind. Since they breathe the very ſpirit of that ſacred elegy, in which all the heart of the hero and the friend ſeems to be diſſolved; How are the mighty fallen, and the weapons of war periſhed! 2 Sam. i. 27.——They remind the reader of that awful leſſon, which was originally dictated by the ſupreme wiſdom; Duſt thou art, and unto duſt thou ſhalt return, Gen. iii. 19.——They inculcate, with all the force of the moſt convincing evidence, that ſolemn admonition delivered by the prophet; Ceaſe ye from man, whoſe breath is in his noſtrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of? Iſ. ii. 22.

A heap of duſt alone remains of thee!
'Tis all THOU art!——and all the PROUD ſhall be!

That no reader, however inattentive, might miſtake the ſenſe and deſign of this part of the fourth line, it is guarded above and beneath.—Above, is an expanded book, that ſeems to be waved, with an air of triumph, over the emblem of death: which we cannot but ſuppoſe to be the volume of inſpiration, as it exhibits a ſort of abridgement of its whole contents, in thoſe animated words; BE YE NOT SLOTHFUL, BUT FOLLOWERS OF THEM, WHO THROUGH FAITH AND PATIENCE INHERIT THE PROMISES, Heb. vi. 12.—Beneath, that every part might be pregnant with inſtruction, are thoſe ſtriking reflections; worthy the conſideration of higheſt proficient in knowledge and piety, yet obvious to the underſtanding of the moſt untaught reader; LIFE, HOW SHORT! ETERNITY, HOW LONG!——May my ſoul learn the forcible purport of this ſhort leſſon, in her contracted ſpan of time! and all eternity will not be too long, to rejoice in having learned it.

'Tis ALL thou art!

* 2 Tim. iv. 8.

† Neſcia mens hominum fati, ſortiſque futuræ!
Turno tempus erit, magno cum optaverit emptum,
Intactum Pallanta; et cum ſpolia iſta diemque
Oderit!— VIRG.

‡ Gen. xxx. 1.

* Texts of ſcriptures, proper for ſuch an occaſion; containing promiſes—of ſupport under affliction, Lam. iii. 32. Heb. xii. 6. 2 Cor. iv. 17.—of pardon, Iſ. liii. 5. Iſ. i. 18. 1 John ii. 1. 2. Acts x. 43.—of juſtification, Rom. v. 9. Rom. viii. 33. 34. 2 Cor. v. 21.—of victory over death, Pſal. xxiii. 4. Pſal. lxxiii. 26. 1 Cor. xv. 56. 57.—of a happy reſurrection, John vi. 40. 2 Cor. v. 1. Rev. vii. 16, 17.

Where

Where, alas! can ſhe meet with ſuch unſuſpected fidelity, or repoſe ſuch unreſerved confidence? where find ſo diſcreet a counſellor; ſo improving an example; and a guardian ſo ſedulouſly attentive to the intereſts of herſelf, and her children?—See! how ſhe hangs over the languiſhing bed; moſt tenderly ſolicitous to prolong a life, important and deſirable far beyond her own; or, if that be impracticable, no leſs tenderly officious to ſoothe the laſt agonies of her dearer ſelf.—Her hands, trembling under direful apprehenſions, wipe the cold dews from the livid cheeks; and ſometimes ſtay the ſinking head on her gentle arms, ſometimes reſt it on her compaſſionate boſom.—See! how ſhe gazes, with a ſpeechleſs ardor, on the pale countenance, and meagre features. Speechleſs her tongue: but ſhe looks unutterable things. While all her ſoft paſſions throb with unavailing fondneſs, and her very ſoul bleeds with exquiſite anguiſh.

The ſufferer, all patient and adoring, ſubmits to the divine will: and, by ſubmiſſion, becomes ſuperior to his affliction. He is ſenſibly touched with the diſconſolate ſtate of his attendants; and pierced with an anxious concern for his wife and his children; his wife, who will ſoon be a deſtitute widow; his children, who will ſoon be helpleſs orphans. "Yet, though "caſt down, not in deſpair." He is greatly refreſhed by his truſt in the everlaſting covenant, and his hope of approaching glory. Religion gives a dignity to diſtreſs. At each interval of eaſe, he comforts his very comforters; and ſuffers with all the majeſty of woe.

The ſoul, juſt going to abandon the tottering clay, collects all her force, and exerts her laſt efforts. The good man raiſes himſelf on his pillow; extends a kind hand to his ſervants, which is bathed in tears; takes an affecting farewell of his friends; claſps his wife in a feeble embrace; kiſſes the dear pledges of their mutual love; and then pours all that remains of life and of ſtrength in the following words:—"I die, "my dear children: but GOD, the everlaſting GOD, "will be with you.—Though you loſe an earthly pa"rent, you have a Father in heaven, who lives "for evermore.—Nothing, nothing but an unbeliev"ing heart, and irreligious life, can ever ſeparate "you from the regards of his providence,—from the "endearments of his love."

He could proceed no farther. His heart was full; but utterance failed. After a ſhort pauſe, with difficulty, great difficulty, he added,—"You the dear partner of my "ſoul, you are now the only protector of our orphans. "—I leave you under a weight of cares.—But GOD, "who defendeth the cauſe of the widow,—GOD, "whoſe promiſe is faithfulneſs and truth,—GOD hath "ſaid, I will never leave thee, nor forſake theee *.—This "revives my drooping ſpirits,—let this ſupport the "wife of my boſom;—and now, O Father of com"paſſions into thy hands I commend my ſpirit.—En"couraged by thy promiſed goodneſs, I leave my fa"therleſs"———

Here he fainted; fell back upon the bed; and lay, for ſome minutes, bereft of his ſenſes. As a taper, upon the very point of extinction, is ſometimes ſuddenly rekindled, and leaps into a quivering flame; ſo life, before it totally expired, gave a parting ſtruggle, and once more looked abroad from the opening eye-lids.——He would fain have ſpoke, fain have uttered the ſentence he began. More than once he eſſayed: but the organs of ſpeech were become like a broken veſſel, and nothing but the obſtructing phlegm rattled in his throat. His aſpect, however, ſpoke affection inexpreſſible. With all the father, all the huſband ſtill living in his looks, he takes one more view of thoſe dear children, whom he had often beheld with a parental triumph. He turns his dying eyes on that beloved woman, whom he never beheld but with a glow of delight. Fixed in this poſture, amidſt ſmiles of love, and under a gleam of heaven, they ſhine out their laſt.

Upon this, the ſilent ſorrow burſts into loud lamenta. They weep, and refuſe to be comforted. Till ſome length of time had given vent to the exceſs of paſſion; and the conſolations of religion had ſtaunched their bleeding woes. Then the afflicted family ſearch for the ſentence, which fell unfiniſhed from thoſe loved, thoſe venerable, and pious lips. They find it recorded by the prophet Jeremiah, containing the direction of infinite wiſdom, and the promiſe of unbounded goodneſs; Leave thy fatherleſs children; I will preſerve them alive; and let thy widows truſt in me *.—This, now, is the comfort of their life, and the joy of their heart. They treaſure it up in their memories. It is the beſt of legacies, and an inexhauſtible fund: A fund which will ſupply all their wants, by entailing the bleſſing of heaven on all their honeſt labours.—They are rich, they are happy, in this ſacred pledge of the divine favour. They fear no evil; they want no good; becauſe GOD is their portion, and their guardian GOD.

No ſooner turned from one memento of my own, and memorials of another's deceaſe, but a ſecond, a third, a long ſucceſſion of theſe melancholy monitors, croud upon my ſight †.—That which has fixed my obſervation, is one of a more grave and ſable aſpect than the former. I ſuppoſe, it preſerves the relics of a more aged perſon. One would conjecture, that he made ſomewhat of a figure in his ſtation among the living, as his monument does among the funeral marbles. Let me draw near, and inquire of the ſtone, "Who, or what, is beneath its ſurface?"—I am informed, he was once the owner of a conſiderable eſtate; which was much improved, by his own application and management: that he left the world in the buſy period of life, advanced a little beyond the meridian.

Probably, replied my muſing mind, one of thoſe indefatigable drudges, who riſe early; late take reſt; and eat the bread of carefulneſs; not to ſecure the loving-kindneſs of the LORD, not to make proviſion for any reaſonable neceſſity, but only to amaſs together ten thouſand times more than they can poſſibly uſe.—Did he not lay ſchemes for enlarging his fortune, and aggrandizing his family? Did he not purpoſe to join field to field, and add houſe to houſe, till his poſſeſſions were almoſt as vaſt as his deſires? that, then he would ‡ ſit down, and enjoy what he had acquired; breathe a while from his toilſome purſuit of things temporal, and, perhaps, think a little of things eternal.

But ſee the folly of worldly wiſdom! How ſilly, how childiſh, is the ſagacity of (what is called) manly and maſterly prudence, when it contrives more ſolicitouſly for TIME, than it provides for ETERNITY! How ſtrangely infatuated are thoſe ſubtile heads, which weary themſelves in concerting meaſures for phantoms of a day, and ſcarce beſtow a thought on everlaſting realities!—When every wheel moves on ſmoothly; when all the well-diſpoſed deſigns are ripening apace for execution; and the long-expected criſis of enjoyment ſeems to approach; behold! GOD from on high laughs at the Babel-builder. Death touches the bubble, and it breaks; it drops into nothing. The cobweb, moſt finely ſpun indeed, but more eaſily diſlodged, is ſwept away in an inſtant; and all the abortive projects are buried in the ſame grave with their projector.——

* Heb. xiii. 5.

* Jer. xlix. 11.

† ——Plurima mortis imago. VIRG.

‡ ——Hac mente laborem
Seſe ferre, ſenes ut in otia tuta recedant,
Aiunt, cum ſibi ſint congeſta cibaria.—

So

So true is that verdict, which the wiſdom from above paſſes on theſe ſucceſsful unfortunates; "They walk "in a vain ſhadow, and diſquiet themſelves in vain*."

Speak, ye that attended ſuch a one in his laſt minutes; ye that heard his expiring ſentiments; did he not cry out, in the language of diſappointed ſenſuality?—"O death! how terrible is thy approach, to a man im-"merſed in ſecular cares, and void of all concern for "the never-ending hereafter! Where, alas! is the pro-"fit, where the comfort, of entering deep into the "knowledge, and of being dexterous in the diſpatch, "of earthly affairs; ſince I have, all the while, neglect-"ed the one thing needful! Deſtructive miſtake! I "have been attentive to every inferior intereſt; I have "laid myſelf out on the trifles of a moment; but have "diſregarded heaven; have forgot eternal ages! O! that "my days"——Here he was going on to breathe ſome fruitleſs wiſhes, or to form I know not what ineffectual reſolutions: But a ſudden convulſion ſhook his nerves; diſabled his tongue; and, in leſs than an hour, diſſolved his frame.

May the children of this world be warned, by the dying words of an unhappy brother, and gather advantage from his misfortune.—Why ſhould they pant, with ſuch impatient ardor, after white and yellow earth, as if the univerſe did not afford ſufficient for every one to take a little? Why ſhould they lade themſelves with thick clay, when they are to "run for an incor-"ruptible crown, and preſs towards the prize of their "high calling?" Why ſhould they overload the veſſel, in which their everlaſting ALL is embarked; or fill their arms with ſuperfluities, when they are to ſwim for their lives?—Yet ſo prepoſterous is the conduct of thoſe perſons, who are all induſtry, to heap up an abundance of the wealth which periſheth; but are ſcarce ſo much as faintly deſirous, of being rich towards GOD.

O! that we may walk, through all theſe glittering toys, at leaſt with a wiſe indifference, if not with a ſuperior diſdain! Having enough for the conveniencies of life, let us only accommodate ourſelves with things below, and lay up our treaſures in the regions above.—Whereas, if we indulge an anxious concern, or laviſh an inordinate care, on any tranſitory poſſeſſions; we ſhall rivet them to our affections with ſo firm an union, that the utmoſt ſeverity of pain muſt attend the ſeparating ſtroke. By ſuch an eager attachment to what will certainly be raviſhed from us, we ſhall only inſure to ourſelves accumulated anguiſh, againſt the agonizing hour: we ſhall plant, aforehand, our dying pillow with thorns†.

SOME, I perceive, arrived at threeſcore years and ten, before they made their exit; nay, ſome few reſigned not their breath, till they had numbered fourſcore revolving harveſts. Theſe, I would hope, "remember-"ed their Creator in the days of their youth;" before their ſtrength became labour and ſorrow; before that low ebb of languiſhing nature, when the keepers of the houſe tremble, and thoſe that look out of the windows are darkened ‡; when even the lighting down of the graſshopper is a burden on the bending ſhoulders, and deſire itſelf fails in the liſtleſs, lethargic ſoul;—before thoſe heavy hours come, and thoſe tireſome moments draw nigh, in which, there is too much reaſon to ſay, "We "have no pleaſure in them; no improvement from "them."

If their lamps were unfurniſhed with oil, how unfit muſt they be, in ſuch decrepit circumſtances, to go to the market, and buy*! For, beſides a variety of diſorders, ariſing from the enfeebled conſtitution, their corruptions muſt be ſurpriſingly ſtrengthened, by ſuch a long courſe of irreligion. Evil habits muſt have ſtruck the deepeſt root; muſt have twiſted themſelves with every fibre of the heart; and be as thoroughly ingrained in the diſpoſition, as the ſoot in the Æthiopian's complexion, or the ſpots in the leopard's ſkin. If ſuch a one, under ſuch diſadvantages, ſurmounts all the difficulties which lie in his way to glory, it muſt be a great and mighty ſalvation indeed. If ſuch a one eſcapes deſtruction, and is ſaved at the laſt, it muſt, without all peradventure, be—ſo as by fire†.

This is the ſeaſon which ſtands in need of comfort, and is very improper to enter upon the conflict. The huſbandman ſhould now be putting in his ſickle, or eating the fruit of his labours; not beginning to break up the ground, or ſcatter the ſeed.—Nothing, 'tis true, is impoſſible with GOD. He ſaid, Let there be light, and there was light; inſtantaneous light diffuſed, as quick as thought, through all the diſmal dominion of primeval darkneſs. At his command, a leproſy of the longeſt continuance, and of the utmoſt inveteracy, departs in a moment. He can, in the greatneſs of his ſtrength, quicken the wretch, who has lain dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, not four days only, but fourſcore years.——Yet truſt not, O truſt not, a point of ſuch inexpreſſible importance to ſo dreadful an uncertainty. GOD may ſuſpend his power; may withdraw his help; may ſwear in his wrath, that ſuch abuſers of his long-ſuffering ſhall "never enter into his reſt."

Ye, therefore, that are vigorous in health, and blooming in years, improve the precious opportunity. Improve your golden hours to the nobleſt of all purpoſes; ſuch as may render you meet for the inheritance of ſaints in light; and aſcertain your title to a ſtate of immortal youth, to a crown of eternal glory ‡.——Stand not, all the prime of your day, idle; trifle no longer with the offers of this immenſe felicity; but make haſte, and delay not the time, to keep GOD's commandments. While you are loitering in a gay inſenſibility, death may be bending his bow, and marking you out for ſpeedy victims.—Not long ago, I happened to 'ſpy a thoughtleſs jay. The poor bird was idly buſied in dreſſing his pretty plumes, or hopping careleſsly from ſpray to ſpray. A ſportſman, coming by, obſerves the feathered rover. Immediately he lifts the tube, and levels his blow. Swifter than whirlwind, flies the leaden death; and, in a moment, lays the ſilly creature breathleſs on the ground.—Such, ſuch may be the fate of the man, who has a fair occaſion of obtaining grace to-day, and wantonly poſtpones the improvement of it till to-morrow. He may be cut off in the midſt of his folly; and ruined for ever, while he is dreaming of being wiſe hereafter.

* Pſal. xxxix. 6.

† Lean not on earth; 'twill pierce thee to the heart;
A broken reed at beſt, but oft a ſpear;
On its ſharp point peace bleeds, and hope expires.
Night-Thoughts, No. III.

‡ Eccl. xii. 3. 5. I need not remind my reader, that, by the former of theſe figurative expreſſions, is ſignified the enervated ſtate of the hands and arms; by the latter, the dimneſs of the eyes, or the total loſs of ſight: that, taken in connection with other parts of the chapter, they exhibit, in a ſeries of bold and lively metaphors, a deſcription of the various infirmities attendant on old age.

* Matth. xxxv. 9. † 1 Cor. iii. 15.

‡ May I be permitted to recommend, as a treaſure of fine ſentiments, and a treatiſe particularly appoſite to my ſubject, DR LUCAS's INQUIRY AFTER HAPPINESS? that part eſpecially, which diſplays the method, and enumerates the advantages, of improving life, or living much in a little time, chap. III. p. 158. of the 6th edit.—An author, in whom the gentleman, the ſcholar, and the Chriſtian, are moſt happily united. A performance, which, in point of ſolid argument, unaffected piety, and a vein of thought amazingly fertile, has perhaps, no ſuperior.—Nor can I wiſh my reader a more refined pleaſure, or a more ſubſtantial happineſs, than that of having the ſentiments of this entertaining and pathetic writer, wove into the very texture of his heart. Unleſs I might be allowed to wiſh, that the writer himſelf had interſperſed the glorious peculiarities of the goſpel (on which our happineſs abſolutely depends) a little more liberally through all his works.

SOME, no doubt, came to this their laſt retreat, full of piety and full of days, "as a ſhock of corn, ripe "with age, and laden with plenty, cometh in, in his "ſeaſon*."—Theſe were children of light, and wiſe in their generation; wiſe with that exalted wiſdom which cometh from above, and with that enduring wiſdom which laſts to eternity.——Rich alſo they were, more honourably and permanently rich, than all the votaries of mammon. The wealth of the one has made itſelf wings, and is irrecoverably gone; while the wretched acquirers are tranſmitted to that place of penury and pain, where not ſo much as one drop of water is allowed to cool their ſcorched tongues. The ſtores of the other ſtill abide with them; will never depart from them; but make them glad, for ever and ever, in the city of their GOD. Their treaſures were ſuch, as no created power could take away; ſuch as none but infinite beneficence can beſtow; and (comfortable to conſider!) ſuch as I, and every indigent longing ſinner, may obtain; treaſures of heavenly knowledge, and ſaving faith; treaſures of atoning blood, and imputed righteouſneſs.

Here † lie their bodies in "peaceable habitations, "and quiet reſting-places." Here they have thrown off every burden, and are eſcaped from every ſnare.

* Job v. 26.

† Some, I know, are offended at our burying corpſes within the church; and exclaim againſt it, as a very great impropriety and indecency. But this, I imagine, proceeds from an exceſſive and miſtaken delicacy. If proper care be taken to ſecure from injury, the foundations of the building; and to prevent the exhalation of any noxious effluvia, from the putrefying fleſh; I cannot diſcover any inconveniencies attending this practice.

The notion, that noiſome carcaſes (as they are called) are very unbecoming a place conſecrated to religious purpoſes, ſeems to be derived from the antiquated Jewiſh canon; whereby it was declared, that a dead body imparted defilement to the perſon who touched it, and polluted the ſpot where it was lodged. On which account, the Jews were ſcrupulouſly careful to have their ſepulchres built at a diſtance from their houſes; and made it a point of conſcience, not to ſuffer burial-places to ſubſiſt in the city. But as this was a rite purely ceremonial, it ſeems to be entirely ſuperſeded by the goſpel-diſpenſation.

I cannot forbear thinking, that, under the Chriſtian œconomy, there is a propriety and uſefulneſs in the cuſtom—Uſefulneſs, becauſe it muſt render our ſolemn aſſemblies more venerable and awful. For, when we walk over the duſt of our friends, or kneel upon the aſhes of our relations, this awakening circumſtance muſt ſtrike a lively impreſſion of our own mortality. And what conſideration can be more effectual, to make us ſerious and attentive in hearing, earneſt and importunate in praying?

As for the fitneſs of the uſage, it ſeems perfectly ſuitable to the deſign of thoſe ſacred edifices. They are ſet apart for GOD; not only to receive his worſhippers, but to preſerve the furniture for holy miniſtrations, and what is, in a peculiar manner, appropriated to the Divine Majeſty. Are not the bodies of the ſaints the Almighty's property? Were they not once the objects of his tender love? Are they not ſtill the ſubjects of his ſpecial care? Has he not given commandment concerning the bones of his elect; and charged the ocean, and enjoined the grave, to keep them until that day? When rocks bright with gems, or mountains rich with mines, are abandoned to the devouring flames; will not theſe be reſcued from the fiery ruin? Will not theſe be tranſlated into JEHOVAH's kingdom, and, conjointly with the ſoul, made "his jewels;" made his peculiar "treaſure;" made to ſhine as the brightneſs of the firmament, and as the ſtars for ever and ever?

Is not CHRIST the LORD of our bodies? Are they not bought with a price? bought, not with corruptible things, ſilver and gold, but with his divinely precious blood. And if the bleſſed JESUS obtained the redemption of our bodies, at ſo infinitely dear a rate; can it enter into our hearts to conceive, that he ſhould diſlike to have them repoſed under his own habitation?—Once more; Are not the bodies of the faithful, temples of the Holy Ghoſt? and is there not, upon this ſuppoſition, an apparent propriety, rather than the leaſt indecorum, in remitting theſe temples of fleſh to the temples made with hands? They are veſſels of honour; inſtruments of righteouſneſs; and, even when broken by death, like the fragments of a golden bowl, are valuable; are worthy to be laid up in the ſafeſt, moſt honourable repoſitories.

The head aches no more; the eye forgets to weep; the fleſh is no longer racked with acute, nor waſted with lingering diſtempers. Here they receive a final releaſe from pain, and an everlaſting diſcharge from ſorrow. Here danger never threatens them with her terrifying alarms; but tranquillity ſoftens their couch, and ſafety guards their repoſe.—Reſt then, ye precious relics, within this hoſpitable gloom. Reſt in gentle ſlumbers, till the laſt trumpet ſhall give the welcome ſignal, and ſound aloud, through all your ſilent manſions, "Ariſe; ſhine; for your light is come, and the "glory of the LORD is riſen upon you*."

To theſe, how calm was the evening of life! In what a ſmiling ſerenity did their ſun go down! When their fleſh and their heart failed, how reviving was the remembrance of an all-ſufficient Redeemer, once dying for their ſins, now riſen again for their juſtification! How chearing the well-grounded hope of pardon for their tranſgreſſions, and peace with GOD, through JESUS CHRIST our LORD! How did this aſſuage the agonies, and ſweeten the bitterneſs of death?—Where now is wealth, with all her golden mountains?—Where is honour, with her proud trophies of renown?—Where are all the vain pomps of a deluded world? Can they inſpire ſuch comfort, can they adminiſter any ſupport, in this laſt extremity? Can they compoſe the affrighted thoughts, or buoy up the departing ſoul, amidſt all the pangs of diſſolution?—The followers of the Lamb ſeemed pleaſed and triumphant even at their laſt gaſp. "GOD's everlaſting arms are un-"derneath†" their fainting-heads. His Spirit whiſpers peace and conſolation to their conſciences. In the ſtrength of theſe heavenly ſuccours, they quit the field, not captives, but conquerors; with "hopes full of immortality."

And now they are gone.—The ſtruggles of reluctant nature are over. The body ſleeps in death: the ſoul launches into the inviſible ſtate.—But who can imagine the delightful ſurpriſe, when they find themſelves ſurrounded by guardian angels, inſtead of weeping friends? How ſecurely do they wing their way, and paſs through unknown worlds, under the conduct of thoſe celeſtial guides!—The vale of tears is quite loſt.——Farewell, for ever, the realms of wo, and range of malignant beings! They arrive on the frontiers of inexpreſſible felicity. They "are come to the city of the living "GOD:" while a voice, ſweeter than muſic in her ſofteſt ſtrains, ſweet as the harmony of hymning ſeraphim, congratulates their arrival, and beſpeaks their admiſſion: Lift up your heads, O ye gates; and be ye lift up, ye everlaſting doors; that the heirs of glory may enter in.

Here, then, let us leave the ſpirits and ſouls of the righteous, eſcaped from an entangling wilderneſs, and received into a paradiſe of delights! eſcaped from the territories of diſquietude, and ſettled in regions of unmoleſted ſecurity! Here they ſit down with Abraham, Iſaac, and Jacob, in the kingdom of their Father. Here they mingle with an innumerable company of angels, and rejoice around the throne of the Lamb; rejoice in the fruition of preſent felicity, and in the aſſured expectation of an inconceivable addition to their bliſs; when GOD ſhall call the heavens from above, and the earth, that he may judge his people‡.

Upon the whole, ſince the LORD JESUS has purchaſed them at the expence of his blood, and the bleſſed Spirit has honoured them with his indwelling preſence; ſince they are right dear in the ſight of the adorable Trinity, and undoubted heirs of a glorious immortality: why ſhould it be thought a thing improper, to admit them to a tranſient reſt in their heavenly Father's houſe? Why may they not lie down and ſleep in the outer courts, ſince they are ſoon to be introduced into the innermoſt manſions of everlaſting honour and joy?

* Iſ. lx. 1. † Deut. xxxiii. 27.

‡ Seneca's reflections upon the ſtate of holy ſouls, delivered from the burden of the fleſh, are ſparkling and fine; yet very indiſtinct and empty, compared with the particulars mentioned above,

Fools accounted their life madneſs, and their end to be without honour; but they are numbered among the children of GOD, and their lot, their diſtinguiſhed and eternal lot, is among the ſaints!* However, therefore, an undiſcerning world may deſpiſe, and a profane world vilify the truly religious; be this the ſupreme, the invariable deſire of my heart! "Let me live the life, and die "the death, of the righteous. O! let my latter end, "and future ſtate, be like theirs!"

WHAT figure is that which ſtrikes my eye from an eminent part of the wall? It is not only placed in a more elevated ſituation than the reſt, but carries a more ſplendid and ſumptuous air than ordinary. Swords and ſpears, murdering engines, and inſtruments of ſlaughter, adorn the ſtone with a formidable magnificence.—It proves to be the monument of a noble warrior.

Is ſuch reſpect, thought I, paid to the memory of this brave ſoldier, for ſacrificing his life to the public good?—Then, what honours, what immortal honours, are due to the great Captain of our ſalvation? who, though Lord of the angelic legions, and ſupreme Commander of all the heavenly hoſts, willingly offered himſelf a bleeding propitiation for ſinners!

The one died, being a mortal; and only yielded up a life, which was long before forfeited to divine juſtice; which muſt ſoon have been ſurrendered as a debt to nature, if it had not fallen as a prey to war.—But CHRIST took fleſh, and gave up the ghoſt, though he was the great I AM; the Fountain of exiſtence; who calls happineſs and immortality all his own. He, who thought it no robbery to be equal with God; he, whoſe outgoings were from everlaſting; even he was made in the likeneſs of man, and cut off out of the land of the living. Wonder, O heavens! be aſtoniſhed, O earth! HE died the death, of whom it is witneſſed, that he is "the true GOD, and eternal life †."

The one expoſed himſelf to peril, in the ſervice of his ſovereign and his country; which, though it was glorious to do, yet would have been ignominious, in ſuch circumſtances, to have declined.—But CHRIST took the field, though he was the bleſſed and only potentate; the KING of kings, and LORD of lords. CHRIST took the field, though he was ſure to drop in the engagement; and put on the harneſs, though he knew beforehand, that it muſt reek with his blood. That Prince of heaven reſigned his royal perſon, not barely to the hazard, but to the inevitable ſtroke; to death, certain in its approach, and armed with all its horrors.—And for whom? Not for thoſe who were in any degree deſerving; but for his own diſobedient creatures; for the pardon of condemned malefactors; for a band of rebels, a race of traitors, the moſt obnoxious and inexcuſable of all criminals; whom he might have left to periſh in their iniquities, without the leaſt impeachment of his goodneſs, and to the diſplay of his avenging juſtice.

The one, it is probable, died expeditiouſly; was ſuddenly wounded, and ſoon ſlain. A bullet lodged in his heart, a ſword ſheathed in his breaſt, or a battle-axe cleaving the brain, might put a ſpeedy end to his miſery, diſpatch him "as in a moment."—Whereas the divine Redeemer expired in tedious and protracted torments. His pangs were as lingering, as they were exquiſite. Even in the prelude to his laſt ſuffering, what a load of ſorrows overwhelmed his ſacred humanity! till the intolerable preſſure wrung blood, inſtead of ſweat, from every pore; till the crimſon flood ſtained all his raiment, and tinged the very ſtones.—But when the laſt ſcene of the tragedy commenced, when the executioner's hammer had nailed him to the croſs; O! how many diſmal hours did that illuſtrious ſufferer hang; a ſpectacle of wo to GOD, to angels, and to men! His temples mangled with the thorny crown! his hands and feet cleft with the rugged irons! his whole body covered with wounds and bruiſes! and his ſoul, his very ſoul, pierced with pangs of unutterable diſtreſs!

So long he hung, that nature, through all her dominions, was thrown into ſympathizing commotions. The earth could no longer ſuſtain ſuch barbarous indignities, without trembling; nor the ſun behold them, without horror. Nay, ſo long did he hang in this extremity of agony and torture, that the alarm reached even the remote regions of the dead.—Never, O my ſoul, never forget the amazing truth. The Lamb of GOD was ſeized; was bound; was ſlaughtered with the utmoſt inhumanity; and endured death in all its bitterneſs, for thee. His murderers ſtudiouſly cruel, ſo guided the fatal cup, that he taſted every drop of its gall, before he drank it off to the very dregs.

Once again: The warrior died like a hero, and fell gallantly in the field of battle.—But died not CHRIST as a fool dieth?* Not on the bed of honour, with ſcars of glory in his breaſt; but, like ſome execrable miſcreant, on a gibbet; with laſhes of the vile ſcourge on his back. Yes, the bleſſed JESUS bowed his expiring head on the accurſed tree; ſuſpended between heaven and earth, as an outcaſt from both, and unworthy of either.

What ſuitable returns of inflamed and adoring devotion can we make to the Holy One of GOD; thus dying, that we might live? dying in ignominy and anguiſh, that we might live for ever in the heights of joy, and fit for ever on thrones of glory.—Alas! it is not in us, impotent, inſenſible mortals, to be duly thankful. He only, who confers ſuch inconceivably rich favours, can enkindle a proper warmth of grateful affection. Then build thyſelf a monument, moſt gracious IMMANUEL, build thyſelf an everlaſting monument of gratitude in our ſouls. Inſcribe the memory of thy matchleſs beneficence, not with ink and pen, but with that precious blood, which guſhed from thy wounded veins. Engrave it not, with the hammer and chizel, but with that ſharpened ſpear, which pierced thy ſacred ſide. Let it ſtand conſpicuous and indelible, not on outward tables of ſtone, but on the very inmoſt tables of our hearts.

ONE thing more let me obſerve, before I bid adieu to this intombed warrior, and his garniſhed ſepulchre. How mean are theſe oſtentatious methods of bribing the vote of fame, and purchaſing a little poſthumous renown! What a poor ſubſtitute for a ſet of memorable actions, is poliſhed alubaſter, or the mimicry of ſculptured marble! The real excellency of this † bleeding patriot, is written on the minds of his above, and with many others that might be collected from ſcripture. In hoc tam procelloſo, et in omnes tempeſtates expoſito navigantibus mari, nullus portus, niſi mortis eſt. Ne itaque invideris fratri tuo, quieſcit. Tandem liber, tandem tutus, tandem æternus eſt. Fruitur nunc aperto et libero cœlo; ex humili & depreſſo, in eum emicuit locum, qui ſolutas vinculis animas beato recipit ſinu; et nunc omnia rerum natura bona cum ſumma voluptate percipit. SEN. ad Polyb.

† Wiſdom v. 4. 5. 1 John v. 20.

* 2 Sam. iii. 33. Of this indignity our LORD complains; Are ye come out as againſt a thief? Matt. xxvi. 55.

† Sir Bevil Granville, ſlain in the civil wars, at an engagement with the rebels.—It may poſſibly be ſome entertainment to the reader, if I ſubjoin Sir Bevil's character, as it is drawn by that celebrated pen, which wrote the hiſtory of thoſe calamitous times.—"That which would have clouded any victo-"ry," ſays the noble hiſtorian, "and made the loſs of others "leſs ſpoken of, was the death of Sir Bevil Granville. He "was indeed an excellent perſon, whoſe activity, intereſt, "and reputation, were the foundation of what had been "done in Cornwall: his temper and affections ſo public, that "no accident which happened, could make any impreſſion "upon him; and his example kept others from taking any "thing ill, or at leaſt ſeeming to do ſo. In a word, a brighter "courage, and a gentler diſpoſition, were never married to-"gether, to make the moſt cheerful and innocent converſa-"tion." CLAR. Hiſt. Reb. vol. II.

countrymen. It would be remembered with applause, so long as the nation ſubſiſts, without this artificial expedient to perpetuate it. And ſuch, ſuch is the monument I would wiſh for myſelf. Let me leave a memorial in the breaſts of my fellow-creatures. Let ſurviving friends bear witneſs, that I have not lived to myſelf alone, nor been altogether unſerviceable in my generation. O! let an uninterrupted ſeries of beneficent offices be the inſcription; and the beſt intereſts of my acquaintance, the plate that exhibits it.

Let the poor, as they paſs by my grave, point at the little ſpot, and thankfully acknowledge,—"There lies "the man, whoſe unwearied kindneſs was the conſtant "relief of my various diſtreſſes; who tenderly viſited "my languiſhing bed, and readily ſupplied my indi"gent circumſtances. How often were his counſels a "guide to my perplexed thoughts, and a cordial to "my dejected ſpirit! 'Tis owing to GOD's bleſſing "on his ſeaſonable charities, and prudent conſolations, "that I now live, and live in comfort."—Let a perſon, once ignorant and ungodly, lift up his eyes to heaven, and ſay within himſelf, as he walks over my bones, "Here are the laſt remains of that ſincere friend, who "watched for my ſoul. I can never forget, with what heed"leſs ſociety I was poſting on in the paths of perdition; "and I tremble to think, into what irretrievable ruin "I might quickly have been plunged, had not his "faithful admonitions arreſted me in the wild career. "I was unacquainted with the goſpel of peace, and "had no concern for its unſearchable treaſures; but "now enlightened by his inſtructive converſation, I ſee "the all-ſufficiency of my Saviour; and, animated by "his repeated exhortations, I count all things but loſs, "that I may win CHRIST. Methinks his diſcourſes, "ſeaſoned with religion, and ſet home by the divine "Spirit, ſtill tingle in my ears; are ſtill warm on my "heart; and, I truſt, will be more and more operative, "till we meet each other in the houſe not made with "hands, eternal in the heavens."

The only infallible way of immortalizing our characters, a way equally open to the meaneſt and moſt exalted fortune, is, "to make our calling and election "ſure;" to gain ſome ſweet evidence, that our names are written in heaven. Then, however they may be diſregarded or forgotten among men, they will not fail to be had in everlaſting remembrance, before the LORD.—This is, of all diſtinctions, far the nobleſt. Ambition, be this thy object, and every page of ſcripture will ſanctify thy paſſion; even grace itſelf will fan thy flame.—As to earthly memorials, yet a little while, and they are all obliterated. The tongue of thoſe, whoſe happineſs we have zealouſly promoted, muſt ſoon be ſilent in the coffin. Characters cut with a pen of iron, and committed to the ſolid rock, will ere long ceaſe to be legible. "But as many as are enrolled in the Lamb's book of life," he himſelf declares, ſhall never be blotted out from thoſe annals of eternity †. When a flight of years has mouldered the triumphal column into duſt; when the brazen ſtatue periſhes, under the corroding hand of time; thoſe honours ſtill continue; ſtill are blooming and incorruptible, in the world of glory.

Make the extended ſkies your tomb;
Let ſtars record your worth:
Yet know, vain mortals, all muſt die,
As nature's ſickleſt birth.
Would bounteous heav'n indulge my prayer,
I frame a nobler choice;
Nor living, wiſh the pompous pile;
Nor, dead, regret the loſs.
In thy fair book of life divine,
My GOD, inſcribe my name;

* —Data ſunt ipſis quoque fata ſepulchris. JUV.

† Rev. iii. 5.

There let it fill ſome humble place,
Beneath the ſlaughter'd Lamb,
Thy ſaints, while ages roll away,
In endleſs fame ſurvive;
Their glories, o'er the wrongs of time,
Greatly triumphant, live.

YONDER entrance leads, I ſuppoſe, to the vault. Let me turn aſide, and take one view of the habitation, and its tenants.—The ſullen door grates upon its hinges; not uſed to receive many viſitants, it admits me with reluctance and murmurs.—What meaneth this ſudden trepidation, while I deſcend the ſteps, and am viſiting the pale nations of the dead?—Be compoſed, my ſpirits; there is nothing to fear in theſe quiet chambers. "Here, even the wicked ceaſe from trou"bling."

Good heavens! what a ſolemn ſcene!—how diſmal the gloom! Here is perpetual darkneſs, and night even at noon-day.—How doleful the ſolitude! Not one trace of chearful ſociety; but ſorrow and terror ſeem to have made this their dreaded abode.—Hark! how the hollow dome reſounds at every tread. The echoes that long have ſlept, are awakened, and lament, and ſigh, along the walls.

A beam or two finds its way through the grates; and reflects a feeble glimmer, from the nails of the coffins. So many of thoſe ſad ſpectacles, half concealed in ſhades, half ſeen dimly by the baleful twilight, add a deeper horror to theſe gloomy manſions.—I pore upon the inſcriptions, and am juſt able to pick out, that theſe are the remains of the rich and renowned. No vulgar dead are depoſited here. The Moſt Illuſtrious, and Right Honourable, have claimed this for their laſt retreat. And, indeed, they retain ſomewhat of a ſhadowy preeminence. They lie, ranged in mournful order, and in a ſort of ſilent pomp, under the arches of an ample ſepulchre; while meaner corpſes, without much ceremony, "go down to the ſtones of the pit."

My apprehenſions recover from their ſurpriſe. I find here are no phantoms, but ſuch as fear raiſes.—However, it ſtill amazes me, to obſerve the wonders of this nether world. Thoſe who received vaſt revenues, and called whole lordſhips their own, are here reduced to half a dozen feet of earth, or confined in a few ſheets of lead. Rooms of ſtate, and ſumptuous furniture, are reſigned, for no other ornament than the ſhroud, for no other apartment than the darkſome niche.—Where is the ſtar that blazed upon the breaſt, or coronet that glittered round the temples? The only remains of departed dignity are, the weather-beaten hatchment, and the tattered eſcutcheon. I ſee no ſplendid retinue ſurrounding this ſolitary dwelling. The lordly equipage hovers no longer about the lifeleſs maſter. He has no other attendant, than a duſty ſtatue; which, while the regardleſs world is as gay as ever, the ſculptor's hand has taught to weep.

Thoſe who gloried in high-born anceſtors, and noble pedigree, here drop their lofty pretenſions. They acknowledge kindred with creeping things, and quarter arms with the meaneſt reptiles. They ſay to corruption, Thou art my father; and to the worm, Thou art my mother and my ſiſter.—Or, ſhould they ſtill aſſume the ſtyle of diſtinction, ah! how impotent were the claim! how apparent the oſtentation! Is it ſaid by their monument? HERE LIES THE GREAT. How eaſily is it replied by the ſpectator!

——False marble! Where?
Nothing but poor and ſordid duſt lies here.

Mortifying truth! Sufficient, one would think, to damp the moſt ſanguine appetite from this tranſitory ſtate of things; from its ſickly ſatisfactions, its fading glories, its vaniſhing treaſures.

For

For, now, ye lying vanities of life!
Ye ever-tempting, ever-cheating train!
Where are ye now? and what is your amount?
What is all the world to these poor breathless beings?—What are their pleasures? a bubble broke.—What their honours? A dream that is forgotten.—What the sum-total of their enjoyments below? Once, perhaps, it appeared to inexperienced and fond desire, something considerable. But, now death has measured it with his line, and weighed it in his scale, what is the upshot? Alas! it is shorter than a span; lighter than the dancing spark; and driven away like the dissolving smoke.

Indulge, my soul, a serious pause. Recollect all the gay things, that were wont to dazzle thy eyes, and inveigle thy affections. Here examine those baits of sense. Here form an estimate of their real value. Suppose thyself first among the favourites of fortune, who revel in the lap of pleasure, who shine in the robes of honour, and swim in tides of inexhausted riches. Yet how soon would the passing-bell proclaim thy exit! And, when once that iron call has summoned thee to thy future reckoning, where would all these gratifications be? At that period, how will all the pageantry of the most affluent, splendid, or luxurious circumstances, vanish into empty air!—And is this a happiness so passionately to be coveted?

I thank you, ye relics of sounding titles, and magnificent names. Ye have taught me more of the littleness of the world, than all the volumes of my library. Your nobility arrayed in a winding-sheet, your grandeur mouldering in an urn, are the most indisputable proofs of the nothingness of created things. Never, surely, did Providence write this important point in such legible characters, as in the ashes of My Lord, or on the corpse of *His Grace.—Let others, if they please, pay their obsequious court to your wealthy sons; and ignobly fawn, or anxiously sue, for preferments: my thoughts shall often resort, in pensive contemplation, to the sepulchres of their sires; and learn, from their sleeping dust,—to moderate my expectations from mortals,—to stand disengaged from every undue attachment to the little interests of time;—to get above the delusive amusements of honour, the gaudy tinsels of wealth, and all the empty shadows of a perishing world.

HARK! what sound is that!—In such a situation, every noise alarms.—Solemn and slow, it breaks again upon the silent air.—'Tis the striking of the clock. Designed, one would imagine, to ratify all my serious meditations. Methinks, it says Amen, and sets a seal to every improving hint. It tells me, that another portion of my appointed time is elapsed. One calls it, "the knell of my departed hours." 'Tis the watch-word to vigilance and activity. It cries in the ear of reason, "Redeem the time. Catch the favourable gales "of opportunity: O! catch them, while they breathe; "before they are irrecoverably lost. The span of life "shortens continually. Thy minutes are all upon the "wing, and hastening to be gone. Thou art a bor-"derer upon eternity, and making incessant advances "to the state thou art contemplating." May the admonition sink deep into an attentive and obedient mind! May it teach me that heavenly arithmetic, of "numbering my days, and applying my heart unto "wisdom!"

I have often walked beneath the impending promontory's craggy cliff; I have sometimes trod the vast spaces of the lonely desert; and penetrated the inmost recesses of the dreary cavern: but never, never beheld nature louring, with so tremendous a form; never felt such impressions of awe, striking cold on my heart; as under these black-browed arches, amidst these mouldy walls, and surrounded by such rueful objects, where melancholy, deepest melancholy, for ever spreads her raven wings.—Let me now emerge from the damp and dreadful obscurity.—Farewell, ye seats of desolation, and shades of death! Gladly I revisit the realms of day.

HAVING cast a superficial view upon these receptacles of the dead, curiosity prompts my inquiry to a more intimate survey. Could we draw back the covering of the tomb; could we discern what those are now, who once were mortals,—O! how would it surprise and grieve us! Surprise us, to behold the prodigious transformation which has taken place in every individual; grieve us, to observe the dishonour done to our nature in general, within these subterraneous lodgments?

Here, the sweet and winning aspect, that wore perpetually an attractive smile, grins horribly a naked, ghastly skull.——The eye, that outshone the diamond's brilliancy, and glanced its lovely lightning into the most guarded heart; alas! where is it? Where shall we find the rolling sparkler! How are all its sprightly beams eclipsed, totally eclipsed!—The tongue, that once commanded all the power of eloquence, in this strange land, "has forgot its cunning." Where are now those strains of harmony, which ravished our ears? Where is that flow of persuasion, which carried captive our judgments? The great master of language and of song, is become silent as the night that surrounds him.——The pampered flesh, so lately clothed in purple and fine linen, how is it covered rudely with clods of clay! There was a time, when the timorously nice creature would scarce "* adventure to set a foot upon the ground, "for delicateness and tenderness;" but is now enwrapped in clammy earth, and sleeps on no softer a pillow than the ragged gravel stones.—Here "the strong "men bow themselves." The nervous arm is unstrung; the brawny sinews are relaxed; the limbs, not long ago the seats of vigour and activity, lie down motionless; and the bones, which were as bars of iron, are crumbled into dust.

Here the man of business forgets all his favourite schemes, and discontinues the pursuit of gain. Here is a total stand to the circulation of merchandize, and the hurry of trade. In these solitary recesses, as in the building of Solomon's temple, is heard no sound of the hammer and axe. The winding-sheet and the coffin are the utmost bound of all earthly devices. Hither "to may they go, but no farther."—Here the sons of pleasure take a final farewell of their dear delights. No more is the sensualist anointed with oil, or crowned with rose-buds. He chants no more to the melody of the viol, nor revels any longer at the banquet of wine. Instead of sumptuous tables, and delicious treats, the poor voluptuary is himself a feast for fattened insects; the reptile riots in his flesh! "the worm feeds "sweetly on him †."—Here also beauty fails; bright beauty drops her lustre here. O! how her roses fade, and her lilies languish, in this bleak soil! How does the grand leveller pour contempt upon the charmer of our hearts! how turn to deformity, what captivated the world before!

COULD the lover have a sight of his once-enchanting fair one, what a startling astonishment would seize him!—"Is this the object I not long ago so passion-"ately admired? I said, she was divinely fair, and "thought her somewhat more than mortal. Her "form was symmetry itself; every elegance breathed "in her air; and all the graces waited on her motions. "—'Twas music when she spoke; but, when she "spoke encouragement, 'twas little less than rapture. "How my heart danced to those charming accents! "—And can that which some weeks ago was to admi-"ration lovely, be now so insufferably loathsome?——

* ——————Mors sola fatetur
Quantula sint hominum corpuscula.— JUV.

* Deut. xxviii. 56. † Job xxiv. 20.

"Where are those blushing cheeks? where the coral lips? where that ivory neck, on which the curling jet, in such glossy ringlets, flowed? with a thousand other beauties of person, and ten thousand delicacies of action *?—Amazing alteration! delusory bliss!—Fondly I gazed upon the glittering meteor. It shone brightly; and I mistook it for a star, for a permanent and substantial good. But how is it fallen! fallen from an orb, not its own; and all that I can trace on earth, is but a putrid mass."

Lie, poor Florella! lie deep, as thou dost, in obscure darkness. Let night, with her impenetrable shades, always conceal thee. May no prying eye be witness to thy disgrace; but let thy surviving sisters think upon thy state, when they contemplate the idol in the glass. When the pleasing image rises gracefully to view, surrounded with a world of charms, and flushed with joy at the consciousness of them all;—then, in those minutes of temptation and dangers, when vanity uses to steal into the thoughts,—then let them remember, what a veil of horror is drawn over a face, which was once beautiful and brilliant as theirs. Such a seasonable reflection might regulate the labours of the toilet, and create a more earnest solicitude to polish the jewel, than to varnish the casket. It might then become their highest ambition, to have the mind decked with divine virtues, and dressed after the amiable pattern of their Redeemer's holiness.

And would this prejudice their persons, or depreciate their charms?—Quite the reverse. It would spread a sort of heavenly glory over the finest set of features, and heighten the loveliness of every other engaging accomplishment.—What is yet a more inviting consideration, these flowers would not wither with nature, nor be tarnished by time; but would open continually into richer beauties, and flourish even in the winter of age.—But the most incomparable recommendation of these noble qualities, is, that from their hallowed relics, as from the fragrant ashes of the phœnix, will ere long arise an illustrious form, bright as the wings of angels, lasting as the light of the new Jerusalem.

For my part, the remembrance of this sad revolution shall make me ashamed to pay my devotion to a shrine of perishing flesh, and afraid to expect all my happiness from so brittle joy. It shall teach me, not to think too highly of well-proportioned clay, though formed in the most elegant mould, and animated with the sweetest soul. 'Tis heaven's last, best, and crowning gift,—to be received with gratitude, and cherished with love, as a most valuable blessing; not worshipped with the incense of flattery, and strains of fulsome adoration, as a goddess.—It will cure, I trust, the dotage of my eyes; and incline me always to prefer the substantial "ornaments of a meek and virtuous spirit," before the transient decorations of white and red on the skin.

HERE I called in my roving meditations from their long excursion on this tender subject. Fancy listened a while to the soliloquy of a lover. Now judgment resumes the reins, and guides my thoughts to more near and self-interesting inquiries.—However, upon a review of the whole scene, crouded with spectacles of mortality and trophies of death, I could not forbear smiting my breast, and fetching a sigh, and lamenting over the noblest of all visible beings, laid prostrate under the feet of "the pale horse, and his rider †."—I could not forbear repeating that pathetic exclamation, "O! thou ‡ Adam, what hast thou done!" What desolation has thy disobedience wrought in the earth!—See the malignity, the ruinous malignity of sin! Sin has demolished so many stately structures of flesh; sin has made such havock among the most excellent ranks of GOD's lower creation; and sin (that deadly bane of our nature) would have plunged our better part into the execrable horrors of the nethermost hell, had not our merciful Mediator interposed, and given himself for our ransom.——Therefore, what grateful acknowledgments does the whole world of penitent sinners owe; what ardent returns of love will a whole heaven of glorified believers pay to such a friend, benefactor, and deliverer!

Musing upon these melancholy objects, a faithful remembrancer suggests from within,—"Must this sad "change succeed in me also? Am I to draw my last "gasp, to become a breathless corpse, and be what I "deplore *? Is there a time approaching, when this "body shall be carried out upon the bier, and consign"ed to its clay-cold bed? while some kind acquaint"ance, perhaps, may drop one parting tear; and cry, "Alas! my brother!—Is the time approaching?"—Nothing is more certain. A decree, much surer than the law of the Medes and Persians, has irrevocably determined the doom.

Should one of these ghastly figures burst from his confinement, and start up, in frightful deformity, before me;—should the haggard skeleton lift a clattering hand, and point it out full in my view; should it open the stiffened jaws, and, with a hoarse, tremendous murmur, break this profound silence;—should it accost me, as Samuel's apparition addressed the trembling king,—"The LORD shall deliver thee also into the hands of death; "yet a little while, and thou shalt be with me †;—the so"lemn warning, delivered in so striking a manner, must strongly impress my imagination. A message in thunder would scarce sink deeper.—Yet there is abundantly greater reason to be alarmed, by that express declaration of the LORD GOD Almighty, "Thou shalt surely die."—Well then, since sentence is passed; since I am a condemned man, and know not when the dead warrant may arrive; let me die to sin, and die to the world, before I die beneath the stroke of a righteous GOD. Let me employ the little uncertain interval of respite from execution, in preparing for a happier state, and a better life; that, when the fatal moment comes, and I am commanded to shut my eyes upon all things here below, I may open them again, to see my Saviour in the mansions above.

Since this body, which is so fearfully and wonderfully made, must fall to pieces in the grave; since I must soon resign all my bodily powers to darkness, inactivity, and corruption; let it be my constant care to use them well, while I possess them!—Let my hands be stretched forth to relieve the needy; and always be "more rea"dy to give than to receive."—Let my knees bend, in deepest humiliation, before the throne of grace; while my eyes are cast down to the earth, in penitential confusion; or devoutly looking up to heaven, for pardoning mercy!—In every friendly interview, let the "law of kindness dwell on my lips;" or rather, if

* Quo fugit Venus? heu! quove color? decens
Quo motus? quid habet illius, illius,
Quæ spirabat amores,
Quæ me surpuerat mihi? HOR.

† Rev. vi. 8. ‡ 2 Esdr. vii. 41.

* I pass, with melancholy state,
By all these solemn heaps of fate;
And think, as soft and sad I tread
Above the venerable dead,
"Time was, like me, they life possest;
"And time will be, when I shall rest." PARNEL.

† 1 Sam. xxviii. 19. On this place, the Dutch translator of the Meditations has added a note; to correct, very probably, what he supposes a mistake. On the same supposition, I presume, the compilers of our rubric ordered the last verse of Ecclus xlvi. to be omitted, in the daily service of the church. But that the sentiment, hinted above, is strictly true; that it was שמואל הנביא Samuel himself (not an infernal spirit, personating the prophet) who appeared to the female necromancer at Endor; appeared, not in compliance with any diabolical incantation, but in pursuance of the divine commission: this, I think, is fully proved in the Historical account of the life of David, vol. I. chap. 23.

the

the ſeriouſneſs of my acquaintance permits, let the gospel of peace flow from my tongue. O! that I might be enabled, in every public concourſe, to lift up my voice like a trumpet; and pour abroad a more joyful ſound, than its moſt melodious accents, in proclaiming the glad tidings of free ſalvation!—Be ſhut, my ears, reſolutely ſhut, againſt the malevolent whiſpers of ſlander, and the contagious breath of filthy talking. But be ſwift to hear the inſtructions of wiſdom; be all attention when your REDEEMER ſpeaks; imbibe the precious truths; and convey them carefully to the heart.—Carry me, my feet, to the temple of the LORD, to the beds of the ſick, and houſes of the poor.—May all my members, devoted entirely to my divine Maſter, be the willing inſtruments of promoting his glory!

Then ye embalmers, you may ſpare your pains. Theſe works of faith, and labours of love; theſe ſhall be my ſpices and perfumes. Enwrapped in theſe, I would lay me gently down, and ſleep ſweetly in the bleſſed JESUS; hoping that GOD "will give commandment concerning my bones;" and one day fetch them up from the duſt, as ſilver from the furnace, purified, "I ſay not ſeven times, but ſeventy "times ſeven."

HERE my contemplation took wing; and, in an inſtant, alighted in the garden adjoining to Mount Calvary. Having viewed the abode of my deceaſed fellow-creatures, methought, I longed to ſee the place where our LORD lay.—And, O! what a marvellous ſpectacle was once exhibited in this memorable ſepulchre! He, "who clothes himſelf with light, as with a "garment; and walks upon the wings of the wind *;" HE was pleaſed to wear the habiliments of mortality, and dwelt among the proſtrate dead.—Who can repeat the wondrous truth too often? Who can dwell upon the tranſporting theme too long? HE, who ſits enthroned in glory, and diffuſes bliſs among all the heavenly hoſts; HE was once a pale and bloody corpſe, and preſſed this little ſpot.

O death! how great was thy triumph in that hour! Never did thy gloomy realms contain ſuch a priſoner before.—Priſoner, did I ſay? No; he was more than conqueror. He aroſe, far more mightily than Samſon, from a tranſient ſlumber; broke down the gates, and demoliſhed the ſtrong-holds, of thoſe dark dominions.—And this, O mortals, this is your only conſolation and ſecurity. JESUS has trod the dreadful path, and ſmoothed it for your paſſage.—JESUS, ſleeping in the chambers of the tomb, has brightened the diſmal manſion, and left an inviting odour in thoſe beds of duſt. The dying JESUS (never let the comfortable truth depart from your minds! the dying JESUS) is your ſure protection, your unqueſtionable paſſport, through the territories of the grave. Believe in him; and they ſhall prove a "highway to Sion;" ſhall tranſmit you ſafe to paradiſe. Believe in him; and you ſhall be no loſers, but unſpeakable gainers, by your diſſolution. For hear what the oracle of heaven ſays upon this important point, Whoſo believeth in me, ſhall never die †.—What ſublime and emphatical language is this! Thus much, at leaſt, it muſt import:—"The nature of "that laſt change ſhall be ſurprizingly altered for the "better. It ſhall no longer be inflicted, as a puniſh-"ment; but rather be vouchſafed, as a bleſſing. To ſuch "perſons, it ſhall come attended with ſuch a train of "benefits, as will render it a kind of happy impropriety, "to call it dying. Dying! No; 'tis then they truly be-"gin to live. Their exit is the end of their frailty, and "their entrance upon perfection. Their laſt groan is "the prelude to life and immortality."

O ye timorous ſouls, that are terrified at the ſound of the paſſing bell; that turn pale at the ſight of an opened grave; and can ſcarce behold a coffin or a ſkull, without a ſhuddering horror; ye that are in bondage to the griſly tyrant, and tremble at the ſhaking of his iron rod; cry mightily to the Father of your ſpirits, for faith in his dear Son. Faith will free you from your ſlavery ‡. Faith will embolden you to tread on (this fierceſt of) ſerpents ‡.—Old Simeon, claſping the child JESUS in the arms of his fleſh, and the glorious Mediator in the arms of his faith, departs with tranquillity and peace. That bitter perſecutor Saul, having won CHRIST, being found in CHRIST, longs to be diſmiſſed from cumbrous clay, and kindles into rapture at the proſpect of diſſolution ‖. Methinks, I ſee another of IMMANUEL's followers, truſting in his Saviour, leaning on his Beloved, go down to the ſilent ſhades, with compoſure and alacrity ‡.—In this powerful name, an innumerable company of ſinful creatures have ſet up their banners; and "overcome through the "blood of the Lamb." Authorized by the Captain of thy ſalvation, thou alſo mayſt ſet thy feet upon the neck of this king of terrors. Furniſhed with this antidote, thou alſo mayſt play around the hole of the aſp, and put thy undaunted hand on this cockatrice-den ‡. Thou mayſt ++ feel the viper faſtening to thy mortal part, and fear no evil: thou ſhalt one day ſhake it off by a joyful reſurrection, and ſuffer no harm.

RESURRECTION! That chearing word eaſes my mind of an anxious thought, and ſolves a moſt momentous queſtion. I was going to aſk, "Wherefore do all theſe "corpſes lie here, in this abject condition? Is this their "final ſtate? Has death conquered? and will the tyrant "hold captivity captive? How long wilt thou forget "them, O LORD? For ever?"—No, ſaith the voice from heaven; the word of divine revelation; The righteous are all "priſoners of hope =." There is an hour,

* The ſcriptures, ſpeaking of the ſupreme Being, ſay,——He walketh upon the waves of the ſea, to denote his uncontrollable power, Job. ix. 8.—He walketh in the circuit of heaven, to expreſs the immenſity of his preſence, Job xxii. 14.—He walketh upon the wings of the wind, to ſignify the amazing ſwiftneſs of his operations, Pſal. civ. 3.——In which laſt phraſe, there is, I think, an elegance and emphaſis, not taken notice of by our commentators, yet unequalled in any writer. Not, he flieth; he runneth; but, he walketh; and that on the very wings of the wind; on the moſt impetuous of elements, roufed into its utmoſt rage, and ſweeping along with inconceivable rapidity.—A tumult in nature, not to be deſcribed, is the compoſed and ſedate work of the DEITY. A ſpeed, not to be meaſured, is (with reverence I uſe the expreſſion, and to comport with our low methods of conception) the ſolemn and majeſtic foot-pace of JEHOVAH.—How flat are the following lines, even in the great maſter of lyric ſong,

Ocyor cervis, et agente nimbos
Ocyor euro,

when compared with this inimitable ſtroke of divine poetry!—He walketh upon the wings of the wind.

† John xi. 26.

‡ Death's terror is the mountain faith removes:
'Tis faith diſarms deſtruction.—

Believe, and look with triumph on the tomb.

‖ Phil. i. 23. = 2 Tim. iv. 7. 8. ‡ 2 Pet. i. 14. = Heb. xi. 8. ++ Acts xxviii. 3. = Zech. ix. 12.

These, and ſome other quotations, I am proud to borrow from the Night-thoughts, eſpecially from night the fourth. In which, energy of language, ſublimity of ſentiment, and the moſt exquiſite beauties of poetry, are the leaſt perfections to be admired. Almoſt every line glows with devotion; riſes into the moſt exalted apprehenſions of the adorable Redeemer; and is animated with the moſt lively faith in his all-ſufficient mediation. The author of this excellent performance has the peculiar felicity of ennobling all the ſtrength of ſtyle, and every delicacy of imagination, with the grand and diſtinguiſhing truths of Chriſtianity. Theſe thoughts give the higheſt entertainment to the fancy, and impart the nobleſt improvement to the mind. They not only refine our taſte, but prepare us for death, and ripen us for glory. I never take up this admirable piece, but I am ready to cry out,—Tecum vivere ſemper, tecum obeam libens; i. e. "Inſpire me with "ſuch a ſpirit, and life ſhall be delightful, nor death itſelf unwelcome."

(an

(an awful secret that, and known only to all-forseeing wisdom) an appointed hour shall rise; when an act of grace shall pass the great seal above, and give them an universal discharge, a general delivery from the bonds of corruption.—Then shall the LORD JESUS descend from heaven, with a shout of the archangel, and the trump of GOD. Destruction itself shall hear his call, and the obedient grave give up her dead. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, they shake off the sleep of ten thousand years, and spring forth, like the bounding roe, to "meet their LORD in the "air!"

And, O! with what cordial congratulations, what transporting endearments, do the soul and body, those affectionate companions, re-unite! But with how much greater demonstrations of kindness, are they both received by their compassionate Redeemer! The Ancient of days, who comes in the clouds of heaven, is their friend, their father, their bridegroom. He comes with ineffable power and infinite glory; but they have nothing to fear from his majestic appearance. Those thunderous solemnities, which spread desolation and astonishment through the universe, serve only to inflame their love, and heighten their hopes. The Judge, the awful judge, amidst all his magnificence and splendor, vouchsafes to confess their names; vouchsafes to commemorate their fidelity, before all the inhabitants of the skies, and the whole assembled world.

Hark! the thunders are hushed. See! the lightnings cease their rage.—The angelic armies stand in silent suspense. The whole race of Adam is wrapped in pleasing, or anxious expectation.—And now that adorable person, whose favour is better than life, whose acceptance is a crown of glory, lifts up the light of his countenance upon the righteous. He speaks; and what ravishing words proceed from his gracious lips! What ecstacies of delight they enkindle in the breasts of the faithful!—"I accept you, O my people! Ye "are they that believed in my name. Ye are they that "renounced yourselves, and are complete in me. I see "no spot or blemish in you; for ye are washed in my "blood, and clothed with my righteousness. Renewed "by my Spirit, ye have glorified me on earth, and "have been faithful unto death. Come, then, ye ser-"vants of holiness, enter into the joy of your LORD. "Come, ye children of light, ye blessed of my Father, "receive the kingdom that shall never be removed; wear "the crown which fadeth not away; and enjoy pleasures "for evermore!"

Then it will be one of the smallest privileges of the righteous, that they shall languish no more; that sickness will never again shew her pale countenance in their dwellings. Death itself will be "swallowed "up in victory." That fatal javelin, which has drank the blood of monarchs, and finds its way to the hearts of all the sons of Adam, shall be utterly broken. That enormous scythe, which has struck empires from their root, and swept ages and generations into oblivion, shall lie by in perpetual disuse-fulness. Sin also, which filled thy quiver, thou unfailing archer!—sin, which strung thy arm with relentless vigour,—which pointed all thy shafts with inevitable destruction,—sin, with thee be done away. Whatever is frail, or depraved, will be thrown off with our grave-cloaths. All to come is perfect holiness, and consummate happiness; the term of whose continuance is eternity.

O ETERNITY! eternity! how are our boldest, our strongest thoughts, lost and overwhelmed in thee! Who can set landmarks to limit thy dimensions? or sound plummets to fathom thy depths? Arithmetic has figures to compute all the progressions of time; Astronomy have instruments to calculate the distances of the planets: but what numbers can state, what lines gauge, the length and breadths of eternity! "It is "higher than heaven; what canst thou do? deeper "than hell; what canst thou know? the measure "thereof is longer than the earth, broader than the "sea."* Mysterious, mighty existence! A sum not to be lessened by the largest deductions! An extent not to be contracted by all possible diminutions! None can truly say, after the most prodigious waste of ages, "So much "of eternity is gone." For when millions of centuries are elapsed, it is but just commencing; and when millions more have run their ample round, it will be no nearer ending. Nay, when ages, numerous as the bloom of spring, increased by the herbage of summer, both augmented by the leaves of autumn, and all multiplied by the drops of rain, which drown the winter,—when these, and ten thousand times ten thousand more, more than can be represented by any similitude, or imagined by any conception,—when all these are revolved and finished, eternity, vast, boundless, amazing eternity, will only be beginning!

What a pleasing, yet awful thought is this! full of delight, and full of dread. O! may it alarm our fears, quicken our hopes, and animate all our endeavours! Since we are soon to launch into this endless and inconceivable state, let us give all diligence to secure our entrance into bliss.—Now let us give all diligence; because there is no alteration in the scenes of futurity. The wheel never turns: all is stedfast and immoveable beyond the grave. Whether we are then seated on the throne, or stretched on the rack, a seal will be set to our condition, by the hand of everlasting mercy, or inflexible justice.—The saints always rejoice amidst the smiles of heaven; their harps are perpetually tuned; their triumphs admit of no interruption.—The ruin of the wicked is irremediable. The fatal sentence, once passed, is never to be repealed. No hope of exchanging their doleful habitations. But all things bear the same dismal aspect for ever and ever.

THE wicked—my mind recoils † at the apprehension of their misery. It has studiously waved the fearful subject, and seems unwilling to pursue it even now.—But 'tis better to reflect upon it for a few minutes, than to endure it to eternal ages. Perhaps, the consideration of their aggravated misery may be profitably terrible; may teach me more highly to prize the Saviour, who "delivers from going down into the bot-"tomless pit;" may drive me, like the avenger's sword, to this only city of refuge for obnoxious sinners.

The wicked seem to lie here, like malefactors in a deep and strong dungeon; reserved against the day of trial.—"Their departure was without peace." Clouds of horror sat louring upon their closing eye-lids, most sadly foreboding the "blackness of darkness for ever." When the last sickness seized their frame, and the inevitable change advanced; when they saw the fatal arrow fitting to the strings, saw the deadly archer aiming at their heart, and felt the envenomed shaft fastened in their vitals;—good GOD! what fearfulness came upon them! what horrible dread overwhelmed them! How did they stand shuddering and aghast upon the tremendous precipice! excessively afraid to plunge into the abyss of eternity, yet utterly unable to maintain their standing on the verge of life.

O! what pale reviews, what startling prospects, conspire to augment their sorrows!—They look backward, and behold! a most melancholy scene! Sins unrepented

* Isaiah, speaking of the new Jerusalem, mentions this as one of its immunities, the inhabitant thereof shall no more say, I am sick. Another clause, in the royal charter, runs thus: GOD shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; and there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor crying, neither shall there be any more pain. Is. xxxiii. 24. Rev. xxi. 4.

† Job xi. 8. 9.

† —Animus meminisse horret, luctuque refugit. VIRG.

unrepented of; mercy slighted; and the day of grace ending!—They look forward, and nothing presents itself, but the righteous Judge, the dreadful tribunal, and a most solemn reckoning.—They roll around their affrighted eyes on attending friends. If abomplices in debauchery, it sharpens their anguish, to consider, this farther aggravation of their guilt, that they have not sinned alone, but drawn others into the snare. If religious acquaintance, it strikes a fresh gash into their hearts, to think of never seeing them any more, but only at an unapproachable distance, separated by the unpassable gulf.

At last, perhaps, they begin to pray. Finding no other possible way of relief, they are constrained to apply unto the Almighty. With trembling lips, and a faltering tongue, they cry unto that sovereign Being, "who kills and makes alive."—But why have they deferred, so long deferred their addresses to GOD? Why have they despised all his counsels, and stood incorrigible under his incessant reproofs? How often have they been forewarned of these terrors, and most importunately entreated to seek the LORD while he might be found?—I wish they may obtain mercy at the eleventh, at the last hour. I wish they may be snatched from the jaws, the opened, the gaping, the almost closing jaws of damnation. But, alas! who can tell, whether affronted Majesty will lend an ear to their complaint? whether the Holy One will work a miracle of grace in behalf of such transgressors? He may, for aught any mortal knows, "laugh at their calamity, "and mock when their fear cometh."

Thus they lie groaning out the poor remains of life; their limbs bathed in sweat; their heart struggling with convulsive throes; pains insupportable throbbing in every pulse; and innumerable darts of agony transfixing their conscience.

—In that dread moment, how the frantic soul
Raves round the walls of her clay tenement;
Runs to each avenue; and shrieks for help;
But shrieks in vain! How wishfully she looks
On all she's leaving, now no longer hers!
A little longer, yet a little longer,
O! might she stay, to wash away her crimes,
And fit her for her passage! Mournful sight!
Her very eyes weep blood; and every groan
She heaves, is big with horror: but the foe,
—Like a staunch murd'rer, steady to his purpose,
Pursues her close through every lane of life,
Nor misses once the track; but presses on;
Till, forc'd at last to the tremendous verge,
At once she sinks.

If this be the end of the ungodly, "My soul, come "not thou into their secret! Unto their assembly, "mine honour, be not thou united!"—How awfully accomplished is that prediction of inspired wisdom! Sin, though seemingly sweet in the commission, yet at the last it biteth like a serpent, and stingeth like an adder.—Fly therefore from the tents, O! fly from the ways of such wretched men.

HAPPY dissolution! were this the period of their woes. But, alas! all these tribulations are only "the "beginning of sorrows;" a small drop only from that "cup of trembling," which is mingled for their future portion.—No sooner has the last pang dislodged their reluctant souls, but they are hurried into the presence of an injured, angry GOD. Not under the conducting care of beneficent angels, but exposed to the insults of accursed spirits, who lately tempted them, now upbraid them, and will for ever torment them.—Who can imagine their confusion and distress, when they stand guilty, and inexcusable, before their incensed Creator? They are received with frowns. The GOD that made them has no "mercy on them." The Prince of Peace rejects them with abhorrence. He consigns them over to chains of darkness, and receptacles of burning. Execution is sealed down, and must pass upon them the next day.—Then all the vials of wrath will be emptied upon these wretched creatures. Whatever they have violated, and the gospel they have slighted, the power they have defied, and the goodness they have abused, will all get themselves honour in their exemplary destruction. Then GOD, the GOD to whom vengeance belongeth, will draw the arrow to the very head, and set them as the mark of his inexorable displeasure.

Resurrection will be no privilege to them; but immortality itself their everlasting curse. Would they gladly bless the grave, "that land where all things are forgotten;" and wish to lie eternally hid in its deepest gloom? But the dust refuses to conceal their persons, or to draw its veil over their practices. They also must awake, must arise; must appear at the bar; and meet the Judge, their Judge, before whom "the pillars of heaven tremble, and "the earth melts away;" a Judge, once long-suffering, and very compassionate; but now unalterably determined to teach stubborn offenders,—what it is to provoke the omnipotent Godhead; what it is to trample upon the blood of his Son, and offer despite to all the gracious overtures of his Spirit.

O! the perplexity! the distraction! that must seize the impenitent rebels, when they are summoned to hold great tribunal!—What will they do in this day of their visitation? this day of final decision!—Where? how? whence? can they find help!—To which of the saints will they turn? whither betake themselves for shelter, for succour?—Alas! 'tis all in vain; 'tis all too late. Friends and acquaintance know them no more. Men and angels abandon them to their approaching doom. Even the Mediator, the MEDIATOR himself, deserts them in this dreadful hour.—To fly, will be impracticable; to justify themselves, still more impossible; and now to make any supplication, utterly unavailable.

Behold! the books are opened; the secrets of all hearts are disclosed; the hidden things of darkness are brought to light. How empty, how ineffectual, now are all those refined artifices, with which hypocrites imposed upon their fellow-creatures, and preserved a character in the sight of men!—The jealous GOD, who has been about their path, and about their bed, and spied out all their ways, sets before them the things that they have done. They cannot answer him one in a thousand, nor stand in the awful judgment. The heavens reveal their iniquities, and the earth rises up against them †. They are speechless with guilt, and stigmatized with infamy, before all the armies of the sky, and all the nations of the redeemed.—What a favour would they esteem it, to hide their ashamed heads in the bottom of the ocean, or even to be buried beneath the ruins of the tottering world!

If the contempt poured upon them be thus insupportable, how will their hearts endure, when the sword of infinite indignation is unsheathed, and fiercely waved around their defenceless heads, or pointed directly at their naked breasts? How must the wretches scream with wild amazement, and rend the very heavens with their cries, when the right aiming thunder-bolts go abroad! go abroad with a dreadful commission, to drive them from the kingdoms of glory; and plunge them—not into the sorrows of a moment, or the tortures of an hour,—but into all the restless agonies of unquenchable fire, and everlasting despair ‡.

* See a valuable poem, entitled, The Grave.

* Is. xxvii. 11. † Job xx. 27.

‡ Regions of sorrow, doleful shades, where peace
And rest can never dwell; hope never comes
That comes to all; but torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With ever burning sulphur unconsum'd.

Misery of miseries! too shocking for reflection to dwell upon. But, if so dismal to foresee, and that at a distance, together with some comfortable expectation of escaping it,—O! how bitter, inconceiveably bitter, to feel, without any intermission, or any mitigation, throughout boundless and eternal ages!

Who has any bowels of pity?—Who has any sentiments of compassion? Who has any tender concern for his fellow-creatures? Who?—In GOD's name, and for CHRIST's sake, let him shew it, by warning every man, and beseeching every man, to seek the LORD while he may be found; to throw down the arms of rebellion, before the act of indemnity expires; submissively to adore the Lamb, while he holds out the golden sceptre.—Here let us act the friendly part to mankind; here let the whole force of our benevolence exert itself; in exhorting relations, acquaintance, neighbours, whomsoever we may probably influence, to take the wings of faith unfeigned, of repentance undelayed, and flee away from this wrath come.

UPON the whole, what stupendous discoveries are these! Lay them up in a faithful remembrance, O my soul. Recollect them with the most serious attention, when thou liest down, and when thou risest up. When thou walkest, receive them for thy companions; when thou talkest, listen to them as thy prompters; and whatever thou dost, consult them as thy directors.—Influenced by these considerations, thy views will greaten, thy affections be exalted, and thou thyself raised above the tantalizing power of perishing things! Duly mindful of these, it will be the sum of thy desires, and the scope of thy endeavours, to gain the approbation of that sovereign Being, who will then fill the throne, and pronounce the decisive sentence. Thou wilt see nothing worth a wish*, in comparison of having his will for thy rule; his glory for thy aim; and his Holy Spirit for thy ever-actuating principle.

WONDER, O man; be lost in admiration, at those prodigious events, which are coming upon the universe: events, the greatness of which nothing finite can measure; such as will cause whatever is considerable or momentous in the annals of all generations, to sink into littleness and nothing: Events (JESUS prepare us for their approach; defend us, when they take place!) big with the everlasting fates of all the living, and all the dead.—I must see the graves cleaving, the sea teeming, and swarms unsuspected, crouds unnumbered, yea, multitudes of thronging nations, rising from both.—I must see the world in flames; must stand at the dissolution of all terrestrial things; and be an attendant on the burial of nature.—I must see the vast expanse of the sky, wrapt up like a scroll; and the incarnate GOD, issuing forth from light inaccessible, with ten thousand times ten thousand angels, to judge both them and their works.—I must see the curtain of time drop; see all eternity disclosed to view; and enter upon a state of being, that will never, never have an end.

And ought I not (let the vainest imagination determine; ought I not) to try the sincerity of my faith, and take heed to my ways? Is there an inquiry, is there a care, of greater, of equal, of comparable importance? Is not this an infinitely pressing call, to see that my loins are girded about, my lamp trimmed, and myself dressed for the Bridegroom's appearance? that, washed in the fountain opened in my Saviour's side, and clad with the marriage-garment wove by his obedience, I may be found in peace, unblameable, and unreproveable.—Otherwise, how shall I stand with boldness, when the stars of heaven fall from their orbs? How shall I come forth erect and courageous, when the earth itself reels to and fro like a drunkard *? How shall I look up with joy, and see my salvation drawing nigh, when the hearts of millions and millions fail for fear?

Now, Madam, lest my meditations set in a cloud, and leave any unpleasing gloom upon your mind, let me once more turn to the brightening prospects of the righteous. A view of them, and their delightful expectations, may serve to exhilerate the thoughts, which have been musing upon melancholy subjects, and hovering about the edges of infernal darkness. Just as a spacious field, arrayed in chearful green, relieves and invigorates the eye, which has fatigued itself by poring upon some minute, or gazing upon some glaring object.

The righteous seem to lie by in the bosom of the earth, as a wary pilot in some well sheltered creek, till all the storms, which infest this lower world, are blown over. Here they enjoy safe anchorage; are in no danger of foundering, amidst the waves of prevailing iniquity, or of being shipwrecked on the rocks of any powerful temptation. But 'ere long we shall behold them hoisting their flag of hope; riding before a sweet gale of atoning merit, and redeeming love; till they make, with all the sails of an assured faith, the blessed port of eternal life.

Then may the honoured friend, to whom I am writing, rich in good works, rich in heavenly tempers, but inexpressibly richer in her Saviour's righteousness,—O! may she enter the harbour, like a gallant stately vessel, returned successful and victorious from some grand expedition, with acclamations, honour and joy! While my little bark, attendant on the solemnity, and a partaker of the triumph, glides humbly after; and both rest together in the haven,—the wished-for, blissful haven, of perfect security, and everlasting repose.

THE END.

* If. xxiv. 20.

REFLECTIONS
IN A FLOWER-GARDEN.

IN A LETTER TO A LADY.

I look upon the pleasure, which we take in a garden, as one of the most innocent delights in human life. A garden was the habitation of our first parents before the fall. It is naturally apt to fill the mind with calmness and tranquillity, and is by all its verdant paintings at once gives us a great insight into the contrivance and wisdom of Providence, and suggests unanswerable subjects for meditation.

SPECT. VOL. VII. No. 477.

MADAM,

SOME time ago, my meditations took a turn among the Tombs; they visited the awful and melancholy mansions of the dead *; and you was pleased to favour them with your attention.—May I now beg the honour of your company, in a more inviting and delightful excursion? in a beautiful flower-garden; where I lately walked, and at once regaled the sense, and indulged the fancy.

IT was early in a summer-morning, when the air was cool, the earth moist, the whole face of the creation fresh and gay. The noisy world was scarce awake. Business had not quite shook off his sound sleep; and Riot had but just reclined his giddy head. All was serene; all was still; every thing tended to inspire tranquillity of mind, and invite to serious thought.

Only the wakeful lark had left her nest, and was mounting on high to sing the opening day. Elevated in air, she seemed to call the labourious husbandman to his toil, and all her fellow-songsters to their notes.—Earliest of birds, said I, companion of the dawn, may I always rise at thy voice! rise, to offer the matin-song, and adore that beneficent Being, "who maketh the outgoings of the morning and even-"ing to rejoice."

How charming to rove abroad, at this sweet hour of prime! to enjoy the calm of nature; to tread the dewy lawns, and taste the unrifled freshness of the air!

> Sweet is the breath of morn, her rising sweet,
> With charm of earliest birds *.

What a pleasure do the sons of sloth lose? Little, ah! little is the sluggard sensible, how delicious an entertainment he foregoes, for the poorest of all animal gratifications †.

* "Discourses on the vanity of the Creature, which repre-"sent the barrenness of every thing in this world, and its inca-"pacity of producing any solid or substantial happiness, are use-"ful.—Those speculations also, which shew the bright side "of things, and lay forth those innocent entertainments, "which are to be met with among the several objects that en-"compass us, are no less beneficial." Spect. vol. v. No. 393. Upon the plan of these observations, the preceding and following reflections are formed.

* MILT. Par. Lost, b. iv. lin. 641.

† See! how revelation and reason, the scriptures and the classics, unanimously exhort to this most beneficial practice. They both invite us to early rising, by the most engaging motives, and the most alluring representations.

The

The greyneſs of the dawn decays gradually. Abundance of ruddy ſtreaks tinge the fleeces of the firmament; till, at length, the dappled aſpect of the eaſt is loſt, in one ardent and boundleſs bluſh.—Is it the ſurmiſe of imagination, or do the ſkies really redden with ſhame, to ſee ſo many ſupinely ſtretched on their drowſy pillows?—Shall man be loſt in luxurious eaſe? ſhall man waſte theſe precious hours in idle ſlumbers? while the vigorous ſun is up and going on his Maker's errand? while all the feathered choir are hymning their Creator, and paying their homage in harmony?—No! Let him heighten the melody of the tuneful tribes, by adding the rational ſtrains of devotion. Let him improve the fragrant oblations of nature, by mingling, with the riſing odours, the more refined breath of praiſe.

'Tis natural for man to look upward *; to throw his firſt glance upon the objects that are above him.

Strait towards heav'n my wond'ring eyes I turn'd,
And gaz'd a while the ample SKY †.

Prodigious theatre! where lightnings dart their fire, and thunders utter their voice; where tempeſts ſpend their rage, and worlds unnumbered roll at large!—O the greatneſs of that mighty hand, which meteth out this amazing circumference with a ſpan! O the immenſity of that wonderful Being, before whom this unmeaſurable extent is no more than a point!—And O (thou pleaſing thought!) the unſearchable riches of that mercy, which is greater than the heavens †, is more enlarged and extenſive, in its gracious exerciſe, than theſe illimitable tracts of air, and ſea, and firmament! which pardons crimes of the moſt enormous ſize, and the moſt horrid aggravations; pardons them, in conſideration of the Redeemer's atonement, with perfect freeneſs, and the utmoſt readineſs! more readily, if it were poſſible, than this all-ſurrounding expanſe admits, within its circuit, a ridge of mountains, or even a grain of ſand.

Come hither, then, ye awakened, trembling ſinners. Come ‖, weary and heavy-laden with a ſenſe of your iniquities. Condemn yourſelves. Renounce all reliance on any thing of your own. Let your truſt be in the tender mercy of GOD, for ever and ever.

Come, my beloved, let us go forth into the field; let us lodge in the villages! Let us get up early to the vineyards; let us ſee if the vine flouriſh, whether the tender grape appear, and the pomegranates bud forth. Cant. vii. 11, 12.

Ante ſatas primum ſidera, frigida rura
Carpamus; dum nova nouum, dum gramina cænent,
Et roſ en tenera pecori gratiſſimus herba eſt.
VIRG. Georg. III.

Os hominis ſublime dedit, cœlumque tueri
Juſſit, et erecto ad ſidera tollere vultus.
OVID.

* MILT. Par. Loſt, B. viii. lin. 257.

† Pſal. cviii. 4.

‖ The lines which follow, are admirably deſcriptive of the ſpirit and practice hinted above. In them deſire pants; prayer wreſtles; and faith, as it were, graſps the prize.—I take leave to tranſplant them into this place; and I could wiſh them to better, a more conſpicuous ſituation, than either their new or their native ſoil. Their native ſoil is no other than the lamentation of a ſinner, written by Mr Sternhold. Notwithſtanding the unpromiſing genius of the performance, I think, we may challenge the greateſt maſters, to produce any thing more ſpirited and importunate; more full of nature, or more fluſhed with life.

Mercy, good LORD, mercy I crave;
This is the ſorel ſum;
For mercy, LORD, is all my ſuit;
LORD, let thy mercy come.

The ſhort ſentences—Not a ſingle copulative—The frequent repetition of the divine name—The almoſt inceſſant reiteration of the bleſſing, ſo paſſionately deſired, and inexpreſſibly needed—this is the genuine language of ardor; theſe are beauties obvious to every eye; and cannot fail, either to pleaſe the judicious taſte, or to edify the gracious heart.

IN them hath he ſet a tabernacle for the ſun *.——Behold him coming forth from the chambers of the eaſt. See! the cloud, like floating curtains, are thrown back at his approach. With what refulgent majeſty does he walk abroad! How tranſcendently bright is his countenance, ſhedding day, and inexhauſtible light, through the univerſe!——Is there a ſcene, though finiſhed by the moſt elaborate and coſtly refinements of art, "comparable to theſe illuſtrious ſolemnities of opening ſunſhine! Before theſe, all the ſtudied pageantry of the "theatre, the glittering œconomy of an aſſembly, or "even the heightened ornaments of a royal palace, "hide their diminiſhed heads, and ſhrink into nothing." I have read of a perſon ſo ſtruck with the ſplendors of this noble luminary, that he imagined himſelf made on purpoſe to contemplate its glories. O! that Chriſtians would adopt his perſuaſion, and tranſfer it to the Sun of Righteouſneſs! Thus applied, it would ceaſe to be a chimerical notion, and become a moſt important truth. For ſure I am, it is the ſupreme happineſs of the eternal ſtate, and therefore may well be the ruling concern of this preſent life, to know the only true GOD, and JESUS CHRIST, whom he hath ſent.——Nor do I ſtand alone in this opinion. The very beſt judge of whatever is valuable in ſcience, or perfective of our nature; a judge, who formed his taſte on the maxims of paradiſe, and received the finiſhings of his education in the third heavens; this judge determines to know nothing but JESUS CHRIST, and him crucified. He poſſeſſed, in his own perſon, the fineſt, the moſt admired accompliſhments; yet pronounces them no better than dung, in compariſon of the † ſuper-eminent excellency of this ſaving knowledge.

Methinks I diſcern a thouſand admirable properties in the ſun. 'Tis, certainly, the beſt material emblem of the Creator. There is more of GOD in its luſtre, energy, and uſefulneſs, than in any other viſible being. To worſhip it as a deity, was the leaſt inexcuſable of all the Heathen idolatries. One ſcarce can wonder, that fallen reaſon ſhould miſtake ſo fair a copy for the adorable original. No compariſon, in the whole book of ſacred wiſdom, pleaſes me more, than that which reſembles the bleſſed JESUS, to yonder regent of the day ‡; who now advances on his azure road, to ſcatter light and diſpenſe gladneſs through the nations.

WHAT were all the realms of the world, but a dungeon of darkneſs, without the beams of the ſun? All their fine ſcenes hid from our view, loſt in obſcurity.—In vain we roll around our eyes in the midnight gloom. In vain we ſtrive to behold the features of amiable nature. Turn whither we will no form or comeline's appears. All ſeems a dreary waſte, an undiſtinguiſhed chaos, till the returning hours have unbarred the gates of light, and let forth the morn.—Then what a proſpect opens! The heavens are paved with azure, and ſtrewed with roſes. A variety of the liveliеſt verdures array the plains. The flowers put on a glow of the richeſt colours. The whole creation ſtands forth, dreſſed in all the charms of beauty. The raviſhed eye looks round, and wonders.

And what had been the condition of our intellectual nature, without the great Redeemer, and his divine revelation?——Alas! what abſurd and unworthy apprehenſions did the Pagan ſages form of GOD! What idle dreams, what childiſh conjectures, were their doctrines of a future ſtate.—How did the bulk, even of that favoured nation, the Jews, weary themſelves in every vanity, to obtain peace and reconciliation with their offended JEHOVAH! till JESUS aroſe upon their benighted minds, and brought life and immortality light; viz. HE arose, to enlighten the wretched Gentile, and to be the glory of his people Israel.

* Pſal. xix. 4.

† TO ὑπερέχον τῆς γνώσεως. Phil. iii. 7.

‡ Unto you that fear my name, ſhall the Sun of Righteouſneſs ariſe, with healing in his wings. Mal. iv. 2.

Now we no longer cry out, with a reſtleſs impatience, Where is my GOD, my maker? For we are allowed to contemplate the brightneſs of his glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon, in the face of JESUS CHRIST.—Now we no longer inquire, with an unſatisfied ſolicitude, "Which is the way to bliſs?" becauſe JESUS has marked the path, by his ſhining example; and left us an unerring clue in his holy word.—Now we have no more reaſon to perceive with miſgiving hearts in our journey to eternity, or to aſk anxiouſly as we go, "Who "will roll away the ſtone, and open the everlaſting "doors? Who will remove the flaming ſword, and "give us admiſſion into the delights of paradiſe?" For it is done, all done, by the Captain of our ſalvation. Sin he has expiated, by the unblemiſhed ſacrifice of himſelf. The law he has fulfilled, by his perfect obedience. The ſinner he tranſforms, by his ſanctifying Spirit.—In a word, he hath both preſented us with a clear diſcovery of good things to come, and adminiſtered to us an abundant entrance into the final enjoyment of them.

Whenever, therefore, we bleſs GOD for the circling ſeaſons, and revolving day, let us adore, thankfully adore him, for the more precious appearance of the Sun of Righteouſneſs, and his glorious goſpel. Without which, we ſhould have been groping, even to this hour, in ſpiritual darkneſs, and the ſhadow of death: without which, we muſt have wandered in a maze of inextricable uncertainties; and have "ſtumbled upon the dark "mountains" of error, till we fell into the bottomleſs pit of perdition.

WITHOUT that grand enlivening principle, what were this earth, but a lifeleſs maſs? a rude lump of inactive matter? The trees could never break forth into leaves, nor the plants ſpring up unto flowers. We ſhould no more behold the meadows mantled over with green, nor the vallies ſtanding thick with corn. Or, to ſpeak in the beautiful language of a prophet; * No longer would the fig-tree bloſſom, nor fruit be in the vine: the labour of the olive would fail, and the fields could yield no meat: the flocks muſt be cut off from the fold, and there would be no herd in the ſtalls.—The ſun darts its beams among all the vegetable tribes, and paints the ſpring, and enriches the autumn. This pierces to the the roots of the vineyard and the orchard; and ſets afloat thoſe fermenting juices, which at length burſt into floods of wine, or bend the boughs with a mellow load.—Nor are its favours confined to the upper regions; but diſtributed into the deepeſt receſſes of creation. It penetrates the beds of metal, and finds its way to the place of the ſapphires. It tinctures the ſeeds of gold, that are ripening into ore; and throws a brilliancy into the water of the diamond, that is hardening on its rock.—In ſhort, the beneficial agency of this magnificent luminary is inexpreſſible. It beautifies, and impregnates, univerſal nature. "There is nothing hid "from the heat thereof."

JUST in the ſame manner, were the rational world dead in treſpaſſes and ſins, without the reviving energy of JESUS CHRIST. He is "the reſurrection and the "life;" the overflowing fountain of the one, and the all-powerful cauſe of the other. The ſecond Adam, is quickening ſpirit, and all his ſaints live through him. He influences upon their affections; and they ſhoot forth into heavenly graces, and abound in the fruits of righteouſneſs. Faith unfeigned, and love undiſſembled, thoſe nobleſt productions of the renewed nature, are the effect of his operation on the mind. Not ſo much as one divine diſpoſition could ſpread itſelf, not one Chriſtian habit unfold and flouriſh, without the kindly influences of his grace.

* Hab. iii. 17.

As there is no fruitfulneſs, ſo likewiſe no chearfulneſs, without the ſun.—When that ſuſpicious ſovereign of the day diffuſes the mildneſs of his morning-ſplendor, he creates an univerſal feſtival. Millions of glittering inſects awake into exiſtence, and bask in his rays. The birds ſtart from their ſlumbers, and pour their delighted ſouls in harmony. The flocks, with bleating accents, hail the welcome bleſſing. The valleys ring with rural muſic; the hills echo back the artleſs ſtrains. All that is vocal, joins in the general choir: all that has breath, exults in the chearing influence.—Whereas, was that radiant orb extinguiſhed, a tremendous gloom would enſue, and horror inſupportable. Nay, let it only be eclipſed for a few minutes, and all nature aſſumes an air of ſadneſs. The heavens are wrapt in ſables, and put on a kind of mourning. The moſt ſprightly animals hang down their dejected heads. The ſongſters of the grove are ſtruck dumb. Howling beaſts roam abroad for prey, ominous birds come forth and ſcreech: the heart of man fails, or a ſudden pang ſeizes the foreboding mind.—So, when CHRIST hides away his face, when faith loſes ſight of that Conſolation of Iſrael, how gloomy are the proſpects of the ſoul! Our GOD ſeems to be a conſuming fire, and our ſins cry loudly for vengeance. The thoughts bleed inwardly; the Chriſtian walks heavily. All without is irkſome; all within is diſconſolate.—Lift up then, moſt gracious JESUS, thou noble Day-ſpring from on high! O lift up the light of thy countenance upon thy people! Reveal the fulneſs of thy mediatorial ſufficiency; make clear our title to this great ſalvation; and thereby impart

What nothing earthly gives, or can deſtroy,
The ſoul's calm ſunſhine, and the heart-felt joy.

IN one inſtance more let me purſue the ſimilitude. The ſun, I obſerve, pours his luſtre all around, to every diſtance, and in every direction. Profuſely liberal of his gifts, he illuminates and chears all the ends of the earth, and the whole compaſs of the ſkies. The eaſt reddens with his riſing radiance, and the weſtern hills are gilded with his ſtreaming ſplendors. The chilly regions of the north are cheriſhed by his genial warmth; while the ſouthern tracts glow with his fire.—Thus are the influences of the Sun of Righteouſneſs diffuſive and unconfined. The generations of old felt them; and generations yet unborn will rejoice in them. The merits of his precious death extended to the firſt, and will be propagated to the laſt, ages of mankind.—May they, 'ere long, viſit the remoteſt climates, and darkeſt corners of the earth! Command thy goſpel, bleſſed JESUS, thy everlaſting goſpel, to take the wings of the morning, and travel with yonder ſun. Let it fly upon ſtrong pinions among every people, nation, and language; that where the heat ſcorches, and the cold freezes, thou mayſt be known, confeſſed, and adored! that ſtrangers to thy name, and enemies to thy doctrine, may be enlightened with the knowledge, and won to the love, of thy truth! O may that beſt of years come; that wiſhed-for period advance, when all the ends of the world ſhall remember themſelves, and be turned unto the LORD; and all the kindreds of the nations worſhip before him†.

FROM the heavens, we retire to the earth. Here the drops of dew, like ſo many liquid cryſtals‖, ſparkle upon the eye. How brilliant and unſullied is their luſtre! How little inferior to the proud ſtone, which irradiates a monarch's crown! They want nothing but

* "The ſun, which is as the great ſoul of the univerſe, and "produces all the neceſſaries of life, has a particular influence "in chearing the mind of man, and making the heart glad." Spect. vol. V. No. 387. † PSAL. xxii. 27.

‖ Now morn, her roſy ſteps in th' eaſtern clime
Advancing, ſow'd the earth with orient pearl. MILT.

ſolidity and permaneney, to equal them with the fineſt treaſures of the jeweller's caſket.—Here it muſt be confeſſed, they are greatly deficient; ſhort-lived ornaments; poſſeſſed of little more than a momentary radiance. The ſun, that lights them up, will ſoon melt them into air, or exhale them into vapours. Within another hour, we may "look for their place, and they "ſhall be away."—O! may every good reſolution of mine, and of my flock's; may our united breathings after GOD, not be like theſe tranſient decorations of the morning, but like the ſubſtantial glory of the growing day! The one ſhines more and more, with augmented ſplendors; while the other, having glittered gaily for a few moments, diſappear and are loſt.

How ſenſibly has this dew refreſhed the vegetable kingdoms! the fervent heat of yeſterday's ſun had almoſt parched the face, and exhauſted the ſweets, of nature. But what a ſovereign reſtorative are theſe cooling diſtillations of the night! How they gladden and invigorate the languiſhing herbs! Sprinkled with theſe reviving drops, their verdure deepens; their bloom is new fluſhed; their fragrance, faint or intermitted, becomes potent and copious.—Thus does the ever-bleſſed SPIRIT revive the drooping troubled conſcience of a ſinner. When that almighty Comforter ſheds his ſweet influence on the ſoul, diſplays the all-ſufficient ſacrifice of a divine Redeemer, and "witneſſes with our ſpirit," that we are intereſted in the Saviour, and, by this means, are children of GOD; then what a pleaſing change enſues! Former anxieties are remembered no more. Every uneaſy apprehenſion vaniſhes. Soothing hopes, and delightful expectations, ſucceed. The countenance drops its dejected mein; the eyes brighten with a lively chearfulneſs; while the lips expreſs the heart-felt ſatisfaction, in the language of thankſgiving, and the voice of melody.—In this ſenſe, merciful GOD, be as the dew unto Iſrael! "Pour upon them the continual dew of thy bleſſing." And O! let not my fleece be dry, while heavenly benediction deſcends upon all around.

Who can number theſe pearly drops? They hang on every hedge; they twinkle from every ſpray; and adorn the whole herbage of the field. Not a blade of graſs, not a ſingle leaf, but wears the watery pendants. So vaſt is the profuſion, that it baffles the arithmetician's art.—Here let the benevolent mind contemplate and admire that emphatical ſcripture, which, from this elegant ſimilitude, deſcribes the increaſe of the Meſſiah's kingdom. The royal prophet, ſpeaking of CHRIST, and foretelling the ſucceſs of his religion, has this remarkable expreſſion*; The dew of thy birth is of the womb of the morning, (i. e.) As the morning is the mother of dews; produces them, as it were, from a proliſic womb; and ſcatters them, with the moſt laviſh abundance, over all the ſurface of the earth: ſo ſhall thy ſeed be, O thou everlaſting Father! By the preaching of thy word, ſhall ſuch an innumerable race of regenerate children be born unto thee, and prove an ornament and a bleſſing to all ages. Millions, millions of willing converts, from every nation under heaven, ſhall croud into thy family, and repleniſh thy church; till they become like the ſtars of the ſky, or the ſands of the ſea for multitude; or even as numberleſs as theſe fine ſpangles, which now cover the face of nature.——

* Pſal. cx. 3, מרחם משחר לך טל ילדתך. The moſt exact tranſlation of this difficult paſſage is, I apprehend, as follows; Pra vere uteri auroræ, tibi eſt res juventutis vel prolis tuæ. The dew of thy birth is larger, more copious, than the dew which proceeds from the womb of the morning.—I cannot acquieſce in the new verſion; becauſe that diſjoins the womb of the morning, from dew of thy birth. Whereas, they ſeem to have a clear affinity, and a cloſe connection. The womb of the morning is, with the utmoſt pertinency, applied to the conception and and production of dews; agreeably to a delicate line, in that great maſter of juſt deſcription, and lively painting, Mr Thomſon:

The meek-ey'd morn appears, mother of dews. Summer.

We meet with a fine expreſſion in the book of Job, which may ſerve to confirm this remark; may illuſtrate the propriety of the phraſe, uſed in this connection. "Hath the rain a father, or "who hath begotten the drops of dew?" It ſeems, the oriental writers delighted to repreſent the dew, as a kind of birth, as the offſpring of the morning. And if ſo, ſurely there could be no image in the whole compaſs of the univerſe, better adapted to the pſalmiſt's purpoſe, or more ſtrongly ſignificant of thoſe multitudes of proſelytes, which were born, not of blood, nor of the will of the fleſh, nor of the will of man, but of GOD; by the powerful energy of his word and Spirit.—Upon this ſuppoſition, the whole verſe deſcribes

The willing ſubjection,
The gracious accompliſhments,
And the vaſt number,
} of Chriſt's converts.

q. d. In the day of thy power, when thy glorious goſpel ſhall be publiſhed in the world, and accompanied with marvellous efficacy,—in that memorable period, thy people, diſcontinuing the former oblations, commanded under the Moſaic law, ſhall devote themſelves, as ſo many living ſacrifices, to thy honour. Not conſtrained by force, but charmed with thy excellency, they ſhall come in volunteers to thy ſervice, and be free-will offerings in thy church.—Neither ſhall they be "empty vines," or bare profeſſors; but ſhall walk in all the beauties of holineſs, and bring forth ſuch amiable fruit, as will adorn the doctrine they embrace.—What is ſtill more deſirable, they ſhall be as numerous, as they are willing and holy: born to thee in numbers immenſe and inconceivable; exceeding even the countleſs myriads of dew-drops, which are begotten by the night, and iſſue from the womb of the recent morning.

By this interpretation, the text, I think, is cleared of its obſcurity; and appears both truly ſublime, and perfectly juſt.

May I be pardoned the digreſſion, and acquitted from preſumption, if, on this occaſion, I take leave to animadvert upon what ſeems harſh and unnatural in the common expoſition of the laſt verſe of this pſalm? All the commentators (as many, at leaſt, as I have conſulted) inform their readers, that to drink of the brook in the way, ſignifies to undergo ſufferings and death; which, in my opinion, is a conſtruction extremely forced, and hardly ſupportable; altogether remote from the import of ſuch poetical forms of diction cuſtomary among the eaſtern nations. In thoſe ſultry climes, nothing could be more welcome to the traveller, than a brook ſtreaming near his paths. To quench his thirſt, and lave his feet, in the cooling current, was one of the greateſt refreſhments imaginable, and re-animated him to purſue his journey. For which reaſon, among others, brooks are a very favourite image with the inſpired penman; uſed to denote a ſituation fertile and delightful, or a ſtate of pleaſure and ſatisfaction; but never, that I can recollect, to picture out the contrary condition of tribulation and diſtreſs.

The water-floods, indeed, in the ſacred writings, often repreſent ſome imminent danger, or grievous affliction. But then they are not— נחלים כרורי —ſtreams ſo calm, that they keep within their banks, and glide quietly by the traveller's footſteps; ſo clear, that they are fit for the wayfaring man's uſe, and invite his lips to a draught; both which notions are plainly implied in the text.—They are rather—נחלי שבלי—boiſterous billows; burſting over a ſhip, or daſhing themſelves, with dreadful impetuoſity, upon the ſhore: or—שבלת—ſweeping inundations; which bear down all before them, and drown the neighbouring country.—Beſides, in theſe inſtances of horror, we never find the word— שתה —He ſhall drink; which conveys a pleaſing idea (unleſs when it relates to a cup, filled with bitter, intoxicating, or empoiſoned liquors; a caſe quite different from that under conſideration); but either—כעה—which imports terror and aſtoniſhment; or elſe—שטף and ערך—which ſignify to ruſh upon, to overwhelm, and even to bury under the waves.

Upon the whole, May not the paſſage more properly allude to the influences of the Holy Ghoſt? which were communicated, in unmeaſurable degrees, to our great High Prieſt; and were, in fact, the cauſe of his ſurmounting all difficulties.—Theſe are frequently repreſented by waters; "Whoſo believeth on me, "out of his belly ſhall flow rivers of living waters." The enjoyment of them is deſcribed by drinking; "He that drink-"eth of the water that I ſhall give him, ſhall never thirſt."—Then, the ſenſe may run in this well-connected and perſpicuous manner. Is it aſked, How ſhall the Redeemer be able to execute the various and important offices foretold in the preceding Behold then, ye obſtinately wicked, though you "are "not gathered, yet will the Saviour be glorious." His deſign ſhall not miſcarry, nor his labour prove abortive, though you render it of none effect with regard to yourſelves. Think not, that IMMANUEL will want believers, or heaven inhabitants, becauſe you continue incorrigible. No; the Lamb that was ſlain, will "ſee of the travail of his ſoul, and be ſatisfied," in a never-failing ſeries of faithful people below, and an immenſe choir of glorified ſaints above; who ſhall form his retinue, and ſurround his throne, in ſhining and triumphant armies, ſuch as no man can number.

HERE I was reminded of the various expedients which Providence, unſearchably wiſe, uſes, to fructify both the material and intellectual world.—Sometimes you ſhall have impetuous and heavy ſhowers, burſting from the angry clouds. They laſh the plains, and make the rivers foam. A ſtorm brings them, and a deluge follows them.—At other times, theſe gentle dews are formed, in the ſerene evening air. They ſteal down, by ſlow degrees, and with inſenſible ſtillneſs; ſo ſubtile, that they deceive the niceſt eye; ſo ſilent, that they eſcape the moſt delicate ear; and when fallen, ſo very light that they neither bruiſe the tendereſt, nor oppreſs the weakeſt flower.—Very different operations! yet each concurs in the ſame beneficial end, and both impart fertility to the lap of nature.

So, ſome perſons have I known reclaimed from the unfruitful works of darkneſs, by violent and ſevere means. The Almighty addreſſed their ſtubborn hearts, as he addreſſed the Iſraelites at Sinai, with lightning in his eyes, and thunder in his voice. The conſcience, ſmit with a ſenſe of guilt, and apprehenſive of eternal vengeance, trembled through all her powers; juſt as that ſtrong mountain tottered to its centre. Pangs of remorſe and agonies of fear, preceded their new birth. They were reduced to the laſt extremities, almoſt overwhelmed with deſpair, before they found reſt in JESUS CHRIST.—Others have been recovered from a vain converſation, by methods more mild and attractive. The Father of ſpirits applied himſelf to their teachable minds, in "a ſtill and ſmall voice." His grace came down, as the rain into a fleece of wool; or as theſe ſoftening drops, which now water the earth. The kingdom of GOD took place in their ſouls, without noiſe or obſervation. They paſſed from death unto life, from a carnal to a regenerate ſtate, by almoſt imperceptible advances. The tranſition reſembled the growth of corn; was very viſible, when effected; though ſcarce ſenſible, while accompliſhing.—O thou Author and Finiſher of our faith, recall us from our wanderings, and reunite us to thyſelf! Whether thou alarm us with thy terrors, or allure us with thy ſmiles; whether thou drive us with the ſcourge of conviction, or draw us with the cords of love; let us, in any wiſe, return to thee; for thou art our ſupreme good; thou art our only happineſs.

BEFORE I proceed farther, let me aſcend the terrace, and take one ſurvey of the neighbouring country.—What a proſpect ruſhes upon my ſight! How vaſt; how various; how "full and plenteous with all man-"ner of ſtore!" Nature's whole wealth!—What a rich and inexhauſtible magazine is here, furniſhing ſubſiſtence for every creature! Methinks I read, in theſe ſpacious volumes, a moſt lively comment upon that noble celebration of the divine beneficence; He openeth his hand, and filleth all things living with plenteouſneſs.

Theſe are thy glorious works, Parent of good,
Almighty! Thine this univerſal frame,
Thus wond'rous fair! Thyſelf how wond'rous then!
MILT.

The fields are covered deep, and ſtand thick, with corn. They expand the milky grain to the ſun; while the gales, now inclining, now raiſing each flexile ſtem, open all their ranks to the agency of his beams: which will ſoon impart a firm conſiſtence to the grain, and a gloſſy golden hue to the ear; that they may be qualified to fill the barns of the huſbandman with plenty, and his heart with gladneſs.

Yonder lie the meadows, ſmoothed into a perfect level; decorated with an embroidery of the gayeſt flowers; and loaded with * ſpontaneous crops of herbage: which, converted into hay, will prove a moſt commodious proviſion for the barrenneſs of winter; will ſupply with fodder our ſerviceable animals, when all the verdure of the plain is killed by froſts, or buried in ſnows.—A winding ſtream glides along the flowery margin; and receives the image of the bending ſkies, and waters the roots of many a branching willow. 'Tis ſtocked, no doubt, with variety of fiſh; which afford a ſolitary diverſion to the angler, and nouriſh for his table a delicious treat. Nor is it the only merit of this liquid element, to maintain the finny nations; it alſo carries cleanlineſs, and diſpenſes fruitfulneſs, where-ever it rolls the cryſtal current.

The paſtures, with their verdant mounds, chequer the proſpect, and prepare a ſtanding repaſt for our cattle. There "our oxen are made ſtrong to labour;" "and our ſheep bring forth thouſands and ten thou-"ſands." There the horſe acquires vigour, for the diſpatch of our buſineſs; and ſpeed, to expedite our journeys. From thence the kine bring home their udders, diſtended with one of the richeſt and healthieſt liquors in the world.

On ſeveral ſpots, a grove of trees, like ſome grand colonnade, erects its towering head. Every one projects a friendly ſhade for the beaſts, and creates a hoſpitable lodging for the birds. Every one ſtands ready, to furniſh timber for a palace; maſts for a navy; or, with a more condeſcending courteſy, fuel for our hearths.—One of them ſeems ſkirted with a wild, uncultivated heath; which, like well-diſpoſed ſhades in painting, throws an additional luſtre on the more ornamented parts of the landſcape. Nor is its uſefulneſs, like that of a foil, relative only, but real. There ſeveral valuable creatures are produced, and accommodated, without any expence or care of ours. There, likewiſe, ſpring abundance of thoſe herbs, which aſſuage the ſmart of our wounds, and allay the fiery tumults of the fever; which impart floridity to our circulating fluids, add a more vigorous tone to our active ſolids, and thereby repair the decays of our enfeebled conſtitutions.

Nearer the houſes, we perceive an ample ſpread of branches; not ſo ſtately as the oaks, but more amiable for their annual ſervices. A little while ago, I beheld them; and all was one beauteous, boundleſs waſte of bloſſoms. The eye marvelled at the lovely ſight, and the heart rejoiced in the proſpect of autumnal plenty. But now the blooming maid is reſigned, for the uſeful matron. The flower is fallen, and the fruit ſwells out on every twig. Breathe ſoft, ye winds! O ſpare the tender fruitage, ye ſurly blaſts! Let the pear-tree ſuckle her juicy progeny, till they drop into our hands, and diſſolve in our mouths. Let the plumb hang unmoleſted upon her boughs, till ſhe fatten her delicious fleſh, and cloud ding parts of the pſalm? The prophet replies, He ſhall drink of the brook in the way. He ſhall not be left barely to his human nature, which muſt unavoidably ſink under the tremendous work of recovering a loſt world; but, through the whole courſe of his incarnate ſtate, through the whole adminiſtration of his mediatorical kingdom, ſhall be ſupported with omnipotent ſuccours. He ſhall drink at the brook of Almighty power, and travel on in the greatneſs of an uncreated ſtrength.—Therefore ſhall he lift up his head. By this means, ſhall he be equal to the prodigious taſk, and ſuperior to all oppoſition. By this means, ſhall he be thoroughly ſucceſsful in whatever he undertakes, and greatly triumphant over all his enemies.

* ——Injuſſa virescunt
Gramina—— VIRG.

cloud her polished skin with blue. And as for the apples, that staple-commodity of our orchards, let no injurious shocks precipitate them immaturely to the ground; till revolving suns have singed them with a ruddy complexion, and concocted them into an exquisite flavour! Then, what copious hoards, of what burnished rinds, and what delightful relishes, will replenish the store-room! Some, to present us with an early entertainment, and refresh our palates amidst the sultry heats. Some, to borrow ripeness from the falling snows, and carry autumn into the depths of winter. Some, to adorn the salver, make a part of the desert, and give an agreeable * close to our feasts. Others, to fill our vats with a foaming flood; which, mellowed by age, may sparkle in the glass, with a liveliness and delicacy little inferior to the blood of the grape.

I observe several small inclosures, which seem to be apprehensive of some hostile visit from the north; and, therefore, are defended, on that quarter, by a thick wood, or a lofty wall. At the same time they cultivate an uninterrupted correspondence with the south, and throw open their whole dimensions to its friendly warmth. One, in particular, lies within the reach of a distinguishing view, and proves to be a kitchen-garden. It looks, methinks, like a plain and frugal republic. Whatever may resemble the pomp of courts, or the ensigns of royalty, is banished from this humble community. None of the productions of the olitory affect finery, but all are habited with the very perfection of decency. Here those celebrated qualities are eminently united, the utmost simplicity with the exactest neatness †.—A skilful hand has parcelled out the whole ground into narrow beds, and intervening alleys. The same discreet management has assigned to each verdant family, a peculiar and distinct abode. So that there is no confusion amidst the greatest multiplicity; because every individual knows its proper home, and all the tribes are ranged with perfect regularity.—If it be pleasing to behold their orderly situation, and their modest beauties; how much more delightful, to consider the advantages they yield! What a fund of choice accommodations is here! what a source of wholesome dainties, and all for the enjoyment of man. Why does the parsley, with her frizzled locks, shag the border; or why the celery, with her whitening arms, perforate the mould; but to render his soups savoury? The asparagus shoots its tapering stems, to offer him the first-fruits of the season; and the artichoke spreads its turgid top, to give him a treat of vegetable marrow. The tendrils of the ‡ cucumber creep into the sun; and, though balking in its hottest rays, they secrete for their master, and barrel up for his use, the most cooling juices of the soil. The beans stand firm, like files of embattled troops; the peas rest upon their props, like so many companies of invalids; while both replenish their pods with the fatness of the earth, on purpose to pour it on their owner's table.—Not one species, among all this variety of herbs, is a cumberer of the ground. Not a single plant, but is good for food, or some way salutary. With so beneficent an

* Ab ovo
Usque ad mala—— Hor.

† Simplex munditiis. Hor.

‡ Virgil, with great conciseness, and equal propriety, describes the cucumber—

——Tortusque per herbam
Cresceret in ventrem cucumis.—— Georg. IV.

Milton has (if we admit Dr Bentley's alteration, which I, I think in this place, unquestionably just) almost translated the Latin poet, economy, are the several periods of their ministration settled, that no portion of the year is left destitute of nourishing esculents. What is still more obliging, every portion of the year affords such esculents, as are best suited to the temperature of the air, and the state of our bodies.—Why then should the possessor of so valuable a spot envy the condition of Kings? since he may daily walk amidst rows of peaceable and obsequious, though mute subjects. Every one of which tenders him some agreeable present, and pays him a willing tribute; such as is most happily adapted, both to supply his wants, and to regale his taste; to furnish him, at once, with plenty and with pleasure.

—— Forth crept
The swelling gourd——

Par. Lost, b. VII. l. 320.

At a distance, one descries the mighty hills. They heave their huge ridges among the clouds; and look like the barriers of kingdoms, or the boundaries of nature. Bare and deformed as their surface may appear, their bowels are fraught with inward treasures; treasures lodged fast in the quarries, or sunk deep in the mines. From thence, Industry may draw her implements to plough the soil, to reap the grain, and procure every necessary convenience. From thence, Art may fetch her materials, to rear the dome, to swell the organ, and form the noblest ornaments of polite life.

On another side, the great deep terminates the view. There go the ships; there is that leviathan; and there, in that world of waters, an inconceivable number of animals have their habitation.—This is the capacious cistern of the universe; which admits, as into a receptacle, and distributes, as from a reservoir, whatever waters the whole globe. There is not a fountain that gushes in the unfrequented desert; nor a rivulet that flows in the remotest continent, nor a cloud that swims in the highest regions of the firmament, but is fed by this all-replenishing source.—The ocean is the grand vehicle of trade, and the uniter of distant nations. To us it is peculiarly kind, not only as it wafts into our ports the harvest of every climate, and renders our island the centre of traffic; but also as it secures us from foreign invasions, by a sort of impregnable entrenchment †.

Methinks, the view of this profuse munificence inspires a secret delight, and kindles a disinterested good-will.—While the "little hills clap their hands," and the luxuriant "valleys laugh and sing;" who can forbear catching the general joy? who is not touched with lively sensations of pleasure?—While the everlasting Father is scattering blessings through the whole family, and crowning the year with his goodness; who does not feel his breast overflowing with a diffusive benevolence?—My heart, I must confess, beats high with satisfaction; and breathes out congratulatory wishes, upon all the tenants of these rural abodes: "Peace be within your walls, as well as plenteousness

* Hic rarum tamen in dumis olus, albaque circum
Lilia, verbenasque premens, vescumque papaver,
Regum æquabat opes animis: seraque revertens
Nocte domum, dapibus mensas onerabat inemptis.
Virg. Georg. IV.

† Whose rampart was the sea. Nahum iii. 8.

I hope, this little excursion into the country, will not be looked upon as a departure from my subject; because a rural view, though no essential part of a garden, is yet a desirable appendage, and necessary to complete its beauty.—As usefulness is the most valuable property which can attend any production, this is the circumstance chiefly touched upon in the survey of the landscape. Though every piece of this extensive and diversified scene is cast in the most elegant mould, yet nothing is calculated merely for shew and parade. You see nothing formed in the taste of the ostentatious obelisk, or insignificant pomp of the pyramid. No such idle expences were admitted into that consummate plan, which regulated the structure of the universe. All the decorations of Nature are no less advantageous, than ornamental; such as speak the MAKER infinitely beneficent, as well as incomparably magnificent.

"around

"around your dwellings! Live, ye highly favoured; live ſenſible of your beneſits, and thankful to your Benefactor. Look round upon theſe prodigiously large incomes of the fruitful ſoil, and call them (for you have free leave) all your own.—Only let me remind you of one very important truth. Let me ſuggeſt, and may you never forget, that you are obliged to CHRIST JESUS, for every one of theſe accommodations, which ſpring from the teeming earth, and the ſmiling ſkies.

CHRIST * made them, when they were not.—
He fetched them up from utter darkneſs; and gave them both their being, and their beauty. He created the materials, of which they are compoſed; and moulded them into this endleſs multiplicity of amiable forms and uſeful ſubſtances. He arrayed the heavens with a veſture of the mildeſt blue; and clothed the earth in a livery of the gayeſt green. His pencil ſtreaked the lily, and painted the roſe. His breath perfumed the violet, and ſcented the woodbine. His ſtrength ſet faſt the mountains; his goodneſs garniſhed the vales; and the ſame touch which healed the leper, wrought the whole viſible ſyſtem into this complete perfection.

CHRIST recovered them, when they were forfeited.—By Adam's ſin, we loſt our right to the comforts of life, and fruits of the ground. His diſobedi-ence was the moſt impious and horrid treaſon againſt the KING of kings. Conſequently, his whole patrimony became confiſcated: as well the portion of temporal good things, ſettled upon the human race during their minority; as that everlaſting heritage reſerved for their enjoyment, when they ſhould come to full age. But the "ſeed of the woman," inſtantly interpoſing, took off the attainder, and redeemed the alienated inheritance. The firſt Adam being diſinherited, the ſecond Adam † was appointed heir of all things, viſible as well as inviſible. And we, holding our poſſeſſion of the former, we expect an inſtatement in the

* When I aſcribe the work of creation to the SON, I would by no means be ſuppoſed to with-hold the ſame honour from the eternal FATHER, and ever-bleſſed SPIRIT. The acts of theſe inconceivably glorious perſons are, like their eſſence, undivided and one. But I chuſe to ſtate the point in this manner, becauſe this is the manifeſt doctrine of the New Teſtament, is the expreſs belief of our church, and a moſt noble peculiarity of the goſpel-revelation.—I chuſe it alſo, becauſe I would take every opportunity of inculcating, and celebrating, the divinity of the REDEEMER: A truth, which imparts an unutterable dignity to Chriſtianity: a truth, which lays an unmoveable foundation for all the comfortable hopes of a Chriſtian: a truth, which will render the myſtery of our redemption, the wonder and delight of eternity: and with this truth, every one will obſerve, my attention is inſeparably connected.

If any one queſtions, whether this be the doctrine of our church; let the creed, which we repeat in our moſt ſolemn devotions, determine his doubt: "I believe," ſays that form of ſound words, "in one LORD JESUS CHRIST, very GOD "of very GOD, by whom all things were made."—If it be farther inquired, From whence the Nicene fathers derived this article of their faith? I anſwer, From the writings of the beloved diſciple, who lay on the Saviour's boſom; and of that great apoſtle, who had been caught up into the third heaven, John i. 3. Col. i. 16.

† Heb. i. 2.—In this ſenſe at leaſt, CHRIST is the Saviour of all men. The former and latter rain; the precious fruits of the earth; food to eat, and raiment to put on;—all theſe he purchaſed, even for his irreclaimable enemies. They eat of his bread, who lift up their heel againſt him.

We learn from hence, in what a peculiar and endearing light the Chriſtian is to contemplate the things that are ſeen. Heathens might diſcover an eternal power, and infinite wiſdom, in the ſtructure of the univerſe: Heathens might acknowledge a moſt ſtupendous liberality, in the unreſerved grant of the whole fabric, with all its furniture, to the ſervice of man. But the Chriſtian ſhould ever keep in mind his forfeiture of them, and the price paid to redeem them. He ſhould receive the gifts of indulgent providence, as the ſyrtches received their law, from the hand of a Mediator: or rather, to him they ſhould come, not only iſſuing from the ſtores of an unbounded bounty, but ſwimming (as it were) in that crimſon tide, which ſtreamed from IMMANUEL's wounds.

latter, purely by virtue of our alliance to him, and our union with him.

3. CHRIST upholds them, which would otherwiſe tumble into ruin.—By him, ſays the oracle of inſpiration, all things conſiſt.* His finger rolls the ſeaſons round, and preſides over all the celeſtial revolutions. His finger winds up the wheels, and impels every ſpring of vegetative nature. In a word, the whole weight of the creation reſts upon his mighty arm, and receives the whole harmony of its motion from his unerring eye.—This habitable globe, with all its rich appendages, and fine machinery, could no more continue than they could create themſelves. Start, they would into inſtant confuſion, or drop into their primitive nothing, did not his power ſupport, and his wiſdom regulate them, every moment. In conformity to his will, they ſubſiſt, ſtedfaſt and invariable in their orders; and wait only for his ſovereign nod, to "fall away like water that "runneth apace."

4. CHRIST † actuates them, which would otherwiſe be lifeleſs and inſignificant.—Penſioners they are, conſtant penſioners, on his bounty; and borrow their all from his fulneſs. He only has life; and whatever operates, operates by an emanation from his all-ſufficiency. Does the grape refreſh you with its enlivening juices? It is by a warrant received, and virtue derived, from the Redeemer. Does bread ſtrengthen your heart, and prove the ſtaff of your life? Remember, that it is by the Saviour's appointment, and through the efficacy of his operation. You are charmed with his melody, when the "time of the ſinging of "birds is come, and the voice of the nightingale is "heard in your land." You taſte his goodneſs in the luſcious fig, the melting peach, and the muſky flavour of the apricot. You ſmell his ſweetneſs in the opening honeyſuckle, and every odoriferous ſhrub.

Could theſe creatures ſpeak for themſelves, they would, doubtleſs, diſclaim all ſufficiency of their own, and aſcribe the whole honour to their Maker.—"We "are ſervants," would they ſay, "of HIM, who died "for you. Ciſterns, only dry ciſterns in ourſelves, we "tranſmit to mortals no more than the uncreated fountain tranſfuſes into us. Think not, that, from any "ability of our own, we furniſh you with aſſiſtance, "or adminiſter to your comfort. It is the divine e-"nergy, the divine energy alone, that works in us, "and does you good.—We ſerve you, O ye ſons of "men, that you may love him, who placed us in "theſe ſtations. O! love the LORD, therefore, all "ye who are ſupported by our miniſtry; or elſe we "ſhall ‡ groan, with indignation and regret, at your "abuſe of our ſervices.—Uſe us, and welcome; for "we are yours, if ye are CHRIST's. Crop our "choiceſt beauties; rifle all our treaſures; accom-"modate yourſelves with our moſt valuable qualities; "only let us be incentives to your gratitude, and mo-"tives to your obedience."

HAVING ſurveyed the ſpacious ſky, and lent a glance round the inferior creation, 'tis time to deſcend from

* Coloſ. i. 17. I beg leave to ſubjoin St Chryſoſtom's pertinent and beautiful note upon the paſſage; by which it will appear, that the ſentiment of theſe ſections is not merely a private opinion, but the avowed belief of the primitive church. Τελειον, ſays the eloquent father, εις αυτον χρειαζεται η παλιν υποστασις· η μονον αυλος φυλαξ εκ της μη οντος εις το ειναι παρηλθεν, αλλα και αυλος αυλα συνεχραλι και ωσε αν αποστασθη της αυλε προνοιας, απωλετο και διεφθαρλαι.

† John v. 17. My Father worketh hitherto, and I work; or, I exert that unremitting and unwearied energy, which is the life of the creation.—Thus the words are paraphraſed by a maſterly expoſitor, who has illuſtrated the life of our bleſſed LORD, in the moſt elegant taſte of criticiſm; with the moſt amiable ſpirit of devotion; and without any mixture of the malignant leaven, or low ſingularities, of a party. See the Family-Expoſitor, vol. I. ſect. 47.

‡ Rom. viii. 22.

this eminence, and confine my attention to the beautiful spot below.—Here Nature, always pleasing, every where lovely, appears with peculiar attractions. Yonder she receives dressed in her deshabille; grand, but irregular. Here she calls in her handmaid, Art; and shines in all the delicate ornaments, which the nicest cultivation is able to convey. Those are her common apartments, where she lodges her ordinary guests; this is her cabinet of curiosities, where she entertains her intimate acquaintance.—My eye shall often expatiate over these scenes of universal fertility; my feet shall sometimes brush through the thicket, or traverse the lawn, or stroll along the forest-glade: but to this delightful recreat shall be my chief resort. Thither will I make excursions; but here will I dwell.

If, from my low procedure, I may form an allusion to the most exalted practices, I would observe, upon this occasion, That the celebrated Erasmus, and our judicious Locke, having trod the circle of the sciences, and ranged through the whole extent of human literature, at length betook themselves solely to the Bible. Leaving the sages of antiquity, they sat incessantly at the feet of JESUS. Wisely they withdrew from that immense multiplicity of learning, from those endless tracts of abstruse erudition, where noxious weeds are mixed with wholesome herbs; where is generally a much larger growth of prickly shrubs, than of fruitful boughs. They spent their most mature hours in those hallowed gardens, which GOD's own wisdom planted, which GOD's own Spirit watereth, and in which GOD's own Son is continually walking; where he meeteth those that seek him, and revealeth to them the glories of his person, and the riches of his goodness.

Thus would I finish the remainder of my days! Having just tasted (what they call) the politer studies, I would now devote my whole application to the lively oracles. From other pursuits, I might glean, perhaps, a few scattered fragments of low, of lean, of unsatisfactory instruction. From this I trust to reap a harvest of the sublimest truths, the noblest improvements, and the purest joys *,—Waft me then, O! waft my mind to Sion's consecrated bowers. Let my thoughts perpetually rove through the awfully-pleasing walks of inspiration. Here grow these heaven-born plants, the trees of life and knowledge; whose ambrosial fruits we now may "take and eat, and live for ever." Here flow those precious streams of grace and righteousness, whose living waters, "whosoever drinks, shall thirst no "more." And what can the fables of Grecian song, or the finest pages of Roman eloquence,—what can they exhibit, in any degree comparable to these matchless prerogatives of revelation?—Therefore, though I should not dislike to pay a visit now and then to my Heathen masters, I would live with the prophets and apostles. With those I would carry on some occasional correspondence; but these should be my bosom-friends, my inseparable companions, "my delight, and my "counsellors."

WHAT sweets are these, which so agreeably salute my nostrils? They are the breath of the flowers, the incense of the garden.—How liberally does the jessamine dispense her odoriferous riches? How deliciously has the woodbine embalmed this morning-walk? The air is all perfume.—And is not this another most engaging argument to forsake the bed of sloth? Who would lie dissolved in senseless slumbers, while so many breathing sweets invite him to a feast of fragrancy? Especially considering, that the advancing day will exhale the volatile dainties. A fugitive treat they are, prepared only for the wakeful and industrious. Whereas, when the sluggard lifts his heavy eyes, the flowers will droop; their fine scents be dissipated; and, instead of this refreshing humidity, the air will become a kind of liquid fire.

With this very motive, heightened by a representation of the most charming pieces of morning-scenery, the parent of mankind awakes his lovely consort. There is such a delicacy in the choice, and so much life in the description, of these rural images, that I cannot excuse myself, without repeating the whole passage.—Whisper it, some friendly genius, in the ear of every one, who is now sunk in sleep, and lost to all these refined gratifications!

Awake: the morning shines, and the fresh field
Calls you: ye lose the prime, to mark how spring
The tended plants, how blows the citron-grove;
What drops the myrrh, and what the balmy reed;
How Nature paints her colours; how the bee
Sits on the bloom, extracting liquid sweets.

How delightful is this fragrance! It is distributed in the nicest proportion; neither so strong, as to oppress the organs; nor so faint, as to elude them. We are soon cloyed at a sumptuous banquet; but this pleasure never loses its poignancy, never palls the appetite.—Here luxury itself is innocent; or rather, in this case, indulgence is incapable of excess.—This balmy entertainment, not only regales the sense, but † chears the very soul; and, instead of clogging, elates its powers.—It puts me in mind of that ever memorable sacrifice, which was once made in behalf of offending mortals, I mean the sacrifice of the blessed JESUS, when he offered up himself to GOD, "for a sweet-smelling sa-"vour." Such the Holy Spirit styles that wonderful oblation; as if no image, in the whole sensible creation, was so proper to give us an idea of the ineffable satisfaction, which the Father of mercies conceived from that unparalleled atonement, as the pleasing sensations, which such rich perfumes are capable of raising. "Thousands of rams, and ten thousands of "rivers of oil," from an apostate world; the most submissive acknowledgments, added to the most costly offerings, from men of defiled hands, and unclean lips; what could they have effected? A prophet represents the "high and lofty One, that inhabiteth "eternity," turning himself away from such filthy rags; turning himself away, with a disdainful abhorrence‡, as from the noisome streams of a dunghill.—But in CHRIST's immaculate holiness, in CHRIST's consummate obedience, in CHRIST's most precious blood-shedding, with what unimaginable complacency does justice rest satisfied, and vengeance acquiesce!—All thy works, O thou Surety for ruined sinners! all thy sufferings, O thou slaughtered Lamb of GOD! as well as all thy garments, O thou Bridegroom of thy church! smell of myrrh, aloes, and cassia‖! They are infinitely more grateful to the eternal Godhead, than the choicest exhalations of the garden, than all the odours of the spicy east, can be to the human nostrils.

As the altar of old sanctified the gift; so this is the great propitiation, which recommends the obnoxious persons, and unprofitable services of the believing world. In this may my soul be interested! By this may it be reconciled to the Father!—There is such a leprous depravity cleaving to my nature, as pollutes whatever I perform. My most profound adorations, and sincerest acts of religion, must not presume to challenge a reward, but humbly implore forgiveness §. Renouncing,

* Quicquid docetur, veritas; quicquid præcipitur, bonitas; quicquid promittitur, felicitas.

* MILT. Par. Lost, b. v. l. 20.

† Ointment and perfume rejoice the heart. Prov. xxvii. 9.

‡ Amos v. 21. 22. ‖ Psal. xlv. 9.

§ A writer of distinguished superiority, thus addresses the great Observer of actions, and Searcher of hearts; and vindicates my sentiments, while he so justly and beautifully utters his own:

Look down, great GOD, with pity's softest eye,
On a poor breathing particle in dust, therefore, myself in every inſtance of duty, diſclaiming all ſhadow of confidence * in any deeds of my own, may I now, and evermore, be accepted through the Beloved!

His

WHAT colours, what charming colours, are here! Theſe ſo nobly bold; and thoſe ſo delicately languid. What a glow is enkindled in ſome! what a gloſs ſhines upon others! In one, methinks, I ſee the ruby with her bleeding radiance; in another, the ſapphire with her ſky-tinctured blue; in all ſuch an exquiſite richneſs of dyes, as no other ſet of paintings in the univerſe can boaſt †.—With what a maſterly ſkill is every one of the varying tints diſpoſed! Here they ſeem to be thrown on with an eaſy daſh of ſecurity and freedom; there they are adjuſted by the niceſt touches of art and accuracy. Thoſe which form the ground, are always ſo judiciouſly choſen, as to heighten the luſtre of the ſuperadded figures; while the verdure of the impalement or the ſhadings of the foliage, impart new livelineſs to the whole. Indeed, whether they are blended or arranged, ſoftened or contraſted, they are manifeſtly under the conduct of a taſte that never miſtakes, a felicity that never falls ſhort of, the very perfection of elegance.—Fine, inimitably fine, is the texture of the web, on which theſe ſhining treaſures are diſplayed. What are the labours of the Perſian looms, or the boaſted commodities of Bruſſels, compared with theſe curious manufactures of nature? Compared with theſe, the moſt admired chintzes loſe their reputation; even ſuperfine cambricks appear coarſe as canvaſs in their preſence.

What a chearing argument does our Saviour derive from hence, to ſtrengthen our affiance in GOD! He directs us to learn a leſſon of heaven-depending faith, from every bird that wings the air, and from every flower that bloſſoms in the field. If Providence, with unremitted care, ſupports thoſe inferior creatures, and arrays theſe inſenſible beings with ſo much ſplendor; ſurely he will in nowiſe with-hold from his elect children, "bread to eat, and raiment to put on."—Ye faithful followers of the Lamb, diſmiſs every low anxiety, relating to the needful ſuſtenance of life. He that feeds the ravens from an inexhauſtible magazine; he that paints the plants with ſuch ſurpaſſing elegance; in ſhort, he that provides ſo liberally, both for the animal and vegetable parts of his creation; will not, cannot, neglect his own people.—Fear not, little flock, ye peculiar objects of almighty love! it is your Father's good pleaſure to give you a kingdom ‡. And, if he freely gives you an everlaſting kingdom hereafter, is it poſſible to ſuppoſe, that he will deny you any neceſſary conveniences here?

His crimes forgive; forgive his virtues too,
Thoſe ſmaller faults, half-converts to the right.
Night-Thoughts, No. IX.

* See page 44. and 45. in the ſecond edition of a moſt candid and evangelical little treatiſe, called CHRISTIANITY the great ORNAMENT of human life.——"If Chriſtians "happily avoid the dangerous extreme, and too often fatal "rock of a dead fruitleſs faith on the one hand, he (i.e. Satan) will endeavour, by all kind of plauſible inſinuations, "to ſplit them on the oppoſite, viz. ſpiritual pride, oſtentation, "and dependence on their works, as if THESE were the meritorious or procuring cauſe of all true peace, hope, conſolation, and divine acceptance.—Now, this ſelf-dependence "may be ranked among the moſt dangerous of the infernal po"litics, becauſe the fatal poiſon lies deep, and too often un"diſcerned."

† ——Who can paint
Like Nature? Can Imagination boaſt,
Amid his gay creation, hues like theſe?
And can he mix them with that matchleſs ſkill,
And lay them on ſo delicately fine,
And loſe them in each other, as appears
In every bud that blows?—THOMS. Spring.

‡ Luke xii. 32.

OUR cannot forbear reflecting, in this place, on the too prevailing humour, of being fond and oſtentatious of dreſs *. What an abject and miſtaken ambition is this! How unworthy the dignity of immortal, and the wiſdom of rational beings! Eſpecially, ſince theſe little productions of the earth have indiſputably the pre-eminence in ſuch outward embelliſhments.—Go, clothe thyſelf with purple, and fine linen; trick thyſelf up in all the gay attire, which the ſhuttle or the needle can furniſh: yet know, to the mortification of thy vanity, that the native elegance of a common daiſy † eclipſes all this elaborate finery.—Nay, wert thou decked like ſome illuſtrious princeſs, on her coronation-day, in all the ſplendor of royal apparel; couldſt thou equal even Solomon, in the height of his magnificence and glory; yet would the meaneſt among the flowery populace outſhine thee. Every diſcerning eye would give the preference to theſe beauties of the ‖ ground.—Scorn then to borrow thy recommendations from a neat diſpoſition of threads, and a curious arrangement of colours. Aſſume a becoming greatneſs of temper. Let thy endowments be of the immortal kind. Study to be all-glorious within. Be clothed with humility. Wear the ornament of a meek and quiet ſpirit §. To ſay all in a word, Put on the LORD JESUS CHRIST §.

* Mr Addiſon has a fine remark on a female warrior, celebrated by Virgil. He obſerves, that, with all her other great qualities, this little foible mingled itſelf; becauſe, as the poet relates, an intemperate fondneſs for a rich and ſplendid ſuit of armour betrayed her into ruin. In this circumſtance, our critic diſcovers a moral concealed; this he admires, as a neat, though oblique ſatire, on that trifling paſſion. Spect. vol. I. No. 15.

I would refer it to the judicious reader, whether there is not a beauty of the ſame kind, but touched with a more maſterly hand, in the ſong of Deborah.—Speaking of Siſera's mother, the ſacred euchariſtic ode repreſents her as anticipating, in her fond fancy, the victory of her ſon; and indulging the following ſoliloquy:—Have they not ſped? have they not divided the prey? to Siſera a prey of divers colours; a prey of divers colours of needle-work, of divers colours of needle-work on both ſides; meet for the necks of them that take the ſpoil?—She takes no notice of the ſignal ſervice, which her hero would do to his country, by quelling ſo dangerous an inſurrection. She never reflects on the preſent acclamations, the future advancement, and the eternal renown, which are the tribute uſually paid to a conqueror's merit. She can conceive, it ſeems, nothing greater, than to be clad in an embroidered veſture; and to trail along the ground, a robe of the richeſt dyes. This is in her imagination, the moſt lordly ſpoil he can win; the moſt ſtately trophy he can erect.—It is alſo obſervable, how ſhe dwells upon the trivial circumſtance, reiterating it again and again. It has ſo charmed her ignoble heart, ſo entirely engroſſed her little views, that ſhe can think of nothing elſe, ſpeak of nothing elſe, and can hardly ever drift from the darling topic.—Is not this a keen, though delicately touched cenſure, on that poor contemptible, grovelling taſte, which is enamoured with ſilken finery, and makes the attributes of a butterfly the idol of its affections.

How conſpicuous is the elevated and magnificent ſpirit of that venerable mother in Iſrael, when viewed in compariſon with the low, the deſpicable turn of this Canaaniſh lady!—Such ſtrong and beautiful contraſts are, I think, ſome of the moſt ſtriking excellencies of poetic painting: and in no book are they more frequently uſed, or expreſſed with greater life, than in the ſacred volumes of inſpiration.

† Peaceful and lowly in their native ſoil,
They neither know to ſpin, nor care to toil;
Yet with confeſs'd magnificence deride
Our mean attire, and impotence of pride. PRIOR.

‡ Mr Cowley, with his uſual brilliancy of imagination, ſtyles them ſtars of earth.

‖ How beautifully does the prophet deſcribe the furniture of a renewed and heavenly mind, under the ſimilitude of a rich and complete ſuit of apparel! I will greatly rejoice in the LORD; my ſoul ſhall be joyful in my GOD; for he hath clothed me with the garments of ſalvation; he hath covered me with the robe of righteouſneſs, as a bridegroom decketh himſelf with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herſelf with her jewels. Iſ. lxi. 10.

§ Rom. xiii. 14.

let

let his blood be ſprinkled upon thy conſcience, and it ſhall be whiter than the virgin-ſnows. Let his righteouſneſs, like a ſpotleſs robe, adorn thy inner man; and thou ſhalt be amiable, even in the moſt diſtinguiſhing eye of GOD. Let his bleſſed Spirit dwell in thy heart; and, under his ſanctifying operations, thou ſhalt be made partaker of a divine nature.

Theſe are real excellencies; truly noble accompliſhments theſe. In this manner be arrayed, be beautified; and thou wilt not find a rival in the feathers of a peacock, or the foliation of a tulip. Theſe will exalt thee far above the low pretenſions of lace and embroidery. Theſe will prepare thee to ſtand in the beatific preſence, and take thy ſeat among the angels of light.

WHAT an enchanting ſituation is this! One can ſcarce be melancholy within the atmoſphere of flowers. Such lively hues, and delicious odours, not only addreſs themſelves agreeably to the ſenſes; but touch, with a ſurpriſing delicacy, the ſweeteſt movements of the mind:

> ——To the heart inſpiring
> Vernal delight and joy. MILT. b. iv.

How often have I felt them diſſipate the gloom of thought, and tranſfuſe a ſudden gaiety through the dejected ſpirit! I cannot wonder, that kings deſcend from their thrones, to walk amidſt blooming ivory and gold; or retire from the moſt ſumptuous feaſt, to be recreated with the more refined ſweets of the garden. I cannot wonder that queens forego, for a while, the compliments of a nation, to receive the tribute of the parterre; or withdraw from all the glitter of a court, to be attended with the more ſplendid equipage of a bed of flowers.—But if this be ſo pleaſing, what tranſporting pleaſure muſt ariſe from the fruition of uncreated excellency! O! what unknown delight, to enter into thy immediate preſence, moſt bleſſed LORD GOD! to ſee thee †, thou King of heaven, and LORD of glory, no longer "through a glaſs darkly, but face "to face!" to have all thy goodneſs, all thy greatneſs, ſhine before us; and be made glad for ever with the brighteſt diſcovery of thy perfections, with the ineffable joy of thy countenance.

This we cannot bear, in our preſent imperfect ſtate. The effulgence of unveiled divinity would dazzle a mortal ſight. Our feeble faculties would be overwhelmed with ſuch a fullneſs of ſuperabundant bliſs; and muſt lie oppreſſed under ſuch an exceeding great, eternal weight of glory.—But, when this corruptible hath put on incorruption, the powers of the ſoul will be greatly invigorated; and the earthly tabernacles will be transformed into the likeneſs of CHRIST's glorious body. Then, though "the moon ſhall be confounded, and the ſun aſhamed *," when the LORD of hoſts is revealed from heaven; yet ſhall his faithful people be enabled to ſee him as he is †.

Here then, my wiſhes, here be fixed. Be this your determined and invariable aim.——Here, my affections, here give a-looſe to your whole ardor. Cry out, in the language of inſpiration, This one thing have I deſired of the LORD, which, with inceſſant earneſtneſs, I will require; that I may dwell in the celeſtial houſe of the LORD, all the days of my future life; to behold the fair beauty of the LORD ‡, and to contemplate, with wonder and adoration—with unſpeakable and everlaſting rapture—all the attributes of the incomprehenſible Godhead.

SOLOMON, a moſt penetrating judge of human nature, knowing how highly mankind is charmed with the fine qualities of flowers, has figured out the bleſſed JESUS, that "faireſt among ten thouſand," by theſe lovely repreſentatives. He ſtyles him ‖ the roſe of Sharon, and the lily of the vallies §; like the firſt, full of delights, and communicable graces; like the laſt, exalted in majeſty, and complete in beauty.—In that ſacred paſtoral, he ranges the creation; borrows its moſt finiſhed forms; and dips his pencil in its choiceſt dyes, to preſent us with a ſketch of the amiableneſs of his perſon: his amiableneſs, who is the light of the world; the glory of his church; the only hope, the ſovereign conſolation of ſinners; and exalted, infinitely exalted, not only above the ſublimeſt compariſon, but even "above all bleſſing and praiſe."—May I alſo make the ſame heavenly uſe of all ſublunary enjoyments! Whatever is pleaſurable or charming below, let it raiſe my deſire to thoſe delectable objects, which are above; which will yield, not partial, but perfect felicity; not tranſient, but never-ending, ſatisfaction and joy.—Yes, my ſoul, let theſe beauties in miniature always remind thee of that glorious perſon, in whom "dwells all the "fulneſs of the Godhead bodily." Let theſe little emanations teach thee to thirſt after the eternal fountain. O! may the creatures be thy conſtant clue to the Creator! For this is a certain truth, and deſerves thy frequent recollection, demands thy moſt attentive conſideration; that the whole compaſs of finite perfection, is only a faint ray ¶, ſhot from that immenſe ſource;—is only a ſmall drop, derived from that inexhauſtible ocean—of all good.

WHAT a ſurpriſing variety is obſervable among the flowery tribes! How has the bountiful hand of Providence diverſified theſe niceſt pieces of his workmanſhip! added the charms of an endleſs novelty, to all their other perfections!——A conſtant uniformity would

---

* "I would have my reader endeavour to MORALIZE "this natural pleaſure of the ſoul, and to improve this vernal "delight, as Milton calls it, into a Chriſtian virtue. When "we find ourſelves inſpired with this pleaſing inſtinct, this "ſecret ſatisfaction and complacency, ariſing from the beauties "of the creation, let us conſider, to whom we ſtand indebted "for all theſe entertainments of ſenſe; and who it is that "thus opens his hand, and fills the world with good.—Such "an habitual diſpoſition of mind conſecrates every field and "wood, turns an ordinary walk into a morning and evening "ſacrifice; and will improve thoſe tranſient gleams, which "naturally brighten up and refreſh the ſoul on ſuch occaſions, "into an inviolable and perpetual ſtate of bliſs and happi"neſs." Spect. vol. V. No. 394.

† Iſaiah repreſents the felicity of the righteous, in the everlaſting world, by this elegant and amiable image; Thine eyes ſhall ſee the King in his beauty.—Milton touches the ſame ſubject, with wonderful elevation and majeſty of thought:

> ——They walk with GOD,
> High in ſalvation, and the climes of bliſs.

Words, which, like the fiery car, almoſt tranſport our affections to thoſe glorious abodes.

Iſ. xxxiii. 17. MILT. b. XI. v. 707.

‡ Pſal. xxvii. 4. ‖ Cant. ii. 1.

> Malus ut arboribus decori eſt, ut vitibus uvæ,
> Utque roſæ campis, ut lilia vallibus alba,
> Sic CHRISTUS decus omne ſuis.——

§ By the lily of the vallies, I apprehend, is meant, not the flower which commonly paſſes under that denomination, and is comparatively mean; but the grand, majeſtic, garden-lily, growing in a rich, irriguous ſoil, where it flouriſhes in the moſt ample manner, and arrives at the higheſt perfection. The circumſtance of the vallies, added by the ſacred writer, is ſignificant not of the ſpecies, but of the place.—This is by far the nobleſt interpretation, and moſt exactly ſuitable to the ſpiritual ſenſe; which intimates, that the bleſſed JESUS delights to dwell, by the communications of his Spirit, in humble hearts. שושנת העמקים lilium vallibus gaudens.

¶ —Thou ſitt'ſt above all heav'ns,
To us inviſible, or dimly ſeen
In theſe thy loweſt works; yet theſe declare
Thy goodneſs beyond thought, and pow'r divine.
MILT. book v.

soon render the entertainment tiresome, or insipid; therefore every species is formed on a separate plan, and exhibits something entirely new. The fashion spreads not from family to family; but every one has a mode of its own, which is truly original. The most cursory glance perceives an apparent difference, as well as a peculiar delicacy, in the airs and habits, the attitude and lineaments, of every distinct class.

Some rear their heads with a majestic mien, and overlook, like sovereigns or nobles, the whole parterre. Others seem more moderate in their aims, and advance only to the middle stations; a genius turned for heraldry might term them the gentry of the border. While others, free from all aspiring views, creep unambitiously on the ground, and look like the commonalty of the kind.—Some are interfected with elegant stripes, or studded with radiant spots. Some affect to be genteelly powdered, or neatly fringed; while others are plain in their aspect, unaffected in their dress, and content to please with a naked simplicity. Some assume the monarch's purple; some look most becoming in the virgin's white; but black, doleful black, has no admittance into the wardrobe of spring. The weeds of mourning would be a manifest indecorum, when nature holds an universal festival. She would now inspire none but delightful ideas, and therefore always makes her appearance in some * amiable suit.—Here stands a warrior, clad with crimson; there sits a magistrate, robed in scarlet; and yonder struts a pretty fellow, that seems to have dipped his plumes in the rainbow, and glitters in all the gay colours of that resplendent arch. Some rise into a curious cup, or fall into a set of beautiful bells. Some spread themselves in a swelling tuft, or crowd into a delicious cluster.—In some, the predominant stain softens by the gentlest diminutions, till it has even stole away from itself. The eye is amused at the agreeable delusion; and we wonder to find ourselves insensibly decoyed into a quite different lustre. In others, you would think, the fine tinges were emulous of pre-eminence. Disdaining to mingle, they confront one another with the resolution of rivals, determined to dispute the prize of beauty; while each is improved, by the opposition, into the highest vivacity of complexion.

How manifold are thy works †, O LORD! Multiplied even to a prodigy. Yet in wisdom, consummate wisdom, hast thou made them all.—How I admire the vastness of the contrivance, and the exactness of the execution! Man, feeble man, with difficulty accomplishes a single work. Hardly, and after many efforts, does he arrive at a tolerable imitation of some one production of nature. But the almighty Artist spoke millions of substances into instantaneous being; the whole collection wonderfully various, and each individual completely perfect.—Repeated experiments generally, I might say always, discover errors or defects in our happiest inventions. Nay, what wins our approbation, at the present hour, or in this particular place, is very probably, in some remote period, or some distant clime, treated with contempt. Whereas, these fine structures have pleased every taste, in every country, for almost six thousand years. Nor has any ‡ fault been detected in the original plan, nor any room left for the least improvement upon the first model.—All our performances, the more minutely they are scanned, the more imperfect they appear. With regard to these delicate objects, the more we search into their properties, the more we are ravished with their graces. They are sure to disclose fresh strokes of the most masterly skill, in proportion to the attention with which they are examined.

Nor is the simplicity of the operation less astonishing, than the accuracy of the workmanship, or the infinitude of the effects. Should you ask, "Where, and "what are the materials which beautify the blooming "world? What rich tints, what splendid dyes, what stores "of shining crayons, stand by the heavenly Limner, "when he paints the robe of nature?" 'Tis answered, His powerful pencil needs no such costly apparatus. A single principle, under his conducting hand, branches out into an immensity of the most varied, and most finished forms. The moisture of the earth, and of the circumambient air, passed through proper strainers, and disposed in a range of pellucid tubes; this performs all the wonders, and produces all the beauties, of vegetation. This creeps along the fibres of the low-spread moss, and climbs to the very tops of the lofty waving cedars. This, attracted by the root, and circulating through invisible canals; this burls into germs, expands itself into leaves, and clothes the forest with all its verdant honours.—This one *, plain and simple cause, gives birth to all the charms, which deck the youth and maturity of the year. This blushes in the early hepatica, and flames in the late-advancing poppy. This reddens into blood in the veins of the mulberry; and attenuates itself into leafen gold, to create a covering for the quince. This breathes in all the fragrant gales of our garden, and weeps odorous gum in the groves of Arabia.—So † wonderful is our Creator in counsel, and so excellent in working!

In a grove of tulips, or a knot of pinks, one perceives a difference in almost every individual. Scarce any two are turned and tinctured exactly alike. Each allows himself a little particularity in his dress, though all belong to one family: so that they are various, and yet the same.—A pretty emblem this of the smaller differences between Protestant Christians. There are modes in religion, which admit of variation, without prejudice to sound faith, or real holiness. Just as the drapery on these pictures of the spring, may be formed after a variety of patterns, without blemishing their beauty, or altering their nature.—Be it so then, that, in some points of inconsiderable consequence, several of our brethren dissent: yet let us all live amicably and sociably together; for we harmonize in principles, though we vary in punctilios. Let us join in conversation, and intermingle interests; discover no estrangement of behaviour, and cherish no alienation of affection. If any strife subsists, let it be to follow our divine Master most closely, in humility of heart, and unblameableness of life. Let it be to serve one another most readily, in all the kind offices of a cordial friendship. Thus shall she be united, though distinguished; united in the same grand fundamentals, though distinguished by some small circumstantials; united in one important bond of brotherly love, though distinguished by some slighter peculiarities of sentiment.

Between Christians, whose judgments disagree only about a form of prayer, or manner of worship, I apprehend, there is no more essential difference, than between flowers which bloom from the same kind of seed, but happen to be somewhat diversified in the mixture of their colours.—Whereas, if one denies the divinity of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, and degrades the incarnate GOD to the meanness of a mere creature; if another cries up the worthiness of human works, and depreciates the alone-meritorious righteousness of

* —Nunc formosissimus annus. VIRG. † Psal. civ. 24.

‡ Eccles. iii. 14. I know, that whatsoever GOD doth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be added to it, nor any thing taken from it.

* "When every several effect has a particular separate cause, "this gives no pleasure to the spectator, as not discovering con-"trivance. But that work is beheld with admiration and delight, "as the result of deep counsel, which is compleated in its parts, "and yet simple in its operations: where a great variety of ef-"fects are seen to arise from one principle operating uniform-"ly." ABERNETHY on the attributes.

† Is. xxviii. 29.

the glorious Mediator; if a third addreſſes the incommunicable honours to a finite being, and bows to the image, or prays to the ſaint;—theſe are errors, extremely derogatory to the REDEEMER's dignity, and not a little prejudicial to the comfort of his people. Againſt theſe to remonſtrate; againſt theſe to urge every argument, and uſe every diſſuaſive; beſpeaks not the cenſorious bigot, but the friend of truth, and the lover of mankind.—Whereas, to ſtand neuter and ſilent, while ſuch principles are propagated, would be an inſtance of criminal remiſſneſs, rather than of Chriſtian moderation.—For the perſons, we will not fail to maintain a tender compaſſion; we will not ceaſe to put up earneſt interceſſions; we will alſo acknowledge and love whatever is excellent and amiable in their character. Yet we dare not ſubſcribe their creed; we cannot remit our aſſiduous, but kind endeavours, if by any means we may reconcile them to a more ſcriptural belief, and a purer worſhip *.

ANOTHER circumſtance, recommending and endearing the flowery creation, is their regular ſucceſſion. They make not their appearance all at once, but in an orderly rotation. While a proper number of theſe obliging retainers are in waiting, the others abſcond; but hold themſelves in a poſture of ſervice, ready to take their turn, and fill each his reſpective ſtation, the inſtant it becomes vacant.—The ſnowdrop, foremoſt of the lovely train, breaks her way through the frozen ſoil, in order to preſent her early compliments to her lord. Dreſſed in the robe of innocency, ſhe ſteps forth, fearleſs of danger; long before the trees have ventured to unfold their leaves, even while the icicles are pendent on our houſes.—Next, peeps out the crocus, but cautiouſly, and with an air of timidity. She hears the howling blaſts, and ſkulks cloſe to her low ſituation. Afraid ſhe ſeems to make large excurſions from her root, while ſo many ruffian winds are abroad, and ſcouring along the æther.—Nor is the violet laſt, in this ſhining embaſſy of the year; which, with all the embelliſhments that would grace a royal garden, condeſcends to line our hedges, and grow at the feet of briers. Freely, and without any ſolicitation, ſhe diſtributes the bounty of her emiſſive ſweets: while herſelf, with an exemplary humility, retires from ſight; ſeeking rather to adminiſter pleaſure, than to win admiration †. Emblem, expreſſive emblem, of thoſe modeſt virtues which delight to bloom in obſcurity; which extend a chearing influence to multitudes, who are ſcarce acquainted with the ſource of their comfort! Motive, engaging motive, to that ever-active beneficence, which ſtays not for the importunity of the diſtreſſed, but anticipates their ſuit, and prevents them with the bleſſings of its goodneſs!—The poor polyanthus, that lately adorned the border with her ſparkling beauties, and, tranſplanted into our windows, gave us a freſh entertainment, is now no more. I ſaw her complexion fade; I perceived her breath decay; till at length ſhe expired, and dropt into her grave.—Scarce have we ſuſtained this loſs, but in comes the auricula, and more than retrieves it. Arrayed ſhe comes, in a ſplendid variety of amiable forms; with an eye of cryſtal, and garments of the moſt gloſſy ſatin; exhaling perfume, and powdered with ſilver. A very diſtinguiſhed proceſſion this! The favourite care of the floriſt! Scarce one among them, but is dignified with a character of renown, or has the honour to repreſent ſome celebrated toaſt. But theſe alſo, notwithſtanding their illuſtrious titles, have exhauſted their whole ſtock of fragrance, and are mingled with the meaneſt duſt.—Who could forbear grieving at their departure, did not the tulips begin to raiſe themſelves on their fine wands, or ſtately ſtalks? They flaſh the parterre with one of the gayeſt dreſſes that blooming nature wears. Did ever beau or belle make ſo gaudy an appearance, in a birth-night ſuit? Here one may behold the innocent wantonneſs of beauty. Here ſhe indulges a thouſand freaks, and ſports herſelf in the moſt charming diverſity of colours. Yet I ſhould wrong her, were I to call her a coquet; becauſe ſhe plays her lovely changes, not to enkindle diſſolute affections, but to diſplay her Creator's glory.—Soon ariſes the anemone; encircled at the bottom with a ſpreading robe, and rounded at the top into a beautiful dome. In its looſely-flowing mantle, you may obſerve a noble negligence; in its gently-bending tufts, the niceſt ſymmetry. I would term it the fine gentleman of the garden; becauſe it ſeems to have learned the ſingular addreſs of uniting ſimplicity with refinement, of reconciling art and eaſe.—The ſame month has the merit of producing the ranunculus. All bold and graceful, it expands the riches of its foliage; and acquires, by degrees, the lovlieſt enamel in the world. As perſons of intrinſic worth diſdain the ſuperficial arts of recommendation, practiſed by fops; ſo this lordly flower ſcorns to borrow any of its excellence from powders and eſſences. It needs no ſuch attractives, to render it the darling of the curious; being ſufficiently engaging from the elegance of its figure, the radiant variety of its tinges, and a certain ſuperior dignity of aſpect. Methinks nature improves in her operations. Her lateſt ſtrokes are moſt maſterly. To crown the collection, ſhe introduces the carnation; which captivates every eye, with a noble ſpread of graces; and charms another ſenſe, with a profuſion of exquiſite odours. This ſingle flower has centered in itſelf, the perfections of all the preceding. The moment it appears, it ſo commands our attention, that we ſcarce regret the abſence of the reſt.——The gillyflower, like a real friend, attends you through all the viciſſitudes and alterations of the ſeaſon. While others make a tranſient viſit only, this is rather an inhabitant, than a gueſt in your gardens; adds fidelity to complaiſance.

It is in vain to attempt a catalogue of theſe amiable gifts. There is an endleſs multiplicity in their characters, yet an invariable order in their approaches. Every month, almoſt every week, has its peculiar ornaments; not ſervilely copying the works of its predeceſſor, but forming, ſtill forming, and ſtill executing ſome new deſign. So laviſh is the fancy, yet ſo exact the proceſs, of nature!

Here let me ſtand a while, to contemplate this diſtribution of flowers, through the ſeveral periods of the year.—Were they all to bloſſom together, there would be at once a promiſcuous throng, and at once a total privation. We ſhould ſcarce have an opportunity of adverting to the dainty qualities of half; and muſt ſoon loſe the agreeable company of them all. But now ſince every ſpecies has a ſeparate poſt to occupy, and a diſtinct interval for appearing, we can take a leiſurely and minute ſurvey of each ſucceeding ſet. We can view and review their forms; enter into a more intimate acquaintance with their charming accompliſhments; and receive all thoſe pleaſing ſervices, which they are commiſſioned to yield.—This remarkable piece of œconomy, is productive of another very valuable effect. It not only places in the moſt advantageous light, every particular community; but is alſo a ſure proviſionary reſource againſt the frailty of the whole nation.

* In ſome former editions, I expreſſed myſelf, on this point, unguardedly and harſhly. But my meaning, and real ſentiments, were no other than thoſe repreſented above.—The reader, from ſuch unguarded intimations, might too naturally be led to conclude, that the author avows, and would ſtir up, a ſpirit of perſecution. But this is a method of dealing with opponents in religious doctrines, which he diſclaims, as abſurd; and abhors, as iniquitous. He is for no force, but that of rational conviction; for no conſtraint, but that of affectionate perſuaſion. Thus, if you pleaſe, compel them to come in, Luke xiv. 23.

† Prodeſſe quam conſpici.

nation. Or, to ſpeak more truly, it renders the flowery tribes a ſort of * immortal corps. For though ſome are continually dropping; yet, by this expedient, others are as continually riſing, to beautify our borders, and prolong the entertainment.

WHAT goodneſs is this, to provide ſuch a ſeries of gratifications for mankind! both to diverſify, and perpetuate, the fine collation! to take care, that our paths ſhould be, in a manner, inceſſantly ſtrewed with flowers!—And what wiſdom, to bid every one of theſe inſenſible beings know the preciſe juncture for their coming forth! inſomuch that no actor on a ſtage can be more exact in performing his part; can make a more regular entry, or a more punctual exit.

WHO emboldens the daffodil to venture abroad in February, and to truſt her flowering gold with inclement and treacherous ſkies? Who informs the various tribes of fruit-bearing bloſſoms, that vernal ſuns, and a more genial warmth, are fitteſt for their delicate texture? Who teaches the clove to ſtay, till hotter beams are prepared, to infuſe a ſpicy richneſs into her odours, and tincture her complexion with the deepeſt crimſon?—Who diſpoſes theſe beautiful troops into ſuch orderly bodies, retarding ſome, and accelerating others? Who has inſtructed them to file off, with ſuch perfect regularity, as ſoon as the duty of their reſpective ſtation is over? And, when one detachment retires, who gives the ſignal for another immediately to advance? Who, but that unerring Providence, which, from the higheſt thrones of angels, to the very loweſt degrees of exiſtence, orders all things in "number, weight, "and meaſure!"

Theſe, O my ſoul, are the regulations of that moſt adorable, that moſt beneficient Being, who bowed the heavens; came down to dwell on earth; and united the frailty of thy mortal nature, to all the glories of his Godhead. All the honour of this admirable eſtabliſhment belongs to thy Ranſom, thy Surety, thy Saviour. To HIM it belongs, who ſuſtained the vengeance, which thou hadſt deſerved, and waſt doomed to ſuffer; who fulfilled the obedience, which thou waſt obliged but unable to perform; and who humbled himſelf (ſtupendous, ineffable loving-kindneſs!) humbled himſelf to death, even the death of the croſs.—HE formed this vaſt machine, and adjuſted its nice dependencies. The pillars that ſupport it, the embelliſhments that adorn it, and the laws that govern it, are the reſult of his unſearchable counſels. O! the heights of his majeſty, and the depths of his abaſement!

Which ſhall we admire moſt, his eſſential greatneſs, or his free grace? He created the exalted ſeraph, that ſings in glory; and every the minuteſt inſect, that flutters in air, or crawls in duſt. He marks out a path for all thoſe globes of light, which travel the circuit of the ſkies; and diſdains not to rear the violet from its lowly bed, or to plait the daiſy which dreſſes our plains. So grand are his operations; yet ſo condeſcending his regards!—If ſummer, like a ſparkling bride, is brilliant and glorious in her apparel; what is this, but a feeble reflection of his uncreated effulgence? If autumn, like a munificent hoſt, opens her ſtores, and gives us all things richly to enjoy; what is this but a little taſte of his inexhauſtible liberality? If thunders roar, you hear the ſound of his trumpet; if lightnings glare, you ſee the launching of his glittering ſpear: if "the perpetual hills be ſcattered, and the "everlaſting mountains bowed," you behold a diſplay;—no, ſays the prophet, you have rather the hiding of his power †. So immenſe is his power, ſo uncontrollable and inconceivable, that all theſe mighty works are but a ſketch, in which more is concealed than diſcovered.

Thus, I think, we ſhould always view the viſible ſyſtem, with an evangelical teleſcope, (if I may be allowed the expreſſion) and with an evangelical microſcope; regarding CHRIST JESUS as the great projector and architect; who planned, and executed, the amazing ſcheme. Whatever is magnificent or valuable, tremendous or amiable, ſhould ever be aſcribed to the Redeemer. This is the Chriſtian's natural philoſophy. With regard to this method of conſidering the things that are ſeen, we have an inſpired apoſtle for our preceptor and precedent. Speaking of CHRIST, he ſays, "Thou, LORD, in the beginning, haſt laid the "foundation of the earth; and the heavens are the "work of thy hands."—Did we carefully attend to this leading principle, in all our examinations of nature; it would, doubtleſs, be a moſt powerful means of enkindling our love, and † ſtrengthening our faith. When I look round upon millions of noble ſubſtances,

* In alluſion to the celebrated practice of the Perſian kings; "who maintained, for their lifeguard, a body of troops, called "Immortal; becauſe it perpetually ſubſiſted; for as ſoon as any "of the men died, another was immediately put into his place." ROLLIN'S ancient hiſtory, vol. II.

† Hab. iii. 4. Nothing can be more magnificently conceived, than the imagery of this whole chapter; and, upon the foot of our interpretation, nothing was ever more delicately and nobly turned, than the ſentiment of this clauſe. Other ſenſes of the paſſage, I acknowledge, may be aſſigned with equal propriety. But none, I think, can be imagined ſo majeſtic and ſublime. As the original will fairly admit of it; as it carries no diſagreement with the context; and expreſſes a moſt important, as well as undoubted truth; I hope, I may be permitted to uſe it, at leaſt by way of accommodation.—Eſpecially, as it ſuggeſts one of the fineſt mottos imaginable, wherewith to inſcribe all the viſible productions of the Creator's hand. When, ſtruck with aſtoniſhment, we conſider their grandeur, beauty, and conſummate perfections; let us, in juſtice to their author, apply the exalted reflection of this ſacred ode: "In all theſe is the hiding, rather than an adequate "diſplay, of his matchleſs power. Though they challenge our "praiſe, and ſurpaſs our comprehenſion; yet are they by no "means the utmoſt exertions, but rather ſome ſlighter eſſays, "of omnipotent ſkill."—Milton, relating the overthrow of the fallen angels, introduces a grand circumſtance, not much unlike the preceding. Meſſiah, unaided and alone, had routed an innumerable hoſt of apoſtate ſpirits. This was great and marvellous. But to create a juſter idea of the illuſtrious Conqueror, our poet beautifully adds,

Yet half his ſtrength he put not forth.

If we forget to make the ſame remark, when we contemplate GOD in his works; we muſt neceſſarily form very ſcanty conceptions of that SUPREME BEING, before whom all nations are as a "drop of a bucket, and are counted as the ſmall "duſt of the balance."

† The apoſtles, I obſerve, delight to uſe this method of diſplaying the honours of the Redeemer, and eſtabliſhing the faith of his people.—The beloved diſciple, teaching that moſt precious doctrine, "of a Lamb ſlain to take away the ſins of the "world;" in order to evince the ſufficiency of CHRIST'S ſacrifice for this bleſſed purpoſe, affirms, that all things were made by him; and without him was not any thing, no, not ſo much as one ſingle being, made, John i. 3.—St Paul, preaching the ſame glad tidings to the Coloſſians, and expreſsly maintaining, that we have redemption through his blood, ſeems to foreſee an objection of this kind. "To expiate tranſgreſſions againſt "an infinite Majeſty, is a moſt prodigious act. It muſt coſt "vaſtly more than any common ſurety can pay, to redeem a "ſinful world. What reaſon have we to believe, that JESUS "is equal to this mighty undertaking?" All poſſible reaſon, replies the apoſtle, from the dignity of his perſon, for he is the image of the inviſible GOD; and from the greatneſs of his works, for by him all things were made. Conſider the operations of his hands, and you cannot doubt the atoning efficacy of his death, Col. i. 15. 16.—The author of the epiſtle to the Hebrews falls exactly into the ſame train of arguing. Declaring, that CHRIST JESUS has purged our ſins by the ſacrifice of himſelf, he proves his ample ability for this tremendous office, from his eſſential excellence, becauſe he is the brightneſs of his Father's glory; and from his admirable works, becauſe he made the worlds; and upholdeth all things by the word of and carry with me this transporting reflection, "The "Maker of them all expired on a cross for me!" how can I remain any longer indifferent? Must not the coldeſt heart begin to glow with gratitude?—When I ſurvey an immenſity of the fineſt productions imaginable, and remember, that the Author of them all is "my righteouſneſs and my redemption;" how can I chuſe but repoſe the moſt chearful confidence in ſuch a Mediator?

Let me add one more remark, upon the admirable adjuſtment of every particular relating to theſe fine colonies planted in the parterre.—With ſuch accuracy and correctneſs is their ſtructure finiſhed, that any the leaſt conceivable alteration would very much impair their perfection. Should you ſee, for inſtance, the nice diſpoſition of the tulip's attire fly abroad, diſorderly and irregular, like the flaunting woodbine; ſhould the jeſſamine rear her diminutive head, on thoſe grand columns which ſupport the hollyhock; ſhould the erect and manly aſpect of the piony hang down with a penſive air, like the flexile bells of the hyacinth; ſhould that noble plainneſs which diſtinguiſhes the lily, be exchanged for the glittering fringes which edge the pink, or the gaudy ſtains which bedrop the iris; ſhould thoſe tapering pillars which ariſe in the middle of its vaſe, and, tipt with golden pendants, give ſuch a luſtre to the ſurrounding pannels of alabaſter,—ſhould thoſe ſink and diſappear, like the chives which cover the heart of the anemone—in many of theſe caſes, would not the tranſpoſition be fantaſtical and aukward? in all to the apparent prejudice of every individual?

Again, with regard to the time of their appearing, this circumſtance is ſettled, by a remarkable foreſight and precaution. What would become of the ſailor, if, in very ſtormy weather, he ſhould raiſe a lofty maſt, and croud it with all his canvaſs? Such would be the ill effect, if the moſt ſtately ſpecies of flowers ſhould preſume to come abroad, in the bluſtering months. Alas! how would they rue the imprudent boldneſs! Therefore thoſe only that ſhoot the ſhorteſt ſtems, and diſplay the ſmalleſt ſpread of leaves, or, (if you pleaſe) carry the leaſt ſail, are launched amidſt the blowing ſeaſons.—How injudiciouſly would the perfumer act, if he ſhould unſeal his fineſt eſſences, and expoſe them to the northern winds, or wintry rains! Our blooming artiſts, of the aromatic profeſſion, at leaſt the moſt delicate among them, ſeem perfectly aware of the conſequences of ſuch a procedure. Accordingly they poſtpone the opening of their odoriferous treaſures, till a ſerener air, and more * unclouded ſkies, grant a protection to their amiable traffic; till they are under no more apprehenſions of having their ſpicy cells rifled by rude blaſts, or drowned in inceſſant ſhowers.

What a ſtriking argument is here for reſignation; unfeigned reſignation, to all the diſpoſals of Providence! Too often are our diſſatisfied thoughts apt to find fault with divine diſpenſations. We tacitly arraign our Maker's conduct, or queſtion his kindneſs with regard to ourſelves. We fancy our lot not ſo commodiouſly ſituated, or our condition not ſo happily circumſtanced, as if we had been placed in ſome other ſtation of life.—But let us behold this exquiſitely nice regulation of the minuteſt plants, and be aſhamed of our repining folly. Could any fibre in their compoſition be altered, or one line in their features be tranſpoſed, without clouding ſome of their beauties? Could any fold in their veſtments be varied, or any link in their orderly ſucceſſion be broken, without injuring ſome delicate property? And does not that all-ſeeing eye, which preſerves ſo exact a harmony among theſe pretty toys, maintain as watchful a care over his rational creatures? Does he chuſe the propereſt ſeaſon for the cowſlip to ariſe, and drink the dews? And can he neglect the concerns, or miſjudge the conveniencies, of his ſons and daughters? He, who has ſo completely diſpoſed whatever pertains to the vegetable œconomy, that the leaſt diminution or addition would certainly hurt the finiſhed ſcheme, does, without all peradventure, preſide, with equal attention, over the intereſts of his own people.

Be ſtill, then, thou uneaſy mortal*; know, that GOD is unerringly wiſe; and be aſſured, that, amidſt the greateſt multiplicity of beings, he does not overlook thee. Thy Saviour has given me authority to aſſert, that thou art of far ſuperior value, in the eſtimate of Omnipotence, than all the herbage of the field.—If his ſacred will ordains ſickneſs for thy portion, never dare to imagine, that uninterrupted health would be more advantageous. If he pleaſes to with-hold, or take away, children; never preſume to conclude, that thy happineſs is blaſted, becauſe thy hopes of an increaſing family are diſappointed. He, that marſhals all the ſtarry hoſt, and ſo accurately arranges every the meaneſt ſpecies of herbs; HE orders all the peculiarities, all the changes of thy ſtate, with a vigilance that nothing can elude, with a goodneſs that endureth for ever.—Bow thy head, therefore, in humble acquieſcence. Reſt ſatisfied, That whatever is by the appointment of heaven †, is right, is beſt.

Come then, thou ſweetly-bluſhing flow'r;
Come, lovely ſtranger, come away.
The ſun is dreſs'd in beaming ſmiles,
To give thy beauties to the day:
Young zephyrs wait, with gentleſt gales,
To fan thy boſom, as they play.

* Permittas ipſis expendere numinibus, quid
Conveniat nobis, rebuſque ſit utile noſtris.
Nam pro jucundis aptiſſima quæque dabunt dii:
Carior eſt illis homo, quam ſibi.— JUV.

Since all the downward tracts of time
GOD's watchful eye ſurveys;
O! who ſo wiſe to chuſe our lot,
And regulate our ways?

Since none can doubt his equal love,
Unmeaſurably kind;
To his unerring, gracious will,
Be ev'ry wiſh reſign'd.

Good when he gives, ſupremely good;
Nor leſs, when he denies;
Ev'n croſſes, from his ſov'reign hand,
Are bleſſings in diſguiſe.

† Whatever is, is right.—If Mr Pope underſtands the maxim according to the limitation ſuggeſted above, he ſpeaks a moſt undeniable and glorious truth. But if that great poet includes whatever comes to paſs, through the wild and extravagant paſſions of men; ſurely no thinking perſon, at leaſt no Chriſtian, can accede to his opinion.—What GOD orders, is wiſe, beyond all poſſibility of correction; and good, above all that we can of his power, Heb. i. 2. 3.—Which truth, as it is ſo important in itſelf; of ſuch ſignal comfort to Chriſtians, and ſo particularly inſiſted on by the inſpired writers, I hope, I ſhall need no apology for an attempt to illuſtrate and enforce it, in a kind of evangelical Deſcant upon creation, annexed to theſe reflections.

* Coſmir, in a very poetical manner, addreſſes himſelf to the dormant roſe, and moſt prettily invites her to venture abroad, by the mention of theſe two circumſtances:

Siderum ſacros imitata vultus,
Quid lates dudum, Roſa? Delicatum
Effer e terris caput, O repenti
Filia cœli.
Jam tibi nubes fugiunt aquoſæ,
Quas fugant albis Zephyri quadrigis;
Jam tibi mulcet Boream jocantis
Aura Favoni.

Child of the ſummer, charming Roſe,
No longer in confinement lie;
Ariſe to light; thy form diſcloſe;
Rival the ſpangles of the ſky.

The rains are gone; the ſtorms are o'er;
Winter retires to make thee way:

AMONG all the productions of the third creating-day, this of flowers seems to be peculiarly designed for man. Man has the monopoly of this savour; it is conferred on him by a sort of exclusive charter. See the imperial crown, splendid and beautifully grand! See the tuberose, delicate and languishingly fair! See all the pomp and glory of the parterre, where paint and perfume do wonders. Yet the inferior animals are neither smit with their beauties, nor regaled with their odours. The horse never stands still to gaze upon their charms; nor does the ox turn aside to browse upon their sweets. Senses they have to discern these curious objects in the gross, but no taste to distinguish or relish their fine accomplishments.—Just so, carnal and unenlightened men may understand the literal meaning of scripture, may comprehend the evidences of its divine inspiration; yet have no relish of the heavenly truths it teaches, no ardent longing for the spiritual blessings it offers; see "no form or comeliness" in the Saviour it describes, so as to render him the supreme desire of their souls.

The chief end of these beautiful appearances, philosophers say, is to unfold and cherish the embryo seed, or to swathe the tender body during its infant state.—But, whatever is the chief end of nature, 'tis certain, she never departs from the design of administering delight to mankind *. This is inseparably connected with her other views.——Were it only to secure a reproductive principle, what need of such elegant complications? why so much art employed, and so many decorations added? Why should vestments be prepared, richer than brocades, more delicate than lawns, and of a finer glow than the most admired velvets?—If the great mother had no other aim than barely to accommodate her little offspring, warm flannel, or homely fustian, would have served her turn; served it full as well as the most sumptuous tissues, or all the furniture of the mercer's shop.

Evident then it is, that flowers were endued with such enchanting graces for the pleasure of man. In pursuance of this original intention, they have always paid their court to the human race; they still seem particularly solicitous of recommending themselves to our regard. The finest of each species croud about our habitations, and are rarely to be seen at a distance from our abodes. They thrive under our cultivating hand, and observing eye; but degenerate, and pine away, if unregarded by their lord.—To win his attention, and deck his retreats, they hide their deformities under ground; and display nothing but the most graceful forms, and engaging colours, to his sight.—To merit a farther degree of his esteem, the generality of them dispense a delightful perfume. What is still more obliging, they † reserve their richest exhalations to embalm his morning and evening walks †. Because he usually chooses these cool hours to recreate himself among their blooming ranks; therefore, at those hours, they are most lavish of their fragrance, and breathe out their choicest spirits.

O MAN, greatly beloved by thy Creator! the darling of Providence! thou art distinguished by his goodness; distinguish thyself also by thy gratitude. Be it thy one undivided aim to glorify him, who has been at so much expence to gratify thee!—While all these inferior creatures, in silent eloquence, declare the glory of GOD, do thou lend them thy tongue. Be thou the high priest of the mute creation. Let their praise become vocal in thy songs.—Adore the supreme Benefactor, for the blessings he showers down upon every order of beings. Adore him for numberless mercies, which are appropriated to thyself. But, above all, adore him for that noble gift of a rational and immortal soul.—This constitutes us masters of the globe, and give us the real enjoyment of its riches. This discovers ten thousand beauties, which otherwise had been lost; and renders them both a source of delights, and a nursery of devotion.——By virtue of this exalted principle, we are qualified to admire our Maker's works, and capable of bearing his illustrious image; bearing his illustrious image, not only when these ornaments of the ground have resigned their honours, but when the great origin of day is extinguished in the skies, and all the flaming orbs on high are put out in obscure darkness.—Then to survive, to survive the ruins of one world, and to enjoy GOD,—to resemble GOD,—to be "filled with all the fulness of GOD," in another;—what a happiness, what an inestimable happiness, is this! Yet this is thy privilege, (barter it not for trifles of an hour!) this thy glorious prerogative, O man!

O! THE goodness, the exuberant goodness, of our GOD! I cannot forbear celebrating it once more, before I pass to another consideration.—How much should we think ourselves obliged to a generous friend, who should build a stately edifice ‡, purely for our abode! But how greatly would the obligation be increased, if

* "We find that the most important parts in the vegetable "world, are those which are the most beautiful. These are "the seeds by which the several races of plants are propagated "and continued, and which are always lodged in flowers or "blossoms. Nature seems to hide her principal design, and to "be industrious in making the earth gay and delightful, while she "is carrying on her great work, and intent upon her own pre"servation." Spect. vol. v. No. 387.

* ——The flow'rs,
That open now their choicest bosom'd smells,
Reserv'd from night, and kept for thee in store.
MILT.

† The twining jasmine, and the blushing rose,
With lavish grace their morning-scents disclose;
The smelling tub'rose and jonquil declare
The stronger impulse of an evening-air.
PRIOR's Sol.

‡ I cannot persuade myself, that the comparison is stretched beyond proper bounds, when carried to this pitch. It is my stedfast opinion, that the world, at least this lower world, with its various appurtenances, was intended purely for man; that it is appropriated to him; and that he (in subordination to GOD's glory) is the end of its creation.—Other animals, 'tis true, partake of the Creator's benefits: but then they partake under the notion of man's domestics, or on the foot of retainers to him; as creatures which bear some relation to his service, and some way or other contribute to his good. So that still he is the centre of the whole; or, as our incomparable Milton, equally master of poetry and divinity, expresses himself, All things live for man. Par. Lost, b. XI. l. 161.

Mr Pope, in his Ethic Epistles, is pleased to explode this tenet, as the height of pride, and a gross absurdity.—For my part, I see no reason for such a charge. With all submission to so superior a genius, it seems very remote from pride, to be duly sensible of favours vouchsafed; to contemplate them in all the extent of their munificence, and acknowledge them accordingly. I should rather imagine, that to contract their size, when they are immensely large; to stint their number, when they are altogether innumerable; that such a procedure the hand that built ſhould alſo furniſh it! and not only furniſh it with all that is commodious and comfortable, but ornament it alſo with whatever is ſplendid and delightful? This has our moſt indulgent Creator done, in a manner infinitely ſurpaſſing all we could wiſh or imagine.

M

The earth is aſſigned us for a dwelling.—The ſkies are ſtretched over us like a magnificent canopy, dyed in the pureſt azure; and beautified, now with pictures of floating ſilver, now with colourings of reflected crimſon.—The graſs is ſpread under us, as a ſpacious carpet; wove with ſilken threads of green, and damaſked with flowers of every hue.—The ſun, like a golden lamp, is hung out in the ethereal vault; and pours his effulgence, all the day, to lighten our paths.—When night approaches, the moon takes up the friendly office; and the ſtars are kindled in twinkling myriads, to cheer the darkneſs with their milder luſtre, not diſturb our repoſe by too intenſe a glare.—The clouds, beſides the rich paintings they hang around the heavens, act the part of a ſhifting ſcreen; and defend us by their ſeaſonable interpoſition, from the ſcorching beams of ſummer. May we not alſo regard them as the great watering-pots of the globe; which, wafted on the wings of the wind, diſpenſe their moiſture * evenly through the univerſal garden; and fructify, with their ſhowers, whatever our hand plants.—The fields are our exhauſtleſs granary.—The ocean is our vaſt reſervoir.—The animals ſpend their ſtrength, to diſpatch our buſineſs; reſign their clothing, to repleniſh our wardrobe; and ſurrender their very lives, to provide for our tables.—In ſhort, every element is a ſtore-houſe of conveniencies; every ſeaſon brings us the choiceſt productions; all nature is our caterer.—And, which is a moſt endearing recommendation of theſe favours, they are all as lovely as they are uſeful. You obſerve nothing mean or inelegant. All is clad in beauty's faireſt robe †, and regulated by proportion's niceſt rule. The whole ſcene exhibits a fund of pleaſures to the imagination, at the ſame time that it more than ſupplies all our wants ‡.

Therefore thou art inexcuſable, O man, whoſoever thou art, that rebelleſt againſt thy Maker. He ſurrounds thee with unnumbered benefits, and follows thee with an effuſion of the richeſt, nobleſt gifts. He courts thy affections, he ſolicits thy gratitude, by liberalities which are never intermitted, by a bounty which knows no limits.—Moſt bleſſed LORD, let this thy goodneſs, thy unwearied goodneſs, lead us to repentance. Win us to thyſelf, thou Fountain of felicity, by theſe ſweet inducements. Draw us to our duty, thou GOD of our Salvation, by theſe "cords of love."

WHAT a living picture is here of the beneficial effects of induſtry! By induſtry and cultivation, this neat ſpot is an image of Eden. Here is all that can entertain the eye, or ‖ regale the ſmell. Whereas, without cultivation, this ſweet garden had been a deſolate wilderneſs. Vile thiſtles had made it loathſome, and tangling briers inacceſſible. Without cultivation, it might have been a neſt for ſerpents, and the horrid haunt of venomous creatures. But the ſpade and pruning-knife, in the hand of Induſtry, have improved it into a ſort of terreſtrial paradiſe.

How naturally does this lead our contemplation to the advantages which flow from a virtuous education, and the miſeries which enſue from the § neglect of it!—The mind, without early inſtruction, will, in all ceduſe favours more of inſenſibility, than our hypotheſis of preſumption; and has more in it of ingratitude, than that of arrogance.

And how can it be deemed an abſurdity, to maintain that GOD gave us a world for our poſſeſſion, when it is our duty to believe, that he gave us his only Son for our propitiation? Sure, it can be neither difficult, nor extravagant, to ſuppoſe, that he deſigned the habitable globe, with its whole furniture, for our preſent uſe; ſince he with-held not his holy child JESUS, but freely delivered him up for our final ſalvation.

Upon the whole, I cannot but conclude, that the attempt of our famous poet is neither kind with regard to his fellow-creatures,—nor grateful with regard to his Creator,—neither is his ſcheme, in fact, true. The attempt not kind, with regard to man; becauſe it robs him of one of the moſt delightful and raviſhing contemplations imaginable. To conſider the great Author of exiſtence as having me in his eye, when he formed univerſal nature; as contriving all things with an immediate view to the exigencies of my particular ſtate; and making them all in ſuch a manner, as might be moſt conducive to my particular advantage; this muſt occaſion the ſtrongeſt ſatisfactions, whenever I caſt a glance on the objects that ſurround me.—Not grateful with regard to GOD; becauſe it has the moſt direct tendency to diminiſh our ſenſe of his kindneſs, and by that means to throw a damp upon our gratitude. It teaches us to look upon ourſelves as almoſt loſt among a croud of other beings, or regarded only with an occaſional and incidental beneficence; which muſt certainly weaken the diſpoſition, and indeed ſlacken the ties, to the moſt adoring thankfulneſs.—To which, I apprehend, we may juſtly add, Neither is the ſcheme, in fact, true. For, not to mention what might be urged from the ſure word of revelation, this one argument appears ſufficiently concluſive. The world began with man; the world muſt ceaſe with man; conſequently, the grand uſe, the principal end of the world, is, to ſubſerve the intereſt of man. It is on all ſides agreed, that the edifice was erected, when man was to be furniſhed with an habitation; and that it will be demoliſhed, when man has no farther need of its accommodations. When he enters into the houſe not made with hands, eternal in the heavens, "the earth, and all the works that are "therein, ſhall be burnt up." From which it ſeems a very obvious and fair deduction, That man is the final cauſe of this inferior creation.

So that I think my readers and myſelf privileged (not to ſay, on the principles of gratitude, obliged) to uſe thoſe lovely lines of our author, with a propriety and truth equal to their elegance and beauty:

For me kind nature wakes her genial pow'r,
Suckles each herb, and ſpreads out ev'ry flow'r!
Annuals for me, the grape, the roſe renew
The juice nectareous, and the balmy dew;
For me, the mine a thouſand treaſures brings;
For me, health guſhes from a thouſand ſprings.

Eth. Ep. I. ver. 129.

* This circumſtance, amidſt abundance of other delicate and edifying remarks upon the wonders of nature, is finely touched in the Philoſophical Tranſactions recorded in the book of Job, chap. xxxviii. ver. 15.—מי פלג לשטף התעלה Who hath divided a water-courſe for the overflowing of waters?—The Hebrew is ſo pregnant and rich with ſenſe, that no tranſlation can do it juſtice. The following paraphraſe, perhaps, may repreſent the principal ideas comprehended in the expreſſive original.—Who has branched out, and, with admirable judgment, diſpoſed a variety of aqueducts, for that immenſe collection of waters which float in the ſky? Who diſtributes thoſe pendulous floods through all the borders of the earth? diſtributes them, not in dreadful cataracts, or promiſcuous gluts of rain, but in kindly drops, and refreſhing ſhowers; with as much regularity and œconomy, as if they were conveyed by pipes from a conduit?—To WHOM ſhall we aſcribe that niceneſs of contrivance, which now emits, now reſtrains them; ſometimes derives their humid train to one place, ſometimes to another; diſpenſes them to this ſoil in larger, to that in ſmaller communications; and, in a word, ſo manages the mighty fluid, that every ſpot is ſupplied, in exact proportion to its wants; none deſtroyed by an undiſtinguiſhing deluge?

† Perhaps it was from ſuch an obſervation, that the Greeks, thoſe critical and refined judges of things, expreſſed the mundane ſyſtem by a word which ſignifies beauty,—κοσμος.

‡ "Thoſe ſeveral living creatures, which are made for our "ſervice or ſuſtenance, at the ſame time either fill the woods "with their muſic, furniſh us with game, or raiſe pleaſing "ideas in us by the delightfulneſs of their appearance. Foun-"tains, lakes, and rivers, are as refreſhing to the imagination, "as to the ſoil through which they paſs."

Spect. vol. v. No. 387.

‖ Omnis copia narium. HOR.

§ Neglectis urenda ſilix innaſcitur agris. HOR.

probability,

probability, become like the "vineyard of the ſluggard." If left to the propenſities of its own depraved will, what can we expect, but the moſt luxuriant growth of unruly appetites, which, in time, will break forth into all manner of ſcandalous irregularities? What!—but that anger, like a prickly thorn, arm the temper with an untractable moroſeneſs; peeviſhneſs, like a ſtinging nettle, render the converſation irkſome and forbidding; avarice, like ſome choking weed, teach the fingers to gripe, and the hands to oppreſs; revenge, like ſome poiſonous plant, replete with baneful juices, rankle in the breaſt, and meditate miſchief to its neighbour: while unbridled luſts, like ſwarms of noiſome inſects, taint each riſing thought; and render "every imagination of the heart, "only evil continually."—Such are the uſual products of ſavage nature! ſuch the furniture of the uncultivated ſoul!

Whereas, let the mind be put under the "nurture "and admonition of the LORD;" let holy diſcipline clear the ſoil; let ſacred inſtructions ſow it with the beſt ſeed; let ſkill and vigilance dreſs the riſing ſhoots, direct the young ideas how to ſpread, the wayward paſſions how to move:—then, what a different ſtate of the inner man will quickly take place! Charity will breathe her ſweets, and Hope expand her bloſſoms; the perſonal virtues diſplay their graces, and the ſocial ones their fruits *; the ſentiments become generous, the carriage endearing, the life honourable and uſeful †.

O! that governors of families, and maſters of ſchools, would watch, with a conſcientious ſolicitude, over the morals of their tender charge! What pity it is, that the advancing generation ſhould loſe theſe invaluable endowments, through any ſupineneſs in their inſtructors!—See! with what aſſiduity the curious floriſt attends his little nurſery! He viſits them early and late; furniſhes them with the propereſt mould; ſupplies them with ſeaſonable moiſture; guards them from the ravages of inſects; ſcreens them from the injuries of the weather; marks their ſpringing buds; obſerves them attentively, through their whole progreſs; and never intermits his anxiety, till he beholds them blown into full perfection.—And ſhall a range of painted leaves, which flouriſh to-day, and to-morrow fall to the ground;—ſhall theſe be tended with more zealous application, than the exalted faculties of an immortal ſoul!

Yet truſt not in cultivation alone. It is the bleſſing of the almighty Huſbandman which imparts ſucceſs to ſuch labours of love. If GOD "ſeal up the bot-"tles of heaven," and command the clouds to withhold their fatneſs, the beſt manured plot becomes a barren deſert. And if HE reſtrain the dew of his heavenly benediction, all human endeavours miſcarry; the rational plantation languiſhes; our moſt pregnant hopes, from youths of the moſt promiſing genius, prove abortive. Their root will be as rottenneſs, and their bloſſom will go up as duſt ‡.—Therefore let parents plant; let tutors water; but let both look up to the Father of ſpirits, for the deſired increaſe.

ON every ſide, I eſpy ſeveral budding flowers. As yet they are like bales of cloth from the packer's warehouſe. Each is wrapt within a ſtrong incloſure, and its contents are tied together by the firmeſt bandages; ſo that all their beauties lie concealed, and all their ſweets are locked up.—Juſt ſuch is the niggardly wretch, whoſe aims are all turned inward, and meanly terminated upon himſelf; who makes his own private intereſts, or perſonal pleaſures, the ſole centre of his deſigns, and the ſcanty circumference of his actions.

Ere long the ſearching beams will open theſe ſilken folds, and draw them into a graceful expanſion. Then, what a lovely bluſh will glow in their cheeks, and what a balmy odour exhale from their boſoms!—So, when divine grace ſhines upon the mind, even the churl becomes bountiful; the heart of ſtone is taken away; and a heart of fleſh, a heart ſuſceptible of the ſofteſt, moſt compaſſionate emotions, is introduced in its ſtead. O! how ſweetly do the ſocial affections dilate themſelves, under ſo benign an influence! Juſt like theſe diſcloſing gems, under the powerful eye of day. The tender regards are no longer confined to a ſingle object; but extend themſelves into a generous concern for mankind, and ſhed liberal refreſhments on all within their reach *.

Ariſe then, thou Sun of Righteouſneſs; ariſe, with healing under thy wings; and tranſfuſe thy gentle, but penetrating ray, through all our intellectual powers. Enlarge every narrow diſpoſition, and fill us with a diffuſive benevolence. Make room in our breaſts for the whole human race; and teach us to love all our fellow-creatures, for their amiable Creator's ſake. May we be pleaſed with their excellencies, and rejoice in their happineſs; but feel their miſeries as our own, and, with a brother's ſympathy, haſten to relieve them!

DISPOSED at proper diſtances, I obſerve a range of ſtrong and ſtately ſtalks. They ſtand like towers, along the walls of a fortified city; or riſe, like lofty ſpires, amidſt the group of houſes. They part, at the top, into ſeveral penſile ſpiky pods: from each of which we ſhall ſoon ſee a fine figure diſplaying itſelf; rounded into a form, which conſtitutes a perfect circle; ſpread wide open, into the moſt frank and communicative air; and tinged with the colour, which is ſo peculiarly captivating to the miſer's eye.

But the property I chiefly admire, is its paſſionate fondneſs for the ſun. When the evening-ſhades take place, the poor flower droops, and folds up its leaves. It mourns all the long night, and pines amidſt the gloom, like ſome forlorn lover, baniſhed from the object of his affections. No ſooner does Providence open "the eyelids of the morning," but it meets † and welcomes the returning light; courts and careſſes it, all the day; nor ever loſes ſight of the refulgent charmer,

* This tranſformation of the heart, and renewal of the life, are repreſented, in ſcripture, by ſimilitudes very nearly allied to the images uſed above.—GOD, by his ſanctifying Spirit, will make the ſoul as a watered garden. Under the operation of this divine principle, the deſert ſhall rejoice, and bloſſom as the roſe. Where-ever it exerts the refining and ennobling energy, inſtead of the thorn, ſhall come up the fir-tree; and, inſtead of the brier, the myrtle-tree. Jer. xxxi. 12. Iſ. xxxv. 1. & lv. 13.

† ——A teneris aſſueſcere multum eſt! VIRG.

——— ε γαρ μικρον διαφερει, το ηθος η εθος τυθεν εκ παιδος ενθιζεσθαι, αλλα παμπολυ, μαλλον δε το πανυ. ARISTOT. The principles we imbibe, and the habits we contract, in our early years, are not matters of ſmall moment, but of the utmoſt conſequence imaginable. They not only give a tranſient or ſuperficial tincture to our firſt appearance in life, but moſt commonly ſtamp the form of our whole future conduct, and even of our eternal ſtate.

‡ Iſ. v. 24.

* The prophet, deſcribing the charitable temper, very beautifully ſays, If thou draw out thy ſoul to the hungry!—This, I think, may not improperly be illuſtrated by the circumſtances obſerved above. The opening of thoſe buds into a large and extenſive ſpread, is a pretty portrait of the amplitude of a generous heart; which cannot ſhut up its compaſſion, or remain unconcerned at any human calamity. The freeneſs and copiouſneſs, with which the expanded flowers are continually pouring out their choiceſt eſſences, may repreſent the various acts of an unwearied liberality; together with thoſe endearing words, and that cordial affection, which enhance, as it were, a gift, double its value; and conſtitute what the ſacred penman ſtyles, drawing out the ſoul. תוציא נפשך depromſerit animam tuam. Iſ. lviii. 10.

† ——Illo ſuum, quamvis radice tenetur,
Vertitur ad ſolem. OVID.

charmer, ſo long as he continues above the horizon.—In the morning, you may perceive it preſenting a golden boſom to the eaſt; at noon, it points upward to the middle ſky; in the evening follows the ſame attractive influence to the weſt.

Surely, Nature is a book, and every page rich with ſacred hints. To an attentive mind, the garden turns preacher, and its blooming tenants are ſo many lively ſermons. What an engaging pattern, and what an excellent leſſon, have we here!—So, let the redeemed of the LORD look unto JESUS *, and be conformed to their Beloved. Let us all be heliotropes (if I may uſe the expreſſion) to the Sun of Righteouſneſs. Let our paſſions riſe and fall; take this courſe or that; as his word determines, as his holy example guides. Let us be ſo accommodated, both to his commanding and providential will, as the wax is turned to the imprinted ſeal; or as the aſpect of this enamoured flower, to the ſplendid ſtar, which creates our day.

In every enjoyment, O thou watchful Chriſtian, look unto JESUS; receive it as proceeding from his love, and purchaſed by his agonies †.——In every tribulation look unto JESUS; mark his gracious hand, managing the ſcourge, or mingling the bitter cup; attempering it to a proper degree of ſeverity; adjuſting the time of its continuance; and ready to make theſe ſeeming diſaſters productive of real good.——In every infirmity and failing, look unto JESUS, thy merciful High Prieſt, pleading his atoning blood, and making interceſſion for tranſgreſſors.——In every prayer look unto JESUS, thy prevailing Advocate, recommending thy devotions, and "bearing the iniquity of thy holy "things ‡."——In every temptation look unto JESUS, the Author of thy ſtrength, and Captain of thy ſalvation; who alone is able to lift up the hands which hang down, to invigorate the enfeebled knees, and make thee more than conqueror over all thy enemies.——But eſpecially, when the hour of thy departure approaches; when "thy fleſh and thy heart fail;" when all the ſprings of life are irreparably breaking; then look unto JESUS with a believing eye ‖. Like expiring Stephen, behold him ſtanding at the right hand of GOD, on purpoſe to ſuccour his people, in this their laſt extremity. Yes, my Chriſtian friend, when thy journey through life is finiſhed, and thou art arrived on the very verge of mortality; when thou art juſt launching out into the inviſible world, and all before thee is vaſt eternity; then, O then, be ſure to look ſtedfaſtly unto JESUS! "See by faith the LORD'S "CHRIST." View him as the only Way § to the everlaſting manſions; as the only Door ¶ to the abodes of bliſs.

YONDER tree, which faces the ſouth, has ſomething too remarkable to paſs without obſervation.—Like the fruitful, though feeble vine, ſhe brings forth a large family of branches; but, unable to ſupport them herſelf, commits them to the tuition of a ſunny wall. As yet the tender twigs have ſcarce gemmed their future bloſſoms. However, I may anticipate the well-known productions, and picture to myſelf the paſſion-flower; which will, in due time, with a long and copious ſucceſſion, adorn the boughs.

I have read, in a Latin author, of flowers inſcribed with the names of kings : but here is one emblazoned with the marks of the bleeding Prince of life. I read, in the inſpired writings, of apoſtolic men, who bore about in their bodies, the dying of the LORD JESUS *: but here is a blooming religioſo, that carries apparent memorials of the ſame tremendous and fatal cataſtrophe.——Who would have expected to find ſuch a tragedy of woe exhibited in a collection of the moſt delicate delights? or to ſee Calvary's horrid ſcene pourtrayed on the ſofteſt ornaments of the garden?—Its nature then actuated by the noble ambition of paying commemorative honours to her agonizing Sovereign? Is ſhe kindly officious to remind forgetful mortals of that miracle of mercy, which it is their duty to contemplate, and their happineſs to believe?——Or is a ſportive imagination my interpreter; and all the ſuppoſed reſemblance no more than the precarious gloſs of fancy? Be it ſo: yet even fancy has her merit, when ſhe ſets forth, in ſuch pleaſing imagery, the crucified JESUS. Nor ſhall I refuſe a willing regard to Imagination herſelf, when ſhe employs her creative powers to revive the ſenſe of ſuch unparalelled love, and prompt my gratitude to ſo divine a friend.

That ſpiral tendril, ariſing from the bottom of the ſtalk, is it a repreſentation of the ſcourge, which laſhed the Redeemer's unſpotted fleſh; and inflicted thoſe ſtripes, by which our ſouls are healed? or, is it twiſted for the cord, which bound his hands in painful and ignominious confinement; thoſe beneficent hands, which were inceſſantly ſtretched out to unlooſe the heavy burdens, and to impart bleſſings of every choice kind? Behold the nails, which were drenched in his ſacred veins, and rivetted his feet to the accurſed tree; thoſe beautiful † feet, which always went about doing good; and travelled far and near, to ſpread the glad tidings of everlaſting ſalvation. See the hammer, ponderous and maſſy, which drove the rugged irons through the ſhivering nerves; and forced a paſſage for thoſe dreadful wedges, between the diſlocated bones.——View the thorns, which encircled our Royal Maſter's brow, and ſhot their keen afflictive points into his bleſſed head. O the ſmart! the racking ſmart! when, inſtead of the triumphal laurel, or the odoriferous garland, that pungent and ragged wreath was planted on the meek Meſſiah's forehead! When violent and barbarous blows of the ſtrong eaſtern cane ‡, ſtruck the prickly crown, and fixed every thorn deep in his throbbing temples ‖!—There ſtand the diſciples, ranged in the green impalement, and forming a circle round the inſtruments of their great Commander's death. They appear like ſo many faithful adherents, who breathe a gallant reſolution, either of defending their LORD to the laſt extremity, or of dropping honourably by his ſide. But did they give ſuch proofs of zeal and fidelity in their conduct, as their ſteady poſture, and determined aſpect, ſeem to promiſe? Alas! what is all human firmneſs,

* Heb. xii. 2.

† He ſunk beneath our heavy woes,
To raiſe us to his throne;
There's not a gift his hand beſtows,
But coſt his heart a groan. WATTS.

‡ Exod. xxviii. 38.

‖ Look unto ME, and be ye ſaved, all the ends of the earth. Iſa. xlv. 22.

§ John xiv. 6. ¶ John x. 9.

 Dicy quibus in terris inſcripti nomina regum,
Naſcantur flores?— VIRG.

* 2 Cor. iv. 10.

† How beautiful are the feet of him that bringeth good tidings, that publiſheth peace, that bringeth good tidings of good, that publiſheth ſalvation! Iſ. lii. 7.

‡ They took the reed, ſays the ſacred hiſtorian, and ſmote him on the head; "and ſo, as it were, nailed down the thorns in-"to his forehead and temples, and occaſioned thereby exqui-"ſite pain, as well as a great effuſion of blood." Family-expoſitor, vol. II. ſect. 188.—"It is moſt probable," adds the ſame judicious critic, "this was a walking-ſtaff, which they put into his hand as "a ſceptre; for a blow with a ſlight reed would ſcarce have been "felt, or have deſerved a mention in a detail of ſuch dreadful "ſufferings."

‖ The ſmart attending this unparalelled piece of contempt and barbarity, muſt be inexpreſſibly ſevere; not only on account of the many painful punctures made in the fleſh, but principally, becauſe the periоſtium, an exquiſitely ſenſible tegument of the bones, lying, in thoſe parts, very near the external ſkin, muſt receive a multitude of terrible wounds. The anguiſh of which could not fail of being inflamed to an exceſs of rage, by the continuance of ſo many thorny lancets in that extremely tender membrane; which, in ſuch a caſe, —trembling ly alive all o'er,

Muſt ſmart and agonize at ev'ry pore.

when

when deſtitute of ſuccours from above, but an expiring vapour? What is every taint, if unſupported by powerful grace, but an abandoned traitor?—Obſerve the glory, deſcended in double rays, grand with imperial purple, and rich with æthereal blue. But ah! how incapable are threads, though ſpun by ſummer's fineſt hand, though dyed in ſnows or dipped in heaven, to diſplay the immaculate excellency of his human, or the ineffable majeſty of his divine nature! Compared with theſe ſublime perfections, the moſt vivid aſſemblage of colours fades into an unmeaning flatneſs; the moſt charming effects of light and ſhade are not only mere daubings, but an abſolute blank.

Among all the beauties which ſhine in ſunny robes, and ſip the ſilver dews, this, I think, has the nobleſt import, if not the fineſt preſence. Were they all to paſs in review, and expect the award of ſuperiority from my deciſion, I ſhould not heſitate a moment. Be the prize aſſigned to this amiable candidate, which has ſo eminently diſtinguiſhed, and ſo highly dignified herſelf, by bearing ſuch a remarkable reſemblance to "the "righteous Branch; the Plant of Renown *." While others appoint it a place in the parterre, I would tranſplant the paſſion-flower, or rather tranſfer its ſacred ſignificancy, to my heart. There let it bloom, both in ſummer and in winter; bloom, in the moſt impreſſive characters, and with an undecaying luſtre: that I alſo may wear,—wear on my very ſoul, the traces of IMMANUEL, pierced for my ſins, and bruiſed for my tranſgreſſions; that I alſo may be crucified with CHRIST †, at leaſt in penitential remorſe, and affectionate ſympathy: that I may know the fellowſhip of his ſufferings ‡; and feel all my evil affections, wounded by his agonies, mortified by his death.

THERE is another ſubject of the verdant kingdom, which, on account of its very uncommon qualities, demands my particular notice: one ſo extremely diffident in her diſpoſition, and delicate in her conſtitution, that ſhe dares not venture herſelf abroad in the open air, but is nurſed up in the warmth of a hot-bed, and lives cloiſtered in the cells of a green-houſe. But the moſt curious peculiarity is, that, of all her kindred-ſpecies, ſhe alone partakes of perceptive life; at leaſt advances neareſt to this more exalted ſtate of being, and may be looked upon as the link which connects the animal and the vegetable world. A ſtranger, obſerving her motions, would almoſt be induced to ſuſpect, that ſhe is endued with ſome inferior degrees of conſciouſneſs and caution. For, if you offer to handle this ſenſitive plant, ſhe immediately takes an alarm; haſtily contracts her fibres; and, like a perſon under apprehenſions of violence, withdraws from your finger, in a kind of precipitate diſorder. Perhaps, the beauty of her aſpect might be ſullied, or the niceneſs of her texture diſcompoſed, by the human touch. Therefore, like a coy virgin, ſhe recedes from all unbecoming familiarities; and will admit no ſuch improper, if not pernicious, freedoms.

Whatever be the cauſe of this unuſual effect, it ſuggeſts an inſtructive admonition to the Chriſtian. Such ſhould be our apprehenſive, timorous care, with regard to ſin, and all, even the moſt diſtant, approaches of vice. So ſhould we avoid the very appearance of evil, and ſtand aloof from every occaſion of falling.—If ſinners entice, if forbidden pleaſures tempt, or if opportunity beckon, with the gain of injuſtice in her hand; O! turn from the gilded ſnare; touch not the beauteous bane; but fly, fly with haſte, fly without any delay, from the bewitching ruin.—Does Anger draw near with her lighted torch, to kindle the flame of reſentment in our breaſts? does Flattery ply our ears, with her enchanting and intoxicating whiſpers? would Diſcontent lay her leaden hand upon our temper, and mould into our minds her ſour leaven, in order to make us a burden to ourſelves, and unamiable to others? Inſtantly let us divert our attention from the dangerous objects; and not ſo much endeavour to antidote, as to ſhun, the moral contagion. Let us revolve in our meditations, that wonderful meekneſs of our diſtreſſed Maſter, which, amidſt the moſt abuſive and provoking inſults, maintained an uniform tenor of unſhaken ſerenity. Let us contemplate that prodigious humiliation, which brought him, from an infinite height above all worlds, to make his bed in the duſt of death. Let us ſooth our jarring, our uneaſy paſſions, with the remembrance of that chearfulneſs and reſignation, which rendered him, in the deepeſt poverty, unfeignedly thankful; and, under the heavieſt tribulations, moſt ſubmiſſively patient.

Harbour not, on any conſideration, the betrayer of your virtue. Be deaf, inflexibly deaf, to every beguiling ſolicitation. If it obtrude into the unguarded heart, give it entertainment, no, not for a moment. To parley with the enemy, is to open a door for deſtruction. Our ſafety conſiſts in flight: and, in this caſe, ſuſpicion is the trueſt prudence; fear, the greateſt bravery.—Play not on the brink of the precipice. Flutter not round the edges of the flame. Dally not with the ſtings of death. But reject, with a becoming mixture of ſolicitude and abhorrence, the very firſt inſinuations of iniquity; as cautiouſly, as the ſmarting ſore ſhrinks even from the ſofteſt hand; as conſtantly, as this jealous plant recoils at the approaching touch *.

NOT long ago, theſe curious productions of the ſpring were coarſe and miſ-ſhapen roots. Had we opened the earth, and beheld them in their ſeed, how uncouth and contemptible had their appearance been!——But now they are the boaſt of nature, the delight of the ſons of men, finiſhed patterns for enamelling and embroidery, outſhining even the happieſt ſtrokes of the pencil. They are taught to bloom, but with a very inferior luſtre †, in the richeſt tapeſtries, and moſt magnificent ſilks. Art never attempts to equal their incomparable elegancies; but places all her merit in copying after theſe delicate originals. Even thoſe who glitter in ſilver, or whoſe clothing is of wrought gold, are deſirous to borrow additional ornaments from a ſprig of jeſſamine, or a little aſſemblage of pinks.

What a fine idea may we form, from hence, of the

* So the bleſſed JESUS is deſcribed, Jer. xxiii. 5. Ezek. xxxiv. 29.

† Gal. ii. 20. ‡ Phil. iii. 10.

* The prophet Iſaiah, in an elegant and lively deſcription of the upright man, ſays, He ſhaketh his hands from holding of bribes; and, I may add, from practiſing any kind of iniquity. The image, exceedingly beautiful, and equally expreſſive, both illuſtrates and enforces the doctrine of this whole ſection.—Shaketh his hands; juſt as a perſon would do, who happens to have burning coals fall into his lap, or ſome venomous creature faſtening upon his fleſh. In ſuch a caſe, none would ſtand a moment to conſider, or to debate with himſelf the expediency of the thing. He would inſtantly fling off the pernicious incumbrance; inſtantly endeavour to diſengage himſelf from the clinging miſchief.—Iſ. xxxiii. 15.

I have repreſented the danger of not extinguiſhing immediately the very firſt ſparks of temptation, in a variety of views. Becauſe a proper behaviour, in this conjuncture, is of ſuch vaſt importance to the purity, the ſafety, and the comfort of our minds.—Becauſe I had the royal moraliſt in my eye; who, deterring his pupils from the path of the wicked, cries, with an air of deep concern, and in the language of vehement importunity, cries; Avoid it; paſs not by it; turn from it; and paſs away. How ſtrongly is the counſel urged, by being ſo frequently repeated; in ſuch a remarkable diverſity of conciſe and abrupt, conſequently of forcible and preſſing admonitions! Prov. iv. 15.

† The cowſlip ſmiles in brighter yellow dreſt,
Than that which veils the nubil virgin's breaſt:
A faireſted ſtands bluſhing in the roſe,
Than that which on the bridegroom's veſtments glows.
PRIOR's Sol.

reſurrection of the juſt, and the ſtate of their re-animated bodies! As the roots even of our choiceſt flowers, when depoſited in the ground, are rude and ungraceful; but, when they ſpring up into blooming life, are moſt elegant and ſplendid; ſo the fleſh of a ſaint, when committed to the duſt, alas! what is it? A heap of corruption; a maſs of putrefying clay. But, when it obeys a great archangel's call, and ſtarts into a new exiſtence; what an aſtoniſhing change enſues! what a moſt ennobling improvement takes place!—That which was ſown in weakneſs, is raiſed in all the vivacity of power. That which was ſown in deformity, is raiſed in the bloom of celeſtial beauty. Exalted, refined, and glorified, it will ſhine "as the brightneſs of the "firmament," when it darts the inimitable blue through the fleeces—the ſnowy fleeces of ſome cleaving cloud.

Fear not, then, thou faithful Chriſtian; fear not, at the appointed time, to deſcend into the tomb. Thy ſoul thou mayſt truſt with thy omnipotent Redeemer, who is LORD of the unſeen world; "who has the "keys of hell, and of death." Moſt ſafely mayſt thou truſt thy better part, in thoſe beneficent hands, which were pierced with nails, and faſtened to the ignominious tree, for thy ſalvation.—With regard to thy earthly tabernacle, be not diſmayed. It is taken down, only to be built upon a diviner plan, and in a more heavenly form. If it retires into the ſhadow of death, and lies immured in the gloom of the grave; it is only to return, from a ſhort confinement, to endleſs liberty. If it falls into diſſolution, it is in order to riſe more illuſtrious from its ruins; and wear an infinitely brighter face of perfection, and of glory *.

HAVING now made my panegyric, let me next take up a lamentation, for theſe loveliеſt productions of the vegetable world.—For I foreſee their approaching doom. Yet a little while, and all theſe pleaſing ſcenes vaniſh. Yet a little while, and all the ſweets of the breathing, all the beauties of the blooming ſpring, are no more. Every one of theſe amiable forms muſt be ſhrivelled to deformity, and trodden to the earth.—Significant reſemblance this of all created beauty. All fleſh is graſs; like the green herbage, liable and prone to fade. Nay, all the goodlineſs thereof, its fineſt accompliſhments, and what the world univerſally admires, is as the flower of the field †, which loſes its gloſs, decays and periſhes, more ſpeedily than the graſs itſelf.—Behold then, ye brighteſt among the daughters of Eve; behold yourſelves, in this glaſs. See the charms of your perſon eclipſed, by the luſtre of theſe little flowers; and the frailty of your ſtate repreſented, ‡ by their tranſient glories. A fever may ſcorch thoſe poliſhed veins; a conſumption may emaciate the dimpling cheeks; and a load of unexpected ſorrows depreſs thoſe lively ſpirits. Or ſhould theſe diſaſters, in pity, ſpare the tender frame; yet age, inexorable age and wrinkles, will aſſuredly come at laſt; will wither all the fine features, and blaſt every ſprightly grace.

Then, ye fair, when thoſe ſparkling eyes are darkened, and ſink in their orbs; when they are rolling in agonies, or ſwimming in death; how will you ſuſtain the affliction? how will you repair the loſs?—Apply your thoughts to religion. Attend to the one thing needful. Believe in, and imitate, the bleſſed JESUS. Then ſhall your ſouls mount up to the realms of happineſs, when the well-proportioned clay is mingling with its mean original. The light of GOD's countenance will irradiate, with matchleſs and conſummate perfection, all their exalted faculties. Cleanſed entirely from every dreg of corruption, like ſome unſullied mirror, they will reflect the complete image of their Creator's holineſs.—O! that you would thus dreſs your minds, and prepare for the immortal ſtate! Then, from ſhining among your fellow-creatures on earth, you ſhall be tranſlated, to ſhine around the throne of GOD. Then, from being the ſweeteners of our life, and the delight of our eyes here below; you ſhall paſs, by an eaſy tranſition, into angels of light; and become "an everlaſting excellency, the joy of all "generations."

YES; ye flowery nations, ye muſt all decay.—Yonder lily, that looks like the queen of the gay creation,—ſee, how gracefully it erects its majeſtic head! What an air of dignity and grandeur ennobles its aſpect! For elevated mien, as well as for incomparable luſtre, juſtly may it be preferred to the magnificent monarch of the Eaſt *. But, all ſtately and charming as it is, it will hardly ſurvive a few more days. That unſpotted whiteneſs muſt quickly be tarniſhed, and the ſnowy form defiled in the duſt.

As the lily pleaſes, with the noble ſimplicity of its appearance; the tulip is admired, for the gaiety and multiplicity of its colours. Never was cup either painted or enamelled with ſuch a profuſion of dyes. Its tinges are ſo glowing, its contraſts ſo ſtrong, and the arrangement of them both ſo elegant and artful!—'Twas lately the pride of the border, and the reigning beauty of the delightful ſeaſon; as exquiſitely fine as the rainbow, and almoſt as extremely tranſient. It ſpread, for a little moment, its glittering plumage; but has, now, laid all its variegated and ſuperior honours down. Thoſe radiant ſtripes are blended, alas! rudely blended with common mould.

To a graceful ſhape, and blooming complexion, the roſe adds a moſt agreeable perfume. Our noſtrils make it repeated viſits, and are never weary of drinking in its ſweets. A fragrance, ſo peculiarly rich and reviving, tranſpires from its opening tufts, that every one covets its acquaintance. How have I ſeen even the accompliſhed Chariſſa, for whom ſo many votaries languiſh, fondly careſſing this little flower! That lovely boſom, which is the ſeat of innocence and virtue; whoſe leaſt excellency it is, to rival the delicacy of the pureſt

---

The wiſe, the juſt, the pious, and the brave,
Live in their deaths, and flouriſh from the grave.
Grain hid in earth, repays the peaſant's care,
And ev'ning-ſuns but ſet to riſe more fair.

† Iſ. xl. 6.

‡ Και το ροδον καλον εϛι, και ο χρινος αυτο μαραινει·
Και το ιον καλον εϛιν εν ϛαρι, και ταχυ γηρα.
Λευκον το κρινον εϛι, μαραινεται ανικα πιπτη·
Α δε χιων λευκα, και ταυτας ανικα παχθη·
Και καλλος καλον εϛι το παιδικον, αλλ' ολιγον ξη.

The reader will excuſe me, if I imitate, rather than tranſlate theſe lines from Theocritus; if I vary one image, add another, and give a new turn to the whole.

When ſnows deſcends and robe the fields
In winter's bright array;
Touch'd by the ſun, the luſtre fades,
And weeps itſelf away.

When ſpring appears; when violets blow,
And ſhed a rich perfume;
How ſoon the fragrance breathes its laſt!
How ſhort-liv'd is the bloom!

Freſh in the morn, the ſummer-roſe
Hangs with 'ning 'ere 'tis noon;
We ſcarce enjoy the balmy gift,
But mourn the pleaſure gone.

With gliding fire, an evening-ſtar
Streaks the autumnal ſkies;
Shook from the ſphere, it darts away,
And, in an inſtant, dies.

Such are the charms that flaſh the cheek,
And ſparkle in the eye:
So, from the lovely finiſh'd form
The tranſient graces fly.

To this the ſeaſons, as they roll,
Their atteſtation bring:
They warn the fair; their ev'ry round
Confirms the truth I ſing.

* Matth. vi. 29.

purest snows; among a thousand charms of its own, thinks it possible to adopt another from the damask rose-bud. Yet even this universal favourite must fail. Its native balm cannot preserve it from putrefaction. Soon, soon, must it resign all those endearing qualities; and hang neglected on its stem, or drop despised to the ground.

One could wish, methinks, these most amiable of the inanimate race, a longer existence: but in vain. They fade almost as soon as they flourish. Within less than a month their glories are extinct. Let the sun take a few more journeys through the sky; then visit this enchanting walk; and you will find nothing but a wretched wilderness of ragged or naked stalks.—But (my soul exults in the thought) the garment of celestial glory, which shall 'ere long array the re-animated body, will never wax old. The illustrious robes of a Saviour's consummate righteousness, which even now adorn the justified spirit, are incorruptible and immortal. No moth can corrode their texture; no number of ages sully their brightness. The light of day may be quenched, and all the stars sink in obscurity; but the honours of "just men made perfect" are subject to no diminution. Inextinguishable and unfading is the lustre of their crown.

YES; ye flowery nations, ye must all decay.——Winter, like some enraged and irresistible conqueror, that carries fire and sword where-ever he advances; that demolishes towns; depopulates countries; spreads slaughter and desolation on every side;——so, just so, will Winter, with his savage and unrelenting blasts, invade this beautiful prospect. The storms are gathering, and the tempests mustering their rage, to fall upon the vegetable kingdoms. They will ravage through the dominions of nature; and plunder her riches, and lay waste her charms.——Then, ye trees, must you stand stript of your verdant apparel; and, ye fields, be spoiled of your waving treasures. Then, the earth, disrobed of all her gay attire, must sit in sables, like a disconsolate widow. The sun too, who now rides in triumph round the world, and scatters gaiety from his radiant eye, will then look faintly from the windows of the south; and, casting a short glance on our dejected world, will leave us to the uncomfortable gloom of tedious nights.—Then, these pretty chorísters of the air will chant no more to the gentle gales; the lark, the linnet, and all the feathered songsters, abandon their notes, and indulge their woes. The harmony of the woods is at an end; and silence, (unless it be interrupted by howling winds), a sullen silence, sits brooding upon the boughs; which are now made vocal, by a thousand warbling throats.

But (sweet recollection! ravishing expectation!) the songs of saints in light never admit a pause for sadness. All heaven will resound with the melody of their gratitude; and all eternity echo to their triumphant acclamations. The Hallelujahs of that world, and the harmonious joy of its inhabitants, will be as lasting as the divine perfections they celebrate.——Come then, holy love, and tune my heart; descend, celestial fire, and touch my tongue; that I may stand ready to strike up, and bear my part, in that great hosanna, that everlasting hymn.

YES; yes: ye flowery nations, ye must all decay.—— And, indeed, could you add the strength of an oak, or the stability of a pyramid *, to all the delicacy of your texture; yet short, exceeding short, even then would your duration be. For I see that all things come to an end. The pillars of nature are tottering. The foundations of the round world are falling away. "The heavens themselves wax old like a garment."—But, amidst these views of general ruin, here is our refuge; this is our consolation; We know that our Redeemer liveth. Thy years, blessed JESUS, shall not fail. From everlasting to everlasting, thou art still the same? the same most excellent and adorable person; the same omnipotent and faithful friend; the same all-sufficient and inestimable portion. O! may we but partake of thy merits; be sanctified by thy grace; and received into thy glory!—Then perish, if ye will, all inferior delights. Let all that is splendid in the skies expire; and all that is amiable in nature be expunged. Let the whole extent of creation be turned again into one undistinguishable void, one universal blank.—Yet, if GOD be ours, we shall have enough. If GOD be ours, we shall have all, and abound †; all that our circumstances can want, or our wishes crave, to make us inconceivably blessed and happy; blessed and happy, not only through this little interval of time, but through the unmeasurable revolutions of eternity.

THE sun is now come forth in his strength, and beats fiercely upon my throbbing pulse.——Let me retire to yonder inviting arbour. There the woodbines retain the lucid drop; there the jessamines, which line the verdant alcove, are still impearled, and deliciously wet with dews.——Welcome, ye refreshing shades! I feel, I feel, your chearing influence. My languid spirits revive; the slackened sinews are new strung; and life bounds brisker through all her crimson channels.

Reclined on this mossy couch, and surrounded by this fragrant coldness, let me renew my aspirations to the ever-present Deity. Here let me remember, and imitate, the pious Augustine, and his mother Monica; who, being engaged in discourse, on the beauties of the visible creation, rose, by these ladders, to the glories of the invisible state; till they were inspired with the most affecting sense of their super-eminent excellency, and actuated with the most ardent breathings after their full enjoyment: insomuch that they were almost rapt up into the bliss they contemplated; and scarce "knew, whether they were in the body, or out of the body."

WHEN tempests toss the ocean; when plaintive signals of distress are heard from the bellowing deep; and melancholy tokens of shipwreck come floating on the foaming surge; then how delightful to stand safe on shore, and hug one's self in conscious security!†!—— When a glut of waters bursts from some mighty torrent, rushes headlong over all the neighbouring plains, sweeps away the helpless cattle, and drives the affrighted shepherd from his hut; then, from the top of a distant

* I know not any performance, in which the transitory nature of these most durable monuments of human grandeur, is hinted with such a modest air of instruction, or their hideous ruin described in such a pomp of pleasing horror, as in a small, but solemn, picturesque, and majestic poem, entitled——THE RUINS OF ROME, written by the Rev. Mr DYER: whom the reader (if he has the pleasure of perusing that beautiful piece) will easily perceive to have taken his draughts from the originals themselves; as nothing but the sight of those magnificent remains, could have inspired his lines with such vivacity.——As a specimen of the work, and a confirmation of the remark suggested above, I take leave to transcribe the following passage:

——The pilgrim oft,
At dead of night, mid his oraison hears
Aghast the voice of time, disparting tow'rs,
Tumbling all precipitate down dash'd,
Rattling around, loud thund'ring to the moon.

* His hand the good man fastens on the skies,
And bids earth roll, nor feels the idle whirl.
Night-Thoughts, No. IV.

† As Lucretius gave the hint for these observations, so he assigns the reason of the pleasure specified. It arises, not from the considerations of another's misery; this would argue the rankest malevolence: but from the agreeable contemplation of our own personal safety; which, while we view circumstances that are pernicious to others, but harmless to ourselves, is not a little heightened by the contrast. Suave mari magno, &c.

eminence,

eminence, to descry the danger we need not fear; how pleasing is such meditation, in my present situation. For now the sun blazes from on high: the air glows with his fires: the fields are rent with chinks: the roads are scorched to dust: the woods seem to contract a sickly aspect, and a russet hue: the traveller, broiled as he rides, hastens to his inn, and intermits his journey: the labourer, bathed in sweat, drops the scythe, and desists from his work: the cattle flee to some shady covert, or else pant and toss under the burning noon. Even the stubborn rock, smit with the piercing beams, is ready to cleave. All things languish beneath the dazzling deluge. ——While I shall enjoy a cool hour, and calm reflection, amidst the gloom of this bowery recess, which scarce admits one speck of sunshine.

Thus, may both the flock, and their shepherd, dwell beneath the defence of the Most High, and abide under the shadow of the Almighty *. Then, though † the pestilence walketh in darkness, and the sickness destroyeth at noonday; though thousands fall beside us, and ten thousands at our right hand; we need fear no evil. Either the destroying angel shall pass over our houses; or else he shall dispense the corrections of a friend, not the scourges of an enemy; which, instead of hurting us, shall work for our good.—Then, though profaneness and infidelity, far more malignant evils, breathe deadly contagion, and taint the morals of multitudes around us; yet, if the great Father of spirits "hide us in the hollow of his "hand," we shall hold fast our integrity, and be faithful unto death.

Let then, dearest LORD, O! let thy servant, and the people committed to his care, be received into thy protection. Let us take sanctuary under that Tree of Life, erected in thy ignominious cross. Let us fly for safety to that City of Refuge, opened in thy bleeding wounds. These shall be a sacred hiding-place, not to be pierced by the flames of divine wrath, or the fiery darts of temptation. Thy dying merits, and perfect obedience, shall be to our souls, as rivers of water in a dry place, or as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land ‡.

BUT most of all, in that last tremendous day, when the heavens are rent asunder, and wrapped up like a scroll; when thy almighty arm shall arrest the sun in his career, and dash to pieces the structure of the universe; when the dead, both small and great, shall be gathered before the throne of thy glory; and the fates of all mankind hang on the very point of a final, irreversible decision: —then, blessed JESUS, let us be owned by thee, and we shall not be ashamed; defended by thee, and we shall not be afraid. O! may we, at that awful, that unutterably important juncture, be covered with the wings of thy redeeming love, and we shall behold all the horrible convulsions of expiring nature, with composure, with comfort! We shall even welcome the dissolution of all things, as the times of refreshing from the presence of the LORD ‖.

THERE are, I perceive, who still attend the flowers; and, in defiance of the sun, ply their work on every expanded blossom. The bees I mean; that nation of chymists! to whom nature has communicated the rare and valuable secret of enriching themselves, without impoverishing others; who extract the most delicious syrup from every fragrant herb, without wounding its substance, or diminishing its odours.——I take the more notice of these ingenious operators, because I would willingly make them my pattern §. While the gay butterfly flutters her painted wings, and sips a little fantastic delight, only for the present moment; while the gloomy spider, worse than idle, busily is preparing his insidious nets for destruction, or sucking venom even from the most wholesome plants; this frugal community are wisely employed in providing for futurity, and collecting a copious stock of the most balmy treasures.——And O! might these meditations sink into my soul! would the GOD, who suggested each heavenly thought, vouchsafe to convert it into an established principle, to determine all my inclinations, and regulate my whole conduct! I should then gather advantages from the same blooming objects, more precious than your golden stores, ye industrious insects. I also should go home, laden with the richest sweets, and the noblest spoils, though I crop not a leaf, nor call a single flower my own.

HERE I behold, assembled in one view, almost all the various beauties which have been severally entertaining my imagination. The vistas, struck through an ancient wood, or formed by rows of venerable elms; conducting the spectator's observation to some remarkable object; or leading the traveller's footsteps to this delightful seat:—The walls, enriched with fruit-trees, and faced with a covering of their leafy extensions; I should rather have said, hung with different pieces of nature's noblest tapestry:——The walks, neatly shorn, and lined with verdure; or finely smoothed, and coated with gravel:—The alleys, arched with shades, to embower our noon-tide repose; or thrown open for the free accession of air, to invite us to our evening-recreation:——The decent edgings of box, which inclose, like a plain selvage, each beautiful compartment, and its splendid figures:——The shapely ever-greens, and flowering shrubs, which strike the eye, and appear with peculiar dignity in this distant situation:——The bason, with its crystal fount, floating in the centre, and diffusing an agreeable freshness through the whole:—The waters, falling from a remote cascade, and gently murmuring, as they flow along the pebbles:——These, added to the rest, and all so disposed, that each recommends and endears each, render the whole a most sweet ravishing scene of order and variety, of elegance and magnificence.

From so many lovely prospects, clustering upon the sight, it is impossible not to be reminded of heaven, that world of bliss, those regions of light, where the Lamb that was slain manifests his beatific presence, and his saints live for evermore.——But O! what pencil can sketch out a draught of that goodly land? What colours, or what style, can express the splendors of IMMANUEL's kingdom! Would some celestial hand draw aside the veil, but for one moment; and permit us to throw a single glance on those divine abodes; how would all sublunary possessions become tarnished in our eyes, and grow flat upon our taste! A glimpse, a transient glimpse of those unutterable beatitudes, would captivate our souls, and engross all their faculties. Eden itself, after such a vision, would appear a chearless desert; and all earthly charms intolerable deformity.

Very excellent things are spoken of thee, thou city of GOD *. Volumes have been written, and those by inspired men, to display the wonders of thy perfections. All that is rich and resplendent in the visible creation, has been called in to aid our conceptions, and elevate our ideas. But, indeed, no tongue can utter, no pen can describe, no fancy can imagine, what GOD, of his unbounded munificence, has prepared for them that love him.—Seeing then that all terrestrial things must come to a speedy end; and there remaineth a rest, a blissful and everlasting rest, for the people of GOD; let me never be too fondly attached to any present satisfactions. Weaned from whatever is temporal, may

* Psal. xci. i.

† This was written, when a very infectious and mortal distemper raged in the neighbourhood.

‡ Is. xxxii. 2.

‖ Acts iii. 19.

§ —— Ego apis matinæ
More modoque
Grata carpentis thyma. HOR.

* Psal. lxxxvii. 2.

I maintain a superior indifference for such transitory enjoyments; but long, long earnestly, for the mansions that are above; the paradise, "which the LORD hath planted, and not man." Thither may I transmit the chief of my conversation; and from thence expect the whole of my happiness. Be that the sacred, powerful magnet, which ever influences my heart, ever attracts my affections. There are such transcendent glories, as eye has not seen; there are such transporting pleasures as ear has not heard; there is such a fulness of joys, as the thought of man cannot conceive.

INTO that consummate felicity, those eternal fruitions, permit me, Madam, to wish you, in due time, an abundant entrance; and to assure you, that this wish is breathed, with the same sincerity and ardor, for my honoured correspondent, as it is,

Your most obedient, &c.

JAMES HERVEY.

A DESCANT UPON CREATION.

With joy, with grief, that healing hand I see;
The skies it form'd, and yet it bled for me.

Night-Thoughts, No. IV.

IF the reader pleases to look back on page 44, he will find me engaged by a promissory note, to subjoin a DESCANT upon CREATION.

To know the love of CHRIST; to have such a deep apprehension of his unspeakable kindness, as may produce in our hearts an adoring gratitude, and an unfeigned faith; this, according to St Paul's estimate, is the highest and happiest attainment in the sacred science of Christianity *. What follows, is an attempt to assist the attentive mind, in learning a line or two of that best and greatest lesson. It introduces the most conspicuous parts of the visible system, as so many prompters to our dull affections; each suggesting a hint, adapted to the important occasion, and suited to its respective character.

Can there be a more powerful incentive to devout gratitude, than to consider the magnificent and delicate scenes of the universe, with a particular reference to CHRIST, as the Creator?—Every object, viewed in this light, will surely administer incessant recruits to the languishing lamp of divine love. Every production in nature will strike a spark into the soul; and the whole creation concur to raise the smoking flax into a flame.

Can any thing impart a stronger joy to the believer, or more effectually confirm his faith in the crucified JESUS, than to behold the heaven declaring his glory, and the firmament shewing his handy-work? Surely, it must be matter of inexpressible consolation to the poor sinner, to observe the honours of his Redeemer, written with sun-beams, over all the face of the world.

We delight to read an account of our incarnate JEHOVAH, as he is revealed in the books of Moses and the prophets, as he is displayed in the writings of the evangelists and apostles. Let us also endeavour to see a sketch of his perfections, as they stand delineated in that stately volume, where every leaf is a spacious plain,—every line, a flowing brook,—every period, a lofty mountain.

Should any of my readers be unexercised in such speculations, I beg leave (in pursuance of my promise) to present them with a specimen; or to offer a clue, which may possibly lead their minds into this most improving and delightful train of thinking.

Should any be inclined to suspect the solidity of the following observations, or to condemn them, as the voice of rant, and the lawless flight of fancy; I must entreat such persons to recollect, that the grand doctrine, the hinge on which they all turn, is warranted and established by the unanimous testimony of the inspired penmen; who frequently celebrate IMMANUEL, or CHRIST JESUS, as the great almighty cause of all; assuring us, that all things were created by him, and for him; and that in him all things consist *.

On such a subject, what is wonderful, is far from being extravagant. To be wonderful, is the inseparable characteristic of GOD and his works; especially of that most distinguished and glorious event of the divine works, REDEMPTION; so glorious, that "all the miracles in Egypt, and the marvellous acts in "the field of Zoan;" all that the Jewish annals have recorded, or the human ear has heard; all dwindle into trivial events, are scarce worthy to be remembered †, in comparison of this infinitely grand and infinitely gracious transaction.—Kindled, therefore, into pleasing astonishment, by such a survey, let me give full scope to my meditations. Let me pour out my whole

* Col. i. 16. 17. Before my reader enters upon the following Descant, he is desired to peruse the note, page 43.

† Is. xliii. 18.

* Eph. iii. 19.

soul

ſoul on the boundleſs ſubject; not much regarding the limits, which cold criticiſm, or colder unbelief, might preſcribe.

O YE angels, that ſurround the throne; ye princes of heaven, "that excel in ſtrength," and are clothed with tranſcendent brightneſs; He, who placed you in thoſe ſtations of exalted honour, and dignified your nature with ſuch illuſtrious endowments; He, whom you all obey, and all adore: HE took not on him the angelic form, but was made fleſh, and found in faſhion as a man. Like us wretched mortals, He was ſubject to wearineſs, pain, and every infirmity, ſin only excepted;——that we might, one day, be raiſed to your ſublime abodes; be adopted into your bliſsful ſociety; and join with your tranſported choir, in giving glory to HIM that ſitteth upon the throne, and to the LAMB for ever and ever *.

O YE heavens, whoſe azure arches riſe immenſely high, and ſtretch unmeaſurably wide; ſtupendous amphitheatre! amidſt whoſe vaſt expanſive circuit, orbs of the moſt dreadful grandeur are perpetually running their amazing races: unfathomable depths of æther! where worlds unnumbered float; and, to our limited ſight, worlds unnumbered are loſt:—He, who adjuſted your dimenſions with his ſpan, and formed the magnificent ſtructure with his word; HE was once wrapt in ſwaddling-cloaths, and laid in a manger:——that the benefits accruing to his people, through his moſt meritorious humiliation, might have no other meaſure of their value than immenſity; might run parallel, in their duration, with eternity.

YE ſtars, that beam with inextinguiſhable brilliancy, through the midnight-ſky; oceans of flame, and centres of worlds, though ſeemingly little points of light! ——He, who ſhone, with eſſential effulgence, innumerable ages, before your twinkling tapers were kindled; and will ſhine with everlaſting majeſty and beauty, when your places in the firmament ſhall be known no more: HE was involved, for many years, in the deepeſt obſcurity; lay concealed in the contemptible city Nazareth; lay diſguiſed under the mean habit of a carpenter's ſon:——that he might plant the heavens †, as it were, with new conſtellations; and array theſe clods of earth, theſe houſes of clay, with a radiancy far ſuperior to yours; a radiancy, which will adorn the very heaven of heavens, when you ſhall vaniſh away like ſmoke ‡; or expire as momentary ſparks from the ſmitten ſteel.

COMETS, that ſometimes ſhoot into the illimitable tracts of æther, farther than the diſcernment of our eye is able to follow; ſometimes return from the long, long excurſion, and ſweep our affrighted hemiſphere with your enormous fiery train; that ſometimes make near approaches to the ſun, and burn almoſt in his immediate beams; ſometimes retire to the remoteſt diſtance, and freeze, for ages, in the exceſſive rigours of winter:——He, who, at his ſovereign pleaſure, withdraws the blazing wonder; or leads forth the portentous ſtranger, to ſhake terror over guilty kingdoms; HE was overwhelmed with the moſt ſhocking amazement, and plunged into the deepeſt anxiety; was chilled with apprehenſions of fear, and ſcorched by the flames of avenging wrath:——that I, and other depraved rebellious creatures, might not be eternally agitated with the extremes of jarring paſſions; oppoſite, yet, on either ſide, tormenting; far more tormenting to the ſoul, than the ſevereſt degrees of your heat and cold to the human ſenſe.

YE planets, that, winged with unimaginable ſpeed, traverſe the regions of the ſky; ſometimes climbing millions and millions of miles above, ſometimes deſcending as far below, the great axle of your motions: ye, that are ſo minutely faithful to the viciſſitudes of day and night; ſo exactly punctual in bringing on the changes of your reſpective ſeaſons:—He, who launched you, at firſt, from his mighty arm; who continually impels you with ſuch wonderful rapidity, and guides you with ſuch perfect regularity; who fixes "the habitation of his holineſs, and his glory," infinite heights above your ſcanty rounds: HE once became a helpleſs infant, ſojourned in our inferior world, fled from the perſecutors' ſword, and wandered as a vagabond in a foreign land:—that he might lead our feet into the way of peace; that he might bring us aliens near to GOD, bring us exiles home to heaven.

THOU ſun, inexhauſted ſource of light, and heat, and comfort! without whoſe preſence an univerſal gloom would enſue, and horror inſupportable; who, without the aſſiſtance of any other fire, ſheddeſt day through a thouſand realms; and, not confining thy munificence to realms only, extendeſt thy enlightening influences to ſurrounding worlds: prime chearer of the animal, and great enlivener of the vegetable tribes! ſo beautiful in thyſelf, ſo beneficial in thy effects, that erring Heathens addreſſed thee with adorations, and miſtook thee for thy Maker!—He, who filled thy orb with a profuſion of luſtre; luſtre, in its direct emanations, unſufferably bright, but, rebated by thy reflection, delightfully mild: He, before whom thy meridian ſplendors are but a ſhade; whoſe love tranſfuſed into thy heart, is infinitely more exhilirating, than even the ſweet and clear ſhining after the rain:—HE diveſted himſelf of his all-tranſcending diſtinctions, and drew a viel over the effulgence of his divinity; that, by ſpeaking to us, face to face, as a man ſpeaketh unto his friend, he might diſpel our intellectual darkneſs. His "viſage was marred *," and he became the ſcorn of men, the outcaſt of the people; that, by this manifeſtation of his unutterably tender regard for our welfare, he might diffuſe many a gleam of joy through our dejected minds: that, in another ſtate of things, he might clothe even our fallen nature, with the honours of that magnificent luminary; and give all the righteous to ſhine forth as the ſun, in the kingdom of their Father.

THOU moon, that walkeſt among the hoſt of ſtars, and, in thy lucid appearance, art ſuperior to them all; fair ruler of the night! ſometimes half-reſtoring the day, with thy waxing brightneſs; ſometimes waning into dimneſs, and ſcarcely ſcattering the nocturnal gloom; ſometimes covered with ſackcloth, and alarming the gazing nations!—He, who dreſſes thy opake globe, in beaming, but borrowed ſilver; He, whoſe dignity is unchangeable, underived, and all his own: He vouchſafed to wear a body of clay: HE was content to appear as in a bloody eclipſe, ſhorn of his reſplendent beams, and ſurrounded with a night of horror, which knew not one reviving ray.——Thus has he impowered his church, and all believers, to tread the moon under their feet †. Hence, inſpired with the hope of brighter glory, and of more enduring bliſs, are they enabled to triumph over all the vain anxieties,

* Rev. v. 13. † Iſ. li. 16.

‡ Alluding to a paſſage in Iſaiah, which is, I think, grand and elevated beyond all compariſon.—Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath: for the heavens ſhall vaniſh away like ſmoke, and the earth ſhall wax old like a garment, and they that dwell therein ſhall die like the feeble inſect: but my righteouſneſs ſhall be for ever, and my ſalvation ſhall not be aboliſhed, Iſ. li. 6.——With the great Vitringa, I tranſlate the words כמו בן not, in like manner: but, like the feeble inſect. Which renders the period more complete; the ſenſe more emphatical; and is more agreeable to the genius of the ſacred original.

* Iſ. lii. 14. † Rev. xii. 1.

and

and vainer amuſements, of this ſublunary, precarious, mutable world.

YE thunders, that, awfully grumbling in the diſtant clouds, ſeem to meditate indignation, and form the firſt eſſays of a far more frightful peal; or, ſuddenly burſting over our heads, rend the vault above, and ſhake the ground below, with the hideous, horrid crack: ye, that ſend your tremendous vollies from pole to pole, ſtartling the ſavage herds *, and aſtoniſhing the human race:—HE, who permits terror to ſound her trumpet, in your deep, prolonged, enlarging, aggravated roar: HE uttered a feeble infantile cry in the ſtable, and ſtrong expiring groans on the accurſed tree:——that he might, in the gentleſt accents, whiſper peace to our ſouls; and, at length, tune our voices to the melody of heaven.

O YE lightnings that brood, and lie couchant, in the ſulphureous vapours; that glance, with forked fury, from the angry gloom, ſwifter and fiercer than the lion ruſhes from his den; or open into vaſt, expanſive ſheets of flame, ſublimely waved over the proſtrate world, and fearfully lingering in the frighted ſkies: ye, that formerly laid in aſhes the licentious abodes of luſt and violence; that will, ere long, ſet on fire the elements, and co-operate in the conflagration of the globe:—HE, who kindles your flaſh, and directs you when to ſally, and where to ſtrike; He, who commiſſions your whirling bolts, whom to kill, and whom to ſpare: HE reſigned his ſacred perſon to the moſt barbarous indignities; ſubmitted his beneficent hands to the ponderous hammer, and the piercing nail; yea, with-held not his heart, his very heart, from the ſtab of the executioner's ſpear: and, inſtead of flaſhing confuſion on his outrageous tormentors; inſtead of ſtriking them dead to the earth, or plunging them to the depths of hell, with his frown; He cried——in his laſt moments, and with his agonizing lips, He cried, FATHER, FORGIVE THEM; FOR THEY KNOW NOT WHAT THEY DO!—O! what a pattern of patience for his ſaints! What an object of admiration for angels! What a conſtellation of every mild, amiable, and benign virtue, ſhining, in this hour of darkneſs, with ineffable ſplendor and beauty †!——Hence, hence it is, that we

* Pſal. xxix. 8.

† One can hardly forbear animadverting upon the diſingenuous temper, and perverſe taſte of Celſus, who attempts to turn this moſt diſtinguiſhing and ornamental part of our LORD's life, into ridicule and reproach.——Having ſpoken of CHRIST, as deſpitefully uſed, and arrayed in a purple robe; crowned with thorns; and holding, by way of mock majeſty, a reed inſtead of a ſceptre, (for he enters into all theſe circumſtances, which is a teſtimony to their truth even from the mouth of an enemy) he adds,—Τι δε ουκ επεδειξεν, αλλα τον γε Διονυσον, και τον Ηρακλεα παρελαβε τι ειλοδορησας; και τον μεν ουκ αν ισως ηξιωσας ὑβρεως ενεγκειν, ει παρην, ουτως ευλαβες και δικαιος; Orig. contra CELS. p. 81. i. e. Why, in the name of wonder, does he not, on this occaſion, at leaſt, aſſiſt the GOD? Why does he not deliver himſelf from this ſhocking ignominy: or execute ſome ſignal vengeance on the authors of ſuch injurious and abuſive inſults, both of himſelf and his Father?——Why, Celſus? Becauſe HE was pureneſs and gentleneſs itſelf; whereas your deities were ſlaves to their own turbulent and reſentful paſſions. Becauſe they were little better than ſavages in human ſhape; who too often made a merit of ſlaughter, and took a horrid pride in ſpilling blood:——While CHRIST was the Prince of peace, and came not to deſtroy men's lives, but to ſave. Becauſe any madman on earth, or fury from hell, is capable of venting his rage: but who, amidſt ſuch unſufferable provocations and barbarities, who, having in his own hand the power to reſcue himſelf, the power to avenge himſelf, could ſubmit to all, with an unruffled ſerenity of patience; and not only not be exaſperated, but overcome, in ſo triumphant a manner, evil with good? None but CHRIST! none but CHRIST! This was compaſſion worthy of GOD; clemency and charity truly divine.

Therefore, the calumny raiſed by the ſame virulent objector in another place, carries its own confutation; or rather, falls with a weight of infamy on his dunghill deities; while it bears a moſt honourable teſtimony to the majeſtic and invincible meekneſs of our Saviour. Ει μη, ſays he to the Chriſtian, τα αγαλματα τουτων λοιδορων καταγελας, και ου γε τον Διονυσον η τον Ηρακλεα παρελθε τι ειλοδορησας, ουκ αν ισως ηξιωσας ανεχεσθαι την γε τον Θεον παρελθε καλλιπληξ και κολαζουσης, ωσπερ οι τυραννοι δορυφοροι πεποιηκασιν, ibid. p. 404. i. e. You, indeed, take upon you to deride the images of our deities; but if Bacchus himſelf, or Hercules had been preſent, you would not have dared to offer ſuch an affront; or if you had been ſo preſumptuous, would have ſeverely ſmarted for your inſolence! Whereas, they who tormented the very perſon of your GOD, and even extended him with mortal agony on the croſs, ſuffered no effects of his diſpleaſure.

* Juvenal ſeems to conſider the clouds, under this ſame character, in that beautiful line, Quicquid habent telorum armamentaria cæli.

† Job has informed us, for what purpoſe the magazines of the firmament are ſtocked with hail. That they may be ready againſt the day of battle and war. Job xxxvii. 23.—Joſhua has recorded, what terrible ſlaughter has been made, by thoſe miſſive weapons of the Almighty, Joſh. x. 11.—Modern hiſtorians relate, that, when Edward III. invaded France, a ſhower of hailſtones deſcended, of ſuch a prodigious ſize, that ſix thouſand horſes, and one thouſand men, were ſtruck dead inſtantaneouſly.—But the moſt dreadful deſcription of this great ordinance of the heavens, is given us in Rev. xvi. 21. There fell upon men a great hail out of heaven, every ſtone about the weight of a talent.

are not trembling under the lightnings of mount Sinai, that we are not blaſted by the flames of divine vengeance; or doomed to dwell with everlaſting burnings.

YE frowning wintry clouds, oceans pendent in air, and burdening the winds: He, in whoſe hand you are an overflowing ſcourge; or, by whoſe appointment an arſenal * of warlike ſtores: He, who opens your ſluices, and a flood guſhes forth, to deſtroy the fruits of the earth, and drown the huſbandman's hopes; who moulds you into frozen balls, and you are thunderlinked with death †, on the troops of his enemies: HE, inſtead of diſcharging the furiouſneſs of wrath upon this guilty head, poured out his prayers, poured out his ſighs; poured out his very ſoul, for me and my fellow-tranſgreſſors:——that, by virtue of his ineſtimable propitiation, the overflowings of divine good-will might be extended to ſinful men; that ſkies might pour down righteouſneſs; and peace on her downy wings, peace with her balmy bleſſings, deſcend to dwell on earth.

YE vernal clouds! furls of finer air, folds of ſofter moiſture: He, who draws you, in copious exhalations, from the briny deep; bids you leave every diſtaſteful quality behind, and become floating fountains of ſweeteſt waters: He, who diſſolves you into gentle rain, and diſmiſſes you in fruitful ſhowers; who kindly commiſſions you to drop down fatneſs, as you fall, and to ſcatter flowers over the field:——HE, in the unutterable bitterneſs of his ſpirit, was without any comforting ſenſe of his almighty Father's preſence: He, when his bones were burnt up like a firebrand, had not one drop of that ſacred conſolation, which, on many of his afflicted ſervants, has been diſtilled as the evening-dews, and has "given ſongs in the night" of diſtreſs:—that, from this unallayed and inconſolable anguiſh of our all-gracious Maſter, we, as from a well of ſalvation, might derive large draughts of ſpiritual refreſhment.

THOU grand ethereal bow; whoſe beauties flouriſh the firmament, and charm every ſpectator: He, who paints thee on the fluid ſkirts of the ſky; who decks thee with all the pride of colours, and bends thee into that graceful and majeſtic figure; at whoſe command, thy vivid ſtreaks ſweetly riſe, or ſwiftly fade:——HE, through all his life, was arrayed in the humble garb of poverty; and, at his exit, wore the gorgeous garment of contempt: inſomuch that even his own familiar friends, aſhamed or afraid to own him, "hid as it "were their faces from him *."—to teach us a becoming disdain for the unsubstantial and transitory glitter of all worldly vanities: to introduce us, in robes brighter than the tinges of thy resplendent arch; even in the robes of his own immaculate righteousness, to introduce us, before that august and venerable throne, which the peaceful rainbow surrounds; surrounds, as a pledge of inviolable fidelity, and infinite mercy.

Ye storms and tempests, which vex the continent, and toss the seas; which dash navies on the rocks, and drive forests from their roots: He, whose breath rouses you into such resistless fury, and whose nod controls you in your wildest career: He, who holds the rapid and raging hurricane in streightened reins; and walks, dreadfully serene, on the very wings of the wind: HE went, all meek and gentle, like a lamb to the slaughter for us; and, as a sheep before her shearers is dumb, so he opened not his mouth.—Thus are we instructed to bear, with decent magnanimity, the various assaults of adversity; and to pass, with a becoming tranquillity of temper, through all the rude blasts of injurious treatment. Thus are we delivered from the unutterably fiercer storms of incensed and inexorable justice; from the "fire, the "brimstone, and the horrible tempest, which will be "the final portion of the ungodly."

Thou pestilence, that scatterest ten thousand poisons from thy baleful wings; tainting the air, and infecting the nations; under whose malignant influence, joy is blasted, and nature sickens; mighty regions are depopulated, and once crouded cities are left without inhabitants: He, who arms thee with inevitable destruction, and bids thee march before † his angry countenance, to spread desolation among the tents of the wicked, and be the forerunner of far more fearful indignation: HE, in his holy humanity, was arraigned as a criminal; and, though innocence itself, yea, the very pattern of perfection, was condemned to die, like the most execrable miscreant. As a nuisance to society, and the very bane of the public happiness, he was hurried away to execution, and hammered to the gibbet:——that, by his blood, he might prepare a sovereign medicine, to cure us of a more fatal distemper, than the pestilence which walketh in darkness, or the sickness which destroyeth at noon-day: that he might himself say to our last enemy, "O death, I will be thy plagues; O grave, "I will be thy destruction ‡."

HEAT, whose burning influence parches the Libyan wilds; tans into soot the Ethiopian's complexion; and makes every species of life pant, and droop, and languish: Cold, whose icy breath glazes yearly the Russian seas; often glues the frozen sailor to the cordage; and stiffens the traveller into a statue of rigid flesh:——HE, who sometimes blends you both, and produces the most agreeable temperature; sometimes suffers you to act separately, and rage with intolerable severity: that King of heaven, and controller of universal nature, when dwelling in a tabernacle of clay, was exposed to chilling damps, and smitten by sultry beams. The stars, in their midnight-watches, heard him pray; and the sun, in his meridian fervours, saw him toil.——Hence are our frozen hearts dissolved into a mingled flow of wonder, love, and joy; being conscious of a deliverance from those insufferable flames, which, kindled by divine indignation, burn to the lowest hell.

* Is. liii. 3. נמסתר ממנו כמסי Fuit tanquam aliquis, a quo quisque faciem occultaret. He was as some flagitious and abandoned wretch, from whom every one, disdaining such a character, and disclaiming such an acquaintance, studiously hid his face.

† Before him went the pestilence, Heb. iii. 5.

‡ Hos. xiii. 14.

Thou ocean, vast world of waters! He, who sunk that capacious bed for thy reception, and poured the liquid element into unfathomable channels; before whom, all thy foaming billows, and floating mountains, are as the small drop of a bucket: who, by the least intimation of his will, swells thy fluid kingdoms, in wild confusion, to mingle with the clouds; or reduces them in calm composure, to slumber on the shores: He, who once gave thee a warrant to overwhelm the whole earth, and bury all its degenerate inhabitants in a watery grave; but has now laid an everlasting embargo on thy boisterous waves; and bound thee, all fierce and madding as thou art, in chains stronger than adamant, yet formed of despicable sand;—all the waves of vengeance and wrath, of tribulation and anguish, passed over HIS crucified body, and HIS agonizing soul: that we might emerge from those depths of misery, from that abyss of guilt, into which we were plunged by Adam's fall, and more irretrievably sunk by our own transgressions: that, at the last, we might be restored to that happy world, which is represented, in the vision of God, as having "no sea *;" to denote its perpetual stability, and undisturbed serenity.

Ye mountains, that overlook the clouds and project a shade into distant provinces; everlasting pyramids of nature, not to be shaken by conflicting elements; not to be shattered by the bolts of thunder; nor impaired even by the ravages of time:—He, who bid your ridges rise so high, and your foundations stand so fast: He, in whose scale you are lighter than dust; in whose eye you are less than nothing:—HE sunk beneath a load of woes; woes insupportable, but not his own; when he took our iniquities upon himself, and heaved the more than mountainous burden from a guilty world.

Ye verdant woods, that crown our hills, and are crowned yourselves with leafy honours: Ye humble shrubs, adorned, in spring, with opening blossoms; and fanned, in summer, by gentle gales: Ye, that in distant climes, or in cultivated gardens, breathe out spicy odours, and embalm the air with delightful perfumes:—your all-glorious and ever-blessed Creator's head was encircled with the thorny wreath; his face was defiled with contumelious spitting; and his body bathed in a bloody sweat: that we might wear the crown, the crown of glory, which fadeth not away; and live for evermore, surrounded with delights, as much surpassing yours, as yours exceed the rugged desolations of winter.

Thou mantling vine; He who hangs on thy slender shoots, the rich, transparent, weighty cluster; who, under thy unornamented foliage, and amidst the pores of thy otherwise worthless bough, prepares the liquor,—the refined and exalted liquor, which chears the nations, and fills the cup of joy: trees, whose branches are elevated and waving in air; or diffused in easy confinement, along a sunny wall: He, who bends you with a lovely burden of delicious fruits; whose genial warmth beautifies their rind, and mellows their taste:—HE, when voluntarily subject to our wants, instead of being refreshed with your generous juices, or regaled with your luscious pulp, had a loathsome potion of vinegar, mingled with gall, addressed to his lips:—that we might sit under the shadow of his merits, with great tranquillity and the utmost complacency: that, ere long, being admitted into the paradise of God, we might eat of the Tree of Life †, and drink new wine with him in his Father's kingdom.

Ye luxuriant meadows; He who, without the feedman's industry, replenishes your irriguous lap with never-failing crops of herbage; and enamels their chearful green with flowers of every hue:—Ye fertile fields; He, who bleſſes the labours of the huſbandman; enriches your well-tilled plains with waving harveſts, and calls forth the ſtaff of life from your furrows: He, who cauſes both meadows and fields to laugh and ſing, for the abundance of plenty:—HE was no ſtranger to corroding hunger, and parching thirſt; he, alas! ate the bitter bread of woe, and had "plenteouſneſs of tears to drink:"—that we might partake of richer dainties, than thoſe which are produced by the dew of heaven, and proceed from the fatneſs of the earth: that we might feed on "the hidden manna," and eat the bread which giveth life, eternal life, unto the world.

* Rev. xxi. 1. † Rev. ii. 7.

Ye mines, rich in yellow ore, or bright with veins of ſilver; that diſtribute your ſhining treaſures, as far as winds can waft the veſſel of commerce; that beſtow your alms on monarchs, and have princes for your penſioners:——Ye beds of gems, toy-ſhops of nature! which form, in dark retirement, the glittering ſtone: diamonds, that ſparkle with a brilliant water; rubies, that glow with a crimſon flame: emeralds, dipped in the freſheſt verdure of ſpring; ſapphires, decked with the faireſt drapery of the ſky: topaz, emblazed with a golden gleam; amethyſt, impurpled with the bluſhes of the morning:—He, who tinctures the metallic duſt, and conſolidates the lucid drop; HE, when ſojourning on earth, had no riches, but the riches of diſintereſted benevolence; had no ornament, but the ornament of unſpotted purity. Poor he was in his circumſtances, and mean in all his accommodations; that WE might be rich in grace, "and obtain ſalvation with eternal glory:" that we might inhabit the new Jeruſalem; that ſplendid city! whoſe ſtreets are paved with gold; whoſe gates are formed of pearl; and the walls garniſhed with all manner of precious ſtones *.

Ye guſhing fountains, that trickle potable ſilver through the matted graſs: ye fine tranſparent ſtreams, that glide, in cryſtal waves, along your fringed banks: ye deep and ſtately rivers, that wind and wander in your courſe, to ſpread your favours wider; that gladden kingdoms in your progreſs, and augment the ſea with your tribute:——He, who ſupplies all your currents from his own ever-flowing and inexhauſtible liberality: HE, when his nerves were racked with exquiſite pain, and his blood inflamed by a raging fever, cried, I THIRST; and was denied (unparalleled hardſhip!) in this his great extremity, was denied the poor refreſhment of a ſingle drop of water:—that we, having all ſufficiency in all things, might abound to every good work; might be filled with the fulneſs of ſpiritual bleſſings here, and hereafter be ſatisfied with that fulneſs of joy, which is at GOD's right hand for evermore.

Ye birds, chearful tenants of the bough, gaily dreſſed in gloſſy plumage; who wake the morn, and ſolace the groves, with your artleſs lays: inimitable architects! who, without rule or line, build your penſile ſtructures, with all the nicety of proportion: you have each his commodious neſt, roofed with ſhades, and lined with warmth, to protect and cheriſh the callow brood.—But He, who tuned your throats to harmony, and taught you that curious ſkill; HE was a man of ſorrows, and had not where to lay his head; had not where to lay his head, till he felt the pangs of diſſolution, and was laid in the ſilent grave;—that we, dwelling under the wings of Omnipotence, and reſting in the boſom of infinite love, might ſpend an harmonious eternity, in "ſinging the ſong of Moſes and of the "LAMB."

BEES, induſtrious workmen! that ſweep, with buſy wing, the flowery garden; and ſearch the blooming heath; and ſip the melliſluous dews! ſtrangers to idleneſs! that ply, with inceſſant aſſiduity, your pleaſing taſk; and ſuffer no opening bloſſom to paſs unexplored, no ſunny gleam to ſlip away unimproved: moſt ingenious artificers! that cling to the fragrant buds; drain them of their treaſured ſweets; and extract (if I may ſo ſpeak) even the odoriferous ſouls of herbs, and plants, and flowers:—you, when you have completed your work; have collected, refined, and ſecurely lodged the ambroſial ſtores; when you might reaſonably expect the peaceful fruition of your acquiſitions; you, alas! are barbarouſly deſtroyed, and leave your hoarded delicacies to others; leave them to be enjoyed by your very murderers. I cannot but pity your hard deſtiny!—How then ſhould my bowels melt with ſympathy, and my eyes flow with tears *, when I remember, that thus, thus it fared with your and our incarnate Maker! After a life of the moſt exemplary and exalted piety; a life filled with offices of beneficence, and labours of love; HE was by wicked hands, crucified and ſlain. He left the honey of his toil, the balm of his blood, and the riches of his obedience, to be ſhared among others; to be ſhared even among thoſe, who too often crucify him afreſh, and put him to open ſhame.

SHALL I mention the animal, which ſpins her ſoft, her ſhining, exquiſitely fine ſilken thread †? whoſe matchleſs manufactures lend an ornament to grandeur, and make royalty itſelf more magnificent.——Shall I take notice of the cell, in which, when the gaiety and buſineſs of life are over, the little recluſe immures herſelf, and ſpends the remainder of her days in retirement?—Shall I rather obſerve the ſepulchre, which, when cloyed with pleaſure and weary of the world, ſhe prepares for her own interment? Or how, when a ſtated period is elapſed, ſhe wakes from a death-like inactivity; breaks the incloſure of her tomb; throws off the duſky ſhroud; aſſumes a new form; puts on a more ſumptuous array; and, from an inſect creeping on the ground, becomes a winged inhabitant of the air?—No: this is a poor reptile; and therefore unworthy to ſerve as an illuſtration, when any character of the Son of GOD comes under conſideration. But let me correct myſelf. Was not CHRIST (to uſe the language of his own bleſſed Spirit) a worm, and no man ‡? in appearance ſuch, and treated as ſuch. Did he not alſo bequeath the fine linen of his own moſt perfect righteouſneſs, to compoſe the marriage-garment §, for our diſarrayed and defiled

* Canſt thou, ungrateful man, his torments ſee,
Nor drop a tear for HIM, who pour'd his blood for thee?
PITTS's Poems.

† No one, I hope, will be offended at my introducing, on ſuch an occaſion, creatures of ſo low a rank. Since even the volumes of inſpiration ſeem to lend me the ſanction of their ſacred authority; as they diſdain not to compare the bleſſed JESUS to a door, a highway, &c. And, perhaps, all compariſons which reſpect a Being of infinite dignity, are not only mean, but equally mean and unworthy.

I am ſenſible, likewiſe, that in this paragraph, and ſome others, all the circumſtances are not completely correſpondent. But if, in ſome grand particulars, the reddition anſwers to the deſcription; this, I truſt, will be ſufficient for my purpoſe, and ſatisfactory to my readers.—Perhaps, it would be no miſtaken caution, to apply the ſame obſervation to many of the beautiful ſimilitudes, parables, and allegories, uſed by our LORD; ſuch as the brazen ſerpent, the unjuſt ſteward, the thief in the night, &c. which, if ſcrupulouſly ſifted, or rigorouſly ſtrained, for an entire coincidence in every circumſtance, muſt appear to great diſadvantage, and lead into palpable inconveniences.

‡ Pſal. xxii. 6.

§ This, and ſeveral other hints, interſperſed in the Meditations refer to the active and paſſive righteouſneſs of CHRIST, imputed to believers, for their juſtification: which, in the opinion of many great expoſitors, is the myſtical and the moſt ſublime meaning of the wedding-garment, ſo emphatically and forcibly souls? Did he not, before his flesh saw corruption, emerge triumphant from the grave; and not only mount the lower firmament, but ascend the heaven of heavens; taking possession of those sublime abodes, in our name, and as our forerunner.

* Rev. xxi. 19. 21.

YE cattle, that rest in your inclosed pastures; ye beasts, that range the unlimited forest; ye fish, that rove through trackless paths of the sea: sheep, clad in garments, which, when left by you, are wore by kings: kine, who feed on verdure, which, transmuted in your bodies, and strained from your udders, furnishes a repast for queens: lions, roaring after your prey; leviathan, taking your pastime in the great deep; with all that wing the firmament, or tread the soil, or swim the wave: —He, who spreads his ever-hospitable board; who admits you all to be his continual guests; and suffers you to want no manner of thing that is good:—HE was destitute, afflicted, tormented: He endured all that was miserable and reproachful; in order to exalt a degenerate race, who had debased themselves to a level with the beasts that perish, unto seats of distinguished and immortal honour; in order to introduce the slaves of sin, and heirs of hell, into mansions of consummate and everlasting bliss.

SURELY, the contemplation of such a subject, and the distant anticipation of such a hope, may almost turn earth into heaven, and make even inanimate nature vocal with praise. Let it then break forth from every creature. Let the meanest feel the inspiring impulse; let the greatest acknowledge themselves unable, worthily to express the stupendous goodness.

Praise HIM, ye insects that crawl on the ground; who, though high above all height, humbled himself to dwell in dust. Birds of the air, waft on your wings, and warble in your notes, HIS praise; who, though LORD of the celestial abodes; while sojourning on earth, wanted a shelter commodious as your nests.—Ye rougher world of brutes, join with the gentle songsters of the shade, and howl to HIM your hoarse applause; who breaks the jaw-bones of the infernal lion; who softens into mildness the savage disposition; and bids the wolf lie down, in amicable agreement, with the lamb. Bleat out, ye hills; let broader lows be responsive from the vales; ye forests catch, and ye rocks retain, the inarticulate hymn; because MESSIAH the Prince feeds his flock, like a shepherd. He gathers the lambs with his arm; he carries them in his bosom; and gently leads those that are with young *.——Wave, ye stately cedars, in sign of worship, wave your branching heads to HIM, who meekly bowed his own, on the accursed tree. Pleasing prospects, scenes of beauty, where nicest art conspires with lavish nature, to form a paradise below; lay forth all your charms, and in all your charms confess yourselves a mere blank, compared with his amiableness, who is "faireſt among ten thousand, and altogether "lovely."——Drop down, ye showers; and testify, as you fall; testify of HIS grace, which descends more copiously than the rain, distils more sweetly than the dew. Let sighing gales breathe, and murmuring rivulets flow; breathe and flow in harmonious consonance to HIM; whose Spirit is far more reviving than the cooling breeze; who is himself the fountain of living waters.

YE lightnings, blaze to HIS honour; ye thunders, sound HIS praise; while reverberating clouds return the roar, and bellowing oceans propagate the tremendous anthem.——Meanest of creatures, add your silent oratory, and display the triumphs of HIS meekness; who, though he maketh the clouds his chariot, and treadeth upon the waves of the sea; though the thunder is his voice, and the lightning his sword of justice; yet, amidst the most abusive and cruel injuries, was submissive and lifted not his hand, was "dumb and "opened not his mouth."——Great source of day, address thy radiant homage to a far sublimer sun. Write, in all thy ample round, with every lucid beam, O! write a testimony to HIM, who is the brightness of his Father's glory; who is the Sun of righteousness to a sinful world; and is risen, never to go down; is risen, to be our everlasting light.—Shine clear, ye skies; look gay, thou earth; let the floods clap their hands, and let every creature wear a smile: for he cometh, the CREATOR himself cometh, to be manifested in the flesh; and with him comes pardon, peace, and joy; every virtue and all felicity comes in his train.—Angels and archangels, let your songs be of JESUS, and teach the very heavens to echo with his adored and majestic name. Ye beheld him, with greater transports of admiration, when you attended his agony in the garden, and saw him prostrate on the ground, than when you beheld universal nature rising at his call, and saw the wonders of his creating might. Tune to loftiest notes your golden harps, and waken raptures unknown before even in heavenly breasts: while all that has breath swells the concert of harmony; and all that has being unites in the tribute of praise.

Chiefly, let man exalt his voice; let man, with distinguished hosannas, hail the REDEEMER. For man, he was stretched on the racking cross; for man, forcibly recommended by the Teacher sent from GOD, Matth. xxii. 11. A doctrine, which some of those who honour my Meditations with a perusal, probably may not receive with much, if any, approbation. I hope, the whole performance will not be cashiered, for one difference in sentiment. And I beg, that the sentiment itself may not hastily be rejected, without a serious hearing. For I have the pleasure of being intimately acquainted with a gentleman of good learning, and distinguished sense, who had once as strong prepossessions against this tenet, as can well be imagined. Yet now he not only admits it, as a truth; but embraces it, as the joy of his heart; and cleaves to it, as the rock of his hopes.

* Is. xl. 11.

he

A clear and cogent treatise, entitled, Submission to the righteousness of GOD; was the instrument of removing his prejudices, and reducing him to a better judgment.——In which he has been happily confirmed, by the authority of the most illustrious names, and the works of the most eminent pens, that have ever adorned our church and nation.——In this number are, Bishop Jewel, one of our great reformers; and the other venerable compilers of our homilies;—Archbishop Usher, that oracle of universal learning;—Bishop Hall, the devout and sprightly orator of his age;—the copious and fervent Bishop Hopkins;—the singularly good and unaffected Bishop Beveridge;—that everlasting honour of the bench of judicature, Lord Chief Justice Hales;—the nervous, florid, and persuasive Dean Stanhope;—the practical and perspicuous Mr Burkitt;—and, to summon no other evidence, that matchless genius Milton; who, in various parts of his divine poem, inculcates this comfortable truth; and, in one passage, represents it under the very same image, which is made use of above, book X. l. 222.

I had almost forgot to mention, that the treatise entitled, Submission, &c. was written by Mr Benjamin Jenks;—whose book of devotions has deservedly passed through eleven editions; is truly admirable for the sublimity, spirituality, and propriety of the sentiments; as well as for the concise form, and pathetic turn of the expression:—Whose book of meditations, though no less worthy of general acceptance, has for a considerable time, been almost unknown and extinct. But it is now revived, and is lately published, in two octavo volumes, by Mr James Rivington. For which service he has my thanks; I flatter myself, he will have the thanks of the public: as I am persuaded, could religion and virtue speak, he would have their acknowledgments also. Since few treatises are more happily calculated, to represent religion in its native beauty, and to promote the interests of genuine virtue.—On which account, I trust, the candid will excuse me, and the judicious will not condemn me, even though the recommendation of those devotions and of these meditations may appear to be a digression from my subject.

N. B. Should the reader be inclined to examine the aforementioned tenet, he will find it stated, discussed, and applied to its due improvement, in a piece entitled THERON and ASPASIO, which follows immediately after the Meditations.

he was conſigned to the gloomy ſepulchre; for man, he procured grace unmeaſurable, and bliſs inconceivable.——However different, therefore, in your age, or more different in your circumſtances, be unanimous, O men, in magnifying a Saviour, who is no reſpecter of perſons, who gave himſelf a ranſom for all.——Bend, ye kings, from your thrones of ivory and gold; in your robes of imperial purple, fall proſtrate at HIS feet; who forſook a nobler throne, and laid aſide more illuſtrious enſigns of majeſty, that you might reign with GOD for ever and ever.——Children of poverty, meaneſt of mortals, (if any can be called poor, who are thus enriched; if any can be accounted mean, who are thus ennobled), rejoice, greatly rejoice, in GOD your Saviour; who choſe to be indigent, was willing to be contemned, that you might be entitled to the treaſures, and be numbered with the princes in heaven.——Sons of affliction, though harraſſed with pain, and inured to anguiſh, O change your groans into ſongs of gratitude. Let no complaining voice, no jarring ſtring be heard in the univerſal ſymphony; but glorify the LAMB even in the fires *; who himſelf bore greater torment, than you feel; and has promiſed you a ſhare in the joy which he inherits; who has made your ſufferings ſhort, and will make your reſt eternal.——Men of hoary locks, bending beneath a weight of years, and tottering on the brink of the grave, let CHRIST be your ſupport under all infirmities, lean upon CHRIST, as the rock of your ſalvation. Let his name, his precious name, form the laſt accents, which quiver on your pale expiring lips.——And let this be the firſt, that liſps on your tongues, ye tender infants. Remember your REDEEMER, in your earlieſt moments. Devote the choice of your hours to the learning of his will, and the chief of your ſtrength to the glorifying of HIS name; who, in the perfection of health, and the very prime of manhood, was content to become a motionleſs and ghaſtly corpſe, that you might be girt with the vigour, and clothed with the bloom, of eternal youth.

——Spirits of juſt men made perfect, who are releaſed from the burden of the fleſh; and freed from all the vexatious ſolicitations of corruption in yourſelves; delivered from all the injurious effects of iniquity in others; who ſojourn no longer in the tents of ſtrife, or the territories of diſorder; but are received into that pure, harmonious, holy ſociety, where every one acts up to his amiable and exalted character; where GOD himſelf is pleaſed graciouſly and immediately to preſide.——You find, not without pleaſing aſtoniſhment, your hopes improved into actual enjoyment, and your faith ſuperſeded by the beatific viſion. You feel all your former ſtyneſs of behaviour, happily loſt in the overflowings of unbounded love; and all your little differences of opinion entirely bore down by tides of invariable truth. Bleſs, therefore, with all your enlarged powers, bleſs his infinitely larger goodneſs; who, when he had overcome the ſharpneſs of death, opened the gates of paraduſe, opened the kingdom of heaven, to all generations, and to every denomination of the faithful.

——Men of holy converſation, and humble tempers, think of HIM, who loved you, and waſhed you from your ſins in his own blood. Think of him, on your ſilent couch; talk of him, in every ſocial interview. Glory in his excellencies; make your boaſt of his obedience; and add, ſtill continue to add, the incenſe of a dutiful life, to all the oblations of a grateful tongue.—Weakeſt of believers, who go mourning under a ſenſe of guilt, and conflicting with the ceaſeleſs aſſaults of temptation; put off your ſackcloth, and be girded with gladneſs. Becauſe JESUS is as merciful to hear, as he is mighty to help. Becauſe he is touched with the tendereſt ſympathizing concern, for all your diſtreſſes; and he lives, ever lives, to be your Advocate with the FATHER. Why then ſhould uneaſy doubts ſadden your countenances? why ſhould deſponding fears oppreſs your ſouls? Turn, turn thoſe diſconſolate ſighs into chearful hymns; ſince you have his powerful interceſſion, and his ineſtimable merits, to be your anchor in all tribulations, to be your paſſport into eternal bleſſedneſs.

MOST of all, ye miniſters of the ſanctuary, heralds commiſſioned from above; lift, every one, his voice like a trumpet, and loudly proclaim the REDEEMER. Get ye up, ye ambaſſadors of peace, get ye up into the high mountains; and ſpread far and wide the honours of the LAMB, "that was ſlain, but is alive "for evermore." Teach every ſacred roof, to reſound with his fame; and every human heart, to glow with his love. Declare, as far as the force of words will go, declare the inexhauſtible fulneſs of that great atonement, whoſe merits are commenſurate with the glories of the DIVINITY *. Tell the ſinful wretch, what pity yearns in IMMANUEL's bowels; what blood he has ſpilt, what agonies he has endured, what wonders he has wrought, for the ſalvation of his enemies. Invite the indigent, to become rich; entreat the guilty, to accept of pardon; becauſe with the crucified JESUS is plenteous redemption, and all-ſufficiency to ſave.——While you, placed in conſpicuous ſtations, pour the joyful ſound; may I, as I ſteal through the vale of humble life, catch the pleaſing accents! For me the Author of all bleſſings became a curſe; for me, his bones were diſlocated, and his fleſh was torn; he hung with ſtreaming veins, and an agonizing ſoul, on the croſs, for me. O may I, in my little ſphere, and amidſt the ſcanty circle of my acquaintance, at leaſt whiſper theſe glad tranſporting tidings; whiſper them from my own heart, that they may ſurely reach, and ſweetly penetrate theirs.

But, when men and angels raiſe the grand hymn; when all worlds, and all beings, add their collective acclamations; this full, fervent, and univerſal chorus will be ſo inferior to the riches of the REDEEMER's grace; ſo diſproportionate to the magnificence of his glory, that it will ſeem but to debaſe the unutterable ſubject it attempts to exalt. The loud Hallelujah will die away, in the ſolemn mental eloquence of proſtrate, rapturous ſilent adoration.

O goodneſs infinite! goodneſs immenſe!
And love that paſſeth knowledge!——Words are vain;
Language is loſt in wonders ſo divine.
"Come then, expreſſive Silence, muſe his praiſe."

* If in this place and others I have ſpoken magnificently of the blood of CHRIST, and its inſuperable efficacy to expiate guilt; I think, it is no more than is expreſſed in a very celebrated hymn, written by one of the greateſt wits, who had alſo been one of the greateſt libertines, and afterwards commenced one of the moſt remarkable penitents in France: A hymn, which even Mr Boyle confeſſes to be a very fine one; which another great critic calls an admirable one; and which a genius ſuperior to them both recommends as a noble one. (See Spect. vol. VII. No. 513.)

'The author, having acknowledged his crimes to be beyond meaſure heinous, and almoſt beyond forgiveneſs provoking; ſo provoking, as to render tears from ſuch eyes offenſive, and prayers from ſuch lips abominable;—compoſes himſelf to ſubmit, without the leaſt repining ſentiment; to ſubmit, even with praiſe and adoration, to the moſt dreadful doom. Accordingly, he ſtands in unfeigned expectation of being inſtantly ſtruck by the bolts of vengeance: but—with a turn of thought equally ſurpriſing and frightful; with a faith properly founded, and happily firm; he adds,

Yet where! O where! can ev'n thy thunders fall?
CHRIST's blood o'erſpreads and ſhields me from them all.

* If. xxiv. 15.

THE END OF THE FIRST PART.

PART II.

To PAUL ORCHARD, of Stoke-Abbey, in Devonshire, Esq.

Dear SIR,

AS your honoured father was pleased to make choice of me to answer in your name at the font, and to exercise a sort of guardianship over your spiritual interests; permit me, by putting these little treatises into your hand, to fulfil some part of that solemn obligation.

GRATITUDE for many signal favours, and a conscientious regard to my sacred engagement, have long ago inspired my breast with the warmest wishes, both for your true dignity, and real happiness. Nor can I think of a more endearing, or a more effectual way, of advancing either the one or the other, than to set before you a sketch of your excellent father's character.—Illustrious examples are the most winning incitements to virtue. And none can come attended with such particular recommendations to YOU, Sir, as the pattern of that worthy person, from whom you derive your very being.

A MOST cordial and reverential esteem for the divine word, was one of his remarkable qualities. Those oracles of heaven were his principal delight, and his inseparable companions. Your gardens, your solitary walks, and the hedges of your fields, can witness *, with what an unwearied assiduity he exercised himself in the law of the LORD. From hence he fetched his maxims of wisdom, and formed his judgment of things. The sacred precepts were the model of his temper, and the guide of his life; while the precious promises were the joy of his heart, and his portion for ever.

IMPROVING company was another of his most relishing pleasures. Few gentlemen were better furnished, either with richness of fancy, or copiousness of expression, to bear a shining part in conversation. With these talents, he always endeavoured to give some useful, generally some religious, turn to the discourse. Nor did he ever reflect, with greater complacency, on his social hours, than when he tended to glorify the eternal Majesty; and to awaken, in himself and others, a more lively spirit of devotion.

To project for the good of others, was his frequent study; and to carry those benevolent contrivances into execution, his favourite employ. When visited by the young persons of the neighbourhood, far from taking an ungraceful pride to initiate them in debauchery, or confirm them in a riotous habit; it was his incessant aim, by finely adapted persuasives, to encourage them in industry, and establish them in a course of sobriety; to guard them against the allurements of vice, and animate them with the principles of piety. A noble kind of hospitality this! which will probably transmit its beneficial influence to their earthly possessions, to their future families, and even to their everlasting state.

A CONVICTION of human indigence, and a thorough persuasion of the divine all-sufficiency, induced him to be frequent in prayer. To prostrate himself, in profound adoration, before that infinitely exalted Being, who dwells in light inaccessible, was his glory; to implore the continuance of the almighty favour, and the increase of all Christian graces was his gain. In those moments, no doubt, he remembered YOU, Sir, with a particular earnestness; and lodged many an ardent petition in the court of heaven, for his infant-son. Cease not to second them with your own devout supplications, that they may descend upon your head "in the fulness of the "blessings of the gospel of peace."

To give their genuine lustre to all his other endowments, he was careful to maintain an humble mind. Though his friends might admire his superior abilities, or his acquaintance applaud his exemplary behaviour, he saw how far he fell short of the mark of his high calling; saw, and lamented his defects; saw, and renounced himself; relying, for final acceptance, and endless felicity, on a better righteousness than his own; even on the transcendently perfect righteousness, and inconceivably precious death, of JESUS the Redeemer. This was the rock of his hope, and the very crown of his rejoicing.

THESE, Sir, are some of the distinguishing characteristics of your deceased parent. As you had the misfortune to lose so valuable a relative, before you was capable of forming any acquaintance with his person; I flatter myself, you will the more attentively observe his picture: this his moral picture; designed, not to be set in gold, or sparkle in enamel, but to breathe in your spirit, and to live in all your conduct.—Which, though it be entirely your own, calculated purely for yourself, may possibly (like the family-pieces in your parlour) that glance an eye upon as many as enter the room, make pleasing and useful impression on every beholder.—May every one, charmed with the beautiful image, catch its resemblance; and each, in his respective sphere, "go and do likewise."

BUT you, Sir, are peculiarly concerned to copy the amiable original. As the order of an indulgent Providence has made you heir of the affluent circumstances, let not a gay and thoughtless inadvertence cut you off from the richer inheritance of these noble qualifications.—These will be your security, amidst all the glittering dangers which are inseparable from blooming years, and an elevated situation in life. These are your path, your sure and only path, to true greatness, and solid happiness.—Tread in these steps, and you cannot fail to be the darling of your friends, and the favourite of heaven. Tread in these steps, and you will give inexpressible joy to one of the best of mothers; you will become an extensive blessing to your fellow-creatures; and which, after such most engaging motives, is scarce worthy to be mentioned, you will be the delight, the honour, and the boast of,

Dear SIR,

Your very affectionate godfather,

And most faithful humble servant,

JAMES HERVEY.

Weston-Favell near Northampton,
July 14, 1747.

* Josh. xxiv. 27.

PREFACE.

WE have already exercised our speculations on the tombs and flowers; surveying nature, covered with the deepest horrors, and arrayed in the richest beauties. Allegory taught many of the objects to speak the language of virtue, while Imagination lent her colouring to give the lessons an engaging air.—And this, with a view of imitating that divine Instructor; who commissioned the lily *, in her silver suit, to remonstrate in the ear of unbelieving reason; who sent his disciples (men ordained to teach the universe) to learn maxims of the last importance, from the most insignificant birds *, that wander through the paths of the air; from the very meanest herbs *, that are scattered over the face of the † ground.

Emboldened by the kind acceptance of the preceding sketches, I beg leave to confide in the same benevolence of taste, for the protection and support of the two remaining essays; which exhibit a prospect of still life, and grand operation; which moralize on the most composed and most magnificent appearances of things.—In which, Fancy is again suffered to introduce her imagery, but only as the handmaid of Truth, in order to dress her person, and display her charms; to engage the attention, and win the love, even of the gay, and of the fashionable. Which is more likely to be effected, by forming agreeable pictures of nature, and deriving instructive observations, than by the laborious method of long-deduced arguments, or close connected reasonings.—The contemplation of the heavens and the earth, of their admirable properties and beneficial changes, has always afforded the most exalted gratification to the human mind. In compliance with this prevailing taste, I have drawn my serious admonitions from the stupendous theatre, and variegated scenery, of the universe: that the reader may learn his duty, from his very pleasures;—may gather wisdom, mingled with virtue, from the most refined entertainments, and noblest delights.

The Evening, drawing her sables over the world, and gently darkening into Night, is a season peculiarly proper for sedate consideration. All circumstances concur to hush our passions, and soothe our cares; to tempt our steps abroad, and prompt our thoughts to serious reflection.

> ——Then is the time,
> For those whom wisdom, and whom nature charm,
> To steal themselves from the degen'rate croud,
> And soar above this little scene of things;
> To tread low-thoughted vice beneath their feet;
> To soothe the throbbing passions into peace;
> And woo lone quiet in her silent walks *.

The favour I would solicit for the first of the following compositions, is, That it may be permitted to attend, in such retired and contemplative excursions; to attend, if not under the character of a friend, at least, in the humble capacity of a servant, or a page:—as a servant, to open the door of meditation, and remove every impediment to those best exercises of the mind; which blend advantage with amusement, and improve while they delight:—as a page, to gather up the unstable fluctuating train of Fancy; and collect her fickle powers into a constant, regular, and useful habit of thinking.

The other, conversant among the starry regions, would lead the imagination through those beautiful tracts of unclouded azure; and point out to the judgment some of those astonishing particulars, which so eminently signalize the celestial worlds. A prospect this, to which curiosity attracts our eyes, and to which scripture itself often directs our study: A prospect beyond all others most excellently calculated to enlarge the soul, and ennoble its conceptions;—to give the grandest apprehensions of the everlasting GOD, and create sentiments of becoming superiority, with relation to all transitory interests;—in a word, to furnish faith with the surest foundation for a steady affiance, and true magnanimity of spirit; to afford piety the strongest motives both for a lively gratitude, and profound veneration.

While Galileo lifts his tube, and discovers the prodigious magnitude of those radiant orbs;—while Newton measures their amazing distances, and unites the whole system in harmonious order, by the subtile influences of attraction;—I would only, like the herald before that illustrious Hebrew †, proclaim at every turn, "Bow the "knee, and adore the almighty Maker; magnify his eter-"nal name, and make his praise, like all his works, to be "glorious."

* Matth. vi. 26. 28. 29. 30.

† Celebrated writers, as Demosthenes and Cicero, Thucydides and Livy, are observed to have a style peculiar to themselves.—Now, whoever considers the discourses of Christ, will find him distinguishing himself by a style, which may properly be called HIS OWN. Majestic, yet familiar; happily uniting dignity with condescension; it consists in teaching his followers the sublimest truths, by spiritualizing on the most common occurrences: which, besides its being level to the lowest apprehensions, and admirably adapted to steal into the most inattentive heart, is accompanied with this very singular advantage, that it turns even the sphere of business into a school of instruction; and renders the most ordinary objects a set of monitors, ever soliciting our regard, because ever present to our senses.—So that, I believe, it may be said of this suitable method in which our LORD conveyed, as well as that of powerful energy which attended his doctrines, that never man spake like this man.—The harvest approaching, he reminds his disciples of a far more important harvest, John iv. 35. Matth. xiii. 30. when immortal beings shall be reaped from the grave, and gathered in from all the quarters of the earth; when every human creature shall sustain the character of valuable wheat, or despicable tares; and accordingly be lodged in mansions of everlasting security, or consigned over to the rage of unquenchable fire.—In his charge to fishermen, when they are commencing preachers, Matth. iv. 19. he exhorts them, conformably to the nature of their late occupation, to use the same assiduity and address in winning souls, as they were wont to exercise in catching the finny prey.—For the farther illustration of this no less useful, than curious subject, I would refer my reader to a valuable note, in Sir Isaac Newton's observations on the prophecies, p. 148. 4to edition.

* THOMS. Autumn, l. 973. last edit.

† Gen. xli. 43.

CONTEMPLATIONS ON THE NIGHT.

Night is fair Virtue's immemorial friend:
The conscious Moon, through ev'ry distant age,
Has held a lamp to Wisdom.

Night-Thoughts, No. V.

THE business of the day dispatched, and the sultry heats abated, invited me to the recreation of a walk; a walk in one of the finest recesses of the country, and in one of the most pleasant evenings which the summer-season produced.

The limes and elms, uniting their branches over my head, formed a verdant canopy, and casta most refreshing shade. Under my feet lay a carpet of nature's deliest; grass intermingled with moss, and embroidered with flowers. Jessamines, in conjunction with woodbines, twined around the trees, displaying their artless beauties to the eye, and diffusing their delicious sweets through the air. On either side, the boughs, rounded into a set of regular arches, opened a view into the distant fields, and presented me with a prospect of the bending skies. The little birds, all joyous and grateful for the favours of the light, were paying their acknowledgments in a tribute of harmony, and soothing themselves to rest with songs. While a French-horn, from a neighbouring seat, sent its melodious accents, softened by the length of their passage, to complete the concert of the grove!

Roving in this agreeable manner, my thoughts were exercised on a subject still more agreeable than the season, or the scene. I mean, our late signal victory over the united forces of intestine treason, and foreign invasion: a victory, which pours joy through the present age, and will transmit its influence to generations yet unborn.—Are not all the blessings, which can endear society, or render life itself desirable, centred in our present happy constitution, and auspicious government? Were they not all struck at, by that impious and horrid blow, meditated at Rome, levelled by France, and seconded by factious spirits at home? Who then can be sufficiently thankful for the gracious interposition of Providence, which has not only averted the impending ruin, but turned it, with aggravated confusion, on the authors of our troubles?

Methinks, every thing valuable which I possess, every thing charming which I behold, conspire to enhance this ever-memorable event. To this it is owing, that I can ramble unmolested along the vale of private life, and taste all the innocent satisfactions of a contemplative retirement.—Had Rebellion * succeeded in her detestable designs; instead of walking with security and complacence in these flowery paths, I might have met the assassin with his dagger; or have been obliged to abandon my habitation, and "embrace the rock for a shelter."—Farewell then, ye fragrant shades; seats of meditation, and calm repose! I should have been driven from your loved retreats, to make way for some barbarous, some insulting victor.—Farewell then, ye pleasing toils, and wholesome amusements of my rural hours! I should no more have reared the tender flower to the sun; no more have taught the espalier to expand her boughs; not have fetched, any longer, from my kitchen-garden, the purest supplies of health.

Had Rebellion succeeded in her detestable designs; instead of being regaled with the music of the woods, I might have been alarmed with the sound of the trumpet, and all the thunder of war. Instead of be-

* Referring to the rebellion, set on foot in the year 1745; which, for several months, made a very alarming progress in the north;—but was happily extinguished by the glorious and decisive victory at Culloden.

ing

ing entertained with this beautiful landſcape, I might have beheld our houſes ranſacked, and our villages plundered: I might have beheld our fenced cities encompaſſed with armies, and our fruitful fields "clothed with deſo-"lation;" or have been ſhocked with the more frightful images of "garments rolled in blood," and of a ruffian's blade reeking from a brother's heart. Inſtead of Peace, with her chearing olives, ſheltering our abodes; inſtead of Juſtice, with her impartial ſcale, ſecuring our goods; Perſecution had brandiſhed her ſword, and Slavery clanked her chains.

Nor are theſe miſeries imaginary only, or the creatures of a groundleſs panic. There are, in a neighbouring kingdom, who very lately experienced them in all their rigour *. And, if the malignant ſpirit of Popery had forced itſelf into our church; if an abjured pretender had cut his way to our throne; we could have no reaſon to expect a mitigation of their ſeverity, on our behalf.—But, ſuppoſing the tender mercies of a bigotted uſurper to have been ſomewhat leſs cruel; where, alas! would have been the encouragement to cultivate our little portion; or what pleaſure could ariſe from an improved ſpot; if both the one and the other lay, every moment, at the mercy of lawleſs power? This embittering circumſtance would ſpoil their reliſh; and by rendering them a precarious, would render them a joyleſs acquiſition.—In vain might the vine ſpread her purple cluſters; in vain be laviſh of her generous juices; if Tyranny, like a ravenous harpy, ſhould be always hovering over the bowl, and ready to ſnatch it from the lip of Induſtry, or to wreſt it from the hand of Liberty.

LIBERTY, that deareſt of names; and Property, that beſt of charters, give an additional, an inexpreſſible charm, to every delightful object.——See, how the declining ſun has beautified the weſtern clouds; has arrayed them in crimſon, and ſkirted them with gold. Such a refinement of our domeſtic bliſs is property; ſuch an improvement of our public privileges is liberty.——When the lamp of day ſhall withdraw his beams, there will ſtill remain the ſame collection of floating vapours; but O! how changed, how gloomy! The carnation-ſtreaks are faded; the golden edgings are worn away; and all the lovely tinges are loſt, in a leaden-coloured lowring ſadneſs. Such would be the aſpect of all theſe ſcenes of beauty, and all theſe abodes of pleaſure, if expoſed continually to the caprice of arbitrary ſway, or held in a ſtate of abject and cringing dependence.

The ſun has almoſt finiſhed his daily race, and haſtens to the goal. He deſcends lower and lower, till his chariot-wheels ſeem to hover on the utmoſt verge of the ſky. What is ſomewhat remarkable, the orb of light, upon the point of ſetting, grows conſiderably broader. The ſhadows of objects, juſt before they become blended in undiſtinguiſhable darkneſs, are exceedingly lengthened †.—Like bleſſings, little prized, while poſſeſſed; but highly eſteemed, the very inſtant they are preparing for their flight; bitterly regretted, when once they are gone, and to be ſeen no more.

The radiant globe is, now, half-immerſed beneath the duſky earth; or, as the ancient poets ſpeak, is ſhooting into the ocean, and ſinks in the weſtern ſea.——And could I view the ſun at this juncture, it would yield a moſt amuſing and curious ſpectacle. The rays, ſtriking horizontally on the liquid element, give it the appearance of floating glaſs; or, reflected in many a different direction, form a beautiful multiplicity of colours.——A ſtranger, as he walks along the ſandy beach, and, loſt in penſive attention, liſtens to the murmurings of the reſtleſs flood, is agreeably alarmed by the gay decoration of the ſurface. With entertainment, and with wonder, he ſees the curling waves, here glittering with white, there glowing with purple; in one place wearing an azure tincture; in another, glancing a caſt of undulating green; in the whole, exhibiting a piece of fluid ſcenery, that may vie with yonder penſile tapeſtries, though wrought in the loom, and tinged with the dyes of heaven.

While I am tranſported by fancy to the ſhores of the ocean, the great luminary is ſunk beneath the horizon, and totally diſappears. The whole face of the ground is overſpread with ſhades; or, with what one of the fineſt painters of nature calls, a dun obſcurity. Only a few very ſuperior eminences are tipt with ſtreaming ſilver. The tops of groves, and lofty towers, catch the laſt ſmiles of day *; are ſtill irradiated by the departing beams.—But, O! how tranſient is the diſtinction! how momentary the gift! Like all the bleſſings, which mortals enjoy below, it is gone, almoſt as ſoon as granted. See! how languiſhingly it trembles on the leafy ſpire; and glimmers, with a dying faintneſs, on the mountain's brow. The little vivacity that remains, decays every moment. It can no longer hold its ſtation. While I ſpeak, it expires; and reſigns the world to the gradual approaches of night.

——Now twilight gray
Has in her ſober livery all things clad †.

Every object, a little while ago, glared with light; but now all appears under a more qualified influx. The animals harmonize with the inſenſible creation; and what was gay in thoſe, as well as glittering in this, gives place to an univerſal gravity. In the meadows, all was jocund and ſportive; but now the gameſome lambs are grown weary of their frolics, and the tired ſhepherd has impoſed ſilence on his pipe. In the branches all was ſprightlineſs and ſong: but now the lively green is wrapt in the deſcending glooms; and no tuneful airs are heard, only the plaintive ſtock-dove, cooing mournfully through the grove.——Should I now be vain and trifling, the heavens and the earth would rebuke my unſeaſonable levity. Therefore, be theſe moments devoted to thoughts ſedate as the cloſing day, ſolemn as the face of things. And, indeed, however my ſocial hours are enlivened with innocent pleaſantry, let every evening, in her ſable habit, toll the bell to ſerious conſideration. Nothing can be more proper, for a perſon who walks on the borders of eternity, and is haſtening continually to his final audit; nothing more proper, than daily to ſlip away from the circle of amuſement, and frequently to relinquiſh the hurry of buſineſs, in order to conſider and adjuſt "the things that belong to "his peace."

SINCE the ſun is departed, from whence can it proceed, that I am not involved in pitchy darkneſs? Whence theſe remainders of diminiſhed brightneſs? which, though ſcarcely forming a refulgence, ſoften and ſoothe the horrors of night. I ſee not the ſhining ruler, yet am cheared with a real, though faint communication of his ſplendor.——Does he remember us, in his progreſs through other climes? Does he ſend a detachment of his rays to eſcort us during his perſonal abſence; or to cover (if I may uſe the military term) our retreat from the ſcene of action? Has he bequeathed us a dividend of his beams, ſufficient to render our circumſtances eaſy, and our ſituation agreeable, till ſleep pours its ſoft oppreſſion on the organs of ſenſe; till ſleep ſuſpends all the operations of our

* See a pamphlet, entitled, Popery always the ſame;—which contains a narrative of the perſecutions, and ſevere hardſhips lately ſuffered by the Proteſtants in the ſouthern parts of France; and cloſes with a moſt ſeaſonable, alarming, and ſpirited addreſs to the inhabitants of Great-Britain. Printed 1746.

† Majoreſque cadunt altis de montibus umbræ. VIRG.

* See this remarkable appearance delicately deſcribed, and wrought into a compariſon, which, in my opinion, is one of the moſt juſt, beautiful, and noble pieces of imagery, to be found in modern poetry; Night-Thoughts, No II. p. 42. 4to edit.

† MILT. Par. Loſt, b. IV. l. 598.

hands,

hands, and entirely supersedes any farther occasion for the light.

No: it is ill-judged and unreasonable, to ascribe this beneficent conduct to the sun. Not unto him, not into him, but unto his almighty Maker, we are obliged, for this pleasing attendant, this valuable legacy. The gracious Author of our being has so disposed the collection of the circumambient air, as to make it productive of this fine and wonderful effect. The sun-beams, falling on the higher parts of the aerial fluid, instead of passing on in strait lines, are bent inward, and conducted to our sight. Their natural course is over-ruled, and they are bidden to wheel about, on purpose to favour us with a welcome and salutary visit.—By which mean, the blessing of light, and the season of business, are considerably prolonged; and, what is a very endearing circumstance, prolonged most considerably, when the vehement heats of summer incline the student to postpone his walk, till the temperate evening prevails; when the important labours of the harvest call the husbandman abroad, before the day is fully risen.

AFTER all the ardors of the sultry day, how reviving is this coolness!—This gives new verdure to the fading plants, new vivacity to the withering flowers, and a more exquisite fragrance to their mingled scents.—By this the air also receives a new force, and is qualified to exert itself with greater activity; qualified to brace our limbs; to heave our lungs; and co-operate, with a brisker impulse, in perpetuating the circulation of our blood.—This I might call the grand alembic of nature; which distils her most sovereign cordial, the refreshing dews. Incessant heat would rob us of their beneficial agency; and oblige them to evaporate, in imperceptible exhalations. Turbulent winds, or even the gentler motions of Aurora's fan, would dissipate the rising vapours, and not suffer them to form a coalition. But, favoured by the stillness, and condensed by the coolness of the night, they unite in pearly drops, and create that finely-tempered humidity, which chears the vegetable world, as sleep exhilarates the animal.

Not unlike to these are the advantages of solitude. The world is a troubled ocean; and who can erect stable purposes on its fluctuating waves? The world is a school of wrong; and who does not feel himself warping to its pernicious influences *? On this sea of glass †, how insensibly we slide from our own stedfastness! Some sacred truth, which was struck in lively characters on our souls, is obscured, if not obliterated. Some worthy resolution, which heaven had wrought in our breasts, is shaken, if not overthrown. Some enticing vanity, which we had solemnly renounced, again practises its wiles, and again captivates our affections. How often has an unwary glance kindled a fever of irregular desire in our hearts? How often has a word of applause dropt luscious poison into our ears; or some disrespectful expression raised a gust of passion in our bosoms? Our innocence is of so tender a constitution, that it suffers in the promiscuous croud. Our purity is of so delicate a complexion, that it scarce touches on the world, without contracting a stain. We see, we hear, with peril.

But here safety dwells. Every meddling and intrusive avocation is secluded. Silence holds the door against the strife of tongues, and all the impertinencies of idle conversation. The busy swarm of vain images, and cajoling temptations, which beset us, with a buzzing importunity, amidst the gaieties of life, are chased by these thickening shades.——Here I may, without disturbance, commune with my own heart; and learn that best of sciences, to know myself. Here the soul may rally her dissipated powers, and grace recover its native energy. This is the opportunity to rectify every evil impression; to expel the poison, and guard against the contagion, of corrupting examples. This is the place where I may, with advantage, apply myself to subdue the rebel within: and be master, not of a sceptre, but of myself.—Throng then, ye ambitious, the levees of the powerful: I will be punctual in my assignations with solitude. To a mind intent upon its own improvement, solitude has charms incomparably more engaging, than the entertainments presented in the theatre, or the honours conferred in the drawing-room.

I SAID, solitude.—Am I then alone?—'Tis true, my acquaintance are at a distance. I have stole away from company, and am remote from all human observation.—But that is an alarming thought,

Millions of spiritual creatures walk the earth,
Unseen, both when we wake, and when we sleep *.

Perhaps, there may be numbers of those invisible beings, patrolling this same retreat; and joining with me, in contemplating the Creator's works. Perhaps, those ministering spirits, who rejoice at the conversion of a sinner, and hold up the goings of the righteous, may follow us to the lonely recess; and, even in our most solitary moments, be our constant attendants.—What a pleasing awe is awakened by such a reflection! How venerable it renders my retired walks! I am struck with reverence, as under the roof of some sacred edifice, or in the presence-chamber of some mighty monarch.—O! may I never bring any pride of imagination, nor indulge the least dissolute affection, where such refined and exalted intelligences exercise their watch!

'Tis possible, that I am encompassed with such a cloud of witnesses; but it is certain, that GOD, the infinite eternal GOD, is now and ever with me. The great JEHOVAH, before whom all the angelic armies bow their heads, and veil their faces, surrounds me; supports me; pervades me. "In HIM I live, move, and have my "being."—The whole world is his august temple; and, in the most sequestered corner, I appear before his adorable Majesty, no less than when I worship in his house, or kneel at his altar. In every place, therefore, let me pay him the homage of a heart, cleansed from idols, and devoted to his service. In every circumstance, let me feel no ambition, but to please him; nor covet any happiness, but to enjoy him.

How sublime is the description, and how striking the sentiment, in that noble passage of the psalms! Whither shall I go from thy Spirit, or whither shall I flee from thy presence? If I climb up into the heights of heaven, thou art there enthroned in light. If I go down to the depths of the grave, thou art there also in thy pavillion of darkness. If I retire to the remotest eastern climes, where the morning first takes wing: if, swifter than the darting ray, I pass to the opposite regions of the west, and remain in the uttermost parts of the sea; shall I, in that distant situation, be beyond thy reach; or, by this sudden transition, escape thy notice! So far from it, that could I, with one glance of thought, transport myself beyond all the bounds of creation; I should still be encircled with the immensity of thy essence; or rather, still be inclosed in the hollow of thy hand.—Awful, yet delightful truth! Let it be inter-

* MILT. Par. Lost, b. IV. l. 677.

* Nunquam a turba mores, quos extuli, refero. Aliquid, ex eo quod composui, turbatur; aliquid, ex his quæ fugavi, redit. Quinam est malorum conversatio! SENEC.

† Rev. xv. 2.

† Psal. cxxxix. 7. 8. 9. There is, I think, an additional strength and beauty in the thought, if, with the learned Mr Mudge, we suppose an antithesis between the two clauses of the last verse, as there evidently is between those of the preceding; and that they express, in a poetical style, the extremities of the east and the west.

woven with every thought! and become one with the very conſciouſneſs of my exiſtence! that I may continually walk with GOD, and conduct myſelf, in every ſtep of my behaviour, "as ſeeing HIM that is inviſible."

They are the happy perſons; felicity, true felicity, is all their own, who live under an habitual ſenſe of GOD's omnipreſence, and a ſweet perſuaſion of his ſpecial love! If dangers threaten, their impregnable defence is at hand. Nothing can be ſo near to terrify, as their almighty Guardian to ſecure them.—To theſe the hours can never be tedious, and it is impoſſible for them to be alone. Do they ſtep aſide from the occupations of animal life? A more exalted ſet of employments engage their attention. They addreſs themſelves, in all the various acts of devotion, to their heavenly Father; who now ſees in ſecret, and will hereafter reward them openly. They ſpread all their wants before his indulgent eye, and diſburden all their ſorrows into his compaſſionate boſom. Do they withdraw from human ſociety? They find themſelves under the more immediate regards of their Maker. If they reſign the ſatisfactions of ſocial intercourſe, it is to cultivate a correſpondence with the condeſcending DEITY, and taſte the pleaſures of divine friendſhip.—What is ſuch a ſtate, but the very ſuburbs of heaven? What is ſuch a conduct, but an antepaſt of eternal bleſſedneſs?

Now, my ſoul, the day is ended. The hours are all fled. They are fled to the ſupreme Judge, and have given in their evidence; an evidence regiſtered in heaven! and to be produced at the great audit.—Happy they whoſe improvement has kept pace with the fleeting minutes; who have ſeized the important fugitives, and engaged them in the purſuit of wiſdom, or devoted them to the ſervice of virtue!

Fugitives indeed they are. Our moments ſlip away ſilently and inſenſibly. The thief ſteals not more unperceived from the pillaged houſe.—And will the runagates never ſtop? No: where-ever we are, however employed, time purſues his inceſſant courſe. Though we are liſtleſs and dilatory; the great meaſurer of our days preſſes on; ſtill preſſes on, in his unwearied career*; and whirls our weeks, and months, and years away.—Is it not then ſurpriſingly ſtrange, to hear people complain of the tediouſneſs of their time, and how heavy it hangs upon their hands? to ſee them contrive a variety of amuſing artifices, to accelerate its flight, and get rid of its burden?—Ah! thoughtleſs mortals! Why need you urge the headlong torrent? Your days are ſwifter than a poſt; which, carrying diſpatches of the laſt importance, with unremitted ſpeed ſcours the road. They paſs away like the nimble ſhips; which have the wind in their wings, and ſkim along the watery plain. They haſten to their deſtined period, with the rapidity of an eagle; which leaves the ſtormy blaſt behind her, while ſhe cleaves the air, and darts upon her prey †.

Now the day is gone, how ſhort it appears! When my fond eye beheld it in perſpective, it ſeemed a very conſiderable ſpace. Minutes crouded upon minutes, and hours ranged behind hours, exhibited an extenſive draught, and flattered me with a long progreſſion of pleaſures. But, upon a retroſpective view, how wonderfully is the ſcene altered! The landſcape, large and ſpacious, which a warm fancy drew, brought to the teſt of cool experience, ſhrinks into a ſpan. Juſt as the ſhores vaniſh, and mountains dwindle to a ſpot, when the ſailor, ſurrounded by ſkies and ocean, throws his laſt look on his native land.—How clearly do I now diſcover the cheat! May it never impoſe upon my unwary imagination again! I find there is nothing abiding on this ſide eternity. A long duration, in a ſtate of finite exiſtence, is mere illuſion.

Perhaps, the healthy, and the gay, may not readily credit the ſerious truth; eſpecially from a young pen, and new to its employ. Let us then refer ourſelves to the deciſion of the ancient. Aſk ſome venerable old perſon, who is juſt marching off the mortal ſtage, How many have been the days of the years of thy life *? It was a monarch's queſtion, and therefore can want no recommendation to the faſhionable world.—Obſerve, how he ſhakes his hoary locks, and from a deep-felt conviction replies: "Fourſcore years have finiſhed their rounds, to "furrow theſe cheeks, and clothe this head in ſnow. "Such a term may ſeem long and large to inconſiderate "youth. But O! how ſhort, how ſcanty, to one that "has made the experiment! Short, as a gleam of tranſient ſunſhine; ſcanty, as the ſhadow that departeth. "Methinks it was but yeſterday that I exchanged my "childiſh ſports for manly exerciſes; and now I am "reſigning them both, for the ſleep of death. As ſoon "as we are born, we begin to draw to our end; and how "ſmall is the interval between the cradle and the tomb!"—O! may we believe this teſtimony of mature age! May every evening bring it, with clearer evidence, to our minds! And may we form ſuch an eſtimate of the little pittance, while it is upon the advancing hand, as we ſhall certainly make, when the ſands are all run down!

Let me add one reflection on the work to be done, while this ſhuttle is flying through the loom †. A work of no ſmall difficulty, yet of the utmoſt conſequence!—Haſt thou not ſeen, haſt thou not known, the excellent of the earth, who were living images of their Maker? His divine likeneſs was tranſfuſed into their hearts, and beamed forth in all their conduct; beamed forth in meekneſs of wiſdom, and purity of affection; in all the tender offices of love, and all the noble efforts of zeal. To be ſtamped with the ſame beautiful ſignature, and to be followers of them, as they were of CHRIST; this, this is thy buſineſs. On the accompliſhment of this, thy eternal all depends. And will an affair of ſuch unſpeakable weight admit of a moment's delay, or conſiſt with the leaſt remiſſneſs?—Eſpecially, ſince much of thy appointed time is already elapſed; and the remainder is all uncertainty, ſave only that it is in the very act to fly.—Or ſuppoſe, thou hadſt made a covenant with the grave, and waſt aſſured of reaching the age of Methuſelah; how ſoon would even ſuch a leaſe expire!—Extend it, if you pleaſe, ſtill farther; and let it be co-exiſtent with nature itſelf. How inconſiderable is the addition! For yet a very little while, and the commiſſioned archangel liſts up his hand to heaven, and ſwears by the almighty name, That time ſhall be no longer ‡. Then abuſed opportunities will never return; and new opportunities will never more be offered. Then, ſhould

* Sed fugit interea, fugit irreparabile tempus. VIRG.

† Job ix. 25, 26. By theſe three very expreſſive images, the inſpired poet repreſents the unintermitted and rapid flight of time. The paſſage is illuſtrated with great judgment, and equal delicacy, in Dr Grey's moſt ingenious abridgment of Schultens.—Quæ tribus in elementis velociſſima, hic admirabili cum emphaſi congeruntur. In terris, nil pernicius curſore, et quidem fati quid ferente. Rapiuntur tamen adhuc undas, non ſecant, ſed ſuper volant, navigiola papyro contexta. Omnium rapidiſſime aerem grandibus alis permetitur aquila, præcipiti lapſu ruens in prædam.

* Gen. xlvii. 8. Heb. Bib.

† My days are ſwifter than a weaver's ſhuttle. Job. vii. 6.

‡ This alludes to the beginning of Revelations the xth; which, abſtracted from its ſpiritual meaning, and conſidered only as a ſtately piece of machinery, well deſerves our attention; and, I will venture to ſay, has not its ſuperior, perhaps not its equal, in any of the moſt celebrated maſters of Greece and Rome.—All that is gloomy or beautiful in the atmoſphere, all that is ſtriking or magnificent in every element, is taken to heighten the idea. Yet nothing is diſproportionate; but an uniform air of ineffable majeſty greatens, exalts, ennobles the whole.

negligent mortals wish—wish ever so passionately—for a few hours—a few moments only—to be thrown back from the opening eternity; thousands of worlds would not be able to procure the grant.

Shall I now be industrious to shorten what is no longer than a span, or to quicken the pace of what is ever on the wing? Shall I squander away what is unutterably important, while it lasts; and, when once departed, is altogether irrevocable? O! my soul, forbear the folly; forbear the desperate extravagance. Wilt thou chide as a loiterer, the arrow that boundeth from the string; or sweep away diamonds, as the refuse of thy house?—Throw time away! Astonishing, ruinous, irreparable profuseness! Throw empires away, and be blameless. But O! be parsimonious of thy days; husband thy precious hours. They go connected, indissolubly connected, with heaven or hell *. Improved, they are a sure pledge of everlasting glory; wasted, they are a sad preface to never-ending confusion and anguish.

WHAT a profound silence has composed the world! So profound is the silence, that my very breath seems a noise; the ticking of my watch is distinctly heard; if I do but stir, it creates a disturbance.——There is now none of that confused din from the tumultuous city; no voice of jovial rustics from the neighbouring meadow; no chirping melody from the shady thicket.——Every lip is sealed. Not the least whisper invades the air; nor the least motion rustles among the boughs. Echo herself sleeps unmolested. The expanded ear, though all attention, catches no sound, but the liquid lapse of a distant murmuring stream.

All things are hush'd, as nature's self lay dead.

If, in the midst of this deep and universal composure, ten thousand bellowing thunders should burst over my head, and rend the skies with their united volleys; how should I bear so unexpected a shock? It would stun my senses, and confound my thoughts. I should shudder in every limb; perhaps sink to the earth with terror.——Consider then, O mortals! consider the much more prodigious and amazing call, which will, 'ere long, alarm your sleeping bones. When the tenants of the tomb have slumbered, in the most undisturbed repose, for a multitude of ages; what an inconceivable consternation must the shout of the archangel, and the trump of GOD occasion! Will it not wound the ear of the ungodly, and affright, even to distraction, the impenitent sinner? The stupendous peal will sound through the vast of heaven; will shake the foundations of nature; and pierce even the deepest recesses of the grave. And how—O! how will the prisoners of divine justice be able to endure that tremendous summons to a far more tremendous tribunal?——Do thou, my soul, listen to the still voice of the gospel. Attend, in this thy day, to the gracious invitations of thy Saviour. Then shall that great midnight-cry lose its horror, and be music in thy ears. It shall be welcome to thy reviving clay, as the tidings of liberty to the dungeon-captive; as the year of jubilee to the harassed slave. This, this shall be its charming import; "Awake, and sing, ye that dwell in dust." ¶

WHAT a general cessation of affairs has this dusky hour introduced! A little while ago, all was hurry, hurry. Life and activity exerted themselves in a thousand busy forms. The city swarmed with passing and repassing multitudes. All the country was sweat and dust. The air floated in perpetual agitation, by the flitting birds, and humming bees. Art sat prying with her piercing eyes; while Industry plied her restless hands.——But see, how all this fervent and impetuous bustle is fled with the setting sun. The beasts are slunk to their grassy couch; and the winged people are retired to their downy nests. The hammer has resigned its sounding task, and the file ceases to repeat its flying touches. Shut is the well-frequented shop, and its threshold no longer worn by the feet of numerous customers. The village-swain lies drowned in slumbers; and even his trusty dog, who, for a considerable time, stood centry at the door, is extended at his ease, and snores with his master.—In every place Toil reclines her head, and Application folds her arms. All interests seem to be forgot; all pursuits are suspended; all employment is sunk away, sunk away with those fluttering myriads, which lately sported in the sun's departing rays.—'Tis like the sabbath of universal nature; or as though the pulse of life stood still.

Thus will it be with our infinitely momentous concerns, when once the shadows of the evening (that long evening which follows the footsteps of death †) are stretched over us. The dead cannot seek unto GOD; the living, the living alone, are possessed of this inestimable opportunity†. "There is no work or de-"vice, no repentance or amendment, in the grave‡,

¶ Is. xxvi. 19.

† Behold! now is the accepted time. Behold! now is the day of salvation. 2 Cor. vi. 2.

Haste, haste, he lies in wait, he's at the door,
Insidious death! shou'd his strong hand arrest,
No composition sets the pris'ner free.

‡ They who are gone down to the grave, are represented (Is. xxxviii. 11.) by the phrase, חדל דמי—rendered by Vitringa, Those that inhabit the land of intermission or cessation.—Which prevents all appearance of tautology in the sentence; and is, I think, a valuable improvement of the translation; as it conveys an idea, not only distinct from the preceding, but

of

whole.—Be pleased to observe the aspect of this august personage. All the brightness of the sun shines in his countenance; and all the rage of the fire burns in his feet.—See his apparel. The clouds compose his robe, and the drapery of the sky floats upon his shoulders. The rainbow forms his diadem; and that which "compasseth the heaven with a glorious circle," is the ornament of his head.—Behold his attitude. One foot stands on the ocean, the other rests on the land. The wide extended earth, and the world of waters, serve as pedestals for those mighty columns.—Consider the action. His hand is lifted up to the height of the stars. He speaks; and the regions of the firmament echo with the mighty accents, as the midnight-desert resounds with the lion's roar. The artillery of the skies is discharged at the signal; a peal of seven-fold thunders spreads the alarm, and prepares the universe to receive his orders.—To finish all, and give the highest grandeur, as well as the utmost solemnity, to the representation, hear the decree that issues from his mouth. He sweears by HIM that liveth for ever and ever. In whatever manner so majestic a person had expressed himself, he could not fail of commanding universal attention. But when he confirms his speech by a most sacred and inviolable oath, we are not only wrapt in silent suspense, but overwhelmed with the profoundest awe.—He swears, That time shall be no longer. Was ever voice so full of terror; so big with wonder? It proclaims, not the fall of empires, but the final period of things. It strikes off the wheels of nature; bids ages and generations cease to roll; and, with one potent word, consigns a whole world over to dissolution.—This is one among a multitude of very sublime and masterly strokes, to be found in that too much neglected book—the BIBLE.

* I remember to have seen, upon a sun-dial, in a physician's garden at Northampton, the following inscription; which, I think, is the most proper motto for the instrument that measures our time, and the most striking admonition that can possibly be presented to every eye.

AB HOC MOMENTO PENDET ÆTERNITAS.

The weighty sense of which, I know not how to express in English, more happily than in those words of Dr Watts:

Good God! on what a slender thread
[Or, on what a moment of time]
Hang everlasting things!

"whither we all are haſting!" When once that cloſing ſcene is advanced, we ſhall have no other part to act on this earthly theatre. Then, the miſer, who has ſlumbered away life in a criminal inactivity, muſt lie down in hopeleſs diſtreſs, and everlaſting ſorrow. Then that awful doom will take place, "He that is holy, let "him be holy ſtill; and he that is filthy, let him be filthy for ever."

Is it ſo, my ſoul? Is this the only, only time allotted for obtaining the great reward, and making thy ſalvation ſure? And art thou lulled in a vain ſecurity, or dreaming in a ſupine inadvertency? Start, O! ſtart from thy trance. Gird up the loins of thy mind, and work while it is day. Improve the preſent ſeed-time, that eternity may yield a joyful harveſt.—We eſpecially, who are watchmen in Iſrael, and miniſters of the glorious goſpel; may we be awakened, by this conſideration, to all aſſiduity in our holy office. Some or other of our people are ever and anon departing into the inviſible ſtate; all our friends are making inceſſant approaches to their long home; and we ourſelves ſhall very ſhortly be tranſmitted to the confinement of the tomb. This is the favourable juncture, wherein alone we can contribute to their endleſs welfare. This is the criſis, the all-important criſis, of their final felicity. Inſtantly, therefore, let us pour in our wholeſome inſtructions; inſtantly let us ply them with our earneſt exhortations. A moment's delay may be an irreparable loſs; may be irretrievable ruin. While we procraſtinate, a fatal ſtroke may intervene; and place us beyond the power of adminiſtering, or place them beyond all poſſibility of receiving any ſpiritual good*.

How frequently is the face of nature changed! and, by changing, made more agreeable!——The long-continued glitter of the day, renders the ſoothing ſhades of the evening doubly welcome. Nor does the morn ever purple the eaſt with ſo engaging a luſtre, as after the gloom of a dark and diſmal night.——At preſent, a calm of tranquility is ſpread through the univerſe. The weary winds have forgot to blow. The gentle gales have fanned themſelves aſleep. Not ſo much as a ſingle leaf bows. Even the quivering aſpin reſts. And not one breath curls o'er the ſtream.——Sometimes, on the contrary, the tempeſt ſummons all the forces of the air; and pours itſelf, with reſiſtleſs fury, from the angry north. The whole atmoſphere is toſſed into tumultuous confuſion, and the watery world is heaved to the clouds. The aſtoniſhed mariner, and his ſtraining veſſel, now ſcale the rolling mountain, and hang dreadfully viſible on the broken ſurge; now ſhoot, with headlong impetuoſity, into the yawning gulf; and neither hulk nor maſt is ſeen. The ſtorm ſweeps over the continent; raves along the city-ſtreets; ſtruggles through the foreſt-boughs; and terrifies the ſavage nations with a howl, more wildly horrid than their own. The knotty oaks bend before the blaſt; their iron trunks groan; and their ſtubborn limbs are daſhed to the ground. The lofty dome rocks; and even the ſolid tower totters on its baſis.

Such variations are kindly contrived, and with an evident condeſcenſion to the fickleneſs of our taſte. Becauſe a perpetual repetition of the ſame objects would create ſatiety and diſguſt; therefore the indulgent father of our race has diverſified the univerſal ſcene, and bid every appearance bring with it the charm of novelty.——This circumſtance is beneficial, as well as intertaining. Providence, ever gracious to mortals, ever intent upon promoting our felicity, has taken care to mingle, in the conſtitution of things, what is pleaſing to our imagination, with what is ſerviceable to our intereſts. The piercing winds, and rugged aſpect of winter, render the balmy gales, and flowery ſcenes of ſpring, peculiarly delightful. At the ſame time, the keen froſts mellow the ſoil, and prepare it for the hand of Induſtry. The ruſhing rains impregnate the glebe, and fit it to become a magazine of plenty. The earth is a great laboratory; and December's cold collects the groſs materials, which are ſublimated by the refining warmth of May. The air is a pure elaſtic fluid; and were it always to remain in this motionleſs ſerenity, it would loſe much of its active ſpring; was it never agitated by thoſe wholeſome concuſſions, it would contract a noiſome, perhaps, a peſtilential taint. In which caſe, our reſpiration, inſtead of purifying, would corrupt the vital juices; inſtead of ſupplying us with refreſhment, would be a ſource of diſeaſes; or every gaſp we draw, might be unavoidable death*.——How then ſhould we admire, how ſhould we adore, that happy union of benignity and wiſdom; which, from a variety of diſpoſitions, produces an uniformity of good! produces a perpetual ſucceſſion of delights, and an uninterrupted ſeries of advantages!

The darkneſs is now at its height; and I cannot but admire the obliging manner of its taking place. It comes not with a blunt and abrupt incivility, but makes gentle and reſpectful advances. A precipitate tranſition, from the ſplendors of day, to all the horrors of midnight, would be inconvenient and frightful. It would bewilder the traveller in his journey; it would ſtrike the creation with amazement; and, perhaps, be pernicious to the organs of ſight. Therefore the gloom ruſhes not upon us inſtantaneouſly, but increaſes by ſlow degrees; and, ſending twilight before as its harbinger, decently advertiſes us of its approach. By this means, we are neither alarmed, nor incommoded, by the change; but are able to take all ſuitable and timely meaſures for its reception.——Thus graciouſly has Providence regulated, not only the grand viciſſitudes of the ſeaſons, but alſo the common interchange of light and darkneſs, with an apparent reference to our comfort.

* Conſidering the immenſe quantity of coals, and other combuſtible materials, which are daily conſumed, and evaporate into the air; conſidering the numberleſs ſteams, and clouds of ſmoke, which almoſt continually overwhelm populous cities;—the noiſome exhalations, which ariſe from thronged infirmaries and loathſome jails, from ſtagnating lakes and putrid fens;—the variety of offenſive and unwholeſome effluvia, which proceed from other cauſes;—it is a very remarkable inſtance of a Providence, at once tenderly kind, and infinitely powerful, that mankind is not ſuffocated with ſtench; that the air is not choked with filth.—The air is the common ſewer, into which ten thouſand times ten thouſand nuiſances are inceſſantly diſcharged; yet it is preſerved ſo thoroughly clear, as to afford the moſt tranſparent medium for viſion; ſo delicately undulatory, as to tranſmit, with all imaginable diſtinctneſs, every diverſity of ſound; ſo perfectly pure, as to be the conſtant reliever of the fluids, in every animal that breathes.

* The caſe repreſented by the prophet (1 Kings xx. 40.) ſeems perfectly applicable on this occaſion. As thy ſervant was buſy here and there, he was gone. So, while we are either remiſs in our functions, or laying ourſelves out upon inferior cares, the people of our charge may be gone;—gone beyond the influence of our counſels, beyond the reach of our prayers;—gone into the unchangeable and eternal ſtate.

Now the fierce inhabitants of the forest forlake their dens. A thousand grim forms, a thousand growling monsters, pace the defert. Death is in their jaws, while, ſtung with hunger, and athirſt for blood, they roam their nightly rounds.—Unfortunate the traveller, who is overtaken by the night, in thoſe diſmal wilds! How muſt he ſtand aghaſt at the mingled yell of ravenous throats, and lions roaring after their prey! Defend him, propitious heaven! or elſe he muſt ſee his endearing ſpouſe, and hail his native home no more!——Now the prowling wolf, like a murderous ruffian, dogs the ſhepherd's footſteps, and beſets his bleating charge.—The fox, like a crafty felon, ſteals to the thatched cottage, and carries off the feathered booty.

Happy for the world, were theſe the only deſtroyers that walk in darkneſs. But, alas! there are ſavages in human ſhape, who, muffled in ſhades, infeſt the abodes of civilized life. The ſons of violence make choice of this ſeaſon *, to perpetrate the moſt outrageous acts of wrong and robbery. The adulterer waiteth for the twilight; and, baſer than the villain on the highway, betrays the honour of his boſom-friend. Now Faction forms her cloſe cabals, and whiſpers her traiterous inſinuations. Now Rebellion plans her accurſed plots, and prepares the train to blow a nation into ruin. Now crimes which hide their odious heads in the day, haunt the ſeats of ſociety, and ſtalk through the gloom with audacious front. Now the vermin of the ſtreets crawl from their lurking-holes, to wallow in ſin, and ſpread contagion through the night: each ſoothing himſelf with the fond notion, that all his ſafe; that no eye ſees.

Are they then concealed? Prepoſterous madmen! to draw the curtain between their infamous practices, and a little ſet of mortals; but lay them open to all theſe chaſte and wakeful eyes of heaven †! as though the moon and ſtars were made to light men to their revels, and not to GOD.——Are they then concealed? No, truly. Was every one of theſe vigilant luminaries cloſed; an eye keener than the lightning's flaſh, an eye brighter than ten thouſand ſuns, beholds their every motion. Their thickeſt ſhades are beaming day ‡, to the jealous Inſpector, and ſupreme Judge of human actions. Deluded creatures! have ye not heard, have ye not read, "that clouds and darkneſs "are HIS majeſtic reſidence ‖?" In that very gloom, to which you fly for covert, he erects his throne. What you reckon your ſcreen, is the bar of his tribunal. O! remember this! ſtand in awe, and ſin not. Remember, that the great and terrible GOD is about your path †, when you take your midnight range; is about your bed, when you indulge the looſe deſire; and ſpies out all your ways, be they ever ſo ſecretly conducted, or artfully diſguiſed.

SOME minutes ago, a paſſenger croſſed along the road. His horſe's foot ſtruck the ground, and fetched fire from a flint. My eye, tho' at a diſtance, catched the view; and law, with great clearneſs, the tranſient ſparkles: of which, had I been ever ſo near, I ſhould not have diſcerned the leaſt glimpſe, under the blaze of day.—So * when ſickneſs has drawn a veil over the gaiety of our hearts; when misfortunes have eclipſed the ſplendor of our outward circumſtances; how many important convictions preſent themſelves with the brighteſt evidence! Under the ſunſhine of proſperity, they lay undiſcovered; but, when ſome intervening cloud has darkened the ſcene, they emerge from their obſcurity, and even glitter upon our minds. Then, the world, that deluſive cheat, confeſſes her emptineſs; but JESUS, the bright and Morning-ſtar beams forth with animitable luſtre. Then, vice loſes all her fallacious allurements; that painted ſtrumpet is horrible, as the hags of hell; but virtue, deſpiſed virtue, gains lovelineſs from a louring providence, and treads the ſhades with more than mortal charms.—May this reconcile me, and all the ſons of ſorrow, to our appointed ſhare of ſuffering! If tribulation tend to diſſipate the inward darkneſs, and pour heavenly day upon our minds; welcome diſtreſs; welcome diſappointment; welcome whatever our froward fleſh, or peeviſh paſſions, would miſcall calamities. Theſe light afflictions, which are but for a moment, ſhall lie eaſy upon our ſpirits; ſince they befriend our knowledge; promote our faith; and ſo "work out for us a ſon "more exceeding and eternal weight of glory."

How has this darkneſs ſnatched every ſplendid and graceful object from my ſight! It has daſhed the ſponge over the pictures of ſpring, and deſtroyed all the delicate diſtinctions of things. Where are now the fine tinges, which ſo lately charmed me from the glowing parterre? The bluſh is ſtruck out from the cheeks of the roſe, and the ſnowy hue is dropt from the lily. I caſt my eyes toward a magnificent ſeat; but the aſpiring columns, and fair expanded front, are mingled in rude confuſion. Without the ſun, all the elegance of the blooming world is a mere blank; all the ſymmetry of architecture is a ſhapeleſs heap.

Is not this an expreſſive emblem of the lovelineſs which the Sun of Righteouſneſs tranſfuſes into all that is amiable? Was it not for JESUS and his merits, I ſhould ſigh with anguiſh of ſpirit; even while I rove through ranks of the moſt beautiful flowers, or breathe amidſt a wilderneſs of ſweets. Was it not for JESUS and his merits; I ſhould roam like ſome diſconſolate ſpectre, even through the ſmiles of creation, and the careſſes of fortune. My converſation in this world, though dreſſed in the moſt engaging forms of external

* ——When night
Darkens the ſtreets, then wander forth the ſons
Of Belial, flown with inſolence and wine. MIL. P.

† ——Sed luna videt, ſed ſidera teſtes
Intendunt oculos.

‡ This is finely, and very forcibly expreſſed by the pſalmiſt: If I ſay, Paradventure the darkneſs ſhall cover me; then ſhall my night be turned to day: or, as it may rendered ſomewhat more emphatically, Even the night ſhall be broad day-light all around me. Pſal. cxxxix. 10.

‖ Pſal. xcvii. 2.

† The original words are much ſtronger than the tranſlation, רזית and תזרה ſignify, Thou ſifteſt my path, and art intimately acquainted with all my ways: the former, I apprehend, denoting the exact cognizance which the Almighty taketh, the latter implying the conſtant inſpection which he exerciſeth, over all the circumſtances of our conduct. Pſal. cxxxix. 2.

* I beg leave to inform the young gentleman, whoſe name dignifies my dedication, that this was a remark of his honoured father, when we rode together, and converſed in a duſky evening. I mention this circumſtance, partly to ſecure the paragraph from contempt; partly to give him, and the world, an idea of that eminently ſerious taſte which diſtinguiſhed my deceaſed friend.—"The leaſt obvious the reflection, the more clearly it diſcovers a turn "of mind remarkably ſpiritual; which would ſuffer nothing to "eſcape, without yielding ſome religious improvement. The "meaneſt the incident, the more admirable was that fertility of imagination, which could deduce the ſublimeſt truths from the moſt "trivial occurrences.

† 2 Cor. iv. 17. The great Stephens, that oracle of Greek learning, tranſlates καθ' ὑπερβολὴν, Quo nihil majus dici aut fingi poteſt. But how does the ſenſe riſe! how is the idea enlarged, under two ſuch forcible expreſſions! καθ' ὑπερβολὴν εἰς ὑπερβολὴν—The whole verſe is a maſter-piece of the beautiful antitheſis, the lively deſcription, and the nervous diction. It is one of thoſe exquiſite paſſages in the inſpired writings, which, like ſome rich aromatic plants, cannot be tranſferred from their own generous and native ſoil, without being impaired in their vivacity, and loſing much of their delicacy. Perhaps, the following verſion may be ſomewhat leſs injurious to the ſacred original, than the common tranſlation: —Our very light affliction, which is but juſt for the preſent moment, worketh out a far more exceeding, an incomparably great, and eternal weight of glory.

pleaſure, would be like the paſſage of a condemned malefactor, through enamelled meadows, and bowers of bliſs, to be broke upon the wheel, or to expire on the rack. But a daily reflection on the LAMB's atoning blood; a comfortable truſt, that my ſoul is reconciled through this divine expiation; this is the ray, the golden ray, which irradiates the face of the univerſe. This is the oil of beauty, which makes all things wear a chearful aſpect; and the oil of gladneſs, which diſpoſes the ſpectator to behold them with delight *. This, this is the ſecret charm, which teaches nature, in all her proſpects and all her productions, ſo exquiſitely to pleaſe.

"MAN goeth forth to his work, and to his labour, "till the evening." But then his ſtrength fails; his ſpirits flag; and he ſtands in need, not only of ſome reſpite from toil, but of ſome kindly and ſovereign refreſhments.—What an admirable proviſion for this purpoſe is ſleep! Sleep introduces a moſt welcome vacation, both for the ſoul and body. The exerciſes of the brain, and the labours of the hand, are at once diſcontinued. So that the weary limbs repair their exhauſted vigour; while the penſive thoughts drop their load of ſorrows, and the buſy ones reſt from the fatigue of application.—Moſt reviving cordial! equally beneficial to our animal and intellectual powers. It ſupplies the fleſhly machine, and keeps all its nice movements in a proper poſture for eaſy play. It animates the thinking faculties with freſh alacrity, and rekindles their ardor for the ſtudies of the dawn. Without theſe enlivening recruits, how ſoon would the moſt robuſt conſtitution be waſted into a walking ſkeleton; and the moſt learned ſage degenerate into a hoary idiot!—Some time ago, I beheld, with ſurpriſe, poor Florio. His air was wild; his countenance meagre; his thoughts roving, and ſpeech diſconcerted. Inquiring the cauſe of this ſtrange alteration, I was informed, that, for ſeveral nights, he had not cloſed his eyes in ſleep. For want of which noble reſtorative, that ſprightly youth (who was once the life of the diſcourſe, and the darling of the company) is become a ſpectacle of miſery and horror.

How many of my fellow-creatures are, at this very inſtant, confined to the bed of languiſhing; and complaining, with that illuſtrious ſufferer of old, Weariſome nights are appointed to me †! Inſtead of indulging ſoft repoſe, they are counting the tedious hours; telling every ſtriking clock; or meaſuring the very moments, by their throbbing pulſe. How many, haraſſed with pain, moſt paſſionately long to make ſome little truce with their agonies, in peaceful ſlumbers! How many, ſick with diſquietude, and reſtleſs even on their downy pillows, would purchaſe this tranſient oblivion of their woes, almoſt at any rate!—That which wealth cannot procure, which multitudes ſigh for in vain, thy GOD has beſtowed on thee, times out of number. The welcome viſitant, punctual at the needed hour, has entered thy chamber, and poured his poppies round thy couch; has gently cloſed thy eye-lids, and ſhed his ſlumberous dews over all thy ſenſes.

Since ſleep is ſo abſolutely neceſſary, ſo ineſtimably valuable, obſerve, what a fine apparatus almighty goodneſs has made, to accommodate us with the balmy bleſſing. With how kind a precaution he removes whatever might obſtruct its acceſs, or impede its influence! He draws around us the curtain of darkneſs; which inclines us to a drowſy indolence, and conceals every object that might too ſtrongly agitate the ſenſe. He conveys peace into our apartments; and impoſes ſilence on the whole creation. Every animal is bidden to tread ſoftly, or rather to ceaſe from its motion, when man is retiring to his repoſe.—May we not diſcern, in this gracious diſpoſition of things, the tender cares of a nurſing-mother; who huſhes every noiſe, and ſecludes every diſturbance, when ſhe has laid the child of her love to reſt? So, by ſuch ſoothing circumſtances, and gently-working opiates, HE giveth, to his beloved, ſleep *.

Another ſignal inſtance of a providence intent upon our welfare, is, that we are preſerved ſafe in the hours of ſlumber. How are we then loſt to all apprehenſion of danger, even though the murderer be at our bed-ſide, or his naked ſword at our breaſt! Deſtitute of all concern for ourſelves, we are unable to think of, much more to provide for, our own ſecurity. At theſe moments, therefore, we lie open to innumerable perils; perils from the reſtleſs rage of flames; perils from the inſidious artifices of thieves, or the outrageous violence of robbers; perils from the irregular workings † of our own thoughts, and eſpecially from the incurſions of our ſpiritual enemy.

What dreadful miſchief might that reſtleſs, that implacable adverſary of mankind work, was there not an inviſible hand to controul his rage, and protect poor mortals! What ſcenes of horror might he repreſent to our imaginations, and "ſcare us with dreams, or "terrify us with viſions ‡!" But the Keeper of Iſrael,

* Thus applied, that fine piece of flattery, addreſſed to the Heathen emperor, is ſtrictly and literally true.

——Vultus ubi tuus
Affulſit populo, gratior it dies,
Et ſoles melius nitent. HORAT.

Which I would caſt in a Chriſtian mould, and thus tranſlate:

When faith preſents the Saviour's death,
And whiſpers, "This is thine;"
Sweetly my riſing hours advance,
And peacefully decline.

While ſuch my views, the radiant ſun
Sheds a more ſprightly rays:
Each object ſmiles; all nature charms:
I ſing my cares away.

† Job vii. 3.

* Pſal. cxxvii. 2.

† I think, it is referable only to a ſuperintending and watchful providence, that we are not hurried into the moſt pernicious actions, when our imagination is heated, and our reaſon ſtupified by dreams.—We have ſometimes heard of unfortunate perſons, who, walking in their ſleep, have thrown themſelves headlong from a window, and been daſhed to death on the pebbles. And whence is it, that ſuch diſaſtrous accidents are only related as pieces of news, not experienced by ourſelves, or our families? Were our minds more ſober in their operations, or more circumſpect in their regards? No, verily: nothing could be more wild than their excurſions; and none could be more inattentive to their own welfare. Therefore, if we have laid us down, and ſlept in peace; it was, becauſe the LORD vouchſafed us the ſweet refreſhment: if we roſe again in ſafety, it was, becauſe the LORD ſuſtained us with his unremitted protection.

Will the candid reader excuſe me, if I add a ſhort ſtory, or rather a matter of fact, ſuitable to the preceding remark?—Two perſons, who had been hunting together in the day, ſlept together the following night. One of them was renewing the purſuit in his dream; and, having run the whole circle of the chace, came, at laſt, to the fall of the ſtag. Upon this, he cries out with a determined ardor, I'll kill him, I'll kill him; and immediately feels for the knife, which he carried in his pocket. His companion happening to be awake, and obſerving what paſſed, leaped from the bed. Being ſecure from danger, and the moon ſhining into the room, he ſtood to view the event. When, to his inexpreſſible ſurpriſe, the infatuated ſportſman gave ſeveral deadly ſtabs, in the very place, where, a moment before, the throat and the life of his friend lay.—This I mention, as a proof, that nothing hinders us, even from being aſſaſſins of others, or murderers of ourſelves, amidſt the mad ſallies of ſleep; only the preventing care of our heavenly Father.

‡ What a complete maſter that malignant ſpirit is in exhibiting viſionary repreſentations, appears from his conduct towards CHRIST, on the high mountain: and that he is too ready, if not reſtrained by an over-ruling power, to employ his dexterity in afflicting mankind, is evident from his treatment of Job. See Luke iv. 5. Job vii. 14.

who

who never ſlumbers nor ſleeps, interpoſes in our behalf; at once to cheriſh us under his wings, and to defend us as with a ſhield.——It is ſaid of Solomon, That threeſcore valiant men were about his bed; all expert in war; every one with his ſword upon his thigh, becauſe of fear in the night *." But one greater than Solomon, one mightier than myriads of armed hoſts; even the great JEHOVAH, in whom is everlaſting ſtrength, he vouchſafes to encamp about our houſes, to watch over our ſleeping minutes, and to ſtop all the avenues of ill.—O! the unwearied and condeſcending goodneſs of our Creator! who lulls us to our reſt, by bringing on the ſilent ſhades; and plants his own ever-watchful eye as our centinel, while we enjoy the needful repoſe.

REASON now reſigns her ſedate office; and Fancy, extravagant fancy, leads the mind through a maze of vanity. The head is crowded with falſe images, and tantalized with the moſt ridiculous miſapprehenſions of things.—Some are expatiating amidſt Fairy-fields, and gathering garlands of viſionary bliſs; while their bodies are ſtretched on a wiſp of ſtraw, and ſheltered by the cobwebs of a barn. Others, quite inſenſible of their rooms of ſtate, are mourning in a doleful dungeon, or ſtruggling with the raging billows.—— Perhaps, with haſty ſteps, they climb the craggy cliff; and, with real anxiety, fly from the imaginary danger. Or elſe, benumbed with ſudden fear, and finding themſelves unable to eſcape, they give up at once their hopes and their efforts; and, though reclined on a couch of ivory, are ſinking, all helpleſs and diſtreſſed, in the furious whirlpool. So unaccountable are the vagaries of the brain, while ſleep maintains its dominion over the limbs!

But is this the only ſeaſon, when abſurd and incoherent irregularities play their magic on our minds? Are there not thoſe who dream, even in their waking moments!—Some pride themſelves in a notion of ſuperior excellency, becauſe the royal favour has annexed a few ſplendid titles to their names; or becauſe the dying ſilk-worm has bequeathed her fineſt threads to cover their nakedneſs.—Others congratulate their own ſignal happineſs, becauſe loads of golden lumber are amaſſed together in their coffers; or promiſe themſelves a moſt ſuperlative felicity indeed, when ſome thouſands more are added to the uſeleſs heap.—Nor are there wanting others, who gape after ſubſtantial ſatisfaction from airy applauſe; and flatter themſelves with, I know not what, immortality in the momentary buz of renown.—Are any of theſe a whit more reaſonable in their opinions, than the poor ragged wretch in his reveries; who, while ſnoring under a hedge, exults in the poſſeſſion of his ſtately palace, and ſumptuous furniture?—If perſons, who are very vaſſals to their own domineering paſſions, and led captive by numberleſs temptations; if theſe perſons pique themſelves with a conceit of their liberty, and fancy themſelves the generous and gallant ſpirits of the age: where is the difference between theirs, and the madman's frenzy; who, though chained to the floor, is throned in thought, and wielding an imaginary ſceptre?—In a word, as many as borrow their dignity from a plume of feathers, or the gaudy trappings of fortune; as many as ſend their ſouls to ſeek for bliſs in the blandiſhments of ſenſe, or in any thing ſhort of the divine favour, and a well-grounded hope of the incorruptible inheritance †; what are they but dreamers with their eyes open; delirious, though in health?

Would you ſee their picture drawn to the very life, and the ſucceſs of their ſchemes calculated with the utmoſt exactneſs; caſt your eye upon that fine repreſentation exhibited by the prophet: It ſhall be even as when a hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; but he awaketh, and his ſoul is empty: or as when a thirſty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he awaketh, and behold his ſoul is faint, and his ſoul hath appetite ‡.—— Such is the race, and ſuch the prize, of all thoſe candidates for honour and joy, who run wide from the mark of the high calling of GOD in CHRIST JESUS. They live in vanity, and die in woe.——Awaken us, merciful LORD, from theſe noon-tide trances! Awaken us, while conviction may turn to our advantage, and not ſerve only to increaſe our torment. O! let our eyes be enlightened, to diſcern the things that are excellent;" "and no longer be impoſed upon by fantaſtic appearances, which, however pompous they may ſeem, will prove more empty than the viſions of the night, more tranſient than the dream that is forgotten."

HAVING mentioned ſleep and dreams, let me once again conſider thoſe remarkable incidents of our frame; ſo very remarkable, that I may venture to call them a kind of experimental myſtery, and little leſs than a ſtanding miracle.—Behold the moſt vigorous conſtitution, when ſtretched on the bed of eaſe, and totally reſigned to the ſlumbers of the night. Its activity is oppreſſed with fetters of indolence; its ſtrength is conſigned over to a temporary annihilation; the nerves are like a bow unſtrung, and the whole animal ſyſtem is like a motionleſs log.——Behold a perſon of the moſt delicate ſenſations, and amiable diſpoſitions. His eyes, though thrown wide open, admit not the viſual ray; at leaſt, diſtinguiſh not objects. His ears, with the organs unimpaired, and articulate accents beating upon the drum, perceive not the ſound; at leaſt, apprehend not the meaning. The ſenſes, and their exquiſitively-fine feelings, are overwhelmed with an unaccountable ſtupefaction. You call him a ſocial creature; but where are his ſocial affections? He knows not the father that begat him, and takes no notice of the friend that is as his own ſoul. The wife of his boſom may expire by his ſide, and he lie more unconcerned than a barbarian. The children of his body may be tortured with the ſevereſt pangs; and he, even in the ſame chamber, remain untouched with the leaſt commiſeration.—Behold the moſt ingenious ſcholar; whoſe judgment is piercing, and able to trace the moſt intricate difficulties of ſcience; his taſte refined, and quick to reliſh all the beauties of ſentiment and compoſition. Yet, at this juncture, the thinking faculties are unhinged, and the intellectual œconomy quite diſconcerted. Inſtead of cloſe connected reaſonings, nothing but a diſjointed huddle of abſurd ideas; inſtead of well-digeſted principles, nothing but a diſorderly jumble of crude conceptions. The moſt palpable deluſions impoſe upon his imagination. The whole night paſſes, and he frequently miſtakes it for a ſingle minute; is not ſenſible of the tranſition, hardly ſenſible of any duration.

Yet no ſooner does the morning dawn, and daylight enter the room; but this ſtrange inchantment vaniſhes. The man awakes, and finds himſelf poſſeſſed of all the valuable endowments, which, for ſeveral hours, were ſuſpended, or loſt. His ſinews are braced, and fit for action. His ſenſes are alert and keen. The romantic viſionary brightens into the maſter of reaſon. The frozen or benumbed affections melt with tenderneſs, and glow with benevolence. And, what is beyond meaſure ſurpriſing, the intoxicated mind works itſelf ſober, not by ſlow degrees; but, in the twinkling of an eye, recovers from its perturbation.—— Why does not the ſtupor, which deadens all the nice operations of the animal powers, hold faſt its poſſeſſion? When the thoughts are once diſadjuſted, why are they not always in confuſion? How is it, that they are rallied

* Cant. iii. 7. 8.

† Theſe give a ſacred, and home-felt delight,
A ſober certainty of waking bliſs. MILT. Comus.

‡ Iſ. xxix. 8.

lied in a moment; and, from the wildeſt irregularity, reduced to the moſt orderly array!—From an inactivity reſembling death, how is the body to ſpeedily reſtored to vigour and agility! From extravagancies bordering upon madneſs; how is the underſtanding inſtantaneouſly re-eſtabliſhed in ſedateneſs and harmony!——Surely "this is the LORD's doing, and it ſhould be marvellous in our eyes;" ſhould awaken our gratitude, and inſpirit our praiſe.

This is the time in which ghoſts are ſuppoſed to make their appearance. Now the timorous imagination teems with phantoms, and creates numberleſs terrors to itſelf. Now dreary forms, in ſullen ſtate, ſtalk along the gloom; or, ſwifter than lightning, glide acroſs the ſhades. Now voices more than mortal are heard from the echoing vaults, and groans iſſue from the hollow tombs! Now melancholy ſpectres viſit the ruins of ancient monaſteries, and frequent the ſolitary dwellings of the dead. They paſs and repaſs, in unſubſtantial images, along the forlorn galleries; or take their determined ſtand over ſome lamented grave.—How often has the ſchool-boy fetched a long circuit, and trudged many a needleſs ſtep, in order to avoid the haunted church-yard! Or, if neceſſity, or neceſſity, has obliged him to croſs the ſpot, where human ſkulls are lodged below, and the baleful yews ſhed ſupernumerary horrors above; a thouſand hideous ſtories ruſh into his memory. Fear adds wings to his feet; he ſcarce touches the ground; dare not once look behind him; and eſteems his good fortune, if no frightful ſound purred at his heels, if no ghaſtly ſhape poiſed upon his ſight.

It is ſtrange, to obſerve the exceſſive timidity which poſſeſſes many people's minds, on this fanciful occaſion; while they are void of all concern, on others of the moſt tremendous import. Thoſe who are ſtartled in any dark and lonely walk, at the very apprehenſion of a ſingle ſpectre, are nevertheleſs unimpreſſed at the ſure proſpect of entering into a whole world of diſembodied beings; nay, are without any emotions of awe, though they know themſelves to be haſtening into the preſence of the great, infinite, and eternal Spirit.——Should ſome pale meſſenger from the regions of the dead draw back our curtains at the hour of midnight; and, appointing ſome particular place, ſay, as the horrid apparition to Brutus, I'll meet thee there †; I believe the boldeſt heart would feel ſomething like a panic; would ſeriouſly think upon the adventure, and be in pain for the event. But, when a voice from heaven cries, in the awakening language of the prophet, Prepare to meet thy God, O Iſrael ‡; how little is the warning regarded! how ſoon is it forgot! Prepoſterous ſtupidity! to be utterly unconcerned, where it is the trueſt wiſdom to take the alarm; and to be all trepidation, where there is nothing really terrible!—Do thou, my ſoul, remember thy Saviour's admonition: "I will forewarn you, whom you ſhall fear. Fear not theſe imaginary horrors of the night: but fear that awful "Being, whoſe revelation of himſelf, though with "expreſſions of peculiar mercy, made Moſes, his favourite ſervant, tremble exceedingly: whoſe manifeſtation, when he appears with purpoſes of inexorable vengeance, will make mighty conquerors, who "were familiar with dangers, and eſtranged to diſmay, "call upon the mountains to fall on them, and the "rocks to cover them: the menace of whoſe majeſtic "eye, when he comes attended with thouſand thouſands of his immortal hoſts, will make the very "heavens cleave aſunder, and the earth flee away.—"O dread his diſpleaſure; ſecure his favour: and "then thou mayſt commit all thy other anxieties to the "wind; thou mayſt laugh at every other fear."

This brings to my mind a memorable and amazing occurrence, recorded in the book of Job *; which is, I think, no inconſiderable proof of the real exiſtence of apparitions; on ſome very extraordinary emergencies; while it diſcountenances thoſe legions of idle tales, which ſuperſtition has raiſed, and credulity received. Since it teaches us, that if, at any time, thoſe viſitants from the unknown world render themſelves perceivable by mortals, it is not upon any errand of frivolous conſequence, but to convey intelligences of the utmoſt moment, or to work impreſſions of the higheſt advantage.

'Twas in the dead of night. All nature lay ſhrouded in darkneſs. Every creature was buried in ſleep. The moſt profound ſilence reigned through the univerſe. In theſe ſolemn moments, Eliphaz alone, all wakeful and ſolitary, was muſing upon ſublime and heavenly ſubjects.—When lo! an awful being, from the inviſible realms, burſt into his apartment! A ſpirit paſſed before his face. Aſtoniſhment ſeized the beholder. His bones ſhivered within him; his fleſh trembled all over him; and the hair of his head ſtood erect with horror.—Sudden and unexpected was the appearance of the phantom; not ſuch its departure. It ſtood ſtill, to preſent itſelf more fully to his view. It made a ſolemn pauſe, to prepare his mind for ſome momentous meſſage.——After which, a voice was heard; a voice, for the importance of its meaning, worthy to be had in everlaſting remembrance; for the ſolemnity of its delivery, enough to alarm a heart of ſtone. It ſpoke; and this was the purport of its words:—"Shall man, "frail man, be juſt before the mighty GOD? Shall "even the moſt accompliſhed of mortals be pure in the ſight "of his Maker ‖? Behold, and conſider it attentively.

* Job iv. 12, 13, &c.

† In a proof of the real exiſtence of apparitions—if the ſenſe, in which I have always underſtood this paſſage, be true.—Eliphaz, I apprehend, was neither in a trance, nor in a dream, but perfectly awake.—Though he ſpeaks of ſleep, he ſpeaks of it, as falling not upon himſelf but upon other men. He does not mention dreams, though viſions of the night, would have ſuited the verſe (if the book be in metre) altogether as well as trembling.—It could not ſurely be a wind, as ſome tranſlate the word רוח. Becauſe the circumſtance of ſtanding ſtill is not ſo compatible with the nature of a wind; and a wind would have paſſed above him, all around him, as well as before him. Not to add, how low a remark it is, and how unworthy of a place in ſo auguſt a deſcription, that he could not diſcern the form of a wind.—It ſeems, therefore, to have been a real ſpirit: either angelical, as were thoſe which preſented themſelves to Abraham reſting at the door of his tent, and to Lot ſitting in the gate of Sodom; or elſe the ſpirit of ſome departed ſaint, as in the caſe of Samuel's apparition, or the famous appearance of Moſes and Elijah on the mount of tranſfiguration.—A ſpirit, aſſuming ſome vehicle, in order to become viſible to the human eye: which, accordingly, Eliphaz ſaw, exhibiting itſelf as an object of ſight; but ſaw ſo obſcurely and indiſtinctly, that he was not able either to deſcribe its aſpect, or to diſcern whom it reſembled.

‡ I have given this ſolemn picture a modern dreſs, rather for the ſake of variety and illuſtration, than from any apprehenſion of improving the admirable original. Such an attempt, I am ſenſible, would be more abſurdly vain, than to lacquer gold, or paint the diamond. The deſcription, in Eliphaz's own language, is awful and affecting to the laſt degree; a night-piece, dreſſed in all the circumſtances of the deepeſt horror. I queſtion whether Shakeſpeare himſelf, though ſo peculiarly happy for his great command of terrifying images, has any thing ſuperior or comparable to this. The judges of fine compoſition ſee the maſterly ſtrokes; and I believe, the moſt ordinary reader feels them, chilling his blood, and awakening emotions of dread in his boſom.

‖ There ſeems to be a ſignificant, and beautiful gradation in the Vel quoque per ſomnos vulgo exanduta Parentes

Ingens, a ſolitario non deficit agmine Manes.
Diſque ſub aſpectum venêre videntibus Umbræ.—VIRG.

† The ſtory of Brutus, and his evil genius, is well known. Nor muſt it be denied, that the preciſe words of the ſpectre to the hero were, I'll meet thee at Philippi. But as this would not anſwer my purpoſe, I was obliged to make an alteration in the circumſtance of place.

‡ Amos iv. 12.

"He put no such trust in his most exalted servants, as "should bespeak them incapable of defect. And his "very angels he charged with folly," in finding, even in the highest perfection of their holiness, infinitely beneath his transcendent glories; as failing, even in all the fidelity of their obedience, inexpressibly short of the homage due to his adorable Majesty. If angelic natures must not presume to justify either themselves, or their services, before uncreated purity; how much more were absurd is such a notion, how much more impious such an attempt, in them that dwell in houses of clay, whose original is from the dust, and whose state is all imperfection!"

I would observe from hence, the very singular necessity of that poverty of spirit, which entirely renounces its own attainments; and most thankfully submits to the righteousness of the incarnate GOD.—To inculcate this lesson; the Son of the Blessed came down from heaven; and pressed no other principle, with so repeated * an importunity on his hearers. To instil the same doctrine, the HOLY GHOST touched the lips of the apostles with sacred eloquence; and made it an eminent part of their commission, "to demolish every high imagination." That no expedient might be wanting, to give it a deep and lasting efficacy on the human mind; a phantom arises from the valley of the shadow of death, or a teacher descends from the habitation of spirits.—Whatever then we neglect, let us not neglect to cultivate this grace, which has been so variously taught, so powerfully enforced.

HARK! a direful voice.—With sudden starts, and hideous screams, it disturbs the silence of the peaceful night. 'Tis the screech-owl, sometimes in frantic, sometimes in disconsolate accents, uttering her woes †. She flies the vocal grove, and shuns the society of all the feathered choir. The blooming gardens, and flowery meads, have no charms for her. Obscene shades, ragged ruins, and walls overgrown with ivy, are her favourite haunts. Above, the mouldering precipice nods, and threatens a fall; below, the toad crawls, or the poisonous adder hisses. The sprightly morning, which awakens other animals into joy, administers no pleasure to this gloomy recluse. Even the smiling face of day is her aversion; and all its lovely scenes create nothing but uneasiness.

So, just so, would it fare with the ungodly, were it possible to suppose their admission into the chaste and bright abodes of endless felicity. They would find nothing but disappointment and shame, even at the fountain-head of happiness and honour.—For how could the tongue, habituated to profaneness, taste any delight in the harmonious iterations of heaven? How could the eye, enamoured with shade, relish the scenes of everliving praise? Where would be the satisfaction of the soul, treasuring the Superlative grandeur? Since, in the temple of the skies, no incense of flattery would be addressed to the former; nor any officious homage paid to the latter.—The spotless and inconceivable purity of the blessed GOD, would flash confusion on the lascivious eye. The envious mind must be on a rack of self-tormenting passions, to observe millions of happy beings, shining in all the perfections of glory, and solacing themselves in the fulness of joy.—In short, the unsanctified soul, amidst holy and triumphant spirits, even in the refined regions of bliss and immortality, would be like this melancholy bird, disfigured from her darksome retirement, and imprisoned under the beams of day.

The voice of this creature screaming at our windows, or of the raven croaking over our houses, is they say, a token of approaching death. There are persons who would regard such an incident with no small degree of solicitude. Trivial as it is, it would damp their spirits, perhaps break their rest.—One cannot but wonder, that people should suffer themselves to be affrighted at such fantastical, and yet be quite unaffected with real presages of their dissolution. Real presages of this awful event address us from every quarter. What are these incumbent glooms, which overwhelm the world, but a kind of pall provided for nature; and an image of that long night, which will quickly cover the inhabitants of the whole earth? What an affinity has the sleep †, which will very soon weigh down my drowsy eye-lids, with that state of entire cessation, in which all my senses must be laid aside! The silent chamber, and the bed of slumber, are very significant representations of the land, where all things are hushed, all things are forgotten.—What means that deep death-bell sent, which, the other evening, quickened the air? Laden with heavier accents, it struck our ears, and seemed to knock at the door of our hearts. Surely, it brought a lesson to surviving mortals, and thus the tidings ran: "Mortals, the destroyer of your race is on "his way. The last enemy has passed the gulph; and "is gaining ground upon you every moment. His "paths are strewed with heaps of slain. Even now, his "javelin has laid one of your neighbours in the dust; "and will soon, very soon, aim the inevitable blow at "each of your lives."

We need not go down to the charnel-house, nor carry our search into the repositories of the dead, in order to find memorials of our impending doom. A multitude of these remembrancers are planted in all our paths, and point the heedless passengers to their long home. I can hardly enter a considerable town, but I meet the funeral procession, or the mourners going about the streets. The hatchment suspended on the wall, or the crape streaming in the air, are silent intimations, that both rich and poor have been emptying their houses, and replenishing their sepulchres. I can scarce join in any conversation, but mention is

* It is well worthy of our observation, says an excellent commentator, "That no one sentence uttered by our LORD, is so frequently repeated as this: Whosoever shall exalt himself, shall be abased; and he that shall humble himself, shall be exalted." Which often occurs in the evangelists; but is never duly accomplished in us, unless we disclaim all pretension to merit and righteousness of our own, and seek them only in the atonement and obedience of JESUS CHRIST.

† Eclogue culminibus ferali carmine bubo
Sæpe queri, longasque in fletum ducere voces.

Thus sung that charming genius, that prince of the ancient poets, that most consummate master of elegance and accuracy; all whose sentiments are nature, whose every description is a picture, whose whole language is music.—VIRGIL.

* I would beg of the reader to observe, with what propriety our LORD touches this important point, in his memorable reply to Nicodemus. Verily, verily I say unto thee, except a man be born again, he CANNOT enter into the kingdom of heaven. I wave the authority of the supreme Judge, and speak with the confidence of a teacher in Israel. I might, without being liable to the least control, pass a sovereign decree, that unrenewed mortals, who are flesh, so corrupt, appetite, SHALL NOT enter the habitations of the pure; I might choose to represent it as a case of impossibility, and charge the impossibility, not upon divine severity, but upon human guilt. Sense perfects, from the very nature of things, preclude the sinful; their incapacities, their own minds; and contrariety cannot be reconciled, before which the whole [illegible] are as nothing. Locke in loc.

† Et consanguineus lethi sopor. VIRG.

made of some that are given over by the physician, and hovering on the confines of eternity! of others, that have just dropt their clay amidst weeping friends, and are gone to appear before the Judge of all the earth? There's not a news-paper comes to my hand, but, amidst all its entertaining narrations, reads several serious lectures of mortality. What else are the repeated accounts—of age worn out by slow-consuming sicknesses—of youth dashed to pieces by some sudden stroke of casuality—of patriots exchanging their seats in the senate for a lodging in the tomb—of misers resigning their breath, and (O relentless destiny!) leaving their very riches for others? Even the vehicles of our amusement are registers of the deceased; and the voice of fame seldom sounds, but in concert with a knell.

These monitors croud every place; not so much as the scenes of our diversion excepted. What are the decorations of our public buildings, and the most elegant furniture of our parlours, but the imagery of death, and trophies of the tomb? That marble bust, and those gilded pictures, how solemnly they recognize the fate of others, and speakingly remind us of our own! I see, I hear, and O! I feel this great truth. It is interwoven with my constitution. The frequent decays of the structure foretel its final ruin. What are all the pains, that have been darted through my limbs; what every disease, that has assaulted my health; but the advanced guards of the foe? What are the languors and weariness that attend the labours of each revolving day, but the more secret practices of the adversary, slowly undermining the earthly tabernacle?

Amidst so many notices, shall we go on thoughtless and unconcerned? Can none of these prognostics, which are sure as oracles, awaken our attention, and engage our circumspection? Noah, 'tis written, being warned of GOD, prepared an ark. Imitate, my soul, imitate this excellent example. Admonished by such a cloud of witnesses, be continually putting thyself in a readiness for the last change. Let not that day, of which thou hast so many infallible signs, come upon thee unawares.—Get the world unlearned, and thy affections disentangled from this enchanting world, that thou mayest be able to quit it with reluctance. Get the dreadful hand-writing cancelled, and all thy sins blotted out, that thou mayest depart in peace, and have nothing to fear at the decisive tribunal. Get, O! get thyself interested in the Redeemer's merits, and transformed into his sacred image; then shalt thou be meet for the inheritance of saints in light, and mayest even desire to be dissolved, and to be with CHRIST.

SOMETIMES in my evening-walk I have heard

~~—The wakeful bird~~

~~Sing darkling, and in shadiest covert hid,~~

~~Tune her nocturnal note~~ *.

How different the airs of this charming songster, from those harsh and boding outcries! The little creature ran through all the variations of music; and shewed herself mistress of every grace, which constitutes or embellishes harmony.—Sometimes she swells a manly throat, and her song kindles into ardor. The tone is so bold, and strikes with such energy, you would imagine the sprightly serenader in the very next thicket. Anon the strain languishes, and the mournful warbler melts into tenderness. Her melancholy notes just steal upon the shades, and faintly touch your ear; or, in soft and sadly-pleasing accents, they seem to die along the distant vale.—Silence is pleased, and night listens to the trilling tale.

What an invitation is this, to slip away from the thronged city! This coy and modest minstrel entertains only the lovers of retirement. Those who are carousing over the bowls, are ranting at the riotous club, lose this feast of harmony.—In like manner, the pleasures of religion, and the joy of reconciliation with GOD; the satisfactions arising from an established interest in CHRIST, and from the prospect of a blissful immortality; these are all lost to the mind, that is ever in the croud, and dares not, or delights not, to retire into itself.—Are we charmed with the nightingale's song? Do we wish to have it near, and hear it oftener? Let us seek a renewed heart, and a resigned will; a conscience that whispers peace, and passions that are tuned by grace. Then shall we never want a melody in our own breasts, far more inspiring than sweet Philomela's sweetest strains.

As different as the voices of these birds, are the circumstances of those few persons who continue awake.—Some are squandering, pearls shall I say, or kingdoms? No; but what is unspeakably more precious, time; squandering this inestimable talent, with the most senseless prodigality. Not content with allowing a few spare minutes for the purpose of necessary recreation, they lavish many hours, devote whole nights, to that idle diversion of shuffling, ranging, and detaching a set of painted pasteboards.—Others, instead of this busy trifling, act the part of their own tormentors. They even piquet themselves *, and call it amusement; they are torn by wild horses, yet term it a sport. What else is the gamester's practice? His mind is stretched on the tenter-hooks of anxious suspence, and agitated by the fiercest extremes of hope and fear. While the dice are rattling, his heart is throbbing; his fortune is tottering: and, possibly, at the very next throw, the one sinks in the gulf of ruin, and the other is hurried into the rage of distraction.

Some, snatched from the bloom of health, and the lap of plenty, are confined to the chamber of sickness; where they are constrained, either to plunge into the everlasting world, in an unprepared condition; or else (sad alternative!) to think over all the follies of a heedless life, and all the bitterness of approaching death. The disease rages; it baffles the force of medicine; and urges the reluctant wretch to the brink of the precipice. While furies rouse the conscience, and point at the bottomless pit below.—Perhaps, his drooping mother, deprived long ago of the husband of her bosom, and bereft of all her other offspring, is, even now, receiving the blow which consummates her calamities †. In vain she tries to assuage the sorrows of a beloved son; in vain she attempts, with her tender offices, to prolong a life dearer than her own. He faints in her arms; he bows his head; he sinks in death. Fatal, doubly fatal, that last expiring pang! While it dislodges the unwilling soul, it rends an only child from the yearning embraces of a parent, and tears away the support of her age, from a disconsolate widow.

While those long for a reprieve, others invite the stroke. Quite weary of the world, with a restless impatience,

* MILT. Par. Lost, b. III. l. 38.

* Alluding to a very painful punishment inflicted on delinquents among the soldiery.

† This brings to my mind one of the deepest mourning pieces extant in the productions of the pen. The sacred historian paints it in all the simplicity of style, yet with all the strength of colouring.—When JESUS came nigh to the gate of the city, behold! there was a dead man carried out, the only son of his mother, and she was a widow.—What a gradation is here! How pathetically beautiful! Every fresh circumstance widens the wound; aggravates the calamity; till the description is worked up into the most finished picture of exquisite and inconsolable distress.—He was a young man; cut off in the flower of life, amidst a thousand gay expectations, and smiling hopes. A son; an only son; the afflicted mother's all: so that none remained to preserve the name, or perpetuate the family. What rendered the case still more deplorable, she was a widow: left entirely desolate; abandoned to her woes; without any to share her sorrows, or to comfort her under the irreparable loss.—Is not this a fine sketch of the impassioned and picturesque? Who can consider the narrative with any attention, and not feel his heart penetrated with a tender commiseration? Luke vii. 12.

patience, they ſigh for diſſolution: ſome pining away under the tedious decays of an incurable conſumption; or gaſping for breath, and almoſt ſuffocated by an inundation of dropſical waters. On ſome a relentleſs cancer has faſtened its envenomed teeth; and is gnawing them, though in the midſt of bodily vigour, in the midſt of pitying friends, gradually to death. Others are on a rack of agonies, by convulſive fits of the ſtone. O! how the pain writhes their limbs; how the ſweat bedews their fleſh; and their eye-balls wildly roll! Methinks the night condoles with theſe her diſtreſſed children: and ſheds dewy tears over their ſorrowful abodes. But of all mortals, they are the moſt exquiſitively miſerable, who groan beneath the preſſure of a melancholy mind, or ſmart under the laſhes of a reſentful conſcience. Though robed in ermine, or covered with jewels, the ſtate of a ſlave chained to the gallies, or of an exile condemned to the mines, is a perfect paradiſe compared with theirs.

O! that the votaries of mirth, whoſe life is a continued round of merriment and whim, would beſtow one ſerious reflection on this variety of human woes! It might teach them to be leſs enamoured with the few languid ſweets that are thinly ſcattered through this vale of tears, and environed with ſuch a multitude of ragged thorns. It might teach them no longer to dance away their years, with a giddy rambling impulſe; but to aſpire with a determined aim, after thoſe happy regions, where delights, abundant and unembittered, flow.

Can there be circumſtances, which a man of wiſdom would more earneſtly deprecate, than theſe ſeveral inſtances of grievous tribulation? There are; and, what is very aſtoniſhing, they are frequently the deſire and the choice of thoſe, who fancy themſelves the ſole heirs of happineſs: thoſe I mean, who are launching out into the depths of extravagance, and running exceſſive lengths of riot: who are proſtituting their reputation, and ſacrificing their peace, to the gratification of their luſts; ſapping the foundation of their health, in debaucheries; or ſhipwrecking the intereſts of their families, in their bowls; and, what is worſe, are forfeiting the joys of an eternal heaven, for the ſordid ſatisfactions of the beaſt; for the tranſitory ſenſations of an hour.—Ye ſlaves of appetite, how far am I from envying your groſs ſenſualities, and voluptuous revels! Little, ah! little are you ſenſible, that, while Indulgence ſhowers her roſes, and Luxury diffuſes her odours, they ſcatter poiſons alſo, and ſhed unheeded *bane: evils incomparably more malignant, than the wormwood and gall of the ſharpeſt affliction.—Since death is in the drunkard's cup, and worſe than poniards in the harlot's embrace, may it ever be the privilege of the man whom I love, to go without his ſhare of theſe peſtilent ſweets †!

ABUNDANCE of living ſparks glitter in the lanes, and twinkle under the hedges. I ſuppoſe they are the glow-worms; which have lighted their little lamps, and obtained leave, through the abſence of the ſun, to play a feeble beam. A faint glimmer juſt ſerves to render them perceivable, without tending at all to diſſipate the ſhades, or making any amends for the departed day.—Should ſome weather-beaten traveller, dropping with wet, and ſhivering with cold, hover round this mimicry of fire, in order to dry his garments, and warm his benumbed limbs: ſhould ſome bewildered traveller, groping for his way, in a ſtarleſs night, and trackleſs deſert, take one of theſe languid tapers for a light to his feet, and a lantern to his path: how certainly would both the one and the other be fruſtrated of their expectation!—And are they more likely to ſucceed, who, neglecting that ſovereign balm, which diſtilled from the croſs, apply any carnal diverſion, to heal the anxiety of the mind? who, deaf to the infallible deciſions of revelation, reſign themſelves over to the erroneous conjectures of reaſon, in order to find the way that leadeth unto life? or, laſtly, who have recourſe to the froth of this vain world, for a ſatisfactory portion, and a ſubſtantial happineſs? Their conduct is in no degree wiſer; their diſappointment equally ſure; and their miſcarriage infinitely more diſaſtrous. To ſpeak in the delicate language of a ſacred writer, "They ſow the "wind, and will reap the whirlwind."

To ſpeak more plainly; the pleaſures of the world, which we are all ſo prone to dote upon; and the powers of fallen reaſon, which ſome are ſo apt to idolize; are not only vain, but treacherous: not only a painted flame, like theſe ſparkling animals; but much like thoſe unctuous exhalations, which ariſe from the marſhy ground, and often dance before the eyes of the benighted wayfaring man. Kindled into a ſort of fire, they perſonate a guide, and ſeem to offer their ſervice; but, blazing with deluſive light, miſlead their followers into hidden pits, headlong precipices, and unfathomable gulfs; where, far from his beloved friends, far from all hopes of ſuccour, the unhappy wanderer is ſwallowed up and loſt.

NOT long ago, we obſerved a very ſurpriſing appearance in the weſtern ſky. A prodigious ſtar took its flaming route through thoſe coaſts; and trailed, as it paſſed, a tremendous length of fire, almoſt over half the heavens. Some, I imagine, viewed the portentous ſtranger, with much the ſame anxious amazement, as Belſhazzar beheld the hand writing upon the wall. Some looked upon it as a bloody ‡ flag, hung out by divine reſentment, over a guilty world. Some read, in its glaring viſage, the fate of nations, and the fall of kingdoms ‖.——To others, it ſhook, or ſeemed to ſhake, peſtilence and war from its horrid hair. For my part, I am not ſo ſuperſtitious as to regard what every aſtrologer has to prognoſticate, upon the acceſſion of a comet, or the projection of its huge, vaporous train. Nothing can be more precarious and unjuſtifiable, than to draw ſuch concluſions from ſuch events: ſince they neither are preternatural effects,

* Hoſ. viii. 7.

† I hope it will be obſerved, that I am far from decrying that noble faculty of reaſon, when exerted in her proper ſphere; when acting in a deferential ſubordination to the revealed will of heaven. While ſhe exerciſes her powers within theſe appointed limits, ſhe is unſpeakably ſerviceable, and cannot be too induſtriouſly cultivated.—But, when ſhe ſets up herſelf in proud contradiſtinction to the ſacred oracles; when, all-arrogant and ſelf-ſufficient, ſhe ſays to the word of ſcripture, I have no need of thee: ſhe is then, I muſt be bold to maintain, not only a glow-worm, but an ignis fatuus; not only a bubble, but a ſnare.

May not this remark, with the ſtricteſt propriety, and without the leaſt limitation, be applied to the generality of our modern romances, novels, and theatrical entertainments? Theſe are commonly calculated to inflame a wanton fancy; or, if conducted with ſo much modeſty, as not to debauch the affections, they pervert the judgment, and bewilder the taſte. By their incredible adventures; their extravagant parade of gallantry; and their characters, widely different from truth and nature; they inſpire fooliſh conceits; anger idle expectations; intrude a diſguſt of genuine hiſtory; and miſlead their admirers, to acquieſce in the groſs civilities, or to reliſh the ſober ſatisfactions, of common life.

* Yet, in the flow'rs that wreathe the ſparkling bowl, Fell adders hiſs, and pois'nous ſerpents roll. PRIOR's Sol.

† Quàm ſuave eſt ſuavitatibus iſtis carere! was St Auguſtine's pious exclamation. The ſubſtance of which Mr Pope has expreſſed, with more ſimplicity, and with no leſs dignity.

Count all th' advantage proſp'rous vice attains;
'Tis but what virtue flies from, and diſdains.

‡ —Liquidus humor ſanguine guttas
Sanguineas ingubre ſudet.— VIRG.

‖ —Comantem cometen
Sideris, et terris mutantem regna cometem. LUCAN.

nor

nor do they throw the frame of things into any disorder. I would rather adore that omnipotent Being, who rolled those stupendous orbs from his creating hand; and leads them, by his providential eye, through immeasurable tracts of æther: who bids them, now approach the sun, and glow with unsufferable ardors *; now retreat to the utmost bounds of our planetary system, and make their entry among other worlds.

They are harmless visitants. I acquit them from the charge of causing, or being accessary to, desolating plagues. Would to GOD, there were no other more formidable indications of approaching judgment, or impending ruin! But, alas! when vice becomes predominant, and irreligion almost epidemical: when the sabbaths of a jealous GOD are notoriously profaned; and that "name, which is great, wonderful, and holy," is prostituted to the meanest, or abused to the most execrable purposes: when the worship of our great Creator and Preserver is banished from many of the most conspicuous families; and it is deemed a piece of rude impertinence, so much as to mention the gracious Redeemer, in our genteel interviews: when it passes for an elegant freedom of behaviour, to ridicule the mysteries of Christianity; and a species of refined conversation, to taint the air with lascivious hints: when those who sit in the scorner's chair, rule with a high hand: and many of those who wear the professor's garb, are destitute of the power, and content themselves with the mere form of godliness: when such is the state of a community, there is reason, too apparent reason, to be horribly afraid. Such phænomena, abounding in the moral world, are not fanciful, but real omens. Will not an injured GOD "be avenged on such a nation as this?" Will he not be provoked to "sweep it with the besom of destruction †?"

O! that the inhabitants of Great Britain would lay these alarming considerations to heart! The LORD of hosts has commanded the sword of civil discord to return into its sheath. But have we returned every one from his evil ways? Are we become a renewed people; devoted to a dying Saviour; and zealous of good works? What mean those peals of sobs, which burst from the repenting crowds? What mean those melancholy moans, where the lusty droves were wont to low ‡? What mean those arrows of untimely death, discharged on our innocent and useful animals?

No wantonness or sloth has vitiated the blood of these laborious, temperate creatures. They have contracted no disease from unseasonable indulgencies, and inordinate revellings. The pure stream is their drink; the simple herb their repast. Neither care disturbs their sleep, nor passion inflames their breast. Whence then are they visited with such terrible disorders, as no prudence can prevent, nor any medicines heal?——Surely, these calamities are the weapons of divine displeasure, and manifest chastisements of an evil generation ‡. Surely GOD, the "GOD to whom vengeance belongeth," has still a controversy with our sinful land. And who can tell, where the visitation will end? what storm may follow these prelusive drops?—O! that we may "hear "the rod, and who hath appointed it!" Taught by these general effects of our disobedience, may we remove the accursed thing † from our tents; our practices; our hearts. May we turn from all ungodliness, before wrath come upon us to the uttermost; before iniquity prove our ruin!

SOMETIMES, at this hour, another most remarkable sight amuses the curious, and alarms the vulgar. A blaze of lambent meteors is kindled, or some extraordinary lights are refracted, in the quarters of the north.—The streams of radiance, like legions rushing to the engagement, meet and mingle, insomuch that the air seems to be all conflicting fire. Within a while they start from one another; and, like legions in precipitate flight, sweep, each a separate way, through the firmament. Now they are quiescent; anon they are thrown into a quivering motion; presently the whole horizon is illuminated with the glancing flames. Sometimes, with an aspect awfully ludicrous, they represent extravagant and antic vagaries: at other times you would suspect that some invisible hand was playing off the dumb artillery of the skies; and, by a strange expedient, giving us the flash, without the roar.

The villagers gaze at the spectacle, first with wonder, then with horror. A general panic seizes the country. Every heart throbs, and every face is pale. The crouds that flock together, instead of diminishing, increase the dread. They catch contagion from each other's looks and words; while fear is in every eye, and every tongue speaks the language of terror. Some in hideous shapes, armies mixing in fierce encounter, or fields swimming with blood. Some foresee direful events, states overthrown, or mighty monarchs totter-ing on their thrones. Others, scared with still more frightful apprehensions, think of nothing but the day of doom. "Sure," says one, "the unalterable hour "is struck, and the end of all things come."——"See," replies another, "how the blasted stars look wan! "Are not these the signs of the Son of man, coming in "the clouds of heaven?"——"JESUS prepare us" (cries a third, and lifts his eyes in devotion) "for the Arch-"angel's trump, and the great tribunal!"

If this waving brightness, which plays innocently over our heads, be so amazing to multitudes; what inexpressible consternation must overwhelm unthinking mortals, when the general conflagration commences! The day, the dreadful day, is approaching, "in the which the "heavens shall pass away with a great noise ‡, and the

* "The comet in the year 1680, according to Sir Isaac Newton's "computation, was, in its nearest approach, above 166 times "nearer the sun than the earth is. Consequently, its heat was "then 28,000 times greater than that of summer. So that a ball "of iron as big as the earth, heated by it, would hardly become "cool in 50,000 years." DERH. Astr. Theol. p. 237.

† Is. xiv. 23. The eternal Sovereign, speaking of Babylon, denounces this threatening, I will sweep it with the besom of destruction—What a noble, but dreadful image, is here! How strongly and awfully pourtrayed! How pregnant also in its signification! intimating the vile nature, and expressing the total extirpation, of this wicked people; at the same time, suggesting the perfect ease with which the righteous GOD would execute his intended vengeance.

‡ If these papers should be so happy as to outlive their author, perhaps, it may be needful to inform posterity, that the above-mentioned hints allude to a most terrible, contagious, and mortal distemper, raging among the horned-cattle in various parts of the kingdom.

*Hinc lætis vituli vulgo moriuntur in herbis,
Et dulces animas plena ad præsepia reddunt.
Balatu hinc pecorum, et crebris mugitibus amnes, Arentesque sonant ripæ, collesque supini. VIRG.

† Josh. vi. 18.

‡ 2 Pet. iii. 10. I have often thought this verse an eminent instance of that kind of beautiful writing, in which the very sound bears a sort of significancy; at least, carries an exact correspondence with the sense. The original expression—ροιζηδον—is one of the hoarsest and deepest words in language. Nothing could be more exquisitely adapted to affect the ear, as well as impress the imagination, with the wreck of nature, and the crash of a falling world.—I scarce ever read this clause, but it brings to my mind that admired description in MILTON:

——On a sudden open fly,
With impetuous recoil, and jarring sound,
Th' infernal doors, and on their hinges grate
Harsh thunder.—— Book II. l. 879.

It is a pleasing employ, and a very laudable office of true criticism, to point out these inferior recommendations of the sacred

"elements shall melt with fervent heat; the earth also,
"and all the works that are therein, shall be burnt up."
That mighty hand, which once opened the windows from on high, and broke up the fountains of the great deep, will then unlock all the magazines of fire, and pour a second deluge upon the earth. The vengeful flames, kindled by the breath of the Almighty, spread themselves from the centre to the circumference. Nothing can withstand their impetuosity; nothing can escape their rage. Universal desolation attends their progress. Magnificent palaces, and solemn temples, are laid in ashes. Spacious cities, and impregnable towers, are mingled in one smoking mass. Not only the productions of human art, but the works of almighty power, are fuel for the devouring element. The everlasting mountains melt, like the snows which cover their summit. Even vast oceans serve only to augment the inconceivable rapidity and fury of the blaze.—O! how shall I, or others, stand undismayed amidst the glare of a burning world, unless the LORD JEHOVAH be our defence? How shall we be upheld in security, when the globe itself is sinking in a fiery ruin, unless the Rock of Ages be our support?

BEHOLD! a new spectacle of of wonder! The moon is making her entry on the eastern sky. See her rising in clouded majesty! opening, as it were, and asserting her original commission to rule over the night. All grand and stately, but somewhat sullied is her aspect. However, she brightens as she advances; and grows clearer, as she climbs higher; till, at length, her silver loses all its dross; she unveils her peerless light; and becomes "the beauty of heaven, the glory of the stars *;" delighting every eye, and chearing the whole world, with the brightness of her appearance, and the softness of her splendors.—O! thou queen of the shades! may it be my ambition to follow this thy instructive example! While others are fond to transcribe the fashions of little courts, and to mimic personages of inferior size; be it mine to imitate thy improving purity! May my conduct become more unblemished, and my temper more refined, as I proceed farther and farther in my probationary course! May every sordid desire wear away; and every irregular appetite be gradually lost, as I make nearer approaches to the celestial mansions!—Will not this be a comfortable evidence, that I too shall shine in my adored Redeemer's kingdom? shine with a richer lustre, than that which radiates from thy resplendent orb; shine with an unfading lustre, when every ray that beams from thy beauteous sphere, is totally extinguished?

THE day afforded us a variety of entertaining sights. These were all withdrawn, at the accession of darkness. The stars, kindly officious, immediately lent us their aid. This served to alleviate the frown of night, rather than to recover the objects from their obscurity. A faint ray, scarcely reflected, and not from the entire surface of things, gave the straining eye a very imperfect glimpse; such as rather mocked, than satisfied vision.—Now the moon is risen, and has collected all her beams, the veil is taken off from the countenance of nature. I see the recumbent flocks; I see the green hedge-rows, though without the feathered choristers hopping from spray to spray. In short, I see once again the world's great picture; not indeed in its late lively colours, but more delicately shaded and arrayed in softer charms †.

sacred classics. Though, I believe, the inspired writers themselves, amidst all the elevation and magnificence of their divine ideas, disdained a scrupulous attention to such little niceties of style.

* Eccles xliii. 9.

———Lucidum cœli decus. HOR.

† ——Now reigns
Full orb'd the moon, and with more pleasing light
Shadowy sets off the face of things.— MILT.

What a majestic scene is here! incomparably grand, and exquisitely fine!—The moon, like an immense crystal lamp, pendent in the magnificent ceiling of the heavens. The stars, like so many thousands of golden tapers, fixed in their azure sockets. All pouring their lustre on spacious cities, and lofty mountains; glittering on the ocean; gleaming on the forest; and opening a prospect, wide as the eye can glance, more various than fancy can paint *.——We are forward to admire the performances of human art. A landscape, elegantly designed, and executed with a masterly hand; a piece of statuary, which seems, amidst all the recommendations of exact proportion, and graceful attitude, to soften into flesh, and almost breathe with life; these little imitations of nature, we behold with a pleasing surprise. And shall we be less affected, less delighted, with the inexpressibly-noble, and completely-finished original!—The ample dimensions of Ranelagh's dome; the gay illuminations of Vaux-hall grove; I should scorn to mention on such an occasion, were they not the objects of general admiration. Shall we be charmed with those puny essays of finite ingenuity; and touched with no transport, at this stupendous display of omnipotent skill? at the august grandeur, and shining stateliness, of the firmament! which forms an alcove for ten thousand worlds, and is ornamented with myriads of everlasting luminaries.—Surely, this must betray, not only a total want of religion, but the most abject littleness of mind, and the utmost poverty of genius.

The moon is not barely "an ornament in the high "places of the LORD †," but of signal service to the inhabitants of the earth.—How uncomfortable is deep, pitchy, total darkness! especially in the long absence of the winter's sun. Welcome therefore, thrice welcome, this auspicious gift of Providence, to enliven the nocturnal gloom, and line with silver the raven-coloured mantle of night.—How desirable to have our summer-evenings illuminated! that we may be able to tread the dewy meads, and breathe the delicious fragrance of our gardens; especially, when the sultry heats render it irksome and fatiguing, to walk abroad by day.—How chearing to the shepherd, the rise of this universal lantern; as he tends his fleecy charge, or late configns them to their hurdled cots! How comfortable and how advantageous to the mariner, as he ploughs the midnight-main, to adjust the tackling, to explore his way, and, under the influence of this beaming sconce, to avoid the fatal rock!—For these, and other beneficial purposes, the hand of the ALMIGHTY has hung the stately branch on high: and filled it with a splendor, not confined to a single edifice, or commensurate to a particular square, but diffusive as the whole extent of the hemisphere.

The most faithful of our inferior servants are sometimes tardy in their office, sometimes negligent of their duty. But this celestial attendant is most exactly punctual, at all the stated periods of her ministra-

* As when the moon, refulgent lamp of night,
O'er heav'n's clear azure spreads her sacred light;
When not a breath disturbs the deep serene,
And not a cloud o'ercasts the solemn scene:
Around her throne the vivid planets roll,
And stars unnumber'd gild the glowing pole;
O'er the dark trees a yellower verdure shed,
And tip with silver ev'ry mountain's head:
Then shine the vales: the rocks in prospect rise;
A flood of glory bursts from all the skies:
The conscious swains, rejoicing in the sight,
Eye the blue vault, and bless the useful light. POPE'S HOM. ILIAD VIII.

I transcribe these lines, because Mr Pope says, they exhibit, in the original, the finest night-piece in poetry. And, if they are so beautiful in Homer's language, who can suspect their suffering any disadvantage from the pen of his admirable translator?

† Eccles xliii. 9.

tion. If we chuſe to prolong our journey, after the ſun is gone down; the moon, during her whole increaſe, is always ready to act in the capacity of a guide. If we are inclined to ſet out very early in the morning; the moon in her decreaſe prevents the dawn, on purpoſe to offer her aſſiſtance. And, becauſe it is ſo pleaſant a thing for the eyes to behold the light, the moon, at her full, by a courſe of unintermitted waiting, gives us, as it were, a double day.—How apparently has the divine wiſdom intereſted itſelf, in providing even for the pleaſurable accommodation of man! How deſirous, that he ſhould want no piece of commodious furniture, no kind of delightful convenience! and, in proſecution of theſe benevolent intentions, has annexed ſo valuable an appendage to the terreſtrial globe.——Juſtly, therefore, does the pſalmiſt celebrate that admirable conſtitution, which ordained the moon and the ſtars to govern the night, as an inſtance of rich goodneſs *and of mercy which endureth for ever.

THE moon, it is confeſſed, is no luminous body. All the brightneſs, which beautifies her countenance, is originally in the ſun, and no more than tranſmiſſively in her. That glorious orb is the parent of day, and the palace of light. From thence the morning-ſtar gilds her horn†; from thence the planetary circles are crowned with luſtre; and from thence the moon derives all her ſilver radiance.—It is pleaſing to reflect, that ſuch is the caſe with the all-ſufficient Redeemer, and his dependent people. We are repleniſhed from his fulneſs. What do we poſſeſs, which we have not received; and what can we deſire, which we may not expect; from that never-failing ſource of all good? He is the author of our faith, and the former of our graces. In his unſpotted life, we ſee the path; in his meritorious death, the price; and in his triumphant reſurrection, the proof, of bliſs and immortality. If we offend, and fall ſeven times a-day; he is the LORD our peace‡. If we are depraved, and our beſt deeds very unworthy; he is the LORD our righteouſneſs §. If we are blind, and even brutiſh, in heavenly knowledge; he is the LORD our wiſdom ‖: his word diſpels the ſhades; his Spirit ſcatters the intellectual gloom; his eye looks our darkneſs into day. In ſhort, we are nothing, and "CHRIST is all." Worſe than defective in ourſelves, "we are complete in him." So that if we ſhine, it is with delegated rays, and with borrowed light. We act by a ſtrength, and glory in merits, not our own!—O! may we be thoroughly ſenſible of our dependence on the Saviour! May we conſtantly imbibe his propitious beams; and never, by indulging unbelief or backſliding into folly, withdraw our ſouls from his benign influences! leſt we loſe our comfort, and our holineſs; as the fair ruler of the night loſes her ſplendor, when her urn is turned from its fountain ¶, and receives no more communications of ſolar boſſulgence.

THE moon is inceſſantly varying, either in her aſpect, or her ſtages.—Sometimes ſhe looks full upon us, and her viſage is all luſtre. Sometimes ſhe appears in profile, and ſhews us only half her enlightened face. Anon a radiant creſcent but juſt adorns her brow. Soon it dwindles into a ſlender ſtreak; till, at length, all her beauty vaniſhes, and ſhe becomes a beamleſs orb.—Sometimes ſhe riſes with the deſcending day, and begins her proceſſion amidſt admiring multitudes. Ere long ſhe defers her progreſs till the midnight-watches, and ſteals unobſerved upon the ſleeping world.—Sometimes ſhe juſt enters the edges of the weſtern horizon, and drops us a ceremonious viſit. Within a while, ſhe ſets out on her nightly tour, from the oppoſite regions of the eaſt; traverſes the whole hemiſphere; and never offers to withdraw, till the more refulgent partner of her ſway renders her preſence unneceſſary.—In a word, ſhe is, while converſant among us, ſtill waxing or waning, and, "never continueth in one ſtay."

Such is the moon; and ſuch are all ſublunary things, expoſed to perpetual viciſſitudes. How often, and how ſoon, have the faint echoes of renown ſlept in ſilence, or been converted into the clamours of obloquy! The ſame lips, almoſt with the ſame breath, cry Hoſanna, and Crucify.—Have not riches confeſſed their notorious treachery, a thouſand and a thouſand times? either melting away, like ſnow in our hands, by inſenſible degrees; or eſcaping, like a winged priſoner from its cage, with a precipitate flight.—Have we not known the bridegroom's cloſet, an antechamber to the tomb; and heard the voice, which ſo lately pronounced the ſparkling pair huſband and wife, proclaim an everlaſting divorce; and ſeal the decree with the ſolemn aſſeveration, "Aſhes to aſhes, duſt to duſt?"—Our friends, though the medicine of life; our health, though the balm of nature; are a moſt precarious poſſeſſion. How ſoon may the firſt become a corpſe in our arms; and how eaſily is the laſt deſtroyed in its vigour!—You have ſeen, no doubt, a ſet of pretty pampered birds, perching on your trees, or ſporting in your meadows. You was pleaſed with the lovely viſitants, that brought beauty on their wings, and melody in their throats. But could you inſure the continuance of this agreeable entertainment? No, truly. At the leaſt diſturbing noiſe, at the leaſt terrifying appearance, they ſtart from their ſeats; they mount the ſkies; and are gone in an inſtant, are gone for ever. Would you chuſe to have a happineſs, which bears date with their arrival, and expires at their departure? If you could not be content with a portion, enjoyable only through ſuch a fortuitous term, not of years, but of moments, O! take up with nothing earthly; ſet your affections on things above; there alone is "no variableneſs or ſhadow of turning."

Job is not a more illuſtrious pattern of patience, than an eminent exemplification of this remark.—View him in his private eſtate. He heaps up ſilver as the duſt; he waſhes his ſteps in butter, and the rock pours him out rivers of oil.—View him in his public character. Princes revere his dignity; the aged liſten to his wiſdom; every eye beholds him with delight; every tongue loads him with bleſſings.—View him in his domeſtic circumſtances. On one hand, he is defended by a troop of ſons: on the other, adorned with a train of daughters; and on all ſides ſurrounded by "a very great houſehold."——Never was human felicity ſo conſummate; never was diſaſtrous revolution ſo ſudden. The lightning, which conſumed his cattle, was not more terrible, and ſcarce more inſtantaneous. The joyful parent is bereft of his offspring, and his "children are buried in death." The man of affluence is ſtript of his abundance; and he who was clothed in ſcarlet, embraces the dunghill. The venerable patriarch is the deriſion of ſcoundrels; and the late darling of an indulgent providence, is become "a brother to dragons, a companion of owls."——Nor need we go back to former ages, for proofs of this afflicting truth. In our times, in all times, the wheel continues the ſame inceſſant whirl. And frequently thoſe who are triumphing to-day in the higheſt elevations of joy, to-morrow are bemoaning the inſtability of mortal affairs, in

* Pſal. cxxxvi. 9.

† I might, to juſtify this expreſſion, obſerve, that the planet Venus, commonly called the morning-ſtar, is found, by our teleſcopes frequently to appear horned; or to have a creſcent of light, ſomewhat like the moon, a little before or after her conjunction. But this would be a remark too deep and refined for my ſcheme; which proceeds only upon ſuperficial knowledge, and the moſt obvious appearances of nature.

‡ Judg. vi. 24. § Jer. xxiii. 6. ‖ 1 Cor. i. 30.

¶ Alluding to thoſe truly poetical lines in Milton,

Hither, as to their fountain, other ſtars
Repairing, in their golden urns draw light.

Par. Loſt, b. VII. l. 364.

in the very depths of misery *.—Amidst so much fluctuation and uncertainty, how wretched is the condition, which has no anchor of the soul, sure and stedfast! May thy loving kindness, O God, be our present treasure; and thy future glory, our reversionary inheritance! Then shall our happiness, not be like the full-orbed moon, which is "a light that decreaseth in its "perfection;" but like the sun, when he goeth forth in his strength, and knoweth no other change, but that of shining more and more unto the perfect day.

METHINKS, in this ever-varying sphere, I see a representation, not only of our temporal advantages, but also of our spiritual accomplishments. Such, I am sure, is what the kind partiality of a friend would call my righteousness: and such, I am apt to suspect †, is the righteousness of every man living. Now we exercise it, in some few instances, in some little degrees. Anon sin revives, and leads our souls into a transient, though unwilling captivity. Now we are meek; but soon a ruffling accident intervenes, and turns our composure into a fretful disquietude. Now we are humble; soon we reflect upon some inconsiderable or imaginary superiority over others, and a sudden elatement swells our minds. Now, perhaps, we possess a clean heart, and are warm with holy love. But O! how easily is the purity of our affections sullied! how soon the fervour of our gratitude cooled! And is there not something amiss even in our best moments? something to be ashamed of, in all we are; something to be repented of, in all we do?

With what gladness, therefore, and adoring thankfulness, should we "submit to the righteousness of "our incarnate GOD;" and receive, as a divine gift, what cannot be acquired by human works ‡!—A writer of the first distinction, and nicest discernment, styles the obedience of our glorious Surety, an everlasting righteousness; such as was subject to no interruption, nor obscured by the least blemish; but proceeded always in the same uniform tenor, of the most spotless perfection.—This righteousness, in another sense, answers the prophets exalted description; as its beneficial and sovereign efficacy knows no end; but lasts through all our life; lasts in the trying hour of death; lasts at the decisive day of judgment; lasts through every generation; and will last to all eternity.

SOMETIMES I have seen that resplendant globe shrink of her radiance; or, according to the emphatical language of scripture, "turned into blood." The earth, interposing with its opake body, intercepted the solar rays, and cast its own gloomy shadow on the moon. The malignant influence gained upon her sickening orb; extinguished more and more, the feeble remainders of light; till at length, like one in a deep swoon, no comeliness was left in her countenance; she was totally overspread with darkness.—At this juncture, what a multitude of eyes were gazing upon the rueful spectacle! even of those eyes, which disregarded the empress of the night, or beheld her with indifference, when, robed in glory, and riding in her triumphal chariot, she shed a softer day through the nations. But now, under these circumstances of disgrace, they watch her motions with the most prying attention. In every place, her misfortune is the object of general observation; and the prevailing topic of discourse, in every company.

Is it not thus with regard to persons of eminence, in their respective spheres? Kings, at the head of their subjects; nobles, surrounded with their dependents; and (after names of so much grandeur, may I be allowed to add?) ministers labouring among their people †; are each in a conspicuous station. Their conduct, in its minutest step, especially in any miscarriage, will be narrowly surveyed, and critically scanned. Can there be a louder call, to ponder the paths of their feet, and to be particularly jealous over all their ways?—Those who move in inferior life, may grossly offend; and little alarm be given, perhaps no notice taken. But it is not to be expected, that the least slip in their carriage, the least flaw in their character, will pass undiscovered. Malice, with her eagle-eyes, will be sure to discern them; while Censure, with her shrill trumpet, will be as far from concealing them; as Calumny, with her treacherous whispers, from extenuating them. A planet may sink below the horizon; or a star, for several months, withdraw its shining; and scarce one in ten thousand perceive the loss. But, if the moon suffers a transient eclipse, almost half the world are spectators of her dishonour.

Very different was the case, when at this late hour, I have taken a solitary walk on the sea-shore, or cliff. At the foot of the steep mountain, the sea all clear and smooth, spread itself into an immense plain, and held a watery mirror to the skies. Infinite heights above, the firmament stretched its azure expanse, bespangled with unnumbered stars, and adorned with the moon, "walking in brightness ‡." She seemed to contemplate herself, with a peculiar pleasure; while the transparent surface both received, and returned her silver image. Here, instead of being covered with sackcloth, she shone with double lustre; or rather, with a lustre multiplied, in proportion to the number of beholders, and their various situations.

Such, methinks, is the effect of an exemplary behaviour, in persons of exalted rank. Their course, as it is nobly distinguished, so it will be happily influential. Others will catch the diffusive rays, and be ambitious to resemble a pattern so attracting. To commanding.

* I believe, I may venture to apply, what the Tomanite says of the affairs of the wicked, to all sublunary things, as a true description of their very great instability. Job xxii. 16. ... ... is rendered by Schultens, Flumen fusum fundamentum eorum. Their foundation (or what they reckon their most solid and stable possession) is a flood poured out.—Which is one of the boldest images, and most poetical beauties, I ever met with in any language, sacred or profane. In order to have a tolerable conception of the image, and a taste of its beauty, you must suppose a torrent of waters rushing in broken cataracts, and with impetuous rapidity, from a steep and craggy mountain. Then imagine to yourself an edifice, built upon the surge of this rolling precipice; which has no other basis than one of those headlong whirling waves. Was there ever such a representation of transitory prosperity, tending, with inconceivable swiftness, unto ruin? Yet such is every form of human felicity, that is not grounded on JESUS, and a participation of his merits, who is the Rock of Ages; on JESUS, and his image formed in our hearts, which is the hope of glory.

† I would not be understood, as measuring, in this respect, others by myself; but as taking my estimate from the unerring standard of scripture. And indeed, proceeding on this evidence, supported by this authority, I might have ventured further than a bare suspicion. For "there is not a just man upon earth that doth "good, and sinneth not," says the Spirit of inspiration by Solomon (Eccles. vii. 20.)—Nay, such is the purity, and so extensive are the demands of the divine law, that an apostle makes a still more humbling acknowledgment; "In many things we offend all." (Jam. iii. 2.)—And the unerring Teacher, who most thoroughly knew our frame, directs the most advanced, most established, and most watchful Christians, to pray daily for the forgiveness of their daily trespasses.—To which testimonies, I beg leave to add an elegant passage from the Canticles; because it not only expresses the sentiment of this paragraph, but illustrates it by the very same similitude. "She (the church) is fair as the moon; clear as the sun. Fair as the moon, the lesser and changeable light, in her sanctification; clear as the sun, the greater and invariable luminary, in her justification: the inherent holiness of believers being imperfect, and subject to many inequalities; while their imputed righteousness is every way complete, and constantly like itself. Cant. vi. 10.

‡ Rom. v. 17.—x. 3.

* Dan. ix. 24.

† Ye are the light of the world. A city that is set on an hill, cannot be hid. Matth. v. 14.

‡ Job xxxi. 26.

manding. Their amiable qualities will not terminate in themselves; but we shall see them reflected from their families, their acquaintance, their retainers. Just as we may now behold another moon, trembling * in the stream, glittering in the canal, and displaying its lovely impress on every collection of waters.

THE moon, philosophy says, is a sort of sovereign over the great deep. Her orb, like a royal sceptre, sways the ocean, and actuates the fluid realms. It swells the tides, and perpetuates the reciprocal returns of ebb and flow. By which means the liquid element purges off its filth; and is preserved from being putrefied itself, and from poisoning the world.—Is the moon thus operative on the vast abyss? And shall not the faith of eternal and infinite delights to come, be equally efficacious on this soul of mine?—Far above her argent fields, are treasures of happiness, unseen by mortal eye, by mortal ear unheard, and unconceived by any human imagination. In that desirable world, the most distinguished and exalted honours also are conferred; in comparison with which, the thrones and diadems of earthly monarchs are empty pageants, and childish toys.—Yonder arch of sapphire, with all its spangles of gold, is but the floor of those divine abodes. What then are the apartments; what is the palace? how bright with glories; how rich with bliss?

O ye mansions of blessedness; ye beauties of my Father's kingdom; which far outshine these lamps of the visible heaven; transmit your sweet and winning invitations to my heart. Attract and refine all my affections. Withdraw them from stagnating on the sordid shores of flesh; never suffer them to settle upon the impure lees of sense; but impress them with emotions of restless desire after sublime and celestial joys:—Joys, that will proceed, still proceed in a copious and everlasting flow, when seas shall cease to roll:—Joys, that will charm every faculty with unimaginable pleasure; when the moon with her waxing splendors, shall chear our sight no more.

ENOUGH for the present evening. My thoughts have been sufficiently exercised, and my steps begin to be attended with weariness. Let me obey the admonition of nature; and give respite to my meditations, slumber to my eyes.—But stay.—Shall I retire to the bed of sleep, with as little ceremony, and with as much inattention, as the brutes to their sordid lair? Are no acknowledgments due to that divine Being, who is the support of my life, and the length of my days? Have I no farther need of his protecting care; no more occasion for the blessings of his goodness?——Lepidus, perhaps, may laugh at the bended knee; and have a thousand darts of raillery ready to discharge on the practice of devotion. The wits, I know, are unmercifully severe on what they call the drudgery of prayer, and the fantastical rant of praise. These they leave to the illiterate labourer, and the mean mechanic; or treat them, with a contemptuous sneer, as the parson's ignoble trade.

Is it then an instance of superstitious blindness, to distinguish; or of whimsical zeal, to celebrate, the most super-eminent excellency and merit? Is it an ungraceful business, or does it argue a grovelling disposition, to magnify goodness transcendently rich and diffusive?—What can be so truly becoming a dependent state, as to pay our adoring homage to the Author of all perfection, and profess our devoted allegiance to the supreme almighty Governor of the universe?——Can any thing more significantly bespeak an ingenuous temper, or administer a more real satisfaction to its finest feelings, than the exercises of penitential devotion; by which we give vent to an honest anguish, or melt into filial sorrow, for our insensibility to the best of friends, for our disobedience to the best of parents?—In a word, can there be a more sublime pleasure, than to dwell, in fixed contemplation, on the beauties of the eternal Mind; the amiable original of all that is fair, grand, and harmonious; the beneficent giver of all that is convenient, comfortable, and useful?——Can there be a more advantageous employ, than to present our requests to the Father of mercies; opening our minds to the irradiations of his wisdom, and all the faculties of our souls to the communications of his grace?—It is strange, unaccountably strange, that the notion of dignity in sentiment, and the pursuit of refined enjoyment, should ever be disunited from devotion: that persons, who make pretensions to an improved taste, and an exalted genius, should neglect this most ennobling intercourse with the wisest and best of beings, the inexhaustible source of honour and joy.

Shall I be deterred from approaching this source of the purest delight? deterred from pursuing this highest improvement of my nature? deterred from all by a formidable banter, or confuted by one irrefragable smile?—No: let the moon, in her resplendent sphere; and yonder pole, with all its starry train; witness, if I be silent even or morn; if I refrain to kindle in my heart, and breathe from my lips, the reasonable incense of praise; praise to that great and glorious GOD, who formed the earth, and built the skies; who poured from his hand the watery world, and shed the all-surrounding air abroad.—"Thou also madest the night, Maker omnipotent! and thou, the day! which I, though less than "the least of all thy mercies, have passed in safety, "tranquillity, and comfort.—When I was lost in the "extravagance of dreams, or lay immersed in the insensibility of sleep, thy hand recovered me from the "temporary lethargy. Thy hand set a new, a delicately-fine edge on all my blunted senses; and strung "my sinews with recruited vigour. When my thoughts "were benumbed and stupefied, thy quickening influence roused them into activity; when they were discordant and wild, thy regulating influence reduced "them into order: refitting me at once, to relish the "innocent entertainments of an animal, and to enjoy "the sublime gratifications, of a rational capacity.—— "When darkness covered the creation, at thy command, "the sun arose; painted the flowers, and distinguished "every object; gave light to my feet, and gave nature, "with all her beautiful scenes, to my eye.—To thee, "O thou GOD of my strength, I owe the continuance "of my being, and the vivacity of my constitution. By "thy sacred order, without any consciousness of mine, "the wheels of life move, and the crimson fountain "plays. Over-ruled by thy exquisite skill, it transforms "itself, by the nicest operations of an inexplicable kind "of chemistry, into a variety of the finest secretions: "which glide into the muscles, and swell them for "action; or pour themselves into the fluids, and repair their incessant decays: which cause chearfulness to sparkle in the eye, and health to bloom in the "cheek.

"Disastrous accidents, injurious to the peace of my "mind, or fatal to the welfare of my body, beset my "paths. But thy faithfulness and truth, like an impenetrable shield, guarded me all around. Under "this divine protection, I walked secure, amidst legions "of apparent perils; and passed unhurt, through a "far greater multiplicity of unseen evils. Not one of "my bones was broken; not a single shaft grazed upon my ease; even when the eye that watched over "me, saw, in its wide survey, thousands falling beside "me, in irrecoverable ruin; and ten thousands deeply "wounded, on my right hand.—If sickness has, at any "time, saddened my chamber, or pain harrowed my "flesh; it was a wholesome discipline, and a gracious "severity. The chastisement proved a sovereign medicine, to cure me of an immoderate fondness for "this imperfect, troublesome state; and to quicken my "desires desires after the unembittered enjoyments of my eternal home?—Has not thy munificence, unwearied and unbounded, spread my table! and furnished it with the finest wheat; replenished it with marrow and fatness?! While temperance sweetened the bowl; appetite seasoned the dish; contentment and gratitude crowned the repast.—Has not thy kindness, O GOD of the families of Israel, preserved my affectionate relations; who study by their tender offices, to soften every care, and heighten every joy? Has not thy kindness given me valuable friends; whose presence is a cordial, to chear me in a dejected hour; and whose conversation mingles improvement with delight?

* Splendet tremulo sub lumine pontus. VIRG.

"When sin lay disguised amidst flowery scenes of pleasure; enlightened by thy wisdom, I discerned the latent mischief; made resolute by thy grace, I shunned the luscious bane. If through the impulse of sensuality, or the violence of passion, I have been hurried into the snare, and stung by the serpent; thy faithful admonitions have recalled the foolish wanderer; while the blood of thy Son has healed his deadly wounds.—Some, no doubt, have been cut off in the midst of their iniquities; and transmitted from the thrillings of polluted joy, to the agonies of eternal despair. Whereas, I have been distinguished by long suffering mercy; and, instead of lifting up my eyes in torments, to behold a heaven irrecoverably lost; I may lift them up under the pleasing views of being admitted, 'ere long, into those abodes of endless felicity.—In the mean time, thou hast vouchsafed me the revelation of thy will; the influences of the Spirit; and abundance of the most effectual aids, for advancing in knowledge, and growing in godliness; for becoming more conformable to thy image, and more meet for thy presence; for tasting the pleasures of religion, and securing the riches of eternity.

"How various is thy beneficence, O thou Lover of "souls! It has unsealed a thousand sources of good; "opened a thousand avenues of delight; and heaped "blessings upon me, with a ceaseless liberality. If I "should attempt to declare them, they would be more "than the starry host, which glitter in this unclouded "sky; more than the dewy gems, which will adorn the "face of the morning.

"AND shall I forget the GOD of my salvation, the "Author of all my mercies? Rather let my pulse forget "to beat!—Shall I render him no expressions of thankful"ness? Then might all nature reproach my ingratitude. "—Shall I rest satisfied with the bare acknowledgment "of my lips? No: let my life be vocal, and speak his "praise, in that only genuine, that most emphatical lan"guage,—the language of devout obedience. Let the "bill be drawn upon my very heart; let all my affec"tions acknowledge the draught; and let the whole tenor "of my actions, in time, and through eternity, be con"tinually paying the debt,—the ever-pleasing ever-grow"ing debt of duty, veneration, and love.

"And can I, O thou Guide of my goings, and Guar"dian of all my interests, can I distrust such signal, such "experienced goodness? Thou hast been my Helper, and "through all the busy scenes of day: therefore under the "shadow of thy wings will I repose myself, during the "darkness, the danger, and death-like inactivity of the "night. Whatever defilement I have contracted, wash "it thoroughly away in redeeming blood; and let nei"ther the sinful stain, nor the sinful inclination, accom"pany me to my couch!—Then shall I lay me down in "peace, and take my rest; chearfully referring it to thy all"wise determination, whether I shall open my eyes in "this world, or awake in the unknown regions of "another."

CONTEMPLATIONS ON THE STARRY HEAVENS.

There dwells a noble pathos in the ſkies,
Which warms our paſſions, proſelytes our hearts.
How eloquently ſhines the glowing pole!
With what authority it gives its charge,
Remonſtrating great truths in ſtyle ſublime!

Night-Thoughts, No. IX.

THIS evening, I exchange the nice retreats of art for the noble theatre of nature. Inſtead of meaſuring my ſteps under the covert of an arbour, let me range along the ſummit of this gently-riſing hill. There is no need of the leafy ſhade, ſince the ſun has quitted the horizon, and withdrawn his ſcorching beams. But ſee, how advantages and inconveniencies are uſually linked, and chequer our affairs below! If the annoying heat ceaſes, the landſcape, and its pleaſing ſcenes, are alſo removed.—The majeſtic caſtle, and the lowly cottage, are vaniſhed together.—I have loſt the aſpiring mountain, and its ruſſet brow; I look round, but to no purpoſe, for the humble vale, and its flowery lap. The plains whitened with flocks, and the heath yellow with furze, diſappear. The advancing night has wrapt in darkneſs the long extended foreſt, and drawn her mantle over the windings of the ſilver ſtream. I no longer behold that luxuriant fertility in the fields; that wild magnificence of proſpect, and endleſs variety of images; which have ſo often touched me with delight, and ſtruck me with awe, from this commanding eminence.

The loſs, however, is ſcarcely to be regretted; ſince it is amply compenſated by the opening beauties of the ſky. Here I enjoy a free view of the whole hemiſphere; without any obſtacle from below, to confine the exploring eye; or any cloud from above, to overcaſt the ſpacious concave. 'Tis true, the lively vermilion, which ſo lately ſtreaked the chambers of the weſt, is all faded. But the planets, one after another, light up their lamps; the ſtars advance in their glittering train; a thouſand and a thouſand luminaries ſhine forth in ſucceſſive ſplendors; and the whole firmament is kindling into the moſt beautiful glow. The blueneſs of the æther, heightened by the ſeaſon of the year, and ſtill more enlivened by the abſence of the moon, gives thoſe gems of heaven the ſtrongeſt luſtre.

One pleaſure more the invading gloom has not been able to ſnatch from my ſenſe. The night rather improves, than deſtroys, the fragrance which exhales from the blooming beans. With theſe the ſides of this ſloping declivity are lined; and with theſe the balmy zephyrs perfume their wings. Does Arabia, from all her ſpicy groves, breathe a more liberal, or a more charming gale of ſweets? And, what is a peculiar recommendation of the rural entertainments preſented in our happy land, they are alloyed by no apprehenſions of danger. No poiſonous ſerpent lurks under the bloſſom; nor any ravenous beaſt lies ready to ſtart from the thicket.—But I wander from a far more exalted ſubject. My thoughts, like my affections, are too eaſily diverted from the heavens, and detained by inferior objects. Away, my attention, from theſe little blandiſhments of the earth; ſince all the glories of the ſky invite thy regard.

WE have taken a turn among the Tombs, and viewed the ſolemn memorials of the dead; in order to learn the vanity of mortal things, and to break their ſoft inchantment.—We have ſurveyed the ornaments of the Garden; not that the heart might be planted in the parterre, or take root among the flowery race; but that theſe delicacies of a day might teach us to aſpire after a better paradiſe, where beauty never fades, and delight is ever in the bloom.—A third time we lighted the candle of meditation; and ſought for wiſdom, not in the crouded city, or wrangling ſchools, but in the ſilent and lonely walks of ancient Night *.—Let us once more indulge the contemplative vein, and raiſe our ſpeculations to thoſe ſublimer works of the great Creator, which the regions of the ſky contain, and this duſky hour unveils †.

If we have diſcerned the touches of his pencil glowing in the colours of ſpring; if we have ſeen a ſample of his beneficence exhibited in the ſtores of nature, and a ray of his brightneſs beaming in the blaze of day; what an infinitely richer field for the diſplay of his perfections are the heavens! The heavens, in the moſt emphatical manner, declare the glory of GOD.

* Referring to the ſeveral ſubjects of the three preceding eſſays.

† Night opes the nobleſt ſcenes, and ſheds an awe,
Which gives thoſe venerable ſcenes full weight,
And deep reception in th' entender'd heart.
Night-Thoughts, No. IX.

The

The heavens are nobly eloquent of the Deity, and the moſt magnificent heralds of their Maker's praiſe. They ſpeak to the whole univerſe; for there is neither ſpeech ſo barbarous, but their language is underſtood; nor nation ſo diſtant, but their voices are heard among them *.—Let me then, in this ſolemn ſeaſon, formed for thought, and a calm intercourſe with heaven; let me liſten to their ſilent lectures. Perhaps, I may receive ſuch impreſſive manifeſtations of "the eternal power and Godhead," as may ſhed religion on my ſoul, while I walk the ſolitary ſhades; and may be a tutelary friend to my virtue, when the call of buſineſs, and the return of light, expoſe me again to the inroads of temptation.

THE Iſraelites, inſtigated by frenzy rather than devotion, worſhipped the hoſt of heaven. And the pretenders to judicial aſtrology talk of I know not what myſterious efficacy, in the different aſpect of the ſtars, or the various conjunction and oppoſition of the planets.—Let thoſe who are unacquainted with the ſure word of revelation, give ear to theſe ſons of deluſion, and dealers in deceit. For my part, it is a queſtion of indifference to me, whether the conſtellations ſhone with ſmiles, or loured in frowns, on the hour of my nativity. Let CHRIST be my guard; and, ſecure in ſuch a protection, I would laugh at their impotent menaces. Let CHRIST be my guide; and I ſhall ſcorn to aſk, as well as deſpair of receiving, any predictory information from ſuch ſenſeleſs maſſes.—What! ſhall "the living ſeek to the dead †?" Can theſe bodies advertiſe me of future events, which are unconſcious of their own exiſtence? Shall I have recourſe to dull, unintelligent matter, when I may apply to that all-wiſe Being, who, with one comprehenſive glance, diſtinctly views whatever is lodged in the boſom of immenſity, or forming in the womb of futurity? —Never, never will I ſearch for any intimations of my fate, but often trace my Creator's footſteps ‡, in yonder ſtarry plains. In the former caſe, they would be teachers of lies; in the latter they are oracles of truth. In this therefore, this ſenſe only, I profeſs myſelf the pupil of the ſtars.

THE vulgar are apprehenſive of nothing more than a multitude of bright ſpangles dropt over the æthereal blue. They have no higher notion of theſe fine appearances, than that they are ſo many golden ſtuds, with which the empyrean arch is decorated.—But ſtudious minds, that carry a more accurate and ſtrict inquiry among the celeſtial bodies, bring back advices of a moſt aſtoniſhing import. Let me juſt recollect the moſt material of thoſe ſtupendous diſcoveries, in order to furniſh out proper ſubjects for contemplation. And let the unlearned remember, that the ſcene I am going to diſplay, is the workmanſhip of that incomprehenſible GOD, who is "perfect in knowledge "and mighty in power; whoſe name, whoſe nature, and all whoſe operations, are "great and marvellous;" who ſummons into being, with equal eaſe, a ſingle grain, or ten thouſand worlds.—To this if we continually advert, the aſſertions, though they will certainly excite our admiration, need not tranſcend our belief.

THE earth, is in fact, a round body; however it may ſeem, in ſome parts, to be ſunk into vales, and raiſed into hills *; in other parts, to be ſpread into a ſpacious plain, extending to the confines of the heavens, or terminated by the waters of the ocean.—We may fancy, that it has deep foundations, and reſts upon ſome prodigiouſly ſolid baſis. But it is pendent in the wide tranſpicuous æther, without any viſible cauſe to uphold it from above, or ſupport it from beneath.—It may ſeem to be ſedentary in its attitude, and motionleſs in its ſituation. But it is continually ſailing †, through the depths of the ſky; and, in the ſpace of twelve months, finiſhes the mighty voyage. Which periodical rotation produces the ſeaſons, and completes the year.—As it proceeds in the annual circuit, it ſpins upon its own centre; and turns its ſides alternately to the fountain of light. By which means, the day dawns in one hemiſphere; while the night ſucceeds in the other. Without this expedient, one part of its regions would, during half the great revolution, be ſcorched with exceſſive heat, or languiſh under an unintermitted glare: while the other, expoſed to the contrary extremes, would be frozen to ice, and buried under a long oppreſſion of diſmal and deſtructive darkneſs.

I cannot forbear taking notice, that, in this compound motion of the earth, the one never interferes with the other, but both are perfectly compatible. Is it not thus with the precepts of religion, and the needful affairs of the preſent life; not excepting even the innocent gratifications of our appetites?—Some, I believe, are apt to imagine, that they muſt renounce ſociety, if they devote themſelves to CHRIST; and abandon all the ſatisfactions of this world, if they once become zealous candidates for the felicity of another.—But this is a very miſtaken notion, or elſe a very injurious repreſentation, of the doctrine which is according to godlineſs. It was never intended to drive men into deſerts; but to lead them through the peaceful and pleaſant paths of wiſdom, into the bliſsful regions of life eternal. It was never intended to ſtrike off the wheels of buſineſs, or cut in ſunder the ſinews of induſtry; but rather, to make men induſtrious from a principle of conſcience, not from the inſtigations of avarice; that ſo they may promote their immortal happineſs, even while they provide for their temporal maintenance. It has no deſign to extirpate our paſſions, but only to reſtrain their irregularities; neither would it extinguiſh the delights of ſenſe, but prevent them from evaporating into vanity, and ſubſiding into gall.—A perſon may be chearful among his friends, and yet joyful in GOD. He may taſte the ſweets of his earthly eſtate; and, at the ſame time, cheriſh his hopes of a nobler inheritance in heaven. The trader may proſe-

* Pſal. xix. 2. † Iſ. viii. 19.

‡ "It is moſt becoming" (ſays a great author) "ſuch imperfect creatures as we are, to contemplate the works of GOD, "with this deſign, that we may diſcern the manifeſtations of wiſdom in them; and thereby excite in ourſelves thoſe devout affections, and that ſuperlative reſpect, which is the very eſſence "of praiſe, as it is a reaſonable and moral ſervice." ABERNETHY on the attributes.—And, indeed, if we are ſincerely diſpoſed to employ ourſelves in this excellent, this delightful duty of praiſing the infinite Creator; the means, and the motives, are both at hand. His works, in a wonderful and inſtructive variety, preſent themſelves, with pregnant manifeſtations of the moſt tranſcendent excellencies of their Maker. They pour their evidence from all quarters, and into all the avenues of the mind. They invite us, eſpecially in the magnificent ſyſtem of the univerſe, to contemplate counſel conſummately wiſe, and execution inimitably perfect;—power, to which nothing is impoſſible; and goodneſs, which extendeth to all, which endureth for ever.—To give, not a full diſplay, but only ſome ſlight ſtrictures, of theſe glorious truths, is the principal ſcope of the following remarks.

* A learned writer, I think, Dr Derham, has ſomewhere an obſervation to this purpoſe:—That the loftieſt ſummits of hills, and the moſt enormous ridges of mountains, are no real objection to the globular or round form of the earth. Becauſe, however they may render it, to our limited ſight, vaſtly uneven and protuberant; yet they bear no more proportion to the entire ſurface of the terraqueous ball, than a particle of duſt, caſually dropt on the mathematician's globe, bears to its whole circumference. Conſequently, the rotund figure is no more deſtroyed in the former caſe, than in the latter.—On the ſame principle, I have not thought it neceſſary, to take any notice of the comparatively ſmall difference between the polar and equatorial diameter of the earth.

† With what amazing ſpeed, this veſſel (if I may carry on the alluſion) filled with a multitude of nations, and freighted with all their poſſeſſions, makes her way through the æthereal ſpace; ſee page 347. in note †. col. 2.

cute

cute the demands of commerce, without neglecting to negotiate the affairs of his ſalvation. The warrior may wear his ſword, may draw, in a juſt cauſe, that murderous weapon; yet be a good ſoldier of JESUS CHRIST, and obtain the crown that fadeth not away. The parent may lay up a competent portion for his children, and not forfeit his title to the treaſures, either of grace or of glory.——So far is Chriſtianity from obſtructing any valuable intereſt, or with holding any real pleaſure; that it improves the one, and advances the other. Juſt as the diurnal and annual motions are ſo far from claſhing that they entirely accord; and inſtead of being deſtructive of each other, by mutually blending their effects, they give proportion and harmony to time, fertility, and innumerable benefits to nature.

To us, who dwell on its ſurface, the earth is by far the moſt extenſive orb, that our eyes can, any where, behold. It is alſo clothed with verdure; diſtinguiſhed by trees; and adorned with a variety of beautiful decorations. Whereas, to a ſpectator placed on one of the planets, it wears an uniform aſpect; looks all luminous, and no larger than a ſpot. To beings who dwell at ſtill greater diſtances, it entirely diſappears.—That which we call, alternately, the morning and the evening ſtar; as in one part of her orbit, ſhe rides foremoſt in the proceſſion of night; in the other, uſhers in, and anticipates the dawn; is a planetary world. Which, with the four others, that ſo wonderfully vary their myſtic dance, are in themſelves dark bodies, and ſhine only by reflection; have fields, and ſeas, and ſkies of their own; are furniſhed with all accommodations for animal ſubſiſtence, and are ſuppoſed to be the abodes of intellectual life. All which, together with this our earthly habitation, are dependent on that grand diſpenſer of divine munificence, the ſun; receive their light from the diſtribution of his rays, and derive their comforts from his benign agency.

The ſun, which ſeems to perform its daily ſtages through the ſky, is, in this reſpect *, fixed and immoveable. 'Tis the great axle of heaven, about which the globe we inhabit, and other more ſpacious orbs, wheel their ſtated courſes.—The ſun, though ſeemingly ſmaller than the dial it illuminates, is abundantly larger † than this whole earth; on which ſo many lofty mountains riſe, and ſuch vaſt oceans roll. A line, extending from ſide to ſide, through the centre of that reſplendent orb, would meaſure more than eight hundred thouſand miles: a girdle, formed to go round its circumference, would require a length of millions: were its ſolid contents to be eſtimated, the account would overwhelm our underſtanding, and be almoſt beyond the power of language to expreſs‡.——Are we ſtartled at theſe reports of philoſophy? Are we ready to cry out, in a tranſport of ſurpriſe, How mighty is the Being, who kindled ſuch a prodigious fire; and keeps alive, from age to age, ſuch an enormous maſs of flame!——Let us attend our philoſophic guides, and we ſhall be brought acquainted with ſpeculations more enlarged and more amazing.

This ſun, with all its attendant planets, is but a very little part of the grand machine of the univerſe. Every ſtar, though, in appearance, no bigger than the diamond that glitters upon a lady's ſtring, is really a vaſt globe, like the ſun in ſize, and in glory, no leſs ſpacious, no leſs luminous, than the radiant ſource of our day. So that every ſtar is, not barely a world, but the centre of a magnificent ſyſtem; has a retinue of worlds, irradiated by its beams, and revolving round its attractive influence. All which are loſt to our ſight, in unmeaſureable wilds of æther.—That the ſtars appear like ſo many diminutive, and ſcarce diſtinguiſhable points, is owing to their immenſe and inconceivable diſtance. Immenſe and inconceivable indeed it is; ſince a ball ſhot from the loaded cannon, and flying, with unabated rapidity, muſt travel, at this impetuous rate, almoſt ſeven hundred thouſand years §, before it could reach the neareſt of thoſe twinkling luminaries.

Can any thing be more wonderful than theſe obſervations? Yes: there are truths far more ſtupendous; there are ſcenes far more extenſive. As there is no end of the almighty Maker's greatneſs; ſo no imagination can ſet limits to his creating hand.—Could you ſoar beyond the moon, and paſs through all the planetary choir; could you wing your way to the higheſt apparent ſtar, and take your ſtand on one of thoſe loftieſt pinnacles of heaven; you would, there, ſee other ſkies expanded, another ſun, diſtributing his inexhauſtible beams by day; other ſtars, that gild the horrors of the alternate night; and other †, perhaps nobler ſyſtems, eſtabliſhed; eſtabliſhed, in unknown profuſion, through the boundleſs dimenſions of ſpace.---Nor does the dominion of the univerſal Sovereign terminate there. Even at the end of this vaſt tour, you would find yourſelf advanced no farther than the ſuburbs of creation; arrived only at the frontiers of the great JEHOVAH's kingdom ‖.

And do they tell me, that the ſun, the moon, and all the planets, are but a little part of HIS works? How great, then, are his ſigns! and how mighty are his wonders!—And if ſo, what is the CREATOR himſelf! How far exalted above all praiſe! who is ſo high, that he looks down on the higheſt of theſe dazzling ſpheres, and ſees even the ſummit of creation in a vale; ſo great, that this prodigious extent of ſpace is but a point in his preſence; and all this confluence of worlds, as the lighteſt atom, that fluctuates in air, and ſports in the meridian ray §.

* See Religious Philoſopher, p. 819.

† See Aſtro-Theology, book II. chap. II.—Where the author, having aſſigned various reaſons to ſupport this theory of our modern aſtronomers, adds,—"Beſides the forementioned ſtrong pro-"babilities, we have this farther recommendation of ſuch an ac-"count of the univerſe, that it is far more magnificent, and "worthy of the infinite Creator, than any other of the narrower "ſchemes."

‡ Job, after a moſt beautiful diſſertation on the mighty works of GOD, as they are diſtributed through univerſal nature, from the heights of heaven, to the very depths of hell, cloſes the magnificent account with this acknowledgment; Lo! theſe are parts of his ways. Or, as the original word more literally ſignifies, and may, I think, be more elegantly rendered, Theſe are only the ſkirts, the very outermoſt borders of his works. No more than a ſmall preface to the immenſe volume of the creation.—From the Hebrew uſe of extremities, I cannot forbear thinking on the extreme and very attenuated fibres of the root, when compared with the whole ſubſtance of the trunk; or on the exquiſitely ſmall ſize of the capillary veſſels, when compared with the whole ſtructure of the body. Job xxvi. 14.

‖ Dan. iv. 3.

§ This puts me in mind of a very fine remark on a ſcripture beauty, and a ſolid correction of the common tranſlation, made by that learned, ſagacious, and devout expoſitor Vitringa.—Iſa. II. xl. 15. we find it written of the ſupreme Being, that he taketh up the iſles as a very little thing. Which, our critic obſerves, is neither anſwerable to the import of the original, nor conſonant to the ſtructure of the diſcourſe. The prophet had no intention to inform mankind, what the Almighty could do with regard to the iſlands, if he pleaſed to exert uncontrollable power. His deſign was to ſhew, how inſignificant, or rather what mere nothings they

* I ſay, in this reſpect; that I may not ſeem to forget, or exclude, the revolution of the ſun round its own axis.

† A hundred thouſand times, according to the loweſt reckoning. Sir ISAAC NEWTON computes the ſun to be 900,000 times bigger than the earth. Religious Philoſopher, p. 749.

‡ Dr DERHAM, after having calculated the dimenſions of the planets, adds, "Amazing as theſe maſſes are, they are all "far outdone by that ſtupendous globe of light, the ſun; which, "as it is the fountain of light and heat to all the planets about it, "ſo doth it far ſurpaſs them all in its bulk: its apparent diameter "being computed at 822,148 Engliſh miles, its ambit at 2,582,873 miles, and its ſolid contents at 290,971,000,000,000,000." Aſtro-Theol. book I. chap. II.

Thou moſt ſublime and incomprehenſibly glorious GOD, how am I overwhelmed with awe! how ſunk into the loweſt proſtration of mind! when I conſider thy "excellent greatneſs," and my own utter inſignificancy!—And have I, exceſſively mean as I am, have I entertained any conceited apprehenſions of myſelf? Have I felt the leaſt elatement of thought, in the preſence of ſo majeſtic and adorable a Being? How ſhould this wound me with ſorrow, and cover me with confuſion!—O my GOD, was I poſſeſſed of all the high perfections, which accompliſh and adorn the angels of light; amidſt all theſe noble endowments, I would fall down in the deepeſt abaſement at thy feet. Loſt in the infinitely ſuperior blaze of thy uncreated glories, I would confeſs myſelf to be nothing; to be leſs than nothing, and vanity.—How much more ought I to maintain the moſt unfeigned humiliation, before thy divine Majeſty; who am not only duſt and aſhes, but a compound of ignorance, imperfection, and depravity!

WHILE, beholding this vaſt expanſe, I learn my own extreme meanneſs, I would alſo diſcover the abject littleneſs of all terreſtrial things.—What is the earth, with all her oſtentatious ſcenes, compared with this aſtoniſhingly grand furniture of the ſkies? What, but a dim ſpeck, hardly perceivable in the map of the univerſe? It is obſerved, by a very judicious writer *, That if the ſun himſelf, which enlightens this part of the creation, was extinguiſhed; and all the hoſt of planetary worlds, which move about him, were annihilated; they would not be miſſed, by an eye that can take in the whole compaſs of nature, any more than a grain of ſand upon the ſea-ſhore. The bulk of which they conſiſt, and the ſpace which they occupy, is ſo exceedingly little in compariſon of the whole, that their loſs would ſcarce leave a blank in the immenſity of GOD's works.—If then, not our globe only, but this whole ſyſtem, be ſo very diminutive; what is a kingdom, or a county? What are a few lordſhips, or the ſo much admired patrimonies of thoſe who are ſtyled wealthy †? When I meaſure them with my own little pittance, they ſwell into proud and bloated dimenſions. But, when I take the univerſe for my ſtandard, how ſcanty is their ſize, how contemptible their figure! They ſhrink into pompous nothings ‡.

When the keen-eyed eagle ſoars above all the feathered race, and leaves their very ſight below; when ſhe wings her way, with direct aſcent, up the ſteep of heaven; and, ſteadily gazing on the meridian ſun, accounts its beaming ſplendors all her own: does ſhe then regard, with any ſolicitude, the mote that is flying in the air, or the duſt which ſhe ſhook from her feet? And ſhall this eternal mind, which is capable of contemplating its Creator's glory; which is intended to enjoy the viſions of his countenance; ſhall this eternal mind, endued with ſuch great capacities, and made for ſuch exalted ends, be ſo ignobly ambitious, as to ſigh for the tinſels of ſtate; or ſo poorly covetous, as to graſp after ample territories on a needle's point?—No; under the influence of ſuch conſiderations, I feel my ſentiments expand, and my wiſhes acquire a turn of ſublimity. My throbbing deſires after worldly grandeur die away; and I find myſelf, if not poſſeſſed of power, yet ſuperior to its charms.—Too long, muſt I own, have my affections been pinioned by vanity, and immured in this earthly clod. But theſe thoughts break the ſhackles. Theſe objects open the door of liberty. My ſoul, fired by ſuch noble proſpects, weighs anchor from this little nook; and coaſts no longer about its contracted ſhores; doats no longer on its painted ſhells. The immenſity of things is her range; and an infinity of bliſs is her aim.

BEHOLD this immenſe expanſe, and admire the condeſcenſion of thy GOD.—In this manner, an inſpired and princely aſtronomer improved his ſurvey of the nocturnal heavens. When I conſider thy heavens, even the works of thy fingers, the moon and the ſtars which thou haſt ordained; I am ſmitten with wonder at thy glory, and cry out in a tranſport of gratitude, LORD, what is man, that thou art mindful of him? or the ſon of man, that thou viſiteſt him †? "How amazing, how charming, is that "divine benignity, which is pleaſed to bow down its "ſacred regards to ſo fooliſh and worthleſs a creature! "yea, diſdains not from the height of infinite exaltation, "to extend its kind providential care to our moſt mi"nute concerns!—This is amazing. But that the ever"laſting Sovereign ſhould give his Son, to be made "fleſh, and become our Saviour! ſhall I call it a miracle "of condeſcending goodneſs? Rather, what are all "miracles, what are all myſteries, to this ineffable gift!"

Had the brighteſt archangel been commiſſioned to come down, with the olive-branch of peace in his hand, ſignifying his eternal Maker's readineſs to be reconciled; on our bended knees, with tears of joy, and a torrent of thankfulneſs, we ought to have received the tranſporting news. But when, inſtead of ſuch an angelic envoy, he ſends his only-begotten Son, his Son beyond all thought illuſtrious, to make us the gracious overture:—ſends him from the "habitation of his ho"lineſs and glory," to put on the infirmities of mortality, and dwell in a tabernacle of clay:—ſends him, not barely to make us a tranſient viſit, but to abide many years in our inferior and miſerable world:—ſends him, not to exerciſe dominion over monarchs, but to wear out his life in the ignoble form of a ſervant; and, at laſt, to make his exit under the infamous character of a malefactor! Was ever love like this? Did ever grace ſtoop ſo low ‡?—Should the ſun be ſhorn of all his radiant honours, and degraded into a clod of the valleys; ſhould all the dignitaries of heaven be depoſed from their thrones, and degenerate into inſects of

* The ſoul of man was made to walk the ſkies,
Delightful outlet of her priſon here!
There, diſencumber'd from her chains, the ties
Of toys terreſtrial, ſhe can rove at large;
There freely can aſpire, dilate, extend,
In full proportion let looſe all her pow'rs.
Night-Thoughts, No. IX.

† Pſal. viii. 3. 4.

‡ This reminds me of a very noble piece of ſacred oratory, where, in a fine ſerics of the moſt beautiful gradations, the apoſtle diſplays the admirably-condeſcending kindneſs of our Saviour.—He thought it no robbery, it was his indiſputable right, to be equal with the infinite, ſelf-exiſtent, immortal GOD. Yet in mercy to ſinners, he emptied himſelf of the incommunicable honours, and laid aſide the robes of incomprehenſible glory.—When he entered upon his mediatorial ſtate, inſtead of acting in the grand capacity of univerſal Sovereign, he took upon him the form of a ſervant, and not the form of thoſe miniſtering ſpirits, whoſe duty is dignity itſelf; who are throned, though adoring.—He took not on him the nature of angels, but ſtooped incomparably low; aſſumed a body of animated duſt, and was made in the likeneſs of men; thoſe inferior and depraved creatures.——Aſtoniſhing condeſcenſion! but not ſufficient for the overflowing riches of the Redeemer's love.——For, being found in faſhion as a man, he humbled himſelf farther ſtill; occupied the loweſt place, where all was low and ignoble.——He not only ſubmitted to the yoke of the law, but alſo bore the

they are, in his eſteem, and before his majeſty.—The iſlands, ſays he, though ſo ſpacious, as to afford room for the erection of kingdoms, and the abode of nations; though ſo ſtrong, as to withſtand, for many thouſands of years, the raging and reiterated aſſaults of the whole watery world; are yet, before the adored JEHOVAH, ſmall as the minuteſt grain, which the eye can ſcarce diſcern; light as the feathered mote, which the leaſt breath hurries away like a tempeſt.—אִיִּים כְּדַק יִטּוֹל Inſulæ ſunt ut leve quid, quod avolat. The deep-rooted iſlands are as the volatile atom, which, by the gentleſt undulations of the air, is waſted to and fro in perpetual agitation.

* Spect. vol. VIII. No. 565.

† Juvat inter ſidera vagantem divitum pavimenta ridere, et totam cum auro ſuo terram. SEN.

‡ Terrellæ grandia inania. WATTS's Hor. Lyr.

a day; great, great would be the abasement. But nothing to thine, most blessed JESUS; nothing to thine, thou Prince of peace; when, for us men, and for our salvation, thou didst not abhor the coarse accommodations of the manger; thou didst not decline even the gloomy horrors of the grave.

'Tis well, the sacred oracles have given this doctrine the most explicit confirmation, and evidence quite incontestable. Otherwise, a favour so undeserved, so unexpected, and rich beyond all imagination, might stagger our belief.—Could HE, who launches all these planetary globes through the illimitable void; and leads them on, from age to age, in their extensive career; could HE resign his hands, to be confined by the girding cord, and his back to be ploughed by the bloody scourge? —Could HE, who crowns all the stars with inextinguishable brightness, be himself defiled with spitting, and disfigured with the thorny scar? It is the greatest of wonders, and yet the surest of truths.

O! ye mighty orbs, that roll along the spaces of the sky; I wondered, a little while ago, at your vast dimensions, and ample circuits. But now my amazement ceases; or rather, is entirely swallowed up by a much more stupendous subject. Methinks, your enormous bulk is shrivelled to an atom; your prodigious revolutions are contracted to a span; while I muse upon the far more elevated heights, and unfathomable depths; the infinitely more extended lengths, and unlimited breadths of this love of GOD in CHRIST JESUS *.

CONTEMPLATING this stately expanse, I see a mirror, which represents, in the most awful colours, the hideousness of human guilt.—Ten thousand volumes, wrote on purpose to display the aggravations of my various acts of disobedience, could not so effectually convince me of their inconceivable enormity, as the consideration of that all-glorious person †, who to make an atonement for them, spilt the last drop of his blood.—I have sinned, may every child of Adam say; and what shall I do unto thee, O thou Observer of men‡? Shall I give my first-born for my transgression, the fruit of my body for the sin of my soul? Vain commutation! and such as would be rejected by the blessed GOD, with the utmost abhorrence.—Will all the potentates, that sway the sceptre in a thousand kingdoms, devote their royal and honoured lives to rescue an obnoxious creature from the stroke of vengeance? Alas! it must cost more, incomparably more, to expiate the malignity of sin, and save a guilty wretch from hell.—Will all the principalities of heaven be content to assume my nature, and resign themselves to death for my pardon ‖? Even this would be too mean a satisfaction for inexorable justice; too scanty a reparation of GOD's injured honour. So flagrant is human guilt, that nothing but a victim of infinite dignity could constitute an adequate propitiation. He who said, "Let there be light, and there was light;" Let there be a firmament, and immediately the blue curtains floated in the sky; He must take flesh; HE must feel the fierce torments of crucifixion; and pour out his soul in agonies, if ever such transgressors are pardoned.

How vast is that debt, which all the wealth of both the Indies cannot discharge! How vitiated that habit of body, which all the drugs produced by nature herself, cannot rectify! But how much more ruined was thy condition, O my soul! how much more heinous were thy crimes! Since nothing less than the sufferings and death of Messiah, the Son of GOD, and radiant image of his glory, could effect thy recovery, or cancel thy iniquity. —Though perhaps thou art not sunk so very deep in pollution, as some of the most abandoned profligates; yet remember the inestimable ransom paid to redeem thee from everlasting destruction. Remember this; and "never open thy mouth any more *;" either to murmur at the divine chastisements, or to glory in thy own attainments. Remember this; and even loath, "loath "thyself † for the multitude of thy provocations," and thy great baseness.

ONCE more: let me view this beautiful, this magnificent expanse; and conceive some juster apprehensions of the unknown richness of my Saviour's atonement. —I am informed by a writer who cannot mistake, that the high priest of my profession, who was also the sacrifice for my sins, is higher than the heavens ‡; more exalted in dignity, more bright with glory, than all the heavenly mansions, and all their illustrious inhabitants. If my heart was humbled at the consideration of its excessive guilt, how do all my drooping powers revive at this delightful thought? The poor criminal, that seemed to be tottering on the very brink of the infernal pit, is raised, by such a belief, even to the portals of paradise. My self-abasement, I trust, will always continue; but my fears, under the influence of such a conviction, are quite gone ‖. I do not, I cannot, doubt the efficacy infirmities, and ministered to the necessities of mortals. He even washed the feet of others, and had not where to lay his own head. —Yea, he carried his meritorious humiliation to the very deepest degrees of possible abasement. He became obedient unto death;—and not to a common or natural death, but a death more infamous than the gibbet; more torturous than the rack;—even the accursed death of the cross. Phil. ii. 6. 7. 8.

* Eph. iii. 18. 19.

† Quo quisque altius ascendit in cognitione CHRISTI, eo profundius peccati atrocitatem cognoscet.

‡ Job vii. 20. Not preserver, as it stands in our version, but observer of men. Which phrase, as it denotes the exact and incessant inspection of the divine eye; as it intimates the absolute impossibility, that any transgression should escape the divine notice; is evidently most proper, both to allign the reason, and heighten the emphasis of the context.

‖ MILTON sets this thought in a very poetical and striking light.—All the sanctities of heaven stand round the throne of the Supreme Majesty. GOD foresees and foretells the fall of man; the ruin which will unavoidably ensue on his transgression; and the utter impossibility of his being able to extricate himself from the abyss of misery.

Him with his whole posterity, must die;
Die he, or justice must; unless for him
Some other able, and as willing, pay
The rigid satisfaction, death for death.

After which affecting representation, intended to raise the most tender emotions of pity, the following inquiry is addressed to all the surrounding angels:

Say, heav'nly powers, where shall we find such love?
Which of you will be mortal, to redeem
Man's mortal crime? and die, the dead to save?
He ask'd; but all the heav'nly choir stood mute,
And silence was in heav'n.—

There is, to me at least, an inimitable spirit and beauty in the last circumstance.—That such an innumerable multitude of generous and compassionate beings, should be struck dumb with surprise and terror, at the very mention of the deadly forfeiture and ransom set! No language is so eloquent as this silence. Words could not possibly have expressed, in so emphatical a manner, the dreadful nature of the task; the absolute inability of any or all creatures to execute it; the super-eminent and matchless love of the eternal Son, in undertaking the tremendous work; not only without reluctance, but unsought and unimplored; with readiness, alacrity, and delight. Paradise Lost, book III. line 209. Edit. BENTL.

* Ezek. xvi. 63. † Ezek. xxxvi. 31. ‡ Heb. vii. 26.

‖ I am sorry to find, that some of my readers were a little disgusted at this expression, "My fears are quite gone;" as thinking, it discovered a tincture of arrogance in the writer, and tended to discourage the weak Christian. But, I hope, a more mature consideration will acquit me from both these charges.—For what has the author said? Only that at some peculiarly happy moments, when the Holy Ghost bears witness of CHRIST in his heart, and he is favoured with a glimpse of the Redeemer's matchless excellency;—that, in these brighter intervals of life, his trembling fears, with regard to the decisive sentence of the great tribunal, are turned into pleasing expectations. And what is there in such a declaration offensive to the strictest modesty, or dispiriting to the weakest believer? Instead of creating discouragement, it points out of this propitiation. While I see a glimpse of its matchless excellency, and verily believe myself interested in its merits, I know not what it is to feel any misgiving suspicions; but am stedfast in faith, and joyful through hope.

Be my iniquities like debts of millions of talents, here is more than full payment for all that prodigious sum. Let the enemy of mankind, and accuser of the brethren, load me with invectives; this one plea, A divine Redeemer died, most thoroughly quashes every indictment. For, though there be much turpitude, and manifold transgressions, "there is no condemnation to those that "are in CHRIST JESUS."—Nay, were I chargeable with all the vilest deeds, which have been committed in every age of the world, by every nation of men; even in this most deplorable case, I need not sink into despair. Even such guilt, though grievous beyond all expression, is not to be compared with that abundance of grace and righteousness, which dwell in the incarnate Divinity.—How great, how transcendently glorious, are the perfections of the adored JEHOVAH! So great, so superlatively precious, is the expiation of the dying JESUS. 'Tis impossible for the human mind to exalt this atonement * too highly; 'tis impossible for the HUMBLE PENITENT to confide in it too steadily. The scriptures, the scriptures of eternal truth, have said it (exult, my soul, in the belief of it!), that the blood on which we rely, is GOD's own blood †; and therefore all-sufficient to expiate, omnipotent to save.

David, that egregious sinner, but more exemplary saint, seems to have been well acquainted with this comfortable truth. What else can be the import of that very remarkable, but most devout declaration? Thou shalt purge me ‡ with hyssop, and I shall be clean: thou shalt wash me, and I shall be whiter than snow.—"I have been guilty, I must confess, of the most com-"plicated and shocking crimes! crimes, inflamed by "every aggravating circumstance, with regard to my-"self, my neighbour, and my GOD. Myself, who "have been blessed above men, and the distinguished "favourite of providence; my neighbour, who, in the "most dear and tender interests, has been irreparably "injured; my GOD, who might justly expect the most "grateful returns of duty, instead of such enormous "violations of his law. Yet, all horrid and execrable "as my offence is, it is nothing to the superabundant "merit of that great Redeemer, who was promised from "the foundations of the world; in whom all my fa-"thers trusted; who is the hope of all the ends of the "earth. Though my conscience be more loathsome, "with adulterous impurity, than the dunghill; though "treachery and murder have rendered it even black "as the gloom of hell; yet washed in the fountain "opened for sin and for uncleanness *, I shall be,—I "say not, pure only, this were a disparagement to the "efficacy of my Saviour's death; but I shall be fair "as the lily, and white as the snow. Nay, let me not "derogate from the glorious object of my confidence; "cleansed by this sovereign, sanctifying stream, I shall "be fairer than the full-blown lily, whiter than the "new-fallen snows."

POWER, saith the scripture, belongeth unto GOD †.—And in what majestic lines is this attribute of JEHOVAH written, throughout the whole volume of the creation? especially through those magnificent pages, unfolded in yonder starry regions: which are therefore styled by the sweet and seraphic singer of Israel, "the "firmament of his power ‡;" because the grand exploits of omnipotence are there displayed with the utmost pomp, and recorded in the most legible characters.

Who, that looks upward to the midnight-sky, and, with an eye of reason, beholds its rolling wonders; who can forbear enquiring, Of what were those mighty orbs formed?—Amazing to relate! they were produced without materials. They sprung from emptiness itself.—The stately fabric of universal nature emerged out of nothing.—What instruments were used by the supreme Architect, to fashion the parts with such exquisite niceness, and give so beautiful a polish to the whole? How was all connected into one finely-proportioned, and nobly-finished structure?—A bare Fiat accomplished all. LET THEM BE, said GOD. He added no more; and immediately the marvellous edifice arose; adorned with every beauty; displaying innumerable perfections; and declaring, amidst unraptured seraphs, its great Creator's praise. "By the word of the LORD were "the heavens made, and all the hosts of them by the "breath of his mouth ‖."—What forceful machinery fixed some of those ponderous globes on an immoveable basis? What irresistible impulse bowled others through the circuit of the heavens? What coercive energy confined their impetuous courses within limits astonishingly large, yet most minutely true?—Nothing but his sovereign will. For all things were at first constituted, and all to this day abide, "according to his ordinance."

Without any toilsome assiduity or laborious process, to raise—to touch—to speak such a multitude of immense bodies into being;—to launch them through the spaces of the sky, as an arrow from the hand of a giant;—to impress on such unwieldy masses a motion far outstripping the swiftness of the winged creation §;—and to continue them in the same rapid whirl, for thousands and thousands of years;—what an amazing instance of infinite might is this!—Can any thing be impossible to the LORD, the LORD GOD; the Creator and Controller of all the ends of the earth, all the regions of the universe? Rather, is not all that we count difficult, perfect ease to that glorious Being,

* This doctrine, though rich with consolation to the ruined sinner, yet is it not likely to open a door for licentiousness, and embolden transgressors to prosecute their VICES?—No: it is the most powerful motive to that genuine repentance, which flows from an unfeigned love of GOD; and operates in a hearty detestation of all sin. One, who knew the unmeasurable goodness of the LORD, and was no stranger to the sinful perverseness of our nature, says, There is mercy with thee: THEREFORE shalt thou be feared. Psal. cxxx. 4.—Words full to my purpose; which at once add the highest authority to this sentiment, and direct our minds to its proper influence, and due improvement.

† Acts xx. 28.

‡ Psal. li. 7. Thou shalt purge. I prefer this translation before the new one. Because this speaks the language of a more stedfast belief, and gives the highest honour to the divine goodness. Were the words intended to bear no more than the common petitionary sense, and not to be expressive of a noble plerophory of faith; they would rather have been תזאני and בבסני imperatives, not futures.

* Zech. xiii. 1. † Psal. lxii. 11. ‡ Psal. cl. 1.

‖ If this thought is admitted a second time, and suffered to ennoble the next paragraph; it is partly, because of its unequalled sublimity; partly, because it awakens the most grand idea of creating power; and partly, because the practice of the psalmist, an authority too great to be controverted, is my precedent.—The beautiful stanza quoted from Psal. xxxiii. 6. is a proof, how thoroughly the royal poet entered into the majesty of the Mosaic narration. The repetition of the sentiment, ver. 9. intimates, how peculiarly he was charmed with that noble manner of describing the divine operations. While the turn of his own composition shews, how perfectly he possessed the same elevated way of thinking. And this, long before Longinus wrote the celebrated treatise, which has taught the Heathen, as well as the Christian world, to admire the dignity of the Jewish legislator's style. Vid. Long. de Sublim. sect. IX.

§ To give one instance of this remark.—The earth, in the diurnal revolution, which it performs on its own axis, whirls about who only ſpake, and the world was made *? who only gave command, and the ſtupendous axle was lodged faſt, the lofty wheels moved complete!—What a ſure defence, O my ſoul, is this everlaſting ſtrength of thy GOD! Be this thy continual refuge, in the article of danger; this thy never-failing reſource, in every time of need.

What cannot this uncontrollable power of the great JEHOVAH effect for his people? Be their miſeries ever ſo galling, cannot this GOD relieve them? Be their wants ever ſo numerous, cannot this GOD ſupply them? Be their corruptions within ever ſo inveterate, or their temptations without ever ſo importunate; cannot this mighty, mighty GOD ſubdue the former, and fortify them againſt the latter?—Should trials, with an inceſſant vehemence, ſift thee as wheat; ſhould Tribulation, with a weight of woes, almoſt grind thee to powder; ſhould Pleaſure, with bewitching ſmiles, ſolicit thee to delicious ruin; yet "hold thee faſt by GOD," and lay thy help upon him that is omnipotent †. Thou canſt not be involved in ſuch calamitous circumſtances, or expoſed to ſuch imminent peril; but thy GOD, whom thou ſerveſt, is able to deliver thee from the one, and to ſupport thee under the other. To ſupport! to deliver! let me not diſhonour the unlimited greatneſs of the power. He is able to exalt thee, from the deepeſt diſtreſs, to the moſt triumphant joy; and to make even a complication of evils work together for thy everlaſting good. He is able, not only to accompliſh what I have been ſpeaking, but to do exceeding abundantly above all that we can aſk or think *.

O! the wretched condition of the wicked, who have this LORD of all power for their enemy! O! the deſperate madneſs of the ungodly, who provoke the Almighty to jealouſy!—Beſotted creatures! are you able to contend with your Maker, and enter the liſts againſt incenſed Omnipotence? Can you bear the fierceneſs of his wrath, or ſuſtain the vengeance of his lifted arm? At his preſence, though awfully ſerene, the hills melt like wax, and the "mountains ſkip like frighted lambs." At the leaſt intimation of his diſpleaſure, the foundations of nature rock, and the "pillars of heaven tremble." How then can a withered leaf endure, when "his lips are full of indignation, and his tongue as a devouring fire?" Or can any thing ſtreſs a guilty worm, when the great and terrible GOD ſhall whet his glittering ſword, and his hand take hold on inexorable judgment? when that hand, which ſhoots the planets, maſſes of exceſſive bulk †, with ſuch ſurpriſing rapidity, through the ſky: that hand, which darts the comets to ſuch unmeaſurable diſtances beyond the orbit of our remoteſt planet, beyond the purſuit of the ſtrongeſt eye; when THAT HAND is ſtretched out to puniſh, can the munition of rocks, the intervention of ſeas, or even interpoſing worlds, divert the blow?——Conſider this, Ambition; and bow thy haughty creſt. Conſider this, Diſobedience; and bend thy iron ſinew. O! conſider this, all ye that forget, or affront, the tremendous JEHOVAH. He can, by a ſingle act of his will, lay the univerſe in utter ruin: and can he want power to bring you, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, to the duſt of death, or to the flames of hell? He has—I ſay not, ten thouſand lightnings to ſcorch you to aſhes; ten thouſand thunders to cruſh you into atoms; but, what is unſpeakably more dreadful,—he has an army of terrors, even in the look of his angry countenance. His very frown is worſe than deſtruction.

I cannot diſmiſs this ſubject, without admiring the patience of the bleſſed GOD; who, though ſo ſtrong and powerful, yet "is provoked every day."—Surely, as is his majeſty, ſo is his mercy; his pity altogether commenſurate to his power. If I vilify but the name of an earthly monarch, I loſe my liberty, and am confined to the dungeon. If I appear in arms, and draw the ſword, againſt my national ſovereign, my life is forfeited, and my very blood will ſcarce atone for the crime. But thee I have diſhonoured, O thou King immortal and inviſible! Againſt thee my breaſt has fomented ſecret diſaffection; my behaviour about at the rate of above a thouſand miles an hour. And as the great orbit which it deſcribes annually round the ſun, is reckoned at 554 millions of miles, it muſt travel near a million and a half each day.—What a force muſt be requiſite, to protrude ſo vaſt a globe, and wheel it on, loaded as it is with huge mountains, and ponderous rocks, at ſuch a prodigious degree of velocity! It ſurpaſſes human conception!—How natural, how pertinent, how almoſt unneceſſary, after ſuch an obſervation, is the acknowledgement made by holy Job, I know that THOU canſt do every thing, and that no thought, no imaginable ſcheme, can be with-holden from thee, can lie beyond thy power to execute.—— Chap. xlii. 2.

* Pſal. xxxiii. 9.

† It is a moſt charming deſcription, as well as a comfortable promiſe, which we find in Iſa. xl. 29, 30, 31.—HE giveth power to the feeble; and to them that have no might at all, he not only imparteth, but increaſeth ſtrength; making it to abound, where it did not ſo much as exiſt.—Without this aid of JEHOVAH, even the youths, amidſt the very prime of their vigour and activity, ſhall become languid in their work, and weary in their courſe. And the young men, to whoſe reſolution and abilities nothing ſeemed impracticable, ſhall not only not ſucceed, but utterly fail, and miſcarry in their various enterpriſes.——Whereas, they that wait upon the LORD, and confide in his grace, ſhall preſs on, with a generous ardor, from one degree of religious improvement to another. Inſtead of exhauſting, they ſhall renew their ſtrength; difficulties ſhall animate, and toil invigorate them. They ſhall mount up as with ſoaring wings, above all oppoſition; they ſhall be carried through every diſcouragement, as eagles cleave the yielding air. They ſhall run, with ſpeed and alacrity, the way of GOD's commandments, and not be weary: they ſhall hold on (בלכתם progredientur, carpent iter) with conſtancy and perſeverance, in thoſe peaceful paths, and not faint; but arrive at the end of their progreſs, and receive the prize of their high calling.

To this moſt chearing doctrine, permit me to add its no leſs beautiful and delightful contraſt. Eliphaz, ſpeaking of the enemies of the righteous, ſays—יתרם מבלי אכל—which is rendered by a great critic in ſacred learning, Nihil exiſtum ſoctio nobis adverſarii.—We ſhould reckon our language acquitted itſelf tolerably well, if, when depreciating the abilities of an adverſary, it ſhould repreſent them weak as the ſcorched thread, feeble as the diſſolving ſmoke. But theſe are cold forms of ſpeech, compared with the eloquence of the Eaſt. According to the genius of our Bible, all the power that oppoſes the godly, is a mere nothing; or, to ſpeak with a more emphatical air of contempt, a deſtroyed, an extirpated nothing.—Admire this expreſſion, ye that are charmed with daring images, and (what Tully calls verbum ardens) a ſpirited and glowing diction.—Remember this declaration, ye that fight the good fight of faith. The united force of all your enemies, be it ever ſo formidable to the eye of fleſh, is before your almighty Guardian, nihil nihiliſſimum, not only nothing, but leſs than nothing, and vanity. Job xxii. 20.

* I ſhould, in this place, avoid ſwelling the notes any farther, was it not to take notice of the inimitable paſſage quoted above, and to be found Eph. iii. 20.—Which, if I do not greatly miſtake, is the moſt complete repreſentation of divine power, that it is poſſible for words to frame.—To do all that our tongue can aſk, is a miracle of might. But we often think more than we can expreſs, and are actuated with "groanings unutterable." Yet to anſwer theſe vaſt deſires, is not beyond the accompliſhment of our heavenly Father.—Nay, to make his gifts and his bleſſings commenſurate to the largeſt ſtretch of human expectations, is a ſmall thing with the GOD of glory. He is able to do above all that the moſt enlarged apprehenſion can imagine; yea, to do abundantly more, exceeding abundantly more, than the mind itſelf, in the utmoſt exertion of all its faculties, is capable of wiſhing, or knows how to conceive.

† One of the planets (Saturn) is ſuppoſed to be more than 90 times as big as the globe on which we live. According to the ſame calculation, the largeſt of the planets (Jupiter) is above 200 times vaſter, than this vaſt collection of ſpacious foreſts, towering mountains, extenſive continents, and boundleſs oceans.—Such enormous magnitude! winged with ſuch prodigious ſpeed!—It raiſes aſtoniſhment beyond expreſſion.—With GOD is terrible majeſty! Job xxxvii. 22.—Who ſhall not fear THEE, O LORD, and glorify thy name? Rev. xv. 4.

has

has risen up in open rebellion; and yet I am spared, yet I am preserved. Instead of being banished from thy presence, I sit at thy table, and am fed from thy hand. Instead of pursuing me with thunder-bolts of vengeance, thy favours surround me on every side. That arm, that injured arm, which might justly fall, with irretrievable ruin, on a traitor's head, is most graciously stretched out, to caress him with the tenderest endearments, to cherish him with every instance of parental kindness!—O! thou mightiest, thou best of beings, how am I pained at my very soul, for such shameful and odious disingenuity! Let me always abominate myself, as the basest of creatures; but adore that unwearied long-suffering of thine which refuses to be irritated; love that unremitted goodness, which no acts of ingratitude could stop, or so much as check, in its gracious current. O! let this stubborn heart, which duty could not bind, which threatenings could not awe, be the captive, the willing captive, of such triumphant beneficence.

I HAVE often been struck with wonder at that almighty skill, which weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance; which proportioned the waters in the hollow of its hand, and adjusted the dust of the earth * by a measure. But how much more marvellous is that magnificent œconomy, which poised the stars with inexpressible nicety, and meted out the heavens with a span! where all is prodigiously vast; immensely various; and yet more than mathematically exact. Surely the wisdom of GOD manifests itself in the skies, and shines in those lucid orbs; shines on the contemplative mind, with a lustre incomparably brighter than that which their united splendors transmit to the eye.

Behold yonder countless multitude of globes; consider their amazing magnitude; regard them as the sovereigns of so many systems, each accompanied with his planetary equipage. Upon this supposition, what a multiplicity of mighty spheres must be perpetually running their rounds, in the upper regions! Yet none mistake their way, or wander from the goal, though they pass through trackless and unbounded fields. None fly off from their orbits, into extravagant excursions; none press in upon their centre, with too near an approach. None interfere with each other in their perennial passage, or intercept the kindly communications of another's influence †. But all their rotations proceed in eternal harmony; keeping such time, and observing such laws, as are most exquisitely adapted to the perfection of the whole.

WHILE I contemplate this "excellent wisdom, "which made the heavens," and attunes all their motions; how am I abashed at that mixture of arrogance and folly, which has, at any time, inclined me to murmur at thy dispensations, O LORD! What is this, but a sort of implicit treason against thy supremacy, and a tacit denial of thy infinite understanding?—Hast thou so regularly placed such a wonderful diversity of systems, through the spaces of the universe?—didst thou, without any probationary essays, without any improving retouches, speak them into the most consummate perfection?—dost thou continually superintend all their circumstances, with a sagacity that never mistakes the minutest tittle of propriety? And shall I be so unaccountably stupid, as to question the justness of thy discernment, in "chusing my inheritance, and fixing the bounds of "my habitation!"—Not a single erratum, in modelling the structure, determining the distance *, and conducting the career of unnumbered worlds! And shall my peevish humour presume to censure thy interposition, with regard to the affairs of one inconsiderable creature; whose stature, in such a comparative view, is less than a span, and his present duration little more than a moment?

O! THOU GOD, "in whose hand my breath is, and "whose are all my ways," let such sentiments as now possess my thoughts, be always lively on my heart! These shall compose my mind into a cheerful acquiescence, and a thankful submission; even when afflictions gall the sense, or disappointments break my schemes. Then shall I, like the grateful patriarch †, in all the changes of my condition, and even in the depths of distress, erect an altar of adoring resignation, and inscribe it with the apostle's motto, TO GOD ONLY WISE. Then, shouldst thou give me leave to be the carver of my own fortunes, I would humbly desire to relinquish the grant, and recommit the disposal of myself to thy unerring beneficence. Fully persuaded that thy counsels, though contrary to my froward inclinations, or even afflictive to my flesh, are incomparably more eligible than the blind impulse of my own will, however soothing to animal nature.

ON a careless inspection, you perceive no accuracy or uniformity in the position of the heav'nly bodies. They appear like an illustrious chaos; a promiscuous heap of shining globes; neither ranked in order, nor moving by line.—But what seems confusion, is all regularity. What carries a show of negligence, is really the result of the most masterly contrivance. You think, perhaps, they rove in their aerial flight; but they rove by the nicest rule, and without the least error. Their circuits, though seemingly devious; their mazes, though intricate to our apprehensions ‡; are marked out, not indeed with golden compasses, but by the infinitely more exact determinations of the all-wise Spirit.

So, what wears the appearance of calamity, in the allotments appointed for the godly, has really the nature of a blessing. It issues from fatherly love, and will terminate in the richest good. If Joseph is snatched from the embraces of an indulgent parent, and abandoned to slavery in a foreign land; it is in order to save the holy family from perishing by famine; and to preserve

* Isa. xl. 12. The dust of the earth, in this sublime scripture, signifies the dry land, or solid part of our globe; which is placed in contradistinction to the whole collection of fluid matter, mentioned in the preceding clause.—Perhaps, this remarkable expression may be intended to intimate, not only the extreme niceness, which stated the dimensions of the world in general, or in the gross; but also that particular exactness, with which the very smallest materials that constitute its frame, (not excepting each individual atom), were calculated and disposed.—q. d. 'Tis a small thing to say, No such enormous redundancies, as unnecessary ridges of mountains, were suffered to subsist. There was not so much as the least grain of sand superfluous, or a single particle of dust deficient.—As the grand aim of the description is, to celebrate the consummate wisdom, exemplified in the creation; and to display that perfect proportion, with which every part tallies, coincides, and harmonizes with the whole; I have taken leave to alter the word of our English translation comprehend, and introduce in its stead a term, equally faithful to the Hebrew, and more significative of the prophet's precise idea.

† The interception of light, by means of an eclipse, happens very rarely. And then it is of so short a continuance, as not to be at all inconvenient. Nay, it is attended with such circumstances, as render it rather useful, than prejudicial.

* The sun in particular, (and let this serve as a specimen of that most curious exactness, with which the other celestial bodies are constituted and all their circumstances regulated) the sun is formed of such a determined magnitude, and placed at such a convenient distance,—"as not to annoy, but only refresh us, and nourish "the ground with its kindly warmth. If it was larger, it would "set the earth on fire; if smaller, it would leave it frozen. If it "was nearer us, we should be scorched to death; if farther from "us, we should not be able to live for want of heat."
STACKHOUSE's History of the Bible.

† See Gen. xii. 7. 8.

‡ ——Mazes intricate,
Eccentric, intervolv'd; yet regular
Then most, when most irregular they seem. MILT.

ſerve "the ſeed, in whom all the nations of the earth "ſhould be bleſſed." If he falls into the deepeſt diſgrace, it is on purpoſe that he may riſe to the higheſt honours. Even the confinement of the priſon, by the unſearchable workings of providence, opens his way to the right hand of the throne itſelf.—Let the moſt afflicted ſervant of JESUS wait the final upſhot of things. He will then diſcover the apparent expediency of all thoſe tribulations, which now, perhaps, he can hardly admit without reluctance, or ſuffer without ſome ſtruggles of diſſatisfaction. Then the guſhing tear, and the heaving ſigh, will be turned into tides of gratitude, and hymns of holy wonder.

In the mean time, let no audacious railer preſumptuouſly impeach the divine procedure; but, adoring where we cannot comprehend, let us expect the evolution of the myſterious plan. Then ſhall every eye perceive, that the ſeeming labyrinths of providence, were the moſt direct and compendious way, to effect his general purpoſes of grace, and to bring about each one's particular happineſs *.—Then, alſo, ſhall it be clearly ſhewn, in the preſence of applauding worlds, why Virtue pined in want, while Vice rioted in affluence; why amiable Innocence ſo often dragged the dungeon-chain, while horrid Guilt trailed the robe of ſtate.—That day of univerſal audit, that day of everlaſting retribution, will not only vindicate, but magnify, the whole management of Heaven. The auguſt ſeſſions ſhall cloſe with this unanimous, this glorious acknowledgment: "Though clouds "and darkneſs, impenetrable by any human ſcrutiny, "were ſometimes round about the ſupreme Conductor of "things; yet righteouſneſs and judgment were the conſtant "habitation of his ſeat †; the invariable ſtandard of all his "adminiſtrations."——Thus (if I may illuſtrate the grandeſt truths by inferior occurrences) while we view the arras on the ſide of leaſt diſtinction, it is void of any elegant fancy; without any nice ſtrokes of art; nothing but a confuſed jumble of incoherent threads. No ſooner is the piece beheld in its proper aſpect, but the ſuſpected rudeneſs vaniſhes, and the moſt curious arrangement takes place. We are charmed with deſigns of the fineſt taſte, and figures of the moſt graceful form. All is ſhaped with ſymmetry; all is clad in beauty.

THE goodneſs of GOD is moſt eminently diſplayed in the ſkies.—Could we take an underſtanding ſurvey of whatever is formed by the divine Architect, throughout the whole extent of material things; our minds will be tranſported with their excellencies, and our tongues echo back that great encomium. They are "good, very "good ‖." Moſt beautiful ‖ in themſelves; contrived by unerring wiſdom, and executed with inimitable ſkill. Moſt uſeful ‖ in their functions; exactly fitting the places they fill, and completely anſwering the purpoſes for which they were intended.—All the parts of the inanimate creation proclaim, both by their intrinſic and relative excellencies, the all-diffuſive beneficence of their Maker.

How much more wonderful are the diſplays of divine indulgence, in the worlds of life! Becauſe dead

——— The moral world,
Which, though to us it ſeems embroil'd, moves on
In higher order; fitted, and impell'd
By wiſdom's fineſt hand, and iſſuing all
In gen'ral good. THOMS. Wint. l. 586. laſt edit.

† Pſal. xcvii. 2. ‡ Gen. i. 31.

‖ This καλοκαγαθια of the univerſe, and all its parts, has been very highly, and very juſtly extolled, by the ancient inquirers into nature; and was, indeed, an illuſtrious ſcene ſpread before the ſages of the Heathen world, wherein to contemplate the goodneſs and the glories of the Supreme Being.—It was nobly ſaid by a Pagan philoſopher, on this occaſion; Εις τουτο μεταβληθηναι τον Θεον ὁταν τον κοσμον δημιουργειν. That GOD, when he undertook the work of creation, tranſformed himſelf into love.—But he need not tranſform himſelf into this amiable principle; for "GOD is love;" as was much more nobly ſaid by one, whom that philoſopher would have termed a barbarian. 1 John iv. 8.

matter is incapable of delight, therefore the gracious Creator has raiſed innumerable ranks of perceptive exiſtence; ſuch as are qualified to taſte his bounty, and enjoy each a happineſs ſuited to its peculiar ſtate. With this view, he furniſhed the regions of inferior nature, with an order and a ſeries of ſenſitive beings. The waters teem with ſhoals of finny inhabitants. The dry land ſwarms with animals of every order. The dwellings of the firmament are occupied by multitudes of winged people. Not ſo much as a green leaf, philoſophers ſay, but lodges and accommodates its puny animalcule tenants *.—And wherefore this diverſity, this profuſion of living creatures, flying in the air, treading the ground, and gliding through the paths of the ſea? For this moſt glorious reaſon:—that the eternal Sovereign may exerciſe his ſuperabundant goodneſs; that his table may be furniſhed with millions and millions of gueſts; that he may fill, every hour, every moment, their mouths with food, or their hearts with gladneſs.

But what a ſmall theatre are three or four elements for the operations of JEHOVAH's bounty! His magnificent liberality ſcorns ſuch ſcanty limits. If you aſk, Wherefore has he created all worlds, and repleniſhed them with an unknown multiplicity of beings, riſing, one above another, in an endleſs gradation of ſtill richer endowments, and ſtill nobler capacities? The anſwer is,—For the manifeſtation of his own glory, and eſpecially for the communication of his inexhauſtible beneficence †.—The great Creator could propoſe no advantage to himſelf. His bliſs is incapable of any addition. "Before the mountains were brought forth, or ever the earth and the world were made," he was ſupremely happy in his own independent and all-ſufficient ſelf. His grand deſign therefore, in erecting ſo many ſtately fabrics, and peopling them with ſo many tribes of inhabitants, was, to tranſfuſe his exuberant kindneſs, and impart felicity in all its forms. Ten thouſand worlds, ſtocked with ten thouſand times ten thouſand ranks of ſenſitive and intelligent exiſtence, are ſo many ſpacious gardens, which, with rivers of communicated joy, this ever-flowing fountain waters continually.

Boundleſs ‡, and (which raiſes our idea of this divine principle, to the very higheſt degree of perfection) diſintereſted ‡ munificence! How inexpreſſibly

* A very celebrated poet, in a beautiful paragraph on this ſubject, informs his reapers, that all nature ſwarms with life. In ſubterranean cells, the earth heaves with vital motion. Even the hard ſtone, in the very inmoſt receſſes of its impenetrable citadel, holds multitudes of animated inhabitants. The pulp of mellow fruit, and all the productions of the orchard, feed the inviſible nations. Each liquid, whether of acid taſte, or milder reliſh, abounds with various forms of ſenſitive exiſtence. Nor is the pure ſtream, or tranſparent air, without their colonies of unſeen people.—In which conſtitution of things, we have a wonderful inſtance, not only of the divine goodneſs to thoſe minute beings, in giving them a capacity for animal gratifications; but of his tender care for mankind, in making them imperceptible to our ſenſes.

——— Theſe, conceal'd
By the kind art of forming Heav'n, eſcape
The groſſer eye of man: for if the worlds
In worlds incloſ'd ſhould on his ſenſes burſt;
From cates ambroſial, and the nectar'd bowl,
He'd turn abhorrent: and, in dead of night,
When ſilence ſleeps o'er all, be ſtunn'd with noiſe.
THOMSON's Summer.

† A ſacred writer, conſidering this delightful ſubject, and confining his obſervation within the narrow limits of his own country, cries out, with a mixture of amazement and gratitude, How great is his goodneſs, and how great is his beauty!—Who then can forbear being loſt in wonder, and tranſported with delight, when he extends his ſurvey to thoſe infinitely more copious communications of divine bounty; which, like ſalutary and refreſhing ſtreams, run through all worlds; and make, not only the little valleys of a ſingle kingdom, but the immenſity of creation laugh, and ſing?—Zech. ix. 17.

‡ ‡ In this ſenſe, there is none good, but One, that is GOD.—None amiable is the bleſſed GOD, conſidered in this charming light! Is it poſſible to conceive any excellence ſo adorable and lovely, as infinite benevolence, guided by unerring wiſdom, and exerting almighty power, on purpoſe to make a whole univerſe happy!—O my ſoul, what an irreſiſtible attractive is here! What a moſt worthy object, for thy moſt fervent affection! Shall now every glittering toy become a rival to this tranſcendently-beneficent being, and rob him of thy heart?—No. Let his all-creating arm teach thee to truſt in the fulneſs of his ſufficiency:—let his all-ſuperintending eye incline thee to acquieſce in the diſpenſations of his Providence:—and let his bounty, ſo freely vouchſafed, ſo amply diffuſed, induce thee to love him, with all the ardor of a grateful and admiring ſoul; induce thee to ſerve him, not with a joyleſs awe, or ſlaviſh dread, but with unfeigned alacrity, and a delightful complacency.

If the goodneſs of GOD is ſo admirably ſeen in the works of nature, and the favours of Providence; with what a noble ſuperiority does it even triumph in the myſtery of redemption *!—Redemption is the brighteſt mirror, in which to contemplate this moſt lovely attribute of the Deity. Other gifts are only as mites from the divine treaſury; but redemption opens, I had almoſt ſaid exhauſts, all the ſtores of indulgence and grace. Herein "GOD commendeth his love †:" not only manifeſts, but ſets it off, as it were, with every bright and grand embelliſhment: manifeſts it in ſo ſtupendous a manner, that it is beyond parallel; beyond thought; "above all bleſſing and praiſe."——Was he not thy Son, everlaſting GOD, thy only Son; the Son of thy boſom from eternal ages; the higheſt object of thy complacential delight? Was not thy love to this adorable Son, incomparably greater than the tendereſt affection of any, or the united affections of all, mortal parents? Was not the bleſſed JESUS more illuſtrious in excellency than all angels; more exalted in dignity than all heavens? Yet didſt thou reſign HIM for poor mortals; for vile ſinners!——Couldſt thou ſee him deſcend from his royal throne; and take up his abode in the ſordid ſtable? ſee him forego the homage of the ſeraphim; and ſtand expoſed to the reproachful indignities of an inſolent rabble? ſee him arraigned at the bar, and ſentenced to death; numbered with malefactors, and nailed to the gibbet; bathed in his own innocent blood, and pouring out his ſoul in agonies of ſorrow?——Could the Father, the Father himſelf, with unknown philanthropy ‡, ſay? "It "ſhall, it ſhall, be ſo! My pity to rebellious man pleads, "and prevails. Awake, therefore, O ſword ‖, edged "with divine wrath; awake; and be ſheathed in that "immaculate breaſt; pierce that dearly-beloved heart. I "am content, that my Son endure the ſharpneſs of death, "rather than ſinful mortals periſh for ever."——Incomprehenſible love! May it henceforward be the favourite ſubject of my meditation; more delightful to my muſing mind, than applauſe to the ambitious ear! May it be the darling theme of my diſcourſe; ſweeter to my tongue, than the droppings of the honey-comb to my taſte! May it be my choiceſt comfort, through all the changes of life; and my reviving cordial, even in the laſt extremities of diſſolution itſelf!

A prophet contemplating, with a diſtant ſurvey, this unexampled inſtance of almighty love, is wrapt into a tranſport of devotion. At a loſs for proper acknowledgments, he calls upon the whole univerſe to aid his labouring breaſt, and ſupply his lack of praiſe. Sing melodiouſly, ye vaulted heavens; exult; and even leap for gladneſs, thou cumberous earth; ye mountains, break your long ſilence, and burſt into peals of loudeſt acclamation *; for the LORD, by this precious gift, and this great ſalvation, hath comforted his people.——A ſacred hiſtorian hath left it upon record, that, at the firſt exhibition of this raviſhing ſcene, there was with the angel who brought the bleſſed tidings, a multitude of the heavenly hoſt, praiſing GOD, and making the concave of the ſkies reſound with their Hallelujahs. At the dawn of the Sun of Righteouſneſs, when he was beginning to riſe with healing in his wings, the morning-ſtars ſang together, and all the ſons of GOD ſhouted for joy.—And ſhall man, whom this gracious diſpenſation principally reſpects; ſhall man, who is the centre of all theſe gladdening rays; ſhall he have no heart to adore, no anthem to celebrate, this Love without end, and without meaſure grace?

MILT.

How pure is the ſtate of the ſky, and how clear its aſpect! Clearer than the limpid ſtream; purer than the tranſparent cryſtal; and more curiouſly fine than the poliſhed mirror. That ſtately cieling, fretted with gold, and ſtretched to an extent of many millions of leagues, is not diſfigured with a ſingle flaw. That azure canopy, embroidered with ſtars, and ſpacious enough to form a covering for unnumbered worlds, is without the leaſt ſpot or wrinkle.——Yet this, even this, will ſcarce yield us ſo much as a faint repreſentation of the divine purity. GOD is a GOD of matchleſs and tranſcendent excellency. His ways are uprightneſs itſelf. His counſels and words are the very ſanctity of wiſdom and of truth. The laws which he has given to univerſal nature, are exquiſitely contrived, and beyond all poſſibility of improvement. The precepts which he has appointed for the human race, are a complete ſummary of all that is honourable in itſelf, and perfective of the rational mind.——Not the leaſt overſight, in planning a ſeries of events for all futurity. Not the leaſt mal-adminiſtration, in managing the affairs of every age, ſince time began; and of every nation under the whole heavens.——Pardon theſe diſparaging expreſſions. A negative perfection is far, far beneath thy dignity, O thou Moſt Higheſt †. In all

* In this, and in other parts of the Contemplations, the reader will obſerve, that the attributes of the DEITY are repreſented as ſhining with more diſtinguiſhed luſtre in the wonders of redemption, than in the works of creation. If ſuch remarks ſhould ſeem to be unprecedented, or to ſtand in need of a vindication; permit me to ſubjoin the ſentiments of a great critic, equally verſed in both thoſe ſublime theories.—"In a perfect orator," he ſays, "Tully requires ſome ſkill in the nature of heavenly bodies; be-"cauſe his mind will become more extenſive and unconfined; "and, when he deſcends to treat of human affairs, he will both "think and write in a more exalted and magnificent manner. "For the ſame reaſon, that excellent maſter would have recom-"mended the ſtudy of thoſe great and glorious myſteries, which "revelation has diſcovered to us; to which the nobleſt parts of this "ſyſtem of the world are as much inferior, as the creature is leſs excel-"lent than the Creator." Spect. vol. VIII. No. 633.

† Rom. v. 8.

‡ Philanthropy, that is, loving-kindneſs to man.

‖ Zech. xiii. 7.

* If. xlix. 13.—I have not adhered to our common tranſlation but endeavoured to preſerve, ſomewhat more faithfully, the noble pathos, and inimitable energy, of the ſacred original.—The love of GOD manifeſted in a divine and dying Saviour, is a bleſſing of ſuch inconceivable richneſs, as muſt render all acknowledgments flat, and all encomiums languid. Yet I think, the moſt poetical and moſt emphatical celebration of that unſpeakable inſtance of goodneſs, is contained in this rapturous exclamation of the prophet. Which intimates, with a wonderful majeſty of ſentiment, that even the whole compaſs of the inanimate creation, could it be ſenſible of the benefit, and capable of delight, would expreſs its gratitude in all theſe demonſtrations of the moſt lively and exuberant joy.

† O thou Moſt Higheſt.—This expreſſion occurs more than once in the pſalms uſed by the eſtabliſhed church. It is, I think, one of thoſe beauties, which, becauſe often exhibited, generally eſcape our notice. It is a ſuperlative formed on a ſuperlative; and, though not ſtrictly conformable to grammatical rules, is nobly these instances; in all thy acts, and all thy attributes; thou art not only holy, but "glorious in holiness."

So inconceivably holy is the LORD GOD of hosts, that he sees defilement even in the brightness of the firmament. The living sapphire of the heavens, before his majesty, loses its lustre. Yea, the stars (though the most pure and resplendent part of the heavens) are not pure in his sight. How much less man, who, in his fallen and depraved state, is but as a worm, that crawls in the corrupted carcase; and the son of man, who, by reason of his manifold actual impurities, is too justly compared to an insect, that wallows amidst stench and putrefaction *?—Is there not then abundant cause, for the most irreproachable and eminent of mankind, to renounce all arrogant pretensions; to lay aside every assuming air; to take nothing but shame and confusion to themselves? A holy prophet, and a holy prince, felt such humbling impressions, from a glimpse of the uncreated purity. I abhor myself in dust and ashes †, was the declaration of the one; I am a man of unclean lips ‡, the confession of the other.—Should not this teach us all to adore the divine mercies, for that precious purifying fountain ‖, which was foretold from the foundation of the world, but was opened at that awful juncture, when knotty whips tore the flesh; when ragged thorns mangled the temples; when sharpened nails cut fresh sluices for the crimson current; when the gash of the spear completed the dreadful work, and forthwith flowed there, from the wounded heart, blood and water?

Especially, since GOD himself saw no blemish in his dear Son. He looketh to the moon, and it shineth not: yet his all-penetrating and jealous eye discerned nothing amiss, nothing defective, in our glorious Redeemer. Nothing amiss? He bore this most illustrious testimony concerning his holy child JESUS: "In him I am pleased; I am well pleased; I acquiesce, with entire complacency, and with the highest delight, in his person, his undertaking; and the whole execution of his office."—How should this thought enliven our hopes, while the other mortifies our pride? Should not our hearts spring within us, and even leap for joy, at the repeated assurance given us by revelation, that such a divinely-excellent person is our Mediator? What apparent reason has every believer to adopt the blessed virgin's exclamation! "My soul doth magnify the LORD "for his transcendent mercy; and my spirit rejoices, not "in wide-extended harvests, waving over my fertile "glebe *; not in armies vanquished, and leaving the "peculiar treasure of nations for my spoil *; but in an "infinitely richer, nobler blessing, even in GOD my Sa"viour."—That a person so sublime and perfect, has vouchsafed to become my Surety; to give himself for my Ransom, in the world below; and act as my Advocate, in the royal presence above; yea, to make my recovery the reward of his sufferings; my final felicity, the honour of his mediatorial kingdom!

WHEN an innumerable multitude † of bodies, many of them more than a hundred thousand miles in diameter ‡, are all set in motion;—when the orbits, in which they perform their periodical revolutions, are extended at the rate of several hundreds of millions;—when each has a distinct and separate sphere for finishing his vast circuit;—when no one knows what it is to be cramped; but each most freely expatiates in his unbounded career;—when every one is placed at such an immense remove from each other, that they appear to their respective inhabitants, only as so many spots of light;—how astonishing must be the expanse, which yields room for all those mighty globes, and their widely-diffused operations! To what prodigious lengths did the almighty Builder stretch his line, when he marked out the stupendous platform!—I wonder at such an immeasurable extent. My very thoughts are lost in this abyss of space. But be it known to mortals, be it never forgot by sinners, that, in all its most surprising amplitude, it is small, it is scanty, compared with the bounty and the mercy of its Maker.

His bounty is absolutely without limits ‖, and without end. The most lavish generosity cannot exhaust, or even diminish, his munificence. O! all ye tribes of men, or rather, all ye classes of intelligent creatures, nobly superior to them all.—The language seems to be sensible of its own deficiency, when the incomprehensible JEHOVAH is addressed, or celebrated. Oppressed, as it were, with the glories of the subject, it labours after a more emphatical manner of diction, than the ordinary forms of speech afford.—It is, if I rightly judge, one of those daring and happy peculiarities of a masterly genius, which Mr POPE so finely describes; and, while he describes, exemplifies:

---

> Great wits sometimes may gloriously offend,
> And rise to faults true critics dare not mend;
> From vulgar bounds with brave disorder part,
> And snatch a grace beyond the reach of art.
>
> Essay on Criticism.

St Paul's—ὑπερβολὴν καθ' ὑπερβολὴν εἰς βάρος—is a beautiful passage of the like nature. Which our translators have very properly rendered, less than the least of all saints.—His πολλῷ μᾶλλον περισσοτέρως is another instance of the same kind. But here the English version fails. Far better is extremely flaccid, compared with the nervous original. And I greatly question, whether it is possible to translate the sentence, with equal conciseness, and with equal spirit. See Eph. iii. 8. Phil. i. 23.

* Job xxv. 5. 6. I submit it to the judgment of the learned, whether this is not the true meaning of the text.—It may not, perhaps, recommend itself to the sequaniss'bly-nice critic; or to those persons who dream of, I know not what, dignity in our fallen nature. But it seems, in preference to every other interpretation, suitable to the sacred context; and is far, far from being injurious to the character of that apostate race, which is "altogether become abominable," and "is as an unclean thing."—On this supposition, there is not only an apparent, but a very striking contrast, between the purity of GOD, and the pollution of man: the purity of the most high GOD, which outshines the moon, and eclipses the stars: The pollution of degenerate man, which, exclusive of a Saviour, would render him as loathsome to the all-seeing eye, as the vilest vermin are in ours.—Without assigning this sense to the passage, I cannot discern the force of the antithesis, nor indeed the propriety of the sentiment. Worms, in the general, give us an idea of meanness and infirmity; not of defilement and impurity; unless they are insects, hatched amidst putrefaction, and considered in such noisome circumstances.—The two words of the original, רמה and תולעה are evidently used in this signification by Moses and Isaiah: by the former, to denote the vermin which devoured the putrefied manna; by the latter, to express the reptiles which swarm in the body that sees corruption. Exod. xvi. 20. Is. xiv. 11.

† Job xlii. 6. ‡ Is. vi. 5.

‖ In that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and uncleanness. Zech. xiii. 1.

† This refers, not only to the planets which pass and repass about our sun, but also to the other planetary worlds, which are supposed to attend the several fixed stars.

‡ The diameter of Jupiter is calculated at 130,650 miles, while its orbit is reckoned to consist of 895,134,000. Which computation, according to the maxims of astronomy, and the laws of proportion, may, as is taken for granted in the Contemplations, be applied to other planets revolving round other suns.

‖ By bounty, I mean, not the actual exercise, or the sensible effects, of this excellency in the Deity. These are and always must be, through the immense perfection of the attribute, and the necessary scantiness of the recipient, bounded. But I would be understood, as speaking of the divine power and the divine will, to exert divine beneficence. These can have no real, no imaginable limits. These, after a profusion of blessings, distributed to unnumbered worlds, continued through unnumbered ages, must still have more to bestow; for ever have more to bestow; infinitely more to bestow, than it is possible for creation itself to receive.

* * The inspired penman, from these two occasions of distinguished joy, sets forth the incomparably greater delight, which arises from the gift of a Saviour, and the blessing of redemption. Is. ix. ver. 3. compared with ver. 6.

ye are not ſtreightened in the liberality of your ever-bleſſed Creator, be not ſtreightened in your own expectations. Open your mouth wide, and he ſhall fill it with copious and continual draughts from the cup of joy. Your GOD, on whom is your whole dependance, is more than able, is more than willing, to "ſupply all your need, according to his riches in glory."—When the LORD JEHOVAH is the giver, and his grace * the gift; let your wiſhes be unbounded, and your cravings inſatiable. All that created beings can poſſibly covet, but a very ſmall pittance of that unknown happineſs, which the everlaſting Benefactor is ready to beſtow. Suppoſe every charitable diſpoſition which warms the hearts of the human race, added to thoſe more enlarged affections which glow in heavenly boſoms; what were they all, even in their higheſt exerciſe, compared with the benignity of the divine nature? Bleſs me then, thou eternal ſource of love; bleſs all that reverence thy holy name; according to thy own moſt profuſe goodneſs; whoſe great prerogative it is to diſdain all meaſure. O! bleſs me, in proportion to that grace; the richneſs of which unutterable by the tongues of men, and of angels) was once ſpoken in the groans, and written in the wounds, of the expiring Son!

Spacious indeed are theſe heavens! Where do they begin? Where do they end? What is their extent? Can angels anſwer my queſtion? Have angels travelled the vaſt circuit? can angels meaſure the bounds of ſpace? No; 'tis boundleſs, 'tis unknown,—'tis amazing all.—How charming then to reflect, that the mercy of GOD is "greater than the heavens;" is more extenſive than the dimenſions of the ſky. Tranſporting reflection! Let me indulge thee once more †. Let me think over the delightful diſplays of this lovely attribute; and, while I admire the trophies of forgiving goodneſs, add one to the number.—With what amiable and affecting colours is this repreſented in the parable of the prodigal! What could induce that fooliſh youth to forſake his father's houſe? Had he not been tenderly cheriſhed by the good parent, and loaded with benefits from his indulgent hand? Were not the reſtraints of parental government an eaſy yoke? or rather, a preſervative from ruin? Notwithſtanding every endearing obligation, he revolts from his duty; and launches unto ſuch ſcandalous irregularities as were diſhonourable to his family, and deſtructive to himſelf.—When neceſſity, not choice, but ſharp neceſſity drove him to a ſubmiſſive return; does the injured father ſtand aloof, or ſhut his doors? Quite the reverſe. He eſpies him, while he is yet a great way off; and, the moment he beholds the profligate youth, he has compaſſion on him. His bowels yearn; they "ſound like an harp," touched with notes divinely ſoft. He never once thinks of his ungracious departure, and infamous debaucheries. Pity, parental pity, paſſes an act of oblivion; and, in one inſtant, cancels a ſeries of long-continued provocations.——So ſtrong are the workings of fatherly affection, that he is almoſt impatient to embrace the naked and deſtitute wretch. The ſon's pace is ſlow, He aroſe and came; the father's is ſwift, He ſprung forth (aged as he was) and ran. And is there a ſingle frown in his brow, or one upbraiding word on his tongue?—Inſtead of loathing the ſordid creature, or reproaching him for his odious exceſſes; he falls on his neck, claſps him in his arms, and hugs him to his boſom. Inſtead of diſowning the riotous ſpendthrift, or rejecting him for his undutiful behaviour; he receives and welcomes him with kiſſes of delight. He rejoices at his return from extravagance and vice, as he formerly rejoiced on the day of his nativity.——When this companion of harlots opens his mouth, before he ſpeaks, the father hears. He interrupts him, in the midſt of his intended ſpeech. The overflowings of his compaſſionate heart can brook no delay. He ſeems to be uneaſy himſelf, till he has made the afflicted penitent glad, with the aſſurance of his acceptance, and the choiceſt of his favours.—While the poor abaſhed offender ſeeks nothing more than not to be abhorred, he is thoroughly reconciled, and honoured before the whole family. While he requeſts no other indulgence, than only to be treated as the meaneſt ſervant; he is clothed with the beſt robe; he is feaſted with the fatted calf; he is careſſed as the deareſt of children.—Was there ever ſo bright and winning a picture of the tendereſt mercy, moſt freely vouchſafed, even to the moſt unworthy of creatures? Yet thus, my ſoul; and thus, my fellow-ſinner; will the LORD GOD of everlaſting compaſſions receive us, if, ſenſible of our miſery, and thirſting for ſalvation, we turn to him through JESUS CHRIST.

Where ſin has abounded, ſays the proclamation from the court of heaven, grace doth much more abound.—Manaſſeh was a monſter of barbarity; for he cauſed his own children to paſs through the fire, and filled Jeruſalem with innocent blood. Manaſſeh was an adept in iniquity; for he not only multiplied, and to an extravagant degree, his own ſacrilegious impieties; but he poiſoned the principles, and perverted the manners of his ſubjects, making them to do worſe than the moſt deteſtable of the Heathen idolators *. Yet, through this ſuperabundant grace, he is humbled; he is reformed; and becomes a child of forgiving love, an heir of immortal glory.——Behold that bitter and bloody perſecutor Saul; when, breathing out threatnings †, and bent upon ſlaughter, he worried the lambs, and put to death the diſciples of JESUS. Who, upon the principles of human judgment, would not have pronounced him a veſſel of wrath, deſtined to unavoidable damnation? nay, would not have been ready to conclude, that, if there were heavier chains, and a deeper dungeon, in the world of woe; they muſt ſurely be reſerved for ſuch an implacable enemy of true godlineſs? Yet (admire and adore the inexhauſtible treaſures of grace!) this Saul is admitted unto the goodly fellowſhip of

* 2 Cor. ix. 8. GOD is able to make all grace abound towards you, that ye, having all ſufficiency in all things, may abound to every good work.—How beautiful and emphatical is this deſcription! inferior to nothing, but that extent of ability, and thoſe riches of liberality, which it ſo eloquently celebrates. Does it not exhauſt all the powers of language, while it attempts to give us a ſpecimen of the munificence of the LORD?

† Once more refers to page 32, of Reflections on a Flower-Garden.—What follows, to the next page, exhibits a digreſſive view of the divine mercy. I thought it proper to appriſe my reader of this excurſion; though, I hope it will be needleſs to offer an apology for enlarging upon a theme incomparably joyous. Who can complain of tediouſneſs, while I ſpeak conſolation to diſtreſſed, and recovery to ruined creatures? The divine mercy is the ſole fountain of all our preſent and future bleſſings. In conformity to this benign attribute, human hopes ariſe, and human felicity flows. Who, therefore, can be weary of viewing and reviewing, when the lengths and breadths of forgiving grace are the raviſhing proſpect?

* See 2 Chron. xxxiii.

† Acts ix. 1. Σαυλος ετι εμπνεων απειλης και φονου, Saul yet breathing out threatening and ſlaughter.—What a repreſentation is here of a mind, mad with rage, and abandoned to the fierceſt extremes of barbarity! I ſcarce know, whether I am more ſhocked at the perſecutor's ſavage diſpoſition, or charmed with the evangeliſt's lively deſcription.—The adverb ετι ſeems referable to chap. viii. ver. 3. and has, or in this connection, a peculiar force. The havock he had committed, the inoffenſive families he had already ruined, were not ſufficient to aſſuage his vengeful ſpirit. They were only a taſte, which, inſtead of glutting the blood-hound, made him more cloſely purſue the track, and more eagerly pant for deſtruction.—He is ſtill athirſt for violence and murder. So eager and inſatiable is his thirſt, that he even breathes out threatening and ſlaughter. His words are ſpears and arrows, and his tongue a ſharp ſword. 'Tis as natural for him to menace the Chriſtians, as to breathe the air.—Nay, they bleed every hour, every moment, in the purpoſes of his rancorous heart. It is only owing to want of power, that every ſyllable he utters, every breath he draws, does not deal about deaths, and cauſe ſome of the innocent diſciples to fall.

the prophets; is numbered with the noble army of martyrs; and makes a diſtinguiſhed figure among the glorious company of the apoſtles.—The Corinthians were flagitious even to a proverb. Some of them wallowed in ſuch abominable vices, and habituated themſelves to ſuch outrageous acts of injuſtice, as were a reproach to human nature. Yet even theſe ſons of violence, and ſlaves of ſenſuality, "were waſhed; were ſanctified; "were juſtified *:" waſhed in the precious blood of a dying Redeemer; ſanctified by the powerful operations of the bleſſed Spirit; juſtified through the infinitely-tender mercies of a gracious GOD. Thoſe who were once the burden of the earth, are now the joy of heaven, and the delight of angels.

There is another inſtance in ſcripture, which moſt loudly publiſhes that ſweeteſt of the divine names, The LORD, the LORD GOD, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering, and abundant in goodneſs and truth; keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion, and ſin †. An inſtance this, which exceeds all the former; which exceeds whatever can be imagined; which if I was to forget, the very ſtones might cry out, and ſound it in my ears. I mean the caſe of thoſe ſinners who murdered the Prince of Peace, and LORD of glory.—Theſe men could ſcarce have the ſhadow of an excuſe for their crime; hardly a circumſtance to extenuate their guilt. They were well acquainted with his exemplary converſation; they had often heard his heavenly doctrines; they were almoſt daily ſpectators of his unequalled miracles. They therefore had all poſſible reaſon to honour him, as the moſt illuſtrious of beings; and to receive his goſpel, as the moſt ineſtimable of bleſſings. Yet, notwithſtanding all theſe engaging motives to love him, even above their own lives, they ſeize his perſon; aſperſe his character; drag him before a Heathen tribunal; and extort a ſentence of death againſt innocence and holineſs itſelf. Never was the vileſt ſlave ſo contumeliouſly abuſed; nor the moſt execrable malefactor ſo barbarouſly executed. The ſun was confounded at the ſhocking ſcene; and one cannot but wonder, how the avenging lightnings could with-hold their flaſhes. The earth trembled at the horrid deed; and why, why did it not cleave aſunder, and open a paſſage, for ſuch blood-thirſty miſcreants, into the nethermoſt hell? Shall theſe ever hope to obtain forgiveneſs from the righteous Judge? Shall not theſe be conſigned over to inexorable wrath, and the ſevereſt torments?—O the miraculous effects of divine grace! O the triumphant goodneſs of GOD our Saviour! Many, even of theſe impious wretches, at the deſcent of the Holy Ghoſt, were convinced of their miſerable ſtate; were wounded with penitential remorſe; fled to the ſanctuary of the croſs; had their pardon ratified by the baptiſmal ſeal; and, continuing in the apoſtles doctrine, were made partakers of the kingdom of heaven: where they now ſhine, as ſo many everlaſting monuments of moſt diſtinguiſhed mercy; and receive beatitude paſt utterance, from that very Redeemer, whom once "with "wicked hands they crucified and ſlew."

Well might the prophet cry out with a pleaſing amazement, "Who is a GOD like unto thee, that pardoneth "iniquity, and paſſeth by tranſgreſſion ‡!"——Let all fleſh know aſſuredly; let all fleſh rejoice greatly; that with the LORD there is ſuch mercy, and with his CHRIST ſuch plentiful redemption.—And O! for the voice of an archangel, to circulate the glad tidings through the univerſe; that the American ſavage, as well as the European ſage, may learn the exceeding riches of grace in CHRIST: through whoſe infinitely-great propitiation, all manner of ſin, barbarity, and blaſphemy, are freely forgiven unto men.

WHAT a grand and majeſtic dome is the ſky! Where are the pillars which ſupport the ſtately concave? What art, moſt exactly true, balanced the preſſure? What props, of inſuperable ſtrength, ſuſtain the weight? How is that immeaſurable arch upheld, unſhaken and unimpaired; while ſo many generations of buſy mortals have ſunk and diſappeared, as bubbles upon the ſtream?—If thoſe ſtars are of ſuch an amazing bulk, how are they alſo faſtened in their lofty ſituation? By what miracle in mechanics, are ſo many thouſands of ponderous orbs kept from falling upon our heads; kept from daſhing both the world to pieces, and its inhabitants to death? Are they hung in golden or adamantine chains? Reſt they their enormous load on rocks of marble, or columns of braſs?——No; they are pendulous in fluid æther; yet are more immoveably fixed, than if the everlaſting mountains lent their foreſts for an axle-tree, or their ridges for a baſis. The almighty Architect ſtretches out the north, and its whole ſtarry train, over the empty place. He hangs the earth, and all the ethereal globes upon nothing †. Yet are their foundations laid ſo ſure, that they can "never be moved at any time."

No unfit repreſentation, to the ſincere Chriſtian, of his final perſeverance ‖; ſuch as points out the cauſe which effects it, and conſtitutes the pledge which

* Job xxvi. 7.

† With regard to the final perſeverance of the true believer, I am ſenſible, this point is not a little controverted.—The ſentiments which follow, are my ſtedfaſt belief. It is by no means proper, in a work of this nature, to enter upon a diſcuſſion of the ſubject. Neither have I room, ſo much as to hint, what might be urged for its ſupport.—Let my reader obſerve, that I am far from delivering it, as eſſential to Chriſtianity, or neceſſary to ſalvation. Millions, of the very contrary conviction, are, I doubt not, high in the favour of GOD, and in a growing meetneſs for his heavenly kingdom. As I blame none for rejecting *, none, I hope, will be offended with me for eſpouſing this particular doctrine.—To be of different opinions, at leaſt in ſome inferior inſtances, ſeems an unavoidable conſequence of our preſent ſtate; where ignorance, in part, cleaves to the wiſeſt minds; and prejudice eaſily beſets the moſt impartial judgments. This may turn to our common advantage; and afford room for the diſplay and exerciſe of thoſe healing virtues, moderation, meekneſs, and forbearneſs.—Let me only be permitted to aſk, whether this tenet does not evidently tend to eſtabliſh the comfort of the Chriſtian, and to magnify the fidelity of GOD our Saviour? whether, far from countenancing ſloth, or encouraging remiſſneſs, to know that our labour ſhall not be in vain, is not the moſt prevailing inducement to abound in the work of the LORD? 1 Cor. xv. 58.

Is any one inclined to examine the reaſons which made the author a proſelyte to this perſuaſion? He may find them diſplayed in the memorial, delivered by ſeveral ſelect and eminent divines of the church of England, at the renowned Synod of Dordt.—(See Acta Synod. Dordrech. par. II. pag. 246. of the Latin edition, publiſhed in a ſingle quarto volume.)—Thoſe who have no opportunity of conſulting the memoirs of that venerable aſſembly, I would refer to the works of the indefatigable and very learned Turrettine, or to thoſe of the candid and elegant Witſius.—Turret. tom. II. q. xvi. Witſ. Oecon. lib. III. chap. xiii.

The lateſt and fulleſt view of the point, which I ever remember to have met with, in any of our Engliſh writers, is in the Lime-ſtreet Lectures. Which are a defence of ſeveral moſt important doctrines of the goſpel, and contained in two octavo volumes; the united labours of nine modern divines; moſt of whom are well known to the world by their other evangelical and uſeful writings. In thoſe lectures, the final perſeverance of the ſaints is very particularly ſtated, and, to my apprehenſion at leaſt, moſt ſatisfactorily proved. The arguments, uſually urged againſt it, are impartially conſidered; and I cannot but think (with all due deference to the judgment of others) unanſwerably confuted.

And here (not to ſwell this note any farther) I ſhall only juſt hint, that the judicious Hooker (an authority, perhaps, as weighty and unexceptionable as any that can well be produced) gives a ſolemn atteſtation to this tenet, in a ſhort diſcourſe on the perpetuity of faith, ſubjoined to his Eccleſiaſtical Polity, fol. edit.

* As the final perſeverance of the ſaints is as much the doctrine of the Bible, as juſtification by the imputed righteouſneſs of Chriſt; our author's charity here ſeems to be culpable; and certainly thoſe who impugn any doctrine of Chriſtianity, are worthy of reproof.

* 1 Cor. vi. 9. 10. 11. † Exod. xxxiv. 6. 7. ‡ Mic. vii. 18.

aſcertains

aſcertains it.—His nature is all enfeebled. He is not able, of himſelf, to think a good thought. He has no viſible ſafeguard, nor any ſufficiency of his own. And yet whole legions of formidable enemies are in a confederacy to compaſs his ruin. The world lays unnumbered ſnares for his feet: the devil is inceſſantly urging the ſiege, by a multitude of fiery darts, or wily temptations: the fleſh, like a perfidious inmate, under colour of friendſhip, and a ſpecious pretence of pleaſure, is always forward to betray his integrity.—But, amidſt all theſe threatening circumſtances, of perſonal weakneſs, and imminent danger, an inviſible aid is his defence. I will uphold thee, ſays the bleſſed GOD, with the right hand of my righteouſneſs *. Comfortable truth! The arm, which fixes the ſtars in their orders, and guides the planets in their courſe, is ſtretched out to preſerve the heirs of ſalvation.—My ſheep, adds the great Redeemer, are mine; and they ſhall never periſh, neither ſhall any pluck them out of my hand †. What words are theſe! And did they come from HIM, who hath all power in heaven, and on earth! And were they ſpoke to the weakeſt of the flock, to every unfeigned follower of the great Shepherd? Then, Omnipotence itſelf muſt be vanquiſhed, before they can be deſtroyed, either by the ſeductions of fraud, or the aſſaults of violence.

If you aſk therefore, what ſecurity we have of enduring to the end, and continuing faithful unto death?——The very fame that eſtabliſhes the heavens, and ſettles the ordinances of the univerſe. Can theſe be thrown into confuſion ‡? Then may the true believer draw back unto perdition. Can the ſun be diſlodged from his ſphere, and ruſh lawleſsly through the ſky? Then, and then only, can the faith of GOD's elect ‖ be finally overthrown.——Be of good courage then, my ſoul; rely on thoſe divine ſuccours, which are ſo ſolemnly ſtipulated, ſo faithfully promiſed. Though thy grace be languid as the glimmering ſpark; though the overflowings of corruption threaten it with total extinction; yet, ſince the great JEHOVAH has undertaken to cheriſh the dim principle, "many waters cannot quench it, nor all floods "drown it." Nay, though it were feeble as the ſmoking flax §, goodneſs and faithfulneſs ſtand engaged, to augment the heat; to raiſe the fire, and feed the flame; till it beam forth, a lamp of immortal glory, in the heavens.

As to the faithfulneſs of a covenanting GOD, this may be emblematically ſeen in the ſtability of the heavenly bodies, and the perpetuity of their motions ¶.——Thoſe that are fixed or ſtationary, continue unalterable in their grand elevations. No injurious ſhocks, no violence of conflicting elements, are able to diſplace thoſe everlaſting hinges, on which dependent worlds revolve. Through the whole flight of time, they recede not, ſo much as a hair's breadth, from the preciſe central point of their reſpective ſyſtems.——While the erratic, or planetary, perform their prodigious ſtages without any intermiſſion, or the leaſt embarraſſment. How ſoon, and how eaſily, is the moſt finiſhed piece of human machinery diſconcerted! But all the celeſtial movements are ſo nicely adjuſted, all their operations ſo critically proportioned, and their mutual dependencies ſo ſtrongly connected, that they prolong their beneficial courſes throughout all ages.——While mighty cities are overwhelmed with ruin, and their very names loſt in oblivion; while vaſt empires are ſwept from their foundations, and leave not ſo much as a ſhadowy trace of their ancient magnificence; while all terreſtrial things are ſubject to viciſſitude, and fluctuating in uncertainty: theſe are permanent in their duration; theſe are invariable in their functions. "Not one faileth."——Who doubts the conſtant ſucceſſion of day and night, or the regular returns of ſummer and winter? And why, O! why ſhall we doubt the veracity of GOD, or diſtruſt the accompliſhment of his holy word? Can the ordinances of heaven depart? Then only can GOD forget to be gracious, or neglect the performance of his promiſe.——Nay, our LORD gives us yet firmer ground of affiance. He affords us a ſurer bottom for our faith, than the fundamental laws of the univerſe. Heaven and earth, he ſays, ſhall paſs away; but my words ſhall not, in a ſingle inſtance, or in one tittle of their import, paſs away. No: his ſacred word, whatever may obſtruct it, whoever may oppoſe it, ſhall be fulfilled to the very uttermoſt.

O powerful word! How aſtoniſhing is its efficacy! When this word was iſſued forth, a thouſand worlds emerged out of nothing. Should the mighty orders be repeated, a thouſand more would ſpring into exiſtence. By this word, the vaſt ſyſtem of created things is upheld, in conſtant and immutable perfection. Should it give command, or ceaſe to exert its energy; the univerſal frame would be diſſolved, and all nature revert to her original chaos. And this very word is pledged for the ſafety, the comfort, the happineſs of the godly. This inviolable, this almighty word, ſpeaks in all the promiſes of the goſpel.——How ſtrangely infatuated are our ſouls, that we ſhould value it ſo little? What infidels are we in fact, that we ſhould depend upon it no more? Did it create whatever has a being; and ſhall it not work faith in our breaſts? Do unnumbered worlds owe their ſupport to this word; and ſhall it not be ſufficient to buoy up our ſouls in troubles, or eſtabliſh them in trials? Is it the life of the univerſe, and ſhall it be a dead letter to mankind?

If I wiſh to be heard, when I implore heavenly bleſſings; is not this privilege moſt clearly made over to my enjoyment, in that well-known text, "Aſk, and "it ſhall be given you *?"——If I long for the eternal Comforter to dwell in my heart, and ſanctify my nature; have I not an apparent title to this high prerogative, conferred in that ſweet aſſertive interrogation; "How "much more ſhall your heavenly Father give the Holy "Spirit to thoſe that aſk him †?"—If I earneſtly covet the ineſtimable treaſures that are compriſed in the great IMMANUEL's mediation; can I have a firmer claim to the noble portion, than is granted in that moſt precious ſcripture; "Him that cometh to me, I will in no wiſe "caſt out ‡?"——What aſſurance of being intereſted in the unſpeakable mercies would I deſire? What form of conveyance, what deed of ſettlement, were it left to my own option, ſhould I chuſe? Here is the word of a king; the King immortal and inviſible; all whoſe

* If. xli. 10. † John x. 28.

‡ Jer. xxxi. 35. 36. ‖ Tit. i. 2.

§ The tenderneſs and faithfulneſs of GOD to his people are finely pictured by the prophet Iſaiah, chap. xlii. ver. 3. Which paſſage, becauſe of its rich conſolation, and uncommon beauty, is deſervedly adopted by St Matthew, and ingrafted into the ſyſtem of evangelical truths.—He will not himſelf break, nor ſuffer to be broken by any other, the bruiſed reed; nor quench the ſmoking flax. Was it poſſible to have choſen two more delicate, and expreſſive repreſentations?—Could any image be more ſignificant of a very infirm and enfeebled faith, than the flexile reed, that bends before every wind? which beſides its natural weakneſs, is made abundantly weaker by being bruiſed, and ſo is ready to fall in pieces of itſelf.—Or could any thing, with a more pathetical exactneſs, deſcribe the extreme imbecillity of that other principle of the divine life, love? The ſtate of the flax, juſt beginning to burn, is liable to be put out by the leaſt blaſt: more liable ſtill is the wick of the lamp, when it is not ſo much as kindled into a glimmering flame, but only breathing ſmoke, and uncertain whether it ſhall take fire or no.—Yet true faith, and heavenly love, though ſubſiſting amidſt ſuch pitiable infirmities, will not be abandoned by their great Author; ſhall not be extinguiſhed by any temptations; but be maintained, invigorated, and made finally triumphant. Matth. xii. 20.

¶ Pſal. cxix. 89. 90.

* Matth. vii. 7.

† Luke xi. 13. ‡ John vi. 37.

declarations

declarations * are truth itself.——If a monarch beſtow immunities on a body of men, and confirm them by an authentic charter; no one controverts, no one queſtions their right to the royal favours. And why ſhould we ſuſpect the validity of thoſe glorious grants, which are made by the everlaſting Sovereign of nature; which he has alſo ratified by an oath, and ſealed with the blood of his Son?—Corporations may be diſfranchiſed, and charters revoked.—Even mountains may be removed, and ſtars drop from their ſpheres. But a tenure founded on the divine promiſe, is unalienably ſecure, is laſting as eternity itſelf.

WE have endeavoured to ſpell a ſyllable of the eternal name in the ancient manuſcript of the ſky. We have catched a glimpſe of the Almighty's glory, from the luſtre of innumerable ſtars. But would we behold all his excellencies pourtrayed in full perfection, and drawn to the very life; let us attentively conſider the REDEEMER.——I obſerve, there are ſome parts of the firmament, in which the ſtars ſeem, as it were, to cluſter. They are ſown thicker, they lie cloſer, than uſual; and ſtrike the eye with redoubled ſplendor. Like the jewels on a crown, they mingle their beams, and reflect an increaſe of brilliancy on each other. Is there not ſuch an aſſemblage, ſuch a conſtellation of the divine honours, moſt amiably effulgent in the bleſſed JESUS?

Does not infinite wiſdom † ſhine, with ſurpaſſing brightneſs, in CHRIST? To the making of a world, there was no obſtacle; but to the ſaving of man, there ſeemed to be unſurmountable bars. If the rebel is ſuffered to eſcape; where is the inflexible juſtice, which denounces "death as the wages of ſin?" If the offender is thoroughly pardoned; where is the inviolable veracity, which has ſolemnly declared, "The "ſoul that ſinneth, ſhall die?" Theſe awful attributes are ſet in terrible array; and, like an impenetrable battalion, oppoſe the ſalvation of apoſtate mankind. Who can ſuggeſt a method to abſolve the traiterous race, yet vindicate the honours of almighty Sovereignty? This is an intricacy, which the moſt exalted of finite intelligencies are unable to clear.——But behold the unſearchable ſecret revealed! revealed in the wonderful redemption accompliſhed by a dying Saviour! ſo plainly revealed, that "he who runs may read;" and even babes underſtand, what minds of the deepeſt penetration could not contrive.—The Son of GOD, taking our nature, obeys the law, and undergoes death, in our ſtead. By this means, the threatened curſe is executed in all its rigour, and free grace is exerciſed in all its riches. Juſtice maintains her rights, and, with a ſteady hand, adminiſters impartial vengeance; while mercy diſpenſes her pardons, and welcomes the repentant criminal into the tendereſt embraces. Hereby the ſeemingly thwarting attributes are reconciled. The ſinner is ſaved, not only in full conſiſtence with the honour of the ſupreme perfections, but to the moſt illuſtrious manifeſtation of them all.

Where does the divine power ‡ ſo ſignally exert itſelf, as in the croſs of CHRIST, and in the conqueſts of grace?—our LORD, in his loweſt ſtate of humiliation, gained a more glorious victory, than when, through the dividing ſea, and the waſte howling wilderneſs, he "rode upon his chariots and horſes of "ſalvation." When his hands were rivetted, with irons, to the bloody tree; he diſarmed death of its ſting, and plucked the prey from the jaws of hell. Then, even then, while he was crucified in weakneſs, he vanquiſhed the ſtrong man, and ſubdued our moſt formidable enemies. Even then, he ſpoiled principalities, triumphed over the powers of darkneſs, and led captivity captive.—Now he is exalted to his heavenly throne, with what a prevailing efficacy does his grace go forth, "conquering, and to conquer!"—By this, the ſlaves of ſin are reſcued from their bondage, and reſtored to the liberty of righteouſneſs. By this, depraved wretches, whoſe appetites were ſenſual, and their diſpoſitions deviliſh, are not only renewed, but renewed after the image of GOD, and made partakers of a divine nature. Millions, millions of loſt creatures are ſnatched, by the interpoſition of grace, like brands from the burning; and, tranſlated into everlaſting manſions, ſhine brighter than the ſtars, ſhine bright as the ſun, in the kingdom of their Father.

Would you then ſee an incomparably more bright diſplay of the divine excellence, than the unſpotted firmament, the ſpangles of heaven, or the golden fountain of day exhibit? Contemplate JESUS of Nazareth. He is the brightneſs of his Father's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon. In his immaculate nature, in his heavenly tempers, in his moſt holy life, the moral perfections of the Deity are repreſented to the higheſt advantage *.—Hark! how Mercy, with her charming voice, ſpeaks in all he utters. See! how Benevolence pours her choiceſt ſtores, in all he does. Did ever compaſſion look ſo amiably ſoft, as in thoſe pitying tears, which ſwelled his eyes, and trickled down his cheeks, to bedew the rancour of his inveterate enemies?—Was it poſſible for Patience to aſſume a form ſo lovely, as that ſweetly-winning conduct, which bore the contradiction of ſinners? which entreated the obſtinate to be reconciled, beſought the guilty not to die?——In other things, we may find ſome ſcattered rays of JEHOVAH's glory; but in CHRIST they are all collected and united. In CHRIST they beam forth, with the ſtrongeſt radiance, with the moſt delightful effulgence. Out of Sion, and in Sion's great Redeemer, hath GOD appeared in perfect beauty.

Search then, my ſoul, above all other purſuits, ſearch the records of redeeming love. Let theſe be the principal objects of thy ſtudy. Here employ thyſelf with the moſt unwearied aſſiduity.—In theſe are hid all the treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge †. Such wiſdom, as charms and aſtoniſhes the very angels; engages their cloſeſt attention, and fills them with the deepeſt adoration ‡. Such knowledge, as qualifies the poſſeſſor, if

* In this ſenſe, that ſaying of our LORD is eminently true, He that hath ſeen ME, hath ſeen the FATHER, John xiv. 9.

† Coloſſ. ii. 3.—Not a mean degree, but a treaſure; not one treaſure, but many; not many only, but all treaſures, of true wiſdom, and ſaving knowledge; are in CHRIST, and his glorious goſpel.—The tranſcendent excellency of thoſe treaſures ſeems to be finally intimated, in that other expreſſion αποκρυφοι, hid; (which may be interpreted by the Hebrew טמן מטמן, Job iii. 21.) laid up, with the utmoſt care, and the greateſt ſafety. Not left at all adventures, to be ſtumbled upon by every giddy wanderer; or to fall into the arms of the yawning ſluggard; but like jewels of the brigheſt luſtre, or riches of the higheſt value, kept in ſtore to adorn and reward the diligent ſearcher.

‡ This, I believe, is the import of the apoſtle's language, though it is not a literal tranſlation of εις α επιθυμουσιν αγγελοι παρακυψαι, 1 Pet. i. 12.——I never had ſuch a lively apprehenſion of the beautiful ſignificancy of the laſt word, as when I have attended a diſſection of ſome part of the animal body. In order to diſcern the minutiæ of the admirable frame, the latent wonders of art and mechaniſm, the eye is ſo ſharpened, and its application ſo intenſely bended, as gives a very juſt experimental comment on that expreſſive phraſe, παρακυψαι.——With ſuch earneſt attention is the everlaſting goſpel contemplated by the angelic orders! How much more, if it were poſſible, does it deſerve the devout and inceſſant conſideration of human minds? ſince, by them, it is not only to be ſpeculated, as a bright and raviſhing diſplay of the divine attributes but to be applied to their fallen

* ——— If theſe fail,
The pillar'd firmament is rottenneſs,
And earth's baſe built on ſtubble. MILT. Comus.

† See the next note.

‡ CHRIST the wiſdom of GOD, and the power of GOD. 1 Cor. i. 24.—To the intent that now, unto the principalities and powers in heavenly places, might be known by the church (by the amazing contrivance, and accompliſhment of its redemption) the deep, extenſive, and (πολυποικιλος) greatly-diverſified wiſdom of GOD. Eph. iii. 10.

not for offices of dignity on earth, yet for the moſt honourable advancements in the kingdom of heaven. Diſunited from which knowledge, all application is but elaborate impertinence; and all ſcience, no better than pompous ignorance.—Theſe records contain the faultleſs model of duty, and the nobleſt motives to obedience. Nothing ſo powerful to work a lively faith, and a joyful hope, as an attentive conſideration of our LORD's unutterable merits. Nothing ſo ſovereign to antidote the peſtilential influence of the world, and deliver our affections from a ſlavery to ignoble objects, as an habitual remembrance of his extreme agonies. The genuine, the ever-fruitful ſource of all morality, is the unfeigned love of CHRIST; and the croſs, the CROSS, is the appointed * altar, from which we may fetch a coal †, to kindle this ſacred fire.

Behold, therefore, the man; the matchleſs and ſtupendous man; whoſe practice was a pattern of the moſt exalted virtue, and his perſon the mirror of every divine perfection. Examine the memoirs of his heavenly temper, and exemplary converſation. Contemplate that choir of graces, which were aſſociated in his mind, and ſhed the higheſt luſtre on all his actions. Familiarize to thy thoughts his inſtructive diſcourſes, and enter into the very ſpirit of his refined doctrines: that the graces may be transfuſed into thy breaſt, and the doctrines tranſcribed in thy life.——Follow him to Calvary's horrid eminence; to Calvary's fatal cataſtrophe: where innocence, dignity, and merit, were made perfect through ſufferings; each ſhining, with all poſſible ſplendor, through the tragical ſcene; ſomewhat like his own radiant bow, then glowing with the greateſt beauty, when appearing on the darkeſt cloud.——Be thy moſt conſtant attention fixed on that lovely and ſorrowful ſpectacle. Behold the ſpotleſs victim nailed to the tree, and ſtabbed to the heart. Hear him pouring out prayers for his murderers, before he poured out his ſoul for tranſgreſſors. See the wounds that ſtream with forgiveneſs, and bleed balm for a diſtempered world. O! ſee the juſtice of the Almighty and his goodneſs; his mercy and his vengeance; every tremendous and gracious attribute manifeſted, manifeſted with inexpreſſible glory, in that moſt ignominious, yet grandeſt, of tranſactions.

SINCE GOD is ſo inconceivably great, as theſe his marvellous works declare;

Since the great Sovereign ſends ten thouſand worlds,
To tell us, he reſides above them all,
In glory's unapproachable receſs ‡;

how can we forbear haſtening, with Moſes, bowing ourſelves to the earth, and worſhipping? O! what an honourable, as well as advantageous employ, is prayer!—Advantageous. By prayer, we cultivate that improving correſpondence with JEHOVAH, we carry on that gladdening intercourſe with his SPIRIT, which muſt begin here, in order to be completed in eternity.——Honourable. By prayer, we have acceſs to that mighty potentate, whoſe ſceptre ſways univerſal nature, and whoſe rich regalia fill the ſkies with luſtre. Prayer places us in his preſence-chamber; while "the blood of ſprinkling" procures us a gracious audience.

Shall I then bluſh to be found proſtrate before the throne of grace? Shall I be aſhamed to have it known, that I offer up ſocial ſupplications in the family, or am conſcientious in obſerving my private retirements? Rather, let me glory in this unſpeakable privilege. Let me reckon it the nobleſt poſture, to fall low on my knees before his footſtool; and the higheſt honour, to enjoy communion with his moſt exalted Majeſty.—Incomparably more noble, than to ſit, in perſon, on the triumphal chariot; or to ſtand, in effigy, amidſt the temples of worthies.

Moſt ineſtimable, in ſuch a view, is that promiſe, which ſo often occurs in the prophetic writings, and is the crowning benefit of the new covenant, I will be thy God *.—Will this ſupremely excellent and almighty Being vouchſafe to be my portion? to ſettle upon a poor ſinner, not the heritage of a country, not the poſſeſſion of the whole earth, but his own ever bleſſed ſelf? May I then, through his free condeſcending grace, and the unknown merits of his Son, look upon all theſe infinitely-noble attributes as my treaſure? May I regard the wiſdom, which ſuperintends ſuch a multitude of worlds, as my guide; the power, which produced, and preſerves them in exiſtence, as my guard; the goodneſs, which, by an endleſs communication of favours, renders them all ſo many habitations of happineſs, as my exceeding great reward?—What a fund of felicity is included in ſuch a bleſſing! How often does the Iſraeliſh prince exult in the aſſurance, that this unutterable and boundleſs good is his own? Intereſted in this, he bids defiance to every evil that can be dreaded, and reſts in certain expectation of every bleſſing that can be deſired. The LORD is my light and my ſalvation; whom then ſhall I fear? The LORD, with an air of exultation, he repeats both his affiance, and his challenge, is the ſtrength of my life; of whom then ſhall I be afraid †? Nothing ſo effectual, as this appropriating faith, to inſpire a dignity of mind, ſuperior to tranſitory trifles; or to create a calmneſs of temper, unalarmed by vulgar fears, unappalled by death itſelf.——The LORD is my Shepherd, ſays the ſame truly gallant and heroic perſonage: therefore ſhall I lack nothing ‡. How is it poſſible, he ſhould ſuffer want, who has the all-ſufficient fulneſs for his ſupply? So long as unerring wiſdom is capable of contriving the means, ſo long as uncontrollable power is able to execute them; ſuch a one cannot fail of being ſafe and happy, whether he continue amidſt the viciſſitudes of time, or depart into the unchangeable eternity.

Here, let us ſtand a moment, and humbly contemplate this great GOD, together with ourſelves, in a relative view.—If we reflect on the works of material nature, their number is incomprehenſible, and their extent unmeaſurable; each of them apart, ſo admirably framed; the connections of the whole ſo exquiſitely regulated; and all derived from one and the ſame glorious Agent;——If we recollect the far more noble accompliſhments of elegant taſte, and diſcerning judgment; of refined affections, and exalted ſentiments; which are to be found among the ſeveral orders of intelligent exiſtence; and all of them flowing, in rich emanations, from the one ſole fountain of intellectual light;—If we farther conſider this Author of material beauty, and moral excellency, as a Guardian, a Governor, and Benefactor to all his creatures; ſupporting the fallen nature, as a moſt benign ſcheme of recovering grace; as the ſure and only method of obtaining life and immortality.

* And I, ſays our LORD, if I be lifted up from the earth, and extended on the croſs, will draw all men unto me; will give ſuch a rich and tranſcendent diſplay of my love, as ſhall conſtitute the moſt powerful and prevailing attractive of theirs. John xii. 32.

† Alluding to Iſ. vi. 6.

‡ For this quotation, and ſeveral valuable hints, I acknowledge myſelf indebted to thoſe beautiful and ſublime poems, entitled, Night-Thoughts.—Of which I ſhall only ſay, that I receive freſh pleaſure, and richer improvement, from every renewed peruſal. And, I think, I ſhall have reaſon to bleſs the indulgent Beſtower of all wiſdom, for thoſe inſtructive and animating compoſitions, even in my laſt moments. Than which nothing can more emphatically ſpeak their ſuperior excellence, nor give a more ſolid ſatisfaction to their worthy author.—Happy ſhould I think myſelf, if theſe little ſketches of contemplative devotion might be honoured with the moſt inferior degree of the ſame ſucceſs; might receive a teſtimony, not from the voice of fame, but from the dying lips of ſome edified Chriſtian.

* Heb. viii. 10. † Pſal. xxvii. 1. ‡ Pſal. xxiii. 1.

whole ſyſtem, and protecting each individual, by an ever-watchful providence; preſiding over the minuteſt affairs, and cauſing all events to terminate in the moſt extenſive good; heaping, with unremitted liberality, his benefits upon every capable object, and making the circuit of the univerſe a ſeminary of happineſs:—Is it poſſible for the human heart, under ſuch captivating views, to be indifferent towards this moſt benign, moſt bountiful Original of being and of bliſs? Can any be ſo immerſed in ſtupidity, as to ſay unto the Almighty, —in the language of an irreligious temper, and licentious life, to ſay, "Depart from us; we implore not "thy favour; nor deſire the knowledge of thy ways." —Wonder, O heavens! be amazed, O earth! and let the inhabitants of both expreſs their aſtoniſhment at this unparalleled complication of diſingenuous, ungrateful, deſtructive perverſeneſs!

If we conſider our fallen and imperfect ſtate; frail in our bodies; enfeebled in our minds; in every part of our conſtitution, and in all the occurrences of life, "like a tottering wall, or a broken hedge:"—If we ſurvey our indigent and infirm ſtate, without holineſs, without ſpiritual ſtrength; our poſſeſſion of preſent conveniences entirely dependent on GOD's ſovereign pleaſure; yea, forfeited, juſtly forfeited, with every future hope, by a thouſand aggravated iniquities:—If we add the various diſaſters of our condition; agitated as we are by tumultuous paſſions; oppreſſed with diſpiriting fears; held in ſuſpenſe by a variety of perplexing * cares; liable to pains, and expoſed to troubles; troubles from every quarter; troubles of every kind:—Can we, amidſt ſo many wants, under ſuch deplorable infirmities, and ſubject to ſuch diſaſtrous accidents,—can we be unconcerned, whether GOD's omnipotent, irreſiſtible, all-conducting hand be againſt us, or for us? Imagination itſelf ſhudders at the thought!—Can we reſt ſatisfied, without a well grounded perſuaſion, that we are reconciled to this ſupreme LORD, and the objects of his unchangeable goodneſs!——If there be an abandoned wretch, whoſe apprehenſions are ſo fatally blinded; who is ſo utterly loſt to all ſenſe of his duty, and of his intereſt; let me bewail his miſery, while I abhor his impiety: bewail his miſery; though Popularity, with her choiceſt laurels, adorn his brow; though Affluence, with her richeſt delicacies, load his table; though half a nation, or half a world, conſpire to call him happy.

May I, by a believing application, ſolace myſelf in this everlaſting ſource of love, perfection, and joy! Grant me this requeſt, and I aſk no more.—Only, that I may expect, not with a reluctant anxiety, but with a ready chearfulneſs, the arrival of that important hour, when this veil of fleſh ſhall drop, and the ſhadows of mortality flee away: when I ſhall no longer complain of obſcure knowledge, languid affections, and imperfect fruition;—but ſhall ſee the uncreated and immortal Majeſty; ſee him, not in this diſtant and unaffecting method of reaſoning from his works; but with the moſt clear and direct intuition of the mind:—when I ſhall love him, not with a cold and contracted ſpirit; but with the moſt lively and enlarged emotions of gratitude:—when I ſhall inceſſantly enjoy the light of his countenance; and be united, inſeparably united to his all-glorious GODHEAD.——Take, ye ambitious, unenvied and unoppoſed, take to yourſelves the toys of ſtate. May I be enabled to rejoice in this bleſſed hope; and to triumph in that amiable, that adorable, that delightful name, the LORD MY GOD! And I ſhall ſcarce beſtow a thought on the ſplendid pageantry of the world, unleſs it be to deſpiſe its empty pomp, and to pity its deluded admirers.

ALL theſe bodies, though immenſe in their ſize, and almoſt infinite in their multitude, are obedient to the divine command. The GOD of wiſdom "telleth their "numbers," and is intimately acquainted with their various properties. The GOD of power "calleth them "all by their names," and aſſigns them whatſoever office he pleaſes. He marſhals all the ſtarry legions, with infinitely greater eaſe, and nicer order, than the moſt expert general arranges his diſciplined troops. He appoints their poſts; he marks their route; he fixes the time for their return. The poſts which he appoints, they occupy without fail. In the route which he ſettles they perſevere, without the leaſt deviation. And to the inſtant * which he fixes for their return, they are preciſely punctual.—He has given them a law, which, through a long revolution of ages, ſhall not be broken, unleſs his ſovereign will interpoſes for its repeal. Then, indeed, the motion of the celeſtial orbs is controlled; their action remains ſuſpended; or their influence receives a new direction.—The ſun, at his creation, iſſued forth with a command, to travel perpetually through the heavens. Since which, he has never neglected to perform the great circuit; "rejoicing as a giant to run "his race." But, when it is requiſite to accompliſh the purpoſes of divine love, the orders are countermanded; the flaming courier remits his career; ſtand ſtill in Gibeon †; and, for the conveniency of the choſen people, holds back the falling day.—The moon was diſpatched with a charge, never to intermit her revolving courſe, till day and night come to an end. But when the children of providence are to be favoured with an uncommon continuance of light, ſhe halts in her march, makes a ſolemn pauſe in the valley of Ajalon‡, and delays to bring on her attendant train of ſhadows.——When the enemies of the LORD are to be diſcomfited, the ſtars are levied into the ſervice; the ſtars are armed, and take the field; the ſtars, in their courſes fought againſt Siſera §.

* Perplexing.—Thoſe who read the original language of the New Teſtament, are ſufficiently appriſed, that ſuch is the ſignificancy of that benevolent diſſuaſive urged by our LORD, μὴ μεριμνᾶτε Matt. vi. 25.——I beg leave, for the ſake of the unlearned reader, to obſerve, that our tranſlation, though for the moſt part faithful and excellent, has here miſrepreſented our divine Maſter's meaning. Take no thought for your food, for your raiment, for your bodily welfare, is not only not the true ſenſe, but the very reverſe of this ſcriptural doctrine. We are required to take a prudent and moderate thought for the neceſſaries of life. The ſluggard who neglects this decent precaution, is ſeverely reprimanded; is ſent to one of the meaneſt animals, to bluſh for his folly; and learn diſcretion from her conduct, Prov. vi. 6. Our Saviour's precept, and the exact ſenſe of his expreſſion, is, Take no anxious thought; indulge no perplexing care; no ſuch care, as may argue an unreaſonable diſtruſt of providence, or may rend and tear your minds with diſtreſſing, with pernicious ſolicitude.

* "The planets, and all the innumerable hoſt of heavenly "bodies, perform their courſes and revolutions, with ſo much "certainty and exactneſs, as never once to fail; but, for al-"moſt 6000 years, come conſtantly about to the ſame period, "in the hundredth part of a minute." STACKHOUSE's Hiſt. Bible.

† This is ſpoken in conformity to the ſcripture-language, and according to the common notion. With reſpect to the power which effected the alteration, it is much the ſame thing, and alike miraculous, whether the ſun, or the earth, be ſuppoſed to move.

‡ Joſh. x. 12, 13.—The prophet Habbakuk, according to his lofty manner, celebrates this event; and points out, in very poetical diction, the deſign of ſo ſurpriſing a miracle.——The ſun and moon ſtood ſtill in their habitation: in the light, the long-continued and miraculous light, thy arrows, edged with deſtruction, walked on their awful errand; in the clear ſhining of the day, protracted for this very purpoſe, thy glittering ſpear, launched by thy people, but guided by thy hand, ſprung to its prey, Hab. iii. 11.

§ Judg. v. 20.—The ſcriptural phraſe fought againſt, will, I hope, be a proper warrant for every expreſſion I have uſed on this occaſion.——The paſſage is generally ſuppoſed to ſignify, that ſome very dreadful meteors, (which the ſtars were thought to influence) ſuch as fierce flaſhes of lightning, impetuous ſhowers of rain, and rapid ſtorms of hail, were employed by the

So dutiful is material nature! ſo obſequious, in all her forms, to her Creator's pleaſure!—The bellowing thunders liſten to his voice; and the volleyed lightnings obſerve the direction of his eye. The flying ſtorm and impetuous whirlwind, wear his yoke. The raging waves revere his nod; they ſhake the earth; they daſh the ſkies; yet never offer to paſs the limits which he has preſcribed.—Even the planetary ſpheres, though vaſtly larger than this wide-extended earth, are in his hand, as clay in the hands of the potter. Though, ſwifter than the northern blaſt, they ſweep the long tracts of æther; yet are they guided by his reins, and execute whatever he enjoins.——All thoſe enormous globes of central fire, which beam through the boundleſs azure, in compariſon of which an army of planets were like a ſwarm of ſummer-inſects; thoſe, even thoſe, are conformable to his will, as the melting wax to the impreſſed ſeal.—Since all, ALL is obedient, throughout the whole aſcent of things, ſhall man be the only rebel againſt the almighty Maker? Shall theſe unruly appetites reject his government, and refuſe their allegiance? Shall theſe headſtrong paſſions break looſe from divine reſtraint, and run wild, in exorbitant ſallies, after their own imaginations?

O my ſoul, be ſtung with remorſe, and overwhelmed with confuſion, at the thought! Is it not a righteous thing, that the bleſſed GOD ſhould ſway the ſceptre, with the moſt abſolute authority, over all the creatures which his power has formed? eſpecially over thoſe creatures, whom his diſtinguiſhing favour has endued with the noble principle of reaſon, and made capable of a bliſsful immortality? Sure, if all the ranks of inanimate exiſtence conform to their Maker's decree, by the neceſſity of their nature; this more excellent race of beings ſhould pay their equal homage, by the willing compliance of their affections *.—Come then, all ye faculties of my mind; come, all ye powers of my body; give up yourſelves, without a moment's delay, without the leaſt reſerve, to his governance. Stand like dutiful ſervants, at his footſtool; in an everlaſting readineſs to do whatſoever he requires; to be whatſoever he appoints: to further, with united efforts, the purpoſes of his glory in this earthly ſcene; or elſe to ſeparate, without reluctance at his ſummons; the one, to ſleep in the ſilent duſt; the other, to advance his honour, in ſome remoter colony of his kingdom.——Thus may I join with all the works of the LORD, in all places of his dominion, to recognize his univerſal ſupremacy; and proclaim him Sovereign of ſouls, as well as Ruler of worlds.

AT my firſt coming abroad, all theſe luminaries were eclipſed, by the overpowering luſtre of the ſun. They were all placed in the very ſame ſtations, and played the ſame ſprightly beams; yet not one of them was ſeen. As the day-light wore away, and the ſober ſhades advanced; Heſperus, who leads the ſtarry train, diſcloſed his radiant forehead, and catched my eye. While I ſtood gazing on his bright and beautiful aſpect, ſeveral of his attendants peeped through the blue curtains.—— Scarce had I turned to obſerve theſe freſh emanations of ſplendor, but others dropt the veil, others ſtole into view. When lo! faſter and more numerous multitudes ſprung from obſcurity; they poured, in ſhining troops, and in ſweet confuſion, over all the empyrean plain; till the firmament ſeemed like one vaſt conſtellation; and "a flood of glory burſt from all the ſkies."

Is not ſuch the riſe, and ſuch the progreſs of a true converſion, in the prejudiced infidel, or inattentive ſinner? During the period of his vainer years, a thouſand intereſting truths lay utterly undiſcovered; a thouſand momentous concerns were entirely diſregarded. But, when divine grace diſſipates the deluſive glitter, which dazzled his underſtanding, and beguiled his affections; then he begins to diſcern, dimly to diſcern, the things which belong unto his peace. Some admonition of ſcripture darts conviction into his ſoul, as the glimmering of a ſtar pierces the gloom of night.——Then, perhaps, another awful, or chearing text, impreſſes terror, or diffuſes comfort. A threatening alarms his fears, or a promiſe awakens his hopes. This, poſſibly, is ſucceeded by ſome afflictive diſpenſation of providence; and improved by ſome edifying and inſtructive converſation. All which is eſtabliſhed as to its continuance, and enlarged as to its influence, by a diligent ſtudy of the ſacred word.—By this means, new truths continually pour their evidence. Scenes of refined and exalted, but hitherto unknown delight, addreſs him with their attractives. New deſires take wing; new purſuits are ſet on foot. A new turn of mind forms his temper; a new habit of converſation regulates his life. In a word, old things are paſſed away, and all things become new. He who was ſometimes darkneſs, is now light, and life, and joy in the LORD.

THE more attentively I view the cryſtal concave, the more fully I diſcern the richneſs of its decorations. Abundance of minuter lights, which lay concealed from a ſuperficial notice, are viſible on a cloſer examination. Eſpecially in thoſe tracts of the ſky, which are called the galaxy; and are diſtinguiſhable by a ſort of milky path. There the ſtars are crouded, rather than diſſeminated. The region ſeems to be all on a blaze, with their ſplendid rays.——Beſides this vaſt profuſion, which in my preſent ſituation the eye diſcovers; was I to make my ſurvey, from any other part of the globe, lying nearer the ſouthern pole, I ſhould behold a new choir of ſtarry bodies, which have never appeared within our horizon.——Was I (which is ſtill more wonderful) either here or there, to view the firmament with the virtuoſo's glaſs; I ſhould find a prodigious multitude of flaming orbs, which, immerſed in depths of æther, eſcape the keeneſt unaſſiſted ſight *. —Yet, in theſe various ſituations, even with the aid the Almighty to terrify, annoy, and overthrow the enemies of Iſrael. If ſo, there cannot be a more clear and lively paraphraſe on the text, than thoſe fine lines of a Jewiſh writer.—His ſevere wrath ſhall HE ſharpen for a ſword; and the world ſhall fight with him againſt the ungodly. Then ſhall the right-aiming thunderbolts go abroad; and from the clouds, as from a well-drawn bow, ſhall they fly to the mark. And hail-ſtones, full of wrath, ſhall be caſt out as a ſtone bow; and the water of the ſea ſhall rage againſt them: and the floods (as was the caſe of the river Kiſhon) ſhall cruelly drown them; yea, a mighty wind ſhall ſtand up againſt them; and, like a ſtorm, ſhall blow them away. Wiſd. v. 20. 21. 22. 23.

of

* This argument, I acknowledge, is not abſolutely concluſive. But it is popular and ſtriking. Nor can I think myſelf obliged, in ſuch a work, where fancy bears a conſiderable ſway, to proceed always with the caution and exactneſs of a diſputer in the ſchools. If there be ſome appearance of analogy between the fact and the inference, it ſeems ſufficient for my purpoſe; though the deduction ſhould not be neceſſary, nor the proceſs ſtrictly ſyllogiſtical.—One of the apoſtolic fathers has an affecting and ſublime paragraph, which runs entirely in this form: Ηλιος τε και σελήνη, αστερων τε χοροι, κατα την διαλαγην αυτων εν ομονοια, διχα παντος παρεκβασεως, εξελισσουσιν τους προτεταγμενους αυτοις ορισμους. The ſun, the moon, and the ſtarry choir, without the leaſt deviation, and with the utmoſt harmony, perform the revolutions appointed them by the ſupreme decree. From which remark, and abundance of other ſimilar inſtances, obſervable in the œconomy of nature; he exhorts Chriſtians to a cordial unanimity among themſelves, and a dutiful obedience to GOD. Vid. Clem. Roman. 1 ep. ad Corinth. ſect. 20.—See alſo a beautiful ode in Dr Watts's Lyric Poems, entitled, The Compariſon and Complaint, which turns upon this very thought.

* Come forth, O man, yon azure round ſurvey,
And view thoſe lamps, which yield eternal day.
Bring forth thy glaſſes: clear thy wond'ring eyes:
Millions beyond the former millions riſe:
Look farther;—millions more blaze from remoter ſkies.
See an ingenious poem, entitled, The Univerſe.

of the teleſcopic tube, I ſhould not be able to deſcry the half, perhaps not a thouſandth part, of thoſe majeſtic luminaries, which the vaſt expanſive heavens contain *. —So, the more diligently I purſue my ſearch into thoſe oracles of eternal truth, the ſcriptures; I perceive a wider, a deeper, and ever-increaſing fund of ſpiritual treaſures. I perceive the brighter ſtrokes of wiſdom, and the richer diſplays of goodneſs; a more tranſcendent excellency in the illuſtrious Meſſiah, and a more deplorable vileneſs in fallen man; a more immaculate purity in GOD's law, and more precious privileges in his goſpel. Yet, after a courſe of ſtudy, ever ſo aſſiduous, ever ſo prolonged, I ſhould have reaſon to own myſelf a mere babe in heavenly knowledge; or, at moſt, but a puerile proficient in the ſchool of CHRIST.

AFTER all my moſt accurate inſpection, thoſe ſtarry orbs appear but as glittering points. Even the planets, though ſo much nearer our earthly manſion, ſeem only like burning bullets. If then we have ſuch imperfect apprehenſions of viſible and material things; how much more ſcanty and inadequate muſt be our notions of inviſible and immortal objects!——We behold the ſtars. Though every one is incomparably bigger than the globe we inhabit, yet they dwindle, upon our ſurvey, into the moſt diminutive forms. Thus, we ſee by faith the glories of the bleſſed JESUS; the atoning efficacy of his death; the juſtifying merit of his righteouſneſs; and the joys which are reſerved for his followers. But, alas! even our moſt exalted ideas are vaſtly below the truth; as much below the truth, as the report which our eyes make of thoſe celeſtial edifices, is inferior to their real grandeur.—Should we take in all the magnifying aſſiſtances which art has contrived; thoſe luminous bodies would elude our ſkill, and appear as ſmall as ever. Should an inhabitant of the earth travel towards the cope of heaven; and be carried forwards, in his aerial journey, more than a hundred and ſixty millions of miles †; even in that advanced ſituation, thoſe oceans of flame would look no larger than radiant ſpecks.——In like manner, conceive ever ſo magnificently of the Redeemer's honours, and of the bliſs which he has purchaſed for his people; yet you will fall ſhort. Raiſe your imagination higher; ſtretch your invention wider; give them all the ſcope which a ſoaring and excurſive fancy can take; ſtill your conceptions will be extremely diſproportionate to their genuine perfections. Vaſt are the bodies which roll in the expanſe of heaven; vaſter far are thoſe fields of æther, through which they run their endleſs round: but the excellency of JESUS, and the happineſs laid up for his ſervants, are greater than either, than both, than all. An inſpired writer calls the former, "the unſearchable riches of CHRIST;" and ſtyles the latter, "an exceeding great and eternal weight "of glory."

IF thoſe ſtars are ſo many inexhauſtible magazines of fire, and immenſe reſervoirs of light; there is no reaſon to doubt, but they have ſome very grand uſes, ſuitable to the magnificence of their nature. To ſpecify or explain the particular purpoſes they anſwer, is altogether impoſſible, in our preſent ſtate of diſtance and ignorance. This, however, we may clearly diſcern; they are diſpoſed in that very manner which is moſt pleaſing and moſt ſerviceable to mankind.—They are not placed at an infinite remove, ſo as to lie beyond our ſight; neither are they brought ſo near our abode, as to annoy us with their beams. We ſee them ſhine on every ſide. The deep azure, which ſerves them as a ground, heightens their ſplendor. At the ſame time, their influence is gentle, and their rays are deſtitute of heat. So that we are ſurrounded with a multitude of fiery globes, which beautify and illuminate the firmament, without any riſk either to the coolneſs of our night, or the quiet of our repoſe.—Who can ſufficiently admire that wonderous benignity, which, on our account, ſtrews the earth with bleſſings of every kind, and vouchſafes to make the very heavens ſubſervient to our delight?

It is not ſolely to adorn the roof of our palace with coſtly gildings, that GOD commands the celeſtial luminaries to glitter through the gloom. We alſo reap conſiderable benefits from their miniſtry.—They divide our time, and fix its ſolemn periods. They ſettle the order of our works; and are, according to the deſtination mentioned in ſacred writ, "for ſigns and for ſeaſons; "for days and for years." The returns of heat and cold alone, would have been too precarious a rule.—But theſe radiant bodies, by the variation, and alſo by the regularity, of their motions, afford a method of calculating, abſolutely certain, and ſufficiently obvious. By this, the farmer is inſtructed when to commit his grain to the furrows; and how to conduct the operations of huſbandry. By this, the ſailor knows when to proceed on his voyage with leaſt peril, and how to carry on the buſineſs of navigation with moſt ſucceſs.

Why ſhould not the Chriſtian, the probationer for eternity, learn from the ſame monitors, to number—for nobler purpoſes, to number his days; and duly to tranſact the grand, grand affairs of his everlaſting ſalvation? Since GOD has appointed ſo many bright meaſurers of our time, to determine its larger periods, and to minute down its ordinary ſtages; ſure this moſt ſtrongly inculcates its value, and ſhould powerfully prompt us to improve it.—Behold! the ſupreme LORD marks the progreſs of our life, in that moſt conſpicuous kalender above. Does not ſuch an ordination tell us, and in the moſt emphatical language, that our life is given for uſe, not for waſte? that no portion of it is delivered, but under a ſtrict account; that all of it is entered, as it paſſes, in the divine regiſter; and, therefore, that the ſtewards of ſuch a talent are to expect a future reckoning? Behold! the very heavens are bidden to be the accountants of our years, and months, and days. O! may this induce us to manage them with a vigilant frugality; to part with them, as miſers with their hoarded treaſure, warily and circumſpectly; and, if poſſible, as merchants with their rich commodities, not without an equivalent, either in perſonal improvement, or ſocial uſefulneſs!

How bright the ſtarry diamonds ſhine! The ambition of eaſtern monarchs could imagine no diſtinction more noble and ſublime, than that of being likened to thoſe beaming orbs *. They form night's richeſt dreſs; and ſparkle upon her ſable robe, like jewels of the fineſt luſtre. Like jewels! I wrong their character. The lucid ſtone has no brilliancy; quenched is the flame even of the golden topaz; compared with thoſe glowing decorations of heaven. How widely are their radiant honours diffuſed! No nation ſo remote, but ſees their beauty, and rejoices in their uſefulneſs!

* How noble, conſidered in this view, are the celebrations of the Divine Majeſty, which frequently occur in the ſacred writings! It is the LORD that made the heavens. Pſal. xcvi. 5.—What a prodigious dignity does ſuch a ſenſe of things give to that devout aſcription of praiſe! Thou, even thou, art LORD alone; thou haſt made heaven, the heaven of heavens with all their hoſt.—Nehem. ix. 6.—Examined by this rule, the beautiful climax in our inſpired hymn is ſublime beyond compare. Praiſe HIM, ſun and moon: praiſe HIM, all ye ſtars of light: praiſe HIM, ye heaven of heavens. Pſal. cxlviii. 3. 4.

† This, incredible as it may ſeem, is not a mere ſuppoſition, but a real fact. For, about the twenty-firſt of December, we are above 160,000,000 of miles nearer the northern parts of the ſky, than we were at the twenty-firſt of June. And yet, with regard to the ſtars ſituate in that quarter, we perceive no change in their aſpect, nor any augmentation of their magnitude.

* Numb. xxiv. 17. Dan. viii. 10.

They have been admired by all preceding generations; and every riſing age will gaze on their charms, with renewed delight.—How animating, then, is that promiſe made to the faithful miniſters of the goſpel! "They "that turn many to righteouſneſs, ſhall ſhine as the ſtars "for ever and ever *." Is not this a moſt winning encouragement, "to ſpend and be ſpent" in the ſervice of ſouls? Methinks, the ſtars beckon, as they twinkle. Methinks, they ſhew me their ſplendors, on purpoſe to inſpire me with alacrity in the race ſet before me; on purpoſe to enliven my activity in the work that is given me to do.—Yes; ye majeſtic monitors, I underſtand your meaning. If honour has any charms; if true glory, the glory which cometh from GOD, is any attractive; you diſplay the moſt powerful incitements to exerciſe all aſſiduity in my holy vocation. I will, henceforth, obſerve your intimation; and, when zeal becomes languid, have recourſe to your heavenly lamps; if ſo be I may rekindle its ardor at thoſe inextinguiſhable fires.

OF the polar ſtar, it is obſervable, that, while other luminaries alter their ſituation, this ſeems invariably fixed †. While other luminaries, now, mount the battlements of heaven, and appear upon duty; now retire beneath the horizon, and reſign to a freſh ſet the watches of the night; this never departs from its ſtation. This, in every ſeaſon, maintains an uniform poſition; and is always to be found in the ſame tract of the northern ſky.—How often has this beamed bright intelligence on the ſailor; and conducted the keel to its deſired haven! In early ages, thoſe who went down to the ſea in ſhips, and occupied their buſineſs in great waters, had ſcarce any other ſure guide for their wandering veſſel. This therefore they viewed with the moſt ſolicitous attention. By this they formed their obſervations, and regulated their voyage. When this was obſcured by clouds, or enveloped in miſts, the trembling mariner was bewildered on the watery waſte. His thoughts fluctuated, as much as the floating ſurge; and he knew not where he was advanced, or whither he ſhould ſteer. But, when this auſpicious ſtar broke through the gloom, it diſſipated the anxiety of his mind, and cleared up his dubious paſſage. He re-aſſumed, with alacrity, the management of the helm; and was able to ſhape his courſe, with ſome tolerable degree of ſatisfaction and certainty.

Such, only much clearer in its light, and much ſurer in its direction, is the holy word of GOD, to thoſe myriads of intellectual beings, who are bound for the eternal ſhores; who, embarked in a veſſel of feeble fleſh, are to paſs the waves of this tempeſtuous and perilous world. In all difficulties, thoſe ſacred pages ſhed an encouraging ray; in all uncertainties, they ſuggeſt the right determination, and point out the proper procedure. What is ſtill more an ineſtimable advantage, they, like the ſtar which conducted the eaſtern ſages, make plain the way of acceſs to a Redeemer. They diſplay his unſpeakable merits; they diſcover the method of being intereſted in this great atonement; and lead the weary ſoul, toſſed by troubles, and ſhattered by temptations, to that only harbour of peaceful repoſe.—Let us, therefore, attend to this unerring directory, with the ſame conſtancy of regard, as the ſea-faring man obſerves his compaſs. Let us become as thoroughly acquainted with this ſacred chart, as the pilot is with every truſty mark, that gives notice of a lurking rock; and with every open road, that yields a ſafe paſſage into the port. Above all, let us commit ourſelves to this infallible guidance, with the ſame implicit reſignation; let us conform our conduct to its exalted precepts, with the ſame ſedulous care, as the children of Iſrael, when ſojourning in the trackleſs deſert, followed the pillar of fire, and the motions of the miraculous cloud.—So will it introduce us, not into an earthly Canaan, flowing with milk and honey; but into an immortal paradiſe, where is the fulneſs of joy, and where are pleaſures for evermore. It will introduce us into thoſe happy, happy regions, where our ſun ſhall no more go down, nor our moon withdraw itſelf; for the LORD ſhall be our everlaſting light, and the days of our mourning, together with the fatigues of our pilgrimage, ſhall be ended *.

I PERCEIVE a great variety in the ſize and ſplendor of thoſe gems of heaven. Some are of the firſt magnitude; others of an inferior order. Some glow with intenſe flames; others glimmer with fainter beams. Yet all are beautiful; all have their peculiar luſtre, and diſtinct uſe; all tend, in their different degrees, to enamel the cope of heaven, and embroider the robe of night.—This circumſtance is remarked by an author, whoſe ſentiments are a ſource of wiſdom, and the very ſtandard of truth. "One ſtar," ſays the Apoſtle of the Gentiles, "differeth from another ſtar in glory: ſo alſo is the reſur-"rection of the dead."

In the world above, are various degrees of happineſs, various ſeats of honour. Some will riſe to more illuſtrious diſtinctions, and richer joys †. Some, like veſſels of ample capacity, will admit more copious acceſſions of light and excellence. Yet there will be no want, no deficiency, in any; but a fulneſs both of divine ſatisfactions, and perſonal perfections. Each will enjoy all the good, and be adorned with all the glory, that his heart can wiſh, or his condition receive. None will know what it is to envy. Not the leaſt malevolence, nor the leaſt ſelfiſhneſs, but everlaſting friendſhip prevails, and a mutual complacency in each other's delight. Love, cordial love, will give every particular ſaint a participation of all the fruitions ‡, which are diffuſed through the whole aſſembly of the bleſſed.—No one eclipſes, but each reflects light upon his brother. A ſweet interchange of rays ſubſiſts; all enlightened by the great Fountain, and all enlightening one another. By which reciprocal communication of pleaſure and amity, each will be continually receiving from, each inceſſantly adding to, the general felicity.

Happy, ſupremely happy they, who are admitted into the celeſtial manſions. Better to be a door-keeper in thoſe "ivory palaces ‖," than to fill the moſt gorgeous throne on earth. The very loweſt place at GOD's right hand, is diſtinguiſhed honour, and conſummate bliſs.—O! that we may, in ſome meaſure, anticipate that beatific ſtate, while we remain in our baniſhment below! May we, by rejoicing in the ſuperior proſperity of another, make it our own! and, provided the general reſult is harmony, be content, be pleaſed with whatſoever part is aſſigned to our ſhare in the univerſal choir of affairs.

WHILE I am conſidering the heavenly bodies, I muſt not entirely forget thoſe fundamental laws of our modern aſtronomy, projection and attraction. One of which is the all-combining cement, the other is the ever-operative ſpring, of the mighty frame.—In the beginning, the all-creating FIAT impreſſed a proper

* Dan. xii. 3.

† I ſpeak in conformity to the appearance of the object. For though this remarkable ſtar revolves round the pole, its motion is ſo ſlow, and the circle it deſcribes, ſo ſmall, as render both the revolution and change of ſituation hardly perceivable.

* Iſ. lx. 20.

† 1 Cor. xv. 41. 42. The great Mr Mede prefers the ſenſe here given; and the learned Dr Hammond admits it into his paraphraſe: whoſe joint authority, though far from excluding any other, yet is a ſufficient warrant for this application of the words.

‡ Tolle invidiam, et tuum eſt quod habeo: tolle invidiam, et meum eſt quod habes. AUGUSTINE. ‖ Pſal. xlv. 8.

degree of motion on each of thoſe whirling orbs. Which, if not controlled, would have carried them on, in ſtrait lines, and to endleſs lengths; till they were even loſt in the abyſs of ſpace. But the gravitating property, being added to the projectile force, determined their courſes to a circular * form; and obliged the reluctant rovers to perform their deſtined rounds.—Were either of thoſe cauſes to ſuſpend their action, all the harmoniouſly-moving ſpheres would be diſconcerted; would degenerate into ſluggiſh inactive maſſes; and, falling into the central fire, be burnt to aſhes; or elſe would exorbitate into wild confuſion; and each, by the rapidity of its whirl, be diſſipated into atoms. But the impulſive and attractive energy being moſt nicely attempered to each other; and under the immediate operation of the Almighty, exerting themſelves in perpetual concert; the various globes run their radiant races, without the leaſt interruption or the leaſt deviation; ſo as to create the alternate changes of day and night, and diſtribute the uſeful viciſſitudes of ſucceeding ſeaſons; ſo as to anſwer all the great ends of a gracious providence, and procure every comfortable convenience for univerſal nature.

Does not this conſtitution of the material, very naturally lead the thoughts to thoſe grand principles of the moral and devotional world, faith and love?—Theſe are often celebrated by the inſpired apoſtle, as a comprehenſive ſummary of the goſpel †. Theſe inſpirit the breaſt, and regulate the progreſs, of each private Chriſtian. Theſe unite the whole congregation of the faithful to GOD, and one another: to GOD, the great centre, in the bonds of gratitude and devotion; to one another, by a reciprocal intercourſe of brotherly affections, and friendly offices.—If you aſk, Why is it impoſſible for the true believer to live at all adventures? to ſtagnate in ſloth, or habitually to deviate from duty?—We anſwer, It is owing to "his faith working by love ‡." He aſſuredly truſts, that CHRIST has ſuſtained the infamy, and endured the torment due to his ſins. He firmly relies on that divine propitiation, for the pardon of all his guilt; and humbly expects everlaſting ſalvation, as the purchaſe of his Saviour's merits. This produces ſuch a ſpirit of gratitude, as refines his inclinations, and animates his whole behaviour. He cannot, he cannot run to exceſs of riot; becauſe love to his adorable Redeemer, like a ſtrong, but ſilken curb, ſweetly reſtrains him. He cannot, he cannot lie lulled in a lethargic indolence, becauſe love to the ſame infinite Benefactor, like a pungent, but endearing ſpur, pleaſingly excites him.—In a word, faith ſupplies the powerful impulſe, while love gives the determining bias; and leads the willing feet, through the whole circle of GOD's commandments. By the united efficacy of theſe heavenly graces, the Chriſtian conduct is preſerved, in the uniformity and beauty of holineſs; as, by the blended power of thoſe Newtonian principles, the ſolar ſyſtem revolves, in a ſteady and magnificent regularity.

How admirable, how extenſive, how diverſified, is the force of this ſingle principle, attraction *!—This penetrates the very eſſence of all bodies, and diffuſes itſelf to the remoteſt limits of the mundane ſyſtem.—By this, the worlds impreſſed with motion, hang ſelf-balanced on their centres †; and, though orbs of immenſe magnitude, require nothing but this amazing property for their ſupport.—To this we aſcribe a phænomenon, of a very different kind, the preſſure of the atmoſphere; which, though a yielding and expanſive fluid, yet conſtipated by an attractive energy, ſurrounds the whole globe, and incloſes every creature, as it were with a tight bandage. An expedient this, abſolutely neceſſary to preſerve the texture of our bodies; and indeed, to maintain every ſpecies of animal exiſtence.—Attraction! Urged by this wonderful impetus, the rivers circulate, copious and unintermitted, among all the nations of the earth; ſweeping with rapidity down the ſteeps, or ſoftly ebbing through the plains. Impelled, by the ſame myſterious force, the nutritious juices are detached from the ſoil; and, aſcending the trees, find their way through millions of the fineſt meanders, in order to tranſfuſe vegetative life into all the branches.—This confines the ocean within proper bounds. Though the waves thereof roar; though they toſs themſelves, with all the madneſs of indignant rage; yet, checked by this potent, this inevitable curb, they are unable to paſs even the ſlight barrier of ſand. To this the mountains owe that unſhaken firmneſs, which laughs at the ſhock of careering winds; and bids the tempeſt, with all its mingled horrors, impotently rave. By virtue of this inviſible mechaniſm, without the aid of crane or pulley, or any inſtrument of human device, many thouſand tons of water are raiſed, every moment, into the regions of the firmament. By this, they continue ſuſpended in thin air, without any capacious ciſtern to contain their ſubſtance, or any maſſy pillars to ſuſtain their weight. By this ſame variouſly-acting power, they return to the place of their native reſidence; diſtilled in gentle falls of dew, or precipitated in impetuous ſhowers of rain. They ſlide into the fields in fleecy flights of ſnow, or are darted upon the houſes in clattering ſtorms of hail. This occaſions the ſtrong coheſion of ſolid bodies. Without which, our large machines could exert themſelves with no vigour; and the nicer utenſils of life would elude our expectations of ſervice. This affords a foundation for all thoſe delicate or noble mechanic arts, which furniſh mankind with numberleſs conveniencies, both of ornament and delight.—In ſhort, this is the prodigious ballaſt, which compoſes the equilibrium, and conſtitutes the ſtability of things; this the great chain, which forms the connections of univerſal nature; and the mighty engine, which prompts, facilitates, and, in good meaſure, accompliſhes all her operations. What complicated effects from a ſingle cauſe ‡! What profuſion amidſt frugality! An unknown profuſion of benefits, with the utmoſt frugality of expence!

And what is this attraction? Is it a quality, in its exiſtence, inſeparable from matter; and, in its acting, independent on the DEITY?——Quite the reverſe. It is the very finger of GOD; the conſtant impreſſion of divine power; a principle neither innate in matter, nor intelligible by mortals.——Does it not, however, bear a conſiderable analogy to the agency of the HOLY GHOST, in the Chriſtian œconomy? Are not the gracious operations of the bleſſed Spirit, thus extenſive, thus admirable, thus various?——That almighty Being tranſmits his gifts through every age, and communicates his graces to every adherent on the Redeemer.

* I am aware, the planetary orbits are not ſtrictly circular, but rather elliptical. However, as they are but a ſmall remove from the perfectly round figure, and partake of it incomparably more than the trajectories of the comets, I chuſe to repreſent the thing in this view. Eſpecially, becauſe the notion of a circle is ſo much more intelligible to the generality of readers, than that of an ellipſis; and becauſe I laid it down for a rule, not to admit any ſuch abſtruſe ſentiment, or difficult expreſſion, as ſhould demand a painful attention, inſtead of raiſing an agreeable idea. For which reaſon, I have avoided technical terms; have taken no notice of Jupiter's ſatellites, or Saturn's ring; have not ſo much as mentioned the names of the planets, nor attempted to wade into any depths of the ſcience; leſt, to thoſe who have no opportunity of uſing the teleſcope, or of acquainting themſelves with a ſyſtem of aſtronomy, I ſhould propound riddles, rather than diſplay entertaining and edifying truths.

† Col. i. 4. Philem. ver. 5. ‡ Gal. v. 6.

* I mean the attraction both of gravitation and coheſion.

† Ponderibus librata ſuis. OVID.

‡ See another remarkable inſtance of this kind, in the Reflections on a Flower-Garden, page 41, col. 2.—together with a fine obſervation, quoted in the correſponding note *.

Redeemer. All, either of illuſtrious memory, or of beneficial tendency; in a word, "all the good that is "done upon earth, he doth it himſelf." Strong in his aid, and in the power of his might, the ſaints of all times have trod vice under their feet; have triumphed over this abject world; and converſed in heaven, while they dwelt on earth. Not I, but the grace of GOD which was with me *, is the unanimous acknowledgment of them all.——By the ſame kindly ſuccours, the whole church is ſtill enlightened, quickened, and governed. Through his benign influences, the ſcales of ignorance fall from the underſtanding; the leproſy of evil concupiſcence is purged from the will; and the fetters, the more than adamantine fetters of habitual iniquity, drop off from the converſation. He breathes even upon dry bones †, and they live: they are animated with faith; they pant with ardent and heavenly deſire; they exerciſe themſelves in all the duties of godlineſs.——His real, though ſecret, inſpiration, diſſolves the flint in the impenitent breaſt, and binds up the ſorrows of the broken heart; raiſes the thoughts high, in the elevations of holy hope; yet lays them low in the humiliations of inward abaſement; ſteels the ſoul with impenetrable reſolution, and perſevering fortitude; at the ſame time, ſoftens it into a dove-like meekneſs, and melts it in penitential ſorrow.

WHEN I contemplate thoſe ample and magnificent ſtructures, erected over all the æthereal plains:——when I look upon them as ſo many ſplendid repoſitories of light, or fruitful abodes of life:——when I remember, that there may be other orbs, vaſtly more remote than thoſe which appear to our unaided ſight; orbs, whoſe effulgence, though travelling ever ſince the creation, is not yet arrived upon our coaſts ‡:——when I ſtretch my thoughts to the innumerable orders of being, which inhabit all thoſe ſpacious ſyſtems; from the loftieſt ſeraph, to the loweſt reptile; from the armies of angels, which ſurround the throne of JEHOVAH, to the puny nations, which tinge with blue the ſurface of the plum ‖, or mantle the ſtanding pool with green:——how various appear the links in this immenſe chain! how vaſt the gradations in this univerſal ſcale of exiſtence! Yet all theſe, though ever ſo vaſt and various, are the work of GOD's hand, and are full of his preſence.

He rounded in his palm thoſe dreadfully-large globes, which are pendulous in the vault of heaven.

He kindled thoſe aſtoniſhingly-bright fires, which fill the firmament with a flood of glory. By him they are ſuſpended in fluid æther, and cannot be ſhaken: by him they diſpenſe a perpetual tide of beams, and are never exhauſted.—He formed, with inexpreſſible nicety, that delicately-fine collection of tubes; that unknown multiplicity of ſubtile ſprings, which organize and actuate the frame of the minuteſt inſect. He bids the crimſon current roll; the vital movements play; and aſſociates a world of wonders, even in an animated point *.—In all theſe is a ſignal exhibition of creating power; to all theſe are extended the ſpecial regards of preſerving goodneſs. From hence let me learn to rely on the providence, and to revere the preſence, of the Supreme Majeſty.

To rely on his providence.—For, amidſt that inconceivable number and variety of beings, which ſwarm through the regions of creation, not one is overlooked, not one is neglected, by the great omnipotent Cauſe of all. However inconſiderable in its character, or diminutive in its ſize, it is ſtill the production of the univerſal Maker, and belongs to the family of the almighty Father?—What? though inthorned archangels enjoy the ſmiles of his countenance! yet the low inhabitants of the earth, the moſt deſpicable worms of the ground, are not excluded from his providential care. Though the manifeſtation of his perfections is vouchſafed to holy and intellectual eſſences; his ear is open to the cries of the young raven. His eye is attentive to the wants, and to the welfare, of the very meaneſt births of nature.——How much leſs, then, are his own people diſregarded? thoſe, for whom he has delivered his beloved Son to death, and for whom he has prepared habitations of eternal joy. They diſregarded! No. THEY are "kept as the apple of an eye." The very hairs of their head are all numbered. The fondeſt mother may forget the infant, that is "dandled "upon her knees," and ſucks at her breaſt †, much ſooner

* 1 Cor. xv. 10.

* There are living creatures abundantly ſmaller than the mite. Mr Bradley, in his treatiſe on gardening, mentions an inſect, which, after accurate examination, he found to be a thouſand times leſs than the leaſt viſible grain of ſand. Yet ſuch an inſect, though quite imperceptible to the naked eye, is an elephant, is a whale, compared with other animalcules almoſt infinitely more minute, diſcovered by Mr Lewenhoeck.—If we conſider the ſeveral limbs which compoſe ſuch an organized particle; the different muſcles which actuate ſuch a ſet of limbs; the flow of ſpirits, incomparably more attenuated, which put thoſe muſcles in motion; the various fluids which circulate; the different ſecretions which are performed; together with the peculiar minuteneſs of the ſolids, before they arrive at their full growth; not to mention other more aſtoniſhing modes of diminution:—ſure, we ſhall have the utmoſt reaſon to acknowledge, that the adored Maker is—MAXIMUS IN MINIMIS; greatly glorious even in his ſmalleſt works.

† See that beautiful piece of ſacred and allegorical imagery diſplayed, Ezek. xxxvii.

‡ If this conjecture (which has no leſs a perſon than the celebrated Mr Huygens for its author) concerning unſeen ſtars, be true;—if, to this obſervation, be added, what is affirmed by our ſkilful aſtronomers, that the motion of the rays of light is ſo ſurpriſingly ſwift, as to paſs through ten millions of miles in a ſingle minute:—how vaſt! beyond imagination vaſt and unmeaſurable are the ſpaces of the univerſe!—While the mind is diſtended with the grand idea: or rather, while ſhe is diſpatching her ableſt powers of piercing judgment, and excurſive fancy; and finds them all dropt ſhort; all baffled by the amazing ſubject: permit me to apply that ſpirited exclamation, and noble remark—

—— Say, proud arch,
Built with divine ambition; in diſdain
Of limit built; built in the taſte of heav'n!
Vaſt concave! ample dome! waſt thou deſign'd
A meet apartment for the DEITY?
Not ſo: that thought alone thy ſtate impairs:
Thy lofty ſinks; and ſhallows thy profound:
And ſtreightens thy diffuſive.—

Night-Thoughts, No. IX.

‖ Ev'n the blue down the purple plum ſurrounds,
A living world, thy failing ſight confounds.
To HIM a peopled habitation ſhews,
Where millions taſte the bounty GOD beſtows.

See a beautiful and inſtructive poem, ſtyled—DEITY.

† If. xlix. 15. Can a woman forget her ſucking child, that ſhe ſhould not have compaſſion on the ſon of her womb? Yea, they may forget: yet will I not forget thee.——How delicate and expreſſive are the images in this charming ſcripture? How full of beauty, if beheld in a critical, how rich with conſolation, if conſidered in a believing, view!——Can a woman! one of the ſofter ſex; whoſe nature is moſt impreſſible, and whoſe paſſions are remarkably tender;——can ſuch a one, not barely diſregard, but entirely forget; not ſuſpend her care for a while, but utterly eraſe the very memory——of her child; her own child, not another's; a child that was formed in her womb, and is a part of herſelf?——her ſon; the more important, and therefore more deſirable ſpecies; to whom it peculiarly belongs to preſerve the name, and build up the family:—her only ſon; for the word is ſingular, and refers to a caſe, where the offſpring, not being numerous, but centered in a ſingle birth, muſt be productive of the fondeſt endearment:—Can ſhe diveſt herſelf of all concern for ſuch a child; not when he is grown up to maturity, or gone abroad from her houſe; but while he continues in an infantile ſtate, and muſt owe his whole ſafety to her kind attendance; while he lies in her boſom, reſts on her arm, and even ſucks at her breaſt?—Eſpecially, if the poor innocent be racked with pain, or ſeized by ſome ſevere affliction; and ſo become an object of compaſſion, as well as of love. Can ſhe hear than the Father of everlasting compassions can discontinue, or remit, his watchful tenderness to his people—his children—his heirs.

Let this teach me also a more lively sense of the divine presence.—All the rolling worlds above, all the living atoms below, together with all the beings that intervene betwixt these wide extremes, are vouchers for an ever-present Deity. "GOD has not left himself without witness." The marks of his footsteps are evident in every place, and the touches of his finger distinguishable in every creature. "Thy name is so nigh, O thou all-supporting, all-informing LORD; and that do thy wondrous works declare *. Thy goodness warms in the morning-sun, and refreshes in the evening-breeze. Thy glory shines in the lamps of midnight, and smiles in the blossoms of spring. We see a trace of thy incomprehensible grandeur in the boundless extent of things; and a sketch of thy exquisite skill, in those almost evanescent sparks of life, the insect race."----How stupid is this heart of mine, that, amidst such a multitude of remembrancers, thronging on every side, I should forget thee a single moment! Grant me, thou great I AM; thou source and support of universal existence;—O grant me, an enlightened eye, to discern thee in every object; and a devout heart, to adore thee on every occasion. Instead of living without GOD in the world, may I be ever with him, and see all things full of him!

——The glitt'ring stars,
By the deep ear of meditation heard,
Still in their midnight-watches sing of HIM.
He nods a calm. The tempest blows his wrath.
The thunder is his voice; and the red flash
His speedy sword of justice. At his touch
The mountains flame. He shakes the solid earth,
And rocks the nations. Nor in these alone,
In ev'ry common instance GOD is seen.

THOMSON'S Spring.

IF the beautiful spangles which a clear night pours on the beholder's eye; if those other fires which beam, in remoter skies, and are discoverable only by, that revelation to the sight, the telescope; if all those bright millions are so many fountains of day, enriched with native and independent lustre, illuminating planets, and enlivening systems of their own †: what pomp, how majestic and splendid, is disclosed in the midnight-scene! What riches are disseminated through all those numberless provinces of the great JEHOVAH's empire!—Grandeur beyond expression!——Yet there is not the meanest slave, but carries greater wealth in his own bosom, possesses superior dignity in his own person. The soul, that informs his clay;—the soul, that teaches him to think, and enables him to chuse; that qualifies him to relish rational pleasure, and to breathe sublime desire ‡;—the soul, that is endowed with such noble faculties, and, above all, is distinguished with the dreadful, the glorious capacity, of being pained, or blessed for ever;—this soul surpasses in worth, whatever the eye can see; whatever of material the fancy can imagine.—Before one such intellectual being, all the treasure and all the magnificence of unintelligent creation becomes poor and contemptible *. For this soul, Omnipotence itself has waked, and worked, through every age. To convince this soul, the fundamental laws of nature have been controlled; and the most amazing miracles have alarmed all the ends of the earth. To instruct this soul, the wisdom of heaven has been transfused into the sacred page; and missionaries have been sent from the great King, who resides in light unapproachable. To sanctify this soul, the almighty Comforter takes the wings of a dove; and, with a sweet transforming influence, broods on the human heart. And O! to redeem this soul from guilt, to rescue it from hell, the heaven of heavens was bowed, and GOD himself came down to dwell in dust.

Let me pause a while on this important subject.—What are the schemes which engage the attention of eminent statesmen, and mighty monarchs, compared with the grand interests of an immortal soul? The support of commerce, and the success of armies, though extremely weighty affairs; yet, if laid in the balance against the salvation of a soul, are lighter than the downy feather, poised against talents of gold. To save a navy from shipwreck, or a kingdom from slavery, are deliverances of the most momentous nature, which the transactions of mortality can admit. But O! how they shrink into an inconsiderable trifle, if (their aspect upon immortality forgot) they are set in competition with the delivery of a single soul, from the anguish and horrors of a distressed eternity †!

Is such the importance of the soul! what vigilance then can be too much, or rather what holy solicitude can be sufficient, for the overseers of the Saviour's flock, and the guardians of this great, this venerable, this invaluable charge?——Since such is the importance of the soul, wilt thou not, O man, be watchful for the preservation of thy own? Shall every casual incident awaken thy concern; every transitory toy command thy regard? And shall the welfare of thy soul, a work of continual occurrence, a work of endless consequence, sue, in vain, for thy serious care. Thy soul, thy soul is thy all. If this be secured, thou art greatly rich, and wilt be unspeakably happy. If this be lost, a whole world acquired, will leave thee in poverty; and all its delights enjoyed, will abandon thee to misery.

I HAVE often been charmed, and awed, at the sight of the nocturnal heavens; even before I knew how to consider them in their proper circumstances of majesty and beauty. Something, like magic, has struck my mind, on a transient and unthinking survey of the æthereal vault, tinged throughout with the purest azure, and decorated with innumerable starry lamps. I have felt, I know not what, powerful and aggrandizing impulse; which seemed to snatch me from the low intanglements of vanity, and prompted an ardent sigh for sublimer objects. Methought, I heard, even from the silent spheres, a commanding call, to spurn hear its piercing cries; can she see it all restless, all helpless, under its misery; and feel no emotions of parental pity!—If one such monster of inhumanity might be found; could all (here the prophet, to give his comparison the utmost energy, changes the singular number into the plural. It is not גם היא, or גם אחת but גם אלה) could all mothers be so degenerate? This, sure, cannot be suspected, need not be feared. Much less need the true believer be apprehensive of the failure of my kindness. An universal extinction of those strongest affections of nature, is a more supposable case, than that I should ever be unmindful of my people, or regardless of their interests.

* Psal. lxxv. 2.

† Consult with Reason, Reason will reply,
Each lucid point, which glows in yonder sky,
Informs a system in the boundless space,
And fills, with glory, its appointed place:
With beams unborrow'd brightens other skies;
And worlds, to thee unknown, with heat and life supplies.
The Universe.

‡ In this respect, as vested with such capacities, the soul even of fallen men has an unquestionable greatness and dignity; is majestic, though in ruin.

* I beg leave to transcribe a pertinent passage, from that celebrated master of reason, and universal literature, Dr Bentley: whom no one can be tempted to suspect either tinctured with enthusiasm, or warped to bigotry.—"If we consider," says he, "the dignity of an intelligent being, and put that in the scale "against brute and inanimate matter, we may affirm, without "overvaluing human nature, that the soul of one virtuous and "religious man is of greater worth and excellency, than the sun, "and his planets, and all the stars in the world."——See his sermons at Boyle's lect. No 8.

† Not all yon luminaries quench'd at once;
Were half so sad, as one benighted mind,
Which gropes for happiness, and meets despair.
Night-Thoughts, No. IX.

the

he abject earth, and pant after unſeen delights.—Henceorward, I hope to imbibe more copiouſly this moral ema- nation of the ſkies, when, in ſome ſuch manner as the receding, they are rationally ſeen, and the ſight is uly improved. The ſtars, I truſt, will teach as well as ine; and help to diſpel, both nature's gloom, and my ntellectual darkneſs. To ſome people, they diſcharge o better a ſervice, than that of holding a flameau to their feet, and ſoftening the horrors of their ight. To me and my friends, may they act as miniſ-ers of a ſuperior order, as counſellors of wiſdom, and uides to happineſs! Nor will they fail to execute this obler office, if they gently light our way into the know-dge of their adored Maker; if they point out, with eir ſilver rays, our path to his beatific preſence.

I gaze, I ponder. I ponder, I gaze; and think in-ffable things.—I roll an eye of awe and admiration.
gain and again I repeat my raviſhed views; and can ever ſatiate either my curioſity, or my inquiry. I ſpring y thoughts into this immenſe field, till even fancy tires pon her wing. I find wonders ever new; wonders ore and more amazing.—Yet, after all my preſent inuiries, what a mere nothing do I know; by all my future arches, how little ſhall I be able to learn, of thoſe vaſtly iſtant ſuns, and their circling retinue of worlds! Could pry with Newton's piercing ſagacity, or launch into his xtenſive ſurveys; even then my apprehenſions would e little better, than thoſe dim and ſcanty images, which he mole, juſt emerged from her cavern, receives on her eeble optic.——This, ſure, ſhould repreſs all impatient r immoderate ardor to pry into the ſecrets of the ſtarry tructures, and make me more particularly careful to culivate my heart. To fathom the depths of the divine eſ-ence, or to ſcan univerſal nature with a critical exacteſs, is an attempt which ſets the accuteſt philoſopher very early on a level with the idiot; ſince it is almoſt, if not ltogether, as impracticable by the former, as by the atter.

Be it, then, my chief ſtudy, not to purſue what is abolutely unattainable; but rather to ſeek what is obvious o find, eaſy to be acquired, and of ineſtimable advan-age when poſſeſſed. O! let me ſeek that charity which edifieth*, that faith which purifieth. Love, humble ove, not conceited ſcience, keeps the door of heaven.
aith, a child like faith in JESUS; not the haughty ſelfufficient, which ſcorns to be ignorant of any thing; pre-ents a key † to thoſe abodes of bliſs. This preſent ſtate is he ſcene deſtined to the exerciſe of devotion; the inviſible world is the place appointed for the enjoyment of know- ledge. There the dawn of our infantile minds will be advanced to the maturity of perfect day; or rather, there our midnight-ſhades will be brightened into all the luſtre of noon. There the ſouls which come from the ſchool of faith, and bring with them the principles of love, will dwell in light itſelf; will be obſcured with no darkneſs at all; will know, even as they are known *.—Such an acquaintance, therefore, do I deſire to form, and to carry on ſuch a correſpondence, with the heavenly bodies, as may ſhed a benign influence on the ſeeds of grace implanted in my breaſt. Let the exalted tracts of the firmament ſink my ſoul into deep humiliation.—
Let thoſe eternal fires kindle in my heart an adoring gra- titude to their almighty Sovereign. Let yonder ponderous and enormous globes, which reſt on his ſupporting arm, teach me an unſhaken affiance in their incarnate Maker. Then ſhall I be—if not wiſe as the aſtronomi-cal adept, yet WISE UNTO SALVATION.

HAVING now walked and worſhipped in this univer- ſal temple, that is arched with ſkies, emblazed with ſtars, and extended even to immenſity: having caſt an eye, like the enraptured patriarch †; an eye of reaſon and devotion, through the magnificent ſcene: with the former, having diſcovered an infinitude of worlds; and with the latter, having met the Deity in every view:—
having beheld, as Moſes in the flaming buſh, a glimpſe of JEHOVAH's excellencies! reflected from the ſeveral planets, and ſtreaming from myriads of celeſtial luminaries:—having read various leſſons in that ſtupendous book of wiſdom ‡, where unmeaſurable ſheets of azure compoſe the page; and orbs of radiance write in everlaſting characters, a comment on our creed:—what remains, but that I cloſe the midnight-ſolemnity, as our LORD concluded his grand ſacramental inſtitution, with a ſong of praiſe?—And behold a hymn, ſuited to the ſublime occaſion, indited by ‖ inſpiration itſelf, transferred into our language, by § one of the happieſt efforts of human ingenuity.

The ſpacious firmament on high,
With all the blue æthereal ſky,
And ſpangled heav'ns, a ſhining frame,
Their great Original proclaim:
Th' unweary'd Sun, from day to day,
Does his Creator's pow'r diſplay;
And publiſhes to ev'ry land,
The work of an almighty hand.

Soon as the ev'ning-ſhades prevail,
The Moon takes up the wondrous tale;
And nightly, to the liſt'ning Earth,
Repeats the ſtory of her birth:
While all the ſtars, that round her burn,
And all the planets in their turn,
Confirm the tidings as they roll,
And ſpread the truth from pole to pole.

What though, in ſolemn ſilence, all
Move round the dark terreſtrial ball?
What though nor real voice nor ſound
Amid their radiant orbs be found?
In Reaſon's ear they all rejoice,
And utter forth a glorious voice,
For ever ſinging, as they ſhine,
The hand that made us, is divine!

* 1 Cor. viii. 1. I need not inform my reader, that in this text, in that admirable chapter, 1 Cor. xiii. and in various other paſſages of ſcripture, the word charity ſhould by no means be confined to the particular act of alms-giving, or external beneficence. It is of a much more exalted and extenſive nature. It ſignifies that divinely-precious grace, which warms the ſoul with ſupreme love to GOD, and enlarges it with diſintereſted affection for men. Which renders it the reigning care of the life, and chief delight of the heart, to promote the happineſs of the one, and the glory of the other.—This, this, is that charity of which ſo many excellent things are every where ſpoken; which can never be too highly extolled, or too earneſtly coveted, ſince it is the image of GOD, and the very ſpirit of heaven.

† The righteouſneſs of CHRIST. This is what MILTON beautifully ſtyles,

——The golden key,
That opes the palace of Eternity.

* 1 Cor. xiii. 12. † Gen. xv. 5.

‡ ——For heaven
Is as the book of GOD before thee ſet,
Wherein to read his wondrous works.—MILT.

‖ Pſal. xix.

§ ADDISON, Spect. vol. VI. No. 465.

A WINTER-PIECE.

Storms and Tempeſts may calm the ſoul—Snow and Ice be taught to warm the heart, and praiſe the Creator.

Anonym. Lett. to the Author. See note below.

THIS true, in the delightful ſeaſons, HIS tenderneſs and HIS love are moſt eminently diſplayed.—In the vernal months, all is beauty to the eye, and muſic to the ear. The clouds drop fatneſs; the air ſoftens into balm; and flowers in rich abundance ſpring where-ever we tread, bloom where-ever we look.—Amidſt the burning heats of ſummer, HE expands the leaves, and thickens the ſhades. He ſpreads the cooling arbor to receive us, and awakes the gentle breeze to fan us. The moſs ſwells into a couch, for the repoſe of our bodies; while the rivulet ſoftly rolls, and ſweetly murmurs, to ſoothe our imagination.—In autumn, HIS bounty covers the fields with a profuſion of nutrimental treaſure, and bends the boughs with loads of delicious fruit. He furniſhes his hoſpitable board with preſent plenty, and prepares a copious magazine for future wants.—But is it only in theſe ſmiling periods of the year, that GOD, the all-gracious GOD, is ſeen? Has winter, ſtern winter, no tokens of his preſence? Yes: all things are eloquent of his praiſe. "His way is in the whirlwind." Storms and tempeſts fulfil his word and extol his power. Even piercing froſts bear witneſs to his goodneſs, while they bid the ſhivering nations tremble at his wrath.——Be winter then, for a while, our theme *. Perhaps, thoſe barren ſcenes may be fruitful of intellectual improvement. Perhaps that rigorous cold, which binds the earth in icy chains, may ſerve to enlarge our hearts, and warm them with holy love.

SEE! how the day is ſhortened!—The ſun, detained in fairer climes, or engaged in more agreeable ſervices, riſes, like an unwilling viſitant, with tardy and reluctant ſteps. He walks, with a ſhy indifference, along the edges of the ſouthern ſky; caſting an oblique glance, he juſt looks upon our dejected world; and ſcarcely ſcatters light through the thick air. Dim is his appearance, languid are his gleams, while he continues. Or, if he chance to wear a brighter aſpect, and a cloudleſs brow; yet, like the young and gay in the houſe of mourning, he ſeems uneaſy, till he is gone, is in haſte to depart.—And let him depart. Why ſhould we wiſh for his longer ſtay, ſince he can ſhew us nothing but the creation in diſtreſs? The flowery families lie dead, and the tuneful tribes are ſtruck dumb. The trees ſtript of their verdure, and laſhed by ſtorms, ſpread their naked arms to the enraged and relentleſs heavens. Fragrance no longer floats in the air; but chilling damps hover, or cutting gales blow. Nature, diveſted of all her beautiful robes, ſits, like a forlorn diſconſolate widow, in her weeds. While winds, in doleful accents, howl; and rains, in repeated ſhowers, weep.

We regret not, therefore, the ſpeedy departure of the day. When the room is hung with funeral black, and diſmal objects are all around; who would deſire to have the glimmering taper kept alive? which can only diſcover ſpectacles of ſorrow, can only make the horror viſible.—And, ſince this mortal life is little better than a continual conflict with ſin, or an unremitted ſtruggle with miſery; is it not a gracious ordination, which has reduced our age to a ſpan? Fourſcore years of trial, for the virtuous, are ſufficiently long; and more than ſuch a term allowed to the wicked, would render them beyond all meaſure vile. Our way to the kingdom of heaven lies through tribulations. Shall we then accuſe, ſhall we not rather bleſs, the providence, which has made the paſſage ſhort? Soon, ſoon we croſs the vale of tears; and then arrive on the happy hills, where light for ever ſhines, where joy for ever ſmiles.

SOMETIMES the day is rendered ſhorter ſtill; is almoſt blotted out from the year *. The vapours gather; they thicken into an impenetrable gloom, and obſcure the face of the ſky. At length, the rains deſcend. The ſluices of the firmament are opened; and the low-hung clouds pour their congregated ſtores. Copious and unintermitted, ſtill they pour, and ſtill are unexhauſted. The waters drop inceſſantly from the eaves, and ruſh in rapid ſtreams from the ſpouts. They roar along the channelled pavements, and ſtand in foul ſhallows amidſt the village-ſtreets. Now, if the inattentive eye, or negligent hand, has left the roof but ſeantily covered; the inſinuating element finds its way into every flaw, and oozing through the ceiling, at once upbraids and chaſtiſes the careleſs inhabitant. The ploughman, ſoaked to the ſkin, leaves his half-tilled acre. The poor poultry, dripping with wet, croud into ſhelter. The tenants of the bough fold up their wings, afraid to launch into the ſtreaming air. The beaſts, joyleſs and diſpirited, ruminate under their ſheds. The roads ſwim and the brooks ſwell.——The river, amidſt all this watery ferment, long contained itſelf within

* A ſketch of this nature, I muſt acknowledge, is quite different from the ſubject of the book; and I cannot but declare, was as far diſtant from the thoughts of the author. But the deſire of ſeveral acquaintance, together with an intimation of its uſefulneſs, by a very polite letter from an unknown hand (which has undeſignedly furniſhed me with the beſt motto I could recollect), prevailed with me to add a few deſcriptive touches, and improving hints, on what is ſo often experienced in theſe northern regions. I hope, the attempt I have made to oblige theſe gentlemen, will obtain the approbation, or, at leaſt, the excuſe, of my other readers.

* Involvere diem nimbi, et nox humida cœlum within its appointed bounds: but, ſwollen by innumerable currents, and roufed at laſt into uncontrollable rage, burſts over its banks, ſhoots into the plain, bears down all oppoſition, ſpreads itſelf far and wide, and buries the meadow under a brown, ſluggiſh, ſoaking deluge.
Abſtulit.— VIRG.

How happy for man, that this inundation comes, when there are no flowery crops in the valley, to be overwhelmed; no fields ſtanding thick with corn, to be laid waſte! At ſuch a juncture, it would have been ruin to the huſbandman and his family: but, thus timed, it yields manure for his ground, and promiſes him riches in reverſion.—How often, and how long, has the divine Majeſty bore with the moſt injurious affronts from ſinners! His goodneſs triumphed over their perverſeneſs, and graciouſly refuſed to be exaſperated. But, O preſumptuous creatures, multiply no longer your provocations. Urge not, by repeated iniquities, the almighty arm to ſtrike; leſt his long-ſuffering ceaſe, and his fierce anger break forth; break forth like a flood of waters *, and ſweep you away into irrecoverable and everlaſting perdition.

How mighty! how majeſtic! and O how myſterious are thy works, thou GOD of heaven, and LORD of nature! When the air is calm, where ſleep the ſtormy winds? In what chambers are they repoſed, or in what dungeons confined! till thou art pleaſed to awaken their rage, and throw open their priſon-doors. Then, with irreſiſtible impetuoſity they fly forth, ſcattering dread, and menacing deſtruction.

The atmoſphere is hurled into the moſt tumultuous confuſion. The aerial torrent burſts its way over mountains, ſeas, and continents. All things feel the dreadful ſhock. All things tremble before the furious blaſt. The foreſt, vexed and tore, groans under the ſcourge. Her ſturdy ſons are ſtrained to the very root, and almoſt ſweep the ſoil they were wont to ſhade. The ſtubborn oak, that diſdains to bend, is daſhed headlong to the ground; and, with ſhattered arms, with proſtrate trunk, blocks the road.——While the flexile reed, that ſprings up in the marſh, yielding to the guſt, (as the meek and pliant temper to injuries, or the reſigned and patient ſpirit to misfortunes), eludes the force of the ſtorm, and ſurvives amidſt the wide-ſpread havock.

For a moment, the turbulent and outrageous ſky ſeems to be aſſuaged; but it intermits its wrath, only to increaſe its ſtrength. Soon the ſounding ſquadrons of the air return to the attack, and renew their ravages with redoubled fury. The ſtately dome rocks amidſt the wheeling clouds. The impregnable tower totters on its baſis, and threatens to overwhelm whom it was intended to protect. The ragged rock is rent in pieces †? and even the hills, the perpetual hills, on their deep foundations, are ſcarcely ſecure.——Where now is the place of ſafety? when the city reels, and houſes become heaps! Sleep affrighted flies. Diverſion is turned into horror. All is uproar in the element; all is conſternation among mortals; and nothing, but one wide ſcene of rueful devaſtation, through the land.——Yet this is only an inferior miniſter of divine diſpleaſure; the executioner of milder indignation. How then,——O! how will the lofty looks of man be humbled, and the haughtineſs of men be bowed down ‡, when the LORD GOD omnipotent ſhall meditate terror,—when he ſhall ſet all his terrors in array,—when he riſes to judge the nations, and to ſhake terribly the earth?

The ocean ſwells with tremendous commotions. The ponderous waves are heaved from their capacious bed, and almoſt lay bare the unfathomable deep. Flung into the moſt rapid agitation, they ſweep over the rocks; they laſh the lofty cliffs; and toſs themſelves into the clouds. Navies are rent from their anchors; and, with all their enormous load, are whirled ſwift as the arrow, wild as the winds, along the vaſt abyſs.——Now they climb the rolling mountain; they plough the frightful ridge; and ſeem to ſkim the ſkies. Anon they plunge into the opening gulf; they loſe the ſight of day; and are loſt themſelves to every eye. How vain is the pilot's art! how impotent the mariner's ſtrength! They reel to and fro, and ſtagger in the jarring hold; or cling to the cordage, while burſting ſeas foam over the deck. Deſpair is in every face, and death ſits threatening on every ſurge.—But why, O ye aſtoniſhed mariners, why ſhould you abandon yourſelves to deſpair? Is the LORD's hand ſhortened, becauſe the waves of the ſea rage horribly? Is his ear deafened by the roaring thunders, and the bellowing tempeſt? Cry, cry unto HIM, who "holdeth the winds in his fiſt, and the waters in the "hollow of his hand." HE is all-gracious to hear, and almighty to ſave. If HE command, the ſtorm ſhall be huſhed to ſilence; the billows ſhall ſubſide into a calm; the lightnings ſhall lay their fiery bolts aſide; and, inſtead of ſinking in a watery grave, you ſhall find yourſelves brought to the deſired haven.

SOMETIMES, after a joyleſs day, a more diſmal night ſucceeds.—The lazy, louring vapours had wove ſo thick a veil, as the meridian ſun could ſcarcely penetrate. What gloom then muſt overwhelm the nocturnal hours! The moon withdraws her ſhining. Not a ſingle ſtar is able to ſtruggle through the deep arrangement of ſhades. All is pitchy darkneſs, without one enlivening ray. How ſolemn! how awful! 'Tis like the ſhroud of nature, or the return of chaos. I don't wonder, that it is the parent of terrors, and ſo apt to engender melancholy. —Lately the tempeſt marked its rapid way with miſchief; now the night dreſſes her ſilent pavilion with horror.

I have ſometimes left the beaming tapers, withdrawn from the ruddy fire, and plunged into the thickeſt of theſe ſooty ſhades; without regretting the change, rather exulting in it as a welcome deliverance. The very gloom was pleaſing, was exhilarating, compared with the converſation I quitted. The ſpeech of my companions (how does it grieve me, that I ſhould even once have occaſion to call them by that name!) was the language of darkneſs; was horror to the ſoul, and torture to the ear *.—Their teeth were ſpears and arrows,

* Hoſ. v. 10.

† 1 Kings xix. 11.

‡ ——— Mortalia corda
Per gentes humilis ſtravit pavor.—

One would almoſt imagine, that Virgil had read Iſaiah, and borrowed his ideas from chap. ii. ver. 11. The humilis and ſtravit of the one ſo exactly correſpond with the—humbled—bowed down—of the other. But, in one circumſtance, the prophet is very much ſuperior to the poet. The prophet, by giving a ſtriking contraſt to his ſentiments, repreſents them with incomparably-greater energy. He ſays not, men in the groſs, or the human heart in general: but men of the moſt elated looks; hearts big with the moſt arrogant imaginations: even theſe ſhall ſtoop from their ſupercilious heights, even theſe ſhall grovel in the duſt of abaſement, and ſhudder with all the extremes of an abject puſillanimity.

* What has been ſaid, I aſk'd my ſoul, what done?
How flow'd our mirth? or whence the ſource begun?
Perhaps, the jeſt, that charm'd the ſprightly croud,
And made the jovial table laugh ſo loud,
To ſome falſe notion ow'd its poor pretence,
To an ambiguous word's perverted ſenſe;
To a wild ſonnet, or a wanton air,
Offence and torture to the ſober ear.
Perhaps, alas! the pleaſing ſtream was brought
From this man's error, from another's fault;
From topics, which good-nature would forget,
And prudence mention with the laſt regret.

and

and their tongue a ſharp ſword, to ſtab and aſſaſſinate their neighbour's character. Their throat was an open ſepulchre, gaping to devour the reputation of the innocent, or tainting the air with their virulent and polluted breath.—— Sometimes, their licentious and ungovernable diſcourſe ſhot arrows of profaneneſs againſt heaven itſelf; and, in proud defiance, challenged the reſentment of Omnipotence.——Sometimes, as if it was the glory of human nature, to cheriſh the groſſeſt appetites of the brute; or the mark of a gentleman, to have ſerved an apprenticeſhip in a brothel; the filthieſt jeſts of the ſtews (if low obſcenity can be a jeſt) were nauſeouſly obtruded on the company. All the modeſt part were offended and grieved; while the other beſotted creatures laughed aloud, though the leproſy of uncleanneſs appeared on their lips. Are not theſe perſons priſoners of darkneſs, though blazing ſconces pour artificial day through their rooms? Are not their ſouls immured in the moſt baleful ſhades, though the noon-tide ſun is brightened by flaming on their gilded chariots?—They diſcern not that great and adorable Being, who fills the univerſe with his infinite and glorious preſence; who is all eye, to obſerve their actions; all ear, to examine their words. They know not the all-ſufficient Redeemer, nor the unſpeakable bleſſedneſs of his heavenly kingdom. They are groping for the prize of happineſs; but will certainly graſp the thorn of anxiety. They are wantonly ſporting on the brink of a precipice; and are every moment in danger of falling headlong into irretrievable ruin, and endleſs deſpair.

They have forced me out, and are, perhaps, deriding me in my abſence; are charging my reverence for the ever-preſent GOD, and my concern for the dignity of our rational nature, to the account of humour and ſingularity; to narrowneſs of thought, or ſourneſs of temper. Be it ſo. I will indulge no indignation againſt them. If any thing like it ſhould ariſe, I will convert it into prayer: "Pity them, O thou Father of mercies! Shew "them the madneſs of their profaneneſs! Shew them "the baſeneſs of their vile ribaldry! Let their diſſo"lute rant be turned into ſilent ſorrow and confuſion; "till they open their lips, to adore thine inſulted Majeſty, "and to implore thy gracious pardon. Till they de"vote to thy ſervice, thoſe ſocial hours, and thoſe ſupe"rior faculties, which they are now abuſing, to the diſ"honour of thy name, to the contamination of their own "ſouls, and (unleſs timely repentance intervene) to their "everlaſting infamy and perdition."

I ride home amidſt the gloomy void. All darkling and ſolitary, I can ſcarce diſcern my horſe's head; and only gueſs out my blind road. No companion, but danger; or, perhaps, "deſtruction ready at my ſide *."

But, why do I fancy myſelf ſolitary? Is not the Father of lights, the GOD of my life, the great and everlaſting friend, always at my right hand? Becauſe the day is excluded, is his omnipreſence vacated? Though I have no earthly acquaintance near, to aſſiſt in caſe of a misfortune; or to beguile the time, and divert uneaſy ſuſpicions, by entertaining conferences; may I not lay my help upon the Almighty, and converſe with GOD by humble ſupplication? For this exerciſe no place is improper, no hour unſeaſonable, and no poſture incommodious. This is ſociety, the beſt of ſociety, even in ſolitude. This is a fund of delights, eaſily portable, and quite inexhauſtible. A treaſure this of unknown value; liable to no hazard from wrong or robbery; but perfectly ſecure to the lonely wanderer, in the moſt darkſome paths.

And why ſhould I diſtreſs myſelf with apprehenſions of peril? This acceſs to GOD is not only an indefeaſible privilege, but a kind of ambulatory garriſon. Thoſe who make known their requeſts unto GOD, and rely upon his protecting care; he gives his angels charge over their welfare. His angels are commiſſioned to eſcort them in their travelling; and to hold up their goings, that they daſh not their foot againſt a ſtone *. Nay, he himſelf condeſcends to be their guardian, and "keeps all "their bones, ſo that not one of them is broken." Between theſe perſons, and the moſt miſchievous objects, a treaty of peace is concluded. The articles of this grand alliance are recorded in the book of revelation; and will, when it is for the real benefit of believers, aſſuredly be made good, in the adminiſtrations of Providence. In that day, ſaith the LORD, will I make a covenant for them with the beaſts of the field, and with the fowls of heaven, and with the creeping things of the ground; and they ſhall be in league with the ſtones of the field †. Though they fall headlong on the flints; even the flints, fitted to fracture the ſkull, ſhall receive them as into the arms of friendſhip, and not offer to hurt whom the LORD is pleaſed to preſerve.

May I then enjoy the preſence of this gracious GOD, and darkneſs and light ſhall be both alike. Let HIM whiſper peace to my conſcience; and this dread ſilence ſhall be more charming than the voice of eloquence, or the ſtrains of muſic. Let HIM reveal his raviſhing perfections in my ſoul; and I ſhall not want the ſaffron beauties of the morn, the golden glories of noon, or the impurpled evening-ſky. I ſhall ſigh only for thoſe moſt deſirable and diſtinguiſhed realms, where the light of HIS countenance perpetually ſhines, and conſequently "there is ‡ no night there."

How ſurpriſing are the alterations of nature! I left her, the preceding evening, plain and unadorned. But, now, a thick rime has ſhed its hoary honours over all. It has ſhagged the fleeces of the ſheep, and criſped the traveller's locks. The hedges are richly fringed, and all the ground is profuſely powdered. The downward branches are taſſeled with ſilver, and the upright are feathered with the plumy wave.

The fine are not always the valuable. The air, amidſt all theſe gaudy decorations, is charged with chilling and unwholeſome damps. The raw hazy influence ſpreads wide; ſits deep; hangs heavy and oppreſſive on the ſprings of life. A liſtleſs languor clogs the animal functions, and the purple ſtream glides but faintly through its channels. In vain, the ruler of the day exerts his beaming powers: in vain, he attempts to diſperſe this inſurrection of vapours. The ſullen, malignant cloud refuſes to depart. It envelops the world, and intercepts the proſpect. I look abroad for the neighbouring village; I ſend my eye in queſt of the riſing turret; but am ſcarce able to diſcern the very next houſe. Where are the blue arches of heaven? Where is the radiant countenance of the ſun? where the boundleſs ſcenes of creation? Loſt, loſt are their beauties; quenched their glories. The thronged theatre of the univerſe ſeems an empty void; and all its elegant pictures, an undiſtinguiſhed blank.—Thus would it have been with our intellectual views, if the goſpel had not come in to our relief. We ſhould have known neither our true good, nor real evil. We had been a riddle to ourſelves; the preſent ſtate all confuſion, and the future impenetrable darkneſs. But the Sun of Righteouſneſs, ariſing with potent and triumphant beams, has diſſipated the interpoſing cloud; has opened a proſpect more beautiful than the bloſſoms of ſpring, more chearing than the treaſures of autumn, and far more enlarged than the extent of the viſible ſyſtem: which, having led the eye of the mind through fields of grace, over rivers of righteouſneſs, and hills crowned with knowledge, terminates, at length, in

* Job xviii. 12.

* Pſal. xci. 11. 12. † Job v. 23. Hoſ. ii. 18.

‡ Rev. xxi. 25.

the

the heavens; ſweetly loſing itſelf in regions of infinite bliſs, and endleſs glory.

As I walk along the fog, it ſeems, at ſome little diſtance, to be almoſt ſolid gloom; ſuch as would ſhut out every glimpſe of light, and totally impriſon me in obſcurity. But when I approach, and enter it, I find myſelf agreeably miſtaken, and the miſt much thinner than it appeared.——Such is the caſe with regard to the ſufferings of the preſent life; they are not, when experienced, ſo dreadful as a timorous imagination ſurmiſed. Such alſo is the caſe with reference to the gratifications of ſenſe; they prove not, when enjoyed, ſo ſubſtantial as a ſanguine expectation repreſented. In both inſtances, we are graciouſly diſappointed. The keen edge of the calamity is blunted, that it may not wound us with incurable anguiſh: the exquiſite reliſh of the proſperity is palled, that it may not captivate our affections, and enſlave them to inferior delights.

SOMETIMES the face of things wears a more pleaſing form; the very reverſe of the foregoing. The ſober evening advances, to cloſe the ſhort-lived day. The firmament, clear and unſullied, puts on its brighteſt blue. The ſtars, in thronging multitudes, and with a peculiar brilliancy, glitter through the fair expanſe. While the froſt pours its ſubtile and penetrating influence all around. Sharp and intenſely ſevere, all the long night, the rigid æther continues its operations. When, late and ſlow, the morning opens her pale eye; in what a curious and amuſing diſguiſe is nature dreſſed! The icicles, jagged and uneven, are pendent on the houſes. A whitiſh film incruſts the windows, where mimic landſcapes riſe, and fancied figures ſwell. The fruitful fields are hardened to iron; the moiſtened meadows are congealed to marble; and both reſound (an effect unknown before) with the peaſant's haſty tread. The ſtream is arreſted in its career, and its ever-flowing ſurface chained to the banks. The fluid paths become a ſolid road; where the finny ſhoals were wont to rove, the ſportive youth ſlide, or the rattling chariots roll *. And (what would ſeem, to an inhabitant of the ſouthern world, as unaccountable as the deepeſt myſteries of our religion) that very ſame breath of heaven, which cements the lakes into a cryſtal pavement, cleaves the oaks as it were with inviſible wedges: "breaks in pieces the northern iron, "and the ſteel;" even while it builds a bridge of icy rock over the ſeas †.

The air is all ſerenity. Refined by the nitrous particles, it affords the moſt diſtinct views, and extenſive proſpects. The ſeeds of infection are killed; and the peſtilence deſtroyed, even in embryo. So, the cold of affliction tends to mortify our corruptions, and ſubdue our vitious habits.—The crouding atmoſphere conſtringes our bodies, and braces our nerves. The ſpirits are buoyant, and ſally briſkly on the execution of their office. In the ſummer-months, ſuch an unclouded ſky, and ſo bright a ſun, would have melted us with heat, and ſoftened us into ſupineneſs. We ſhould have been ready to throw our limbs under the ſpreading beech, and to lie at eaſe by the murmuring brook. But now none loiters in his path; none is ſeen with folded arms. All is in motion; all is activity. Choice, prompted by the weather, ſupplies the ſpur of neceſſity. Thus, the rugged ſchool of miſfortune often trains up the mind to a vigorous exertion of its faculties. The bleak climate of adverſity often inſpirits us with a manly reſolution. When a ſoft and downy affluence, perhaps, would have relaxed all the generous ſpring of the ſoul, and have left it enervated with pleaſure, or diſſolved in indolence.

"COLD cometh out of the north *." The winds, having ſwept thoſe deſerts of ſnow, arm themſelves with millions of frozen particles, and make a fierce deſcent upon our iſle. Under black and ſcowling clouds, they drive, dreadfully whizzing, through the darkened air. They growl around our houſes; aſſault our doors; and, eager for entrance, faſten on our windows. Walls can ſcarce reſtrain them; bars are unable to exclude them; through every cranny they force their way. Ice is on their wings; they ſcatter agues through the land; and winter, all winter, rages as they go. Their breath is as a ſearing † iron to the little verdure left in the plains. Vaſtly more pernicious to the tender plants than the ſharpeſt knife, they kill their branches, and wound the very root. Let not the corn venture to peep too freely from the entrenchment of the furrow; let not the fruit-bearing bloſſoms dare to come abroad from their lodgment in the bark; leſt theſe murderous blaſts intercept and ſeize the unwary ſtrangers, and deſtroy the hopes of the advancing year.

O, 'tis ſeverely cold! Who is ſo hardy, as not to ſhrink at this exceſſively-pinching weather? See! Every face is pale. Even the blooming cheeks contract a gelid hue, and the teeth hardly forbear chattering.—Ye that ſit eaſy and joyous, amidſt your commodious apartments, ſolacing yourſelves in the diffuſive warmth of your fire, be mindful of your brethren in the chearleſs tenement of poverty. Their ſhattered panes are open to the piercing winds; a tattered garment ſcarcely covers their ſhivering fleſh; while a few faint and dying embers on the ſqualid hearth, rather mock their wiſhes, than warm their limbs.—While the generous juices of Oporto ſparkle in your glaſſes; or the ſtreams, beautifully tinged and deliciouſly flavoured with the Chineſe leaf, ſmoke in the elegant porcelain; O remember, that many of your fellow-creatures, amidſt all the rigour of theſe inclement ſkies, are emaciated with ſickneſs, benumbed with age, and pining with hunger. Let "their loins bleſs you," for comfortable cloathing. Reſtore them with medicine; regale them with food; and baffle the raging year. So, may you never know any of their diſtreſſes, but only by the hearing of the ear, the ſeeing of the eye, or the feeling of a tender commiſeration!—Methinks, the bitter bluſtering winds plead for the poor indigents. May they breathe pity into your breaſts, while they blow hardſhips into their huts!—— Obſerve thoſe blue flames, and ruddy coals, in your chimney: quickened by the cold, they look more lively, and glow more ſtrongly. Silent, but ſeaſonable admonition to the gay circle, that chat and ſmile around them! Thus, may your hearts, at ſuch a juncture of need, kindle into a peculiar benevolence! Detain not your ſuperfluous piles of wood. Let them haſten to the relief of the ſtarving family. Bid them expire in many a willing blaze, to mitigate the ſeverity of the ſeaſon, and chear the bleak abodes of want. So ſhall they aſcend, mingled with thankſgivings to GOD, and ardent prayers for your welfare;—aſcend, more grateful to heaven than columns of the moſt coſtly incenſe.

* Concreſcunt ſubito currenti in flumine cruſtæ;
Undaque jam tergo ferratos ſuſtinet orbes,
Puppibus illa prius patulis, nunc hoſpita plauſtris
Æraque diſſiliunt vulgo. VIRG.

† Job xxxviii. 30. The waters are hid, locked up from the cattle's lips, and ſecured from the fiſher's net, as wells were wont to be cloſed with a ponderous and impenetrable ſtone. And not only lakes and rivers, but the ſurface of the great deep, with its reſtleſs and uncontrollable ſurges, is taken captive יתלכדו by the froſt, and bound in ſhining fetters.

* Job xxxvii. 9.

† This, I ſuppoſe, is the meaning of that figurative expreſſion uſed by the prophet Habakkuk; who, ſpeaking of the Chaldæans invading Judæa, ſays,—Their faces, or the incurſions they make, ſhall ſup up, ſhall ſwallow greedily, ſhall devour utterly, the inhabitants of the country, and their valuable effects; as the keen, corroding blaſts of the eaſt wind deſtroy every green thing in the field. Hab. i. 9.

Now the winds ceaſe. Having brought their load, they are diſmiſſed from ſervice. They have waſted an immenſe cargo of clouds, which empty themſelves in ſnow. At firſt, a few ſcattered ſhreds come wandering down the ſaddened ſky. This ſlight ſkirmiſh is ſucceeded by a general onſet. The flakes, large and numerous, and thick-wavering, deſcend. They dim the air, and haſten the approach of night. Through all the night, in ſofteſt ſilence, and with a continual flow, this fleecy ſhower falls. In the morning, when we awake, what a ſurpriſing change appears!—Is this the ſame world? Here is no diverſity of colour! I can hardly diſtinguiſh the trees from the hills on which they grow. Which are the meadows, and which the plains? Where are the green paſtures, and where the fallow lands? All things lie blended in bright confuſion; ſo bright, that it heightens the ſplendor of day, and even dazzles the organs of ſight.—The lawn is not ſo fair, as this ſnowy mantle, which inveſts the fields; and even the lily, was the lily to appear, would look tarniſhed in its preſence. I can think of but one thing, which excels or equals the glittering robe of winter. Is any perſon deſirous to know my meaning? He may find it explained in that admirable hymn *, compoſed by the royal penitent. Is any deſirous to poſſeſs this matchleſs ornament? He would find it offered to his acceptance in every page of the goſpel.

See! (for the eye cannot ſatisfy itſelf without viewing again and again the curious, the delicate ſcene), ſee! how the hedges are habited, like ſpotleſs veſtals! The houſes are roofed with uniformity and luſtre. The meadows are covered with a carpet of the fineſt ermine†. The groves bow beneath the lovely burden; and all, all below, is one wide, immenſe, ſhining waſte of white.—By deep ſnows, and heavy rains, GOD ſealeth up the hand of every man. And for this purpoſe, adds our ſacred philoſopher, that all men may know his work ‡. He confines them within their doors, and puts a ſtop to their ſecular buſineſs; that they may conſider the things which belong to their ſpiritual welfare; that, having a vacation from their ordinary employ, they may obſerve the works of his power, and become acquainted with the myſteries of his grace.

And worthy, worthy of all obſervation, are the works of the great Creator. They are prodigiouſly various, and perfectly amazing. How pliant and ductile is nature under his forming hand! At his command, the ſelf-ſame ſubſtance aſſumes the moſt different ſhapes, and is transformed into an endleſs multiplicity of figures. If HE ordains, the water is moulded into hail, and diſcharged upon the earth like a volley of ſhot; or it is conſolidated into ice, and defends the rivers, "as it were with a breaſt-plate." At the bare intimation of his will, the very ſame element is ſcattered in hoar-froſt, like a ſprinkling of the moſt attenuated aſhes; or is ſpread over the ſurface of the ground, in theſe couches of ſwelling and flaky down.

The ſnow, however it may carry the appearance of cold, affords a warm garment for the corn; ſcreens it from nipping froſts, and cheriſhes its infant growth. It will abide for a while, to exert a protecting care, and exerciſe a ſoftening influence. Then, touched by the ſun, or thawed by a ſoftening gale, the furry veſture melts into genial moiſture; ſinks deep into the ſoil, and ſaturates its pores with the diſſolving nitre; repleniſhing the glebe with thoſe principles of vegetative life, which will open into the bloom of ſpring, and ripen into the fruits of autumn.—Beautiful emblem this, and comfortable repreſentation of the divine word, both in the ſucceſsful and advantageous iſſue of its operation! As the rain cometh down, and the ſnow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give ſeed to the ſower, and bread to the eater: ſo ſhall my word be, that goeth forth out of my mouth: it ſhall not return unto me void, but ſhall accompliſh that which I pleaſe, and it ſhall proſper in the thing whereunto I ſent it *.

NATURE, at length, puts off her lucid veil. She drops it in a trickling thaw. The looſened ſnow rolls in ſheets from the houſes. Various openings ſpot the hills; which, even while we look, become larger, and more numerous. The trees rid themſelves, by degrees, of the hoary incumberance. Shook from the ſpringing boughs, part falls heavy to the ground, part flies abroad in ſhining atoms. Our fields and gardens, lately buried beneath the drifted heaps, riſe plain and diſtinct to view.—Since we ſee nature once again, has ſhe no verdant traces, no beautiful features, left? They are, like real friends, very rare; and therefore the more particularly to be regarded, the more highly to be valued.—Here and there the holly hangs out her glowing berries; the lauruſtinus ſpreads her graceful tufts; and both under a covert of unfading foliage.—The plain, but hardy ivy, clothes the decrepit, crazy wall; nor ſhrinks from the friendly office, though the ſkies frown, and the ſtorm roars.—The laurel, firm, erect, and bold, expands its leaf of vivid green. In ſpite of the united, the repeated attacks of wind, and rain, and froſt, it preſerves an undiſmayed lively look; and maintains its poſt, while withering millions fall around. Worthy, by vanquiſhing the rugged force of winter, worthy to adorn the triumphant conqueror's brow.——Nor muſt I forget the bay-tree; which ſcorns to be a mean penſioner on a few tranſient ſunny gleams; or, with a ſervile obſequiouſneſs, to vary its appearance, in conformity to the changing ſeaſons: by ſuch indications of ſterling worth, and ſtaunch reſolution, reading a lecture to the poet's genius, while it weaves the chaplet for his temples.——Theſe, and a few other plants, clad with native verdure, retain their comely aſpect, in the bleakeſt climes, and in the coldeſt months.

Such, and ſo durable, are the accompliſhments of a refined underſtanding, and an amiable temper. The tawdry ornaments of dreſs, which catch the unthinking vulgar, ſoon become inſipid and deſpicable. The rubied lip, and the roſy cheek fade. Even the ſparkling wit †, as well as the ſparkling eye, pleaſe but for a moment. But the virtuous mind has charms, which ſurvive the decay of every inferior embelliſhment; charms, which add to the fragrancy of the flower, the permanency of the ever-green.

* Iſ. lv. 10. 11.

† "How little does GOD eſteem the things that men count "great; the endowments of wit and eloquence, that men admire "in ſome! Alas! how poor are they to him! He reſpecteth not "any who are wiſe in heart: they are nothing, and leſs than no-"thing, in his eyes. Even wiſe men admire, how little it is that "men know; how ſmall a matter lies under the ſound of theſe "popular wonders, a learned man, a great ſcholar, a great ſtateſ-"man. How much more doth the all-wiſe GOD meanly account "of theſe! He often diſcovers, even to the world, their mean-"neſs. He befools them. So valour, or birth, or wordly great-"neſs, theſe he gives, and gives as things he makes no great "reckoning of, to ſuch as ſhall never ſee his face; and calls to "the inheritance of glory poor deſpiſed creatures, that are looked "on as the off-ſcourings and refuſe of the world."

——THUS ſays an excellent author; who writes with the moſt amiable ſpirit of benevolence; with the moſt unaffected air of humility; and, like the ſacred originals, from which he copies with a majeſtic ſimplicity of ſtyle.——Whoſe ſelect works I may venture to recommend, not only as a treaſure, but as a MINE of genuine, ſterling, evangelical piety.——See page 520, of]

* Can any thing be whiter than ſnow? Yes, ſaith David: If GOD be pleaſed to waſh me from my ſins in the blood of CHRIST, I ſhall be even whiter than ſnow. Pſal. li. 7. See page 87.]

† This animal is milk-white. As for thoſe black ſpots, which we generally ſee in linings of ermine, they are added by the furrier, in order to diverſify the appearance, or heighten the beauty, of the native colour.

‡ Job xxxvii. 7.

Such, likewiſe, is the happineſs of the ſincerely-religious; like a tree, ſays the inſpired moraliſt, "whoſe "leaf ſhall not fall." He borrows not his peace from external circumſtances; but has a fund within, and is "ſatisfied from himſelf *." Even though impoveriſhed by calamitous accidents, he is rich in the poſſeſſion of grace, and richer in the hope of glory. His joys are infinitely ſuperior to, as well as nobly independent on, the tranſitory glow of ſenſual delight, or the capricious favours of what the world calls fortune.

If the ſnow compoſes the light-armed troops of the ſky, methinks the hail conſtitutes its heavy artillery †. When driven by a vehement wind, with what dreadful impetuoſity does that ſtony ſhower fall! How it rebounds from the frozen ground, and rattles on the reſounding dome! It attenuates the rivers into ſmoke, or ſcourges them into foam. It cruſhes the infant flowers; cuts in pieces the gardener's early plants; and batters the feeble fortification of his glaſſes into ſhivers. It darts into the traveller's face: he turns, with haſte, from the ſtroke; or feels, on his cheek, for the guſhing blood. If he would retreat into the houſe, it follows him even thither; and, like a determined enemy, that puſhes the purſuit, daſhes through the crackling panes.—But the fierce attack is quickly over. The clouds have ſoon ſpent their ſhafts; ſoon unſtrung their bow. Happy for the inhabitants of the earth, that a ſally ſo dreadfully furious, ſhould be ſo remarkably ſhort! What elſe could endure the ſhock, or eſcape deſtruction?

But behold a bow, of no hoſtile intention! a bow, painted in variegated colours, on the diſburdened cloud. How vaſt is the extent, how delicate the texture, of that ſhowery arch! It compaſſeth the heavens with a glorious circle, and teaches us to forget the horrors of the ſtorm. Elegant its form, and rich its tincture; but more delightful its ſacred ſignificancy. While the violet and the roſe bluſh in its beautiful aſpect, the olive-branch ſmiles in its gracious import. It writes, in radiant dyes, what the angels ſung in harmonious ſtrains; "peace "on earth, and good-will towards men." It is the ſtamp of inſurance, for the continuance of ſeed-time and harveſt; for the preſervation and ſecurity of the viſible world *. It is the comfortable token † of a better ſtate, and a happier kingdom;—a kingdom, where ſin ſhall ceaſe, and miſery be aboliſhed; where ſtorms ſhall beat, and winter pierce no more; but holineſs, happineſs, and joy, like one unbounded ſpring, for ever, ever bloom.

of Archbiſhop LEIGHTON's ſelect works, the Edinburgh edition, octavo. Which it is neceſſary to ſpecify, becauſe the London edition does not contain that part of his writings which has ſupplied me with the preceding quotation.

* Prov. xiv. 14.

† He caſteth forth his ice like morſels. Pſal. cxlvii. 17. Which, in modern language, might be thus expreſſed: He poureth his hail like a volley of ſhot. The word פתים, inadequately tranſlated morſels, alludes, I think, to thoſe fragments of the rock, or thoſe ſmooth ſtones from the brook, which, in the day of battle, the warriors hurled from their ſlings.

* Gen. ix. 12.—16. † Rev. iv. 3.

An IMITATION of MR HERVEY'S MEDITATIONS.

Wrote by a young Lady, in 1750.

☞ See above, p. 25—50.

THE ſhortening days, the ſullen clouds, grown dark and ponderous with the gathering rain; the frigid air, which ſtrikes unwelcome on the tender frame, (but ſhews what Albion's ſons could once endure), proclaim the approach of winter. —See! how the trees, as though they felt a ſhock like human diſſolution, now drop their leafy honours:—ſome, you may obſerve, like feeble old age, hang tottering in the air, till a gentle breeze breaks the tender fibre that ſupports them and throws them relentleſs on the ground. They fall unlamented, when they can no longer delight our eyes; and are no ſooner diſſolved, than forgot: one ſummer's beauty is all they can pretend to; whilſt the lofty fir, though greatly eclipſed by theſe gay ſtrangers in the bloom of their youth, yet far exceeds them in the duration of her charms. The beauty of the fir is always the ſame, and periſhes only with her exiſtence.

A lively emblem this, of the inſtability and worthleſſneſs of mortal charms.—How mutable is the happineſs of thoſe thoughtleſs women, who place all their felicity in admiration!—Admiration from whom? Not from the wiſe and prudent, that were well worth their aim; but from perſons light and trifling as themſelves: for ſuch alone pay court to poliſhed duſt.—— Perhaps, they paſs the bloom of their youth without one ſerious thought; and what a fund of impertinence do they then treaſure up for the remainder of their days! which, when all theſe gay fantaſtic viſions fade, when every outward charm is fled, grows quite inſupportable.—How can they bear the ſhock of approaching age? which (like autumn by the trees) diſrobes them of every attractive grace.——The perfections we are by the flattering world allowed, whilſt we have beauty, too often, at leaſt the praiſe of them, vaniſh with it, and leave nothing but malice and envy to fill up the great void of uncultivated ſenſe:—they drop like the withered leaves, neglected if not deſpiſed; and, like the path of a ſwift arrow through the inviſible air, leave no traces of virtue or goodneſs, whereby they may be remembered.—How much happier they, who, in the midſt of their childiſh, innocent amuſements, experience the effects of a true parental care; who are taught "to remember their Creator in the "days of their youth, while the evil days come not, "and the years wherein they ſhall (truly) ſay, I have "no pleaſure in them;" and are early informed (before the trifling joys of this world have made too deep an impreſſion on their tender minds), that all is vanity; that religion, wiſdom, and virtue, are the only permanent enjoyments in this world, and will be their only conſolation when they ſink into another. Beauty is no farther of advantage to us than as it is an embelliſhment to ſenſe, and makes virtue appear more amiable: but when it is only a maſk to vice or folly; when it perſuades the owner to neglect the attainment of all other accom-accomplishments, the blessing then degenerates into a curse, and we quickly despise the idle flatterer; in short, "the praise that is worth ambition, is attained by good "sense alone, with dignity of mind;" and a woman of true sense will be always ambitious,—not of gaining admiration, but of deserving it.

I must own myself obliged to Mr Hervey's Meditations, for this poor imitation of him. The two volumes published under that title, cannot, I think, be sufficiently admired: His Reflections are so easy and natural, that, upon reading them, you cannot help being surprised, that the objects which furnished him with those beautiful ideas, did not in the same manner affect you upon the like occasions, till you consider the dignity of style in which they are wrote:—You are then immediately convinced, that this is only to be attained by a bright understanding, refined by a liberal education.—I can't, for my own part, conceive any thing (in this world) to be more thoroughly conducive to happiness than such a genius, where every object round him raises his admiration, and excites his thankfulness to that Being, whose blessings he only truly enjoys, who PROPERLY esteems them; there is nothing such a one beholds, but what he can apply to the good of himself, and of his fellow-creatures.

A TABLE OF THE TEXTS

More or less illustrated in this WORK.

N. B. As Dr Shaw, in the supplement to his excellent book of Travels, and several other authors of the greatest eminence, have given an index of Scriptures, occasionally explained in their writings; I doubt not, but I shall oblige many of my readers, by what I here subjoin; those especially, whose taste is happily formed to relish the beauties of the sacred records.

Chap.	Ver.	Page
GENESIS.
XXX.	1.	19.
DEUT.
XXXII.	29.	14.
JOSH.
X.	12. 13.	98.
JUDG.
V.	20.	98.
V.	30.	39.
1 SAM.
XXVIII.	22.	26.
1 KINGS
VIII.	27.	14.
XX.	40.	68.
NEHEM.
IX.	6.	100.
JOB
IV.	14. 15. 16. 17. 18. 19.	72. 73.
IV.	19.	16.
V.	23.	108.
VII.	20.	86.
IX.	8.	27.
IX.	25. 26.	66.
XIX.	25.	51.
XXII.	14.	27.
XXII.	16.	79.
XXII.	20.	88.
XXV.	5. 6.	92.
XXVI.	14.	84.
XXXVIII.	25.	46.
XXXVIII.	30.	109.
PSALM
VIII.	3. 4.	84.
XXIII.	1.	97.
XXVII.	1.	97.
XXVII.	4.	40.
XXXIII.	6. 9.	87.

Chap.	Ver.	Page
PSALM
XLV.	9.	38.
LI.	7.	87.
XCVI.	5.	100.
XCVII.	2.	69. 90.
CIV.	3.	27.
CIV.	24.	41.
CVIII.	4.	32.
CX.	3.	34.
CX.	7.	34. 35.
CXXXVI.	9.	78.
CXXXIX.	2.	69.
CXXXIX.	7. 8. 9.	65.
CXXXIX.	10.	69.
PROVERBS
IV.	15.	49.
ECCLES.
XII.	3. 5.	21
CANTIC.
II.	1.	40.
VI.	10.	79.
ISAIAH
II.	11.	107.
IX.	3.	92.
XIV.	23.	76.
XXIX.	8.	71.
XXXIII.	15.	49.
XXXIII.	17.	40.
XXXV.	1.	47.
XXXVIII.	11.	67.
XL.	12.	89.
XL.	15	84.
XL.	29. 30. 31.	88.
XLI.	10.	95.
XLII.	3.	95.
XLIX.	13.	91.
XLIX.	15.	103.
LI.	6. 16.	55.

Chap.	Ver.	Page
ISAIAH
LIII.	3.	57.
LV.	13.	47.
LVIII.	10.	47.
LXI.	10.	39.
JEREM.
XXXI.	12.	47.
XLIX.	11.	20.
EZEK.
XVI.	63.	86.
DAN.
IX.	24.	79.
XII.	3.	101.
HABAK.
I.	9.	109.
III.	4.	43.
III.	11.	98.
ZECH.
IX.	17.	90.
XIII.	1.	87.
MATTH.
VI.	25.	98.
LUKE
VII.	12.	74.
XIV.	23.	42.
XV.	11. &c.	93.
XVIII.	19.	90.
JOHN
I.	3.	37. 43.
III.	3.	73.
V.	17.	37.
X.	9.	48.
XI.	26.	27.
XII.	32.	97.
XIV.	6.	48.
XIV.	9.	96.
ACTS
IX.	1.	93.

Chap.	Ver.	Page
ACTS
XX.	28.	87.
ROM.
V.	8.	91.
V.	20.	93.
XIII.	14.	39.
1 COR.
I.	24.	96.
I.	30.	78.
XV.	41. 42.	101.
2 COR.
IV.	17.	69.
VI.	16.	14.
IX.	8.	93.
GAL.
II.	20.	49.
EPH.
III.	10.	96.
III.	18. 19.	86.
III.	20.	88.
PHILIP.
II.	6. 7. 8.	85. 86.
III.	10.	49.
COLOSS.
II.	3.	96.
HEB.
I.	2. 3.	37. 44.
VII.	26.	86.
VIII.	10.	97.
XII.	2.	48.
1 PET.
I.	12.	96.
2 PET.
III.	10.	76.
REV.
X.	1. 2. 3. 4. 5. 6.	66. 67.
XII.	1.	55.
XXI.	1.	57.

THE END OF THE MEDITATIONS.

THERON AND ASPASIO:

OR, A SERIES

OF

DIALOGUES

AND

LETTERS,

UPON THE

Moſt important and intereſting SUBJECTS.

The memorial of thine abundant kindneſs ſhall be ſhewed, and men ſhall ſing of thy righteouſneſs, Pſal. cxlv. 7.
My mouth ſhall daily ſpeak of thy righteouſneſs and ſalvation; for I know no end thereof. Pſal. lxxi. 13.
For Zion's ſake will I not hold my peace, and for Jeruſalem's ſake I will not reſt, until the righteouſneſs thereof go forth as brightneſs, and the ſalvation thereof as a lamp that burneth. Iſ. lxii. 1.

TO

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE

Lady FRANCES SHIRLEY.

MADAM,

IF Chriſtianity was inconſiſtent with true politeneſs, or prejudicial to real happineſs, I ſhould be extremely injudicious, and inexcuſably ungrateful, in preſenting theſe eſſays to your LADYSHIP. But as the religion of JESUS is the grand ornament of our nature, and a ſource of the ſublimeſt joy, the purport of the following pages cannot be unworthy the countenance and protection of the moſt accompliſhed perſon. Neither can there be a wiſh more ſuitable to the obligations or the dictates of a grateful heart, than that you may experience what you read, and be what you patronize.

DID religion conſiſt in a formal round of external obſervances, or a forced ſubmiſſion to ſome rigorous auſterities, I ſhould not ſcruple to join with the infidel and the ſenſualiſt, to dread it in one view, and to deſpiſe it in another. You need not be informed MADAM, that it is as much ſuperior to all ſuch low and forbidding ſingularities, as the heavens are higher than the earth. It is deſcribed by an author, who learned its theory in the regions of paradiſe, and who diſplayed its efficacy in his own moſt exemplary converſation;—it is thus deſcribed by that incomparable author; The kingdom of GOD is not meat and drink, but righteouſneſs, and peace, and joy in the HOLY GHOST.

To be reconciled to the omnipotent GOD;——to be intereſted in the unſearchable riches of CHRIST;——to be renewed in our hearts, and influenced in our lives, by the ſanctifying opera-tious of the divine SPIRIT;—this is evangelical right-eousneſs; this is genuine religion; this, MADAM, is the kingdom of GOD eſtabliſhed in the ſoul.—How benign and inviting is ſuch an inſtitution! How honourable and advantageous ſuch a ſtate! And from ſuch privileges, what other effects can flow, but that peace, which paſſeth all underſtanding? that joy, which is unſpeakable and glorious?

Is there any thing in the amuſements of the gay, and purſuits of the ambitious, of greater, of equal, of comparable value? Is not all that wealth can purchaſe, all that grandeur can beſtow, ſomewhat like thoſe glittering bubbles, which when viewed are emptineſs, when graſped are nothing? Whereas, the comforts, the benefits, the hopes of Chriſtianity, are at once ſupremely excellent, and infinitely durable: a portion, ſuited to the dignity of a rational ſoul; large as its faculties, and immortal as its being.

ALL theſe bleſſings are centered in CHRIST, were purchaſed by CHRIST; are communicated from CHRIST.——It is for want of knowing thoſe boundleſs and everlaſting treaſures of pardoning, juſtifying, ſaving merit, which the LORD JESUS CHRIST poſſeſſes, and which he freely diſpenſes even to ſinners, that ſo many unthinking perſons are attached to ignoble objects, and beguiled by deluſory pleaſures. Unhappy creatures! what can they do, but catch at ſhadows, and ſtoop at trifles, while they are ignorant of the grand, the ſubſtantial, the exalted good?—It is for want of duly attending to that fulneſs of grace, and that plenteouſneſs of redemption, which dwell in our moſt adorable SAVIOUR, that ſo many ſerious perſons are ſtrangers to the tranquillity and ſweetneſs of religion; are ſubject to all its reſtraints, but enjoy few, if any, of its delights. Miſtaken zealots! how can they avoid the gloomy ſituation and the uncomfortable circumſtance, ſo long as they withdraw themſelves from the SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS, and his all-chearing beams?

MAY your LADYSHIP live continually under his heavenly light and healing wings! be more fully aſſured of his dying love, and have brighter, ſtill brighter manifeſtations of his immenſe perfections! By theſe delightful views, and by that precious faith, may your heart be transformed into his holy, his amiable, his divine image! Your happineſs will then be juſt ſuch as is wiſhed, but far greater than can be expreſſed by,

MADAM,

Your moſt obliged, and Moſt obedient, humble ſervant,

Weſton-Favell,
Jan. 6. 1755.

JAMES HERVEY.

PREFACE.

THE reader will probably expect ſome account of the enſuing work; and to gratify him in this particular, will be a real pleaſure to the author.

The beauty and excellency of the Scriptures;—the ruin and depravity of human nature;—its happy recovery, founded on the atonement, and effected by the SPIRIT, of CHRIST;—theſe are ſome of the chief points, vindicated, illuſtrated, and applied in the following ſheets.——But the grand article, that which makes the principal figure, is the IMPUTED RIGHTEOUSNESS of our divine LORD; from whence ariſes our juſtification before GOD and our title to every heavenly bleſſing: An article, which, though eminent for its importance, ſeems to be little underſtood, and leſs regarded; if not much miſtaken, and almoſt forgotten.

The importance of this great evangelical doctrine,—how worthy it is of the moſt attentive conſideration, and of univerſal acceptance,—is hinted in the ſecond dialogue. So that I need, in this place, do nothing more, than give the ſenſe of a paſſage from Witſius, which is there introduced in the notes.—"The doctrine of juſti-"fication," ſays that excellent author. "ſpreads itſelf "through the whole ſyſtem of divinity. As this is "either ſolidly eſtabliſhed, or ſuperficially touched; "fully ſtated, or ſlightly diſmiſſed; accordingly, the "whole ſtructure of religion, either riſes graceful and "magnificent, ſuperior to aſſault, and beyond the power "of decay; or elſe it appears diſproportionate and de-"fective, totters on its foundation, and threatens an op-"probrious fall."

The deſign is executed in the form of dialogue; thoſe parts only excepted, in which it was not eaſy to carry on a converſation, and aſſign to each perſon a proper degree of ſignificancy. Here, to avoid the common imputation, of bringing upon the ſtage a mute or a ſhadow,—one who fights without weapons, and ſubmits without a conteſt,—the ſcene ſhifts. Our gentlemen ſeparate; and, inſtead of converſing, enter upon an epiſtolary correſpondence.

mits

The dialogue-form ſeems, on many conſiderations, a very eligible way of writing.——Hereby the author gives an air both of dignity and of modeſty to his ſentiments. Of dignity; by delivering them from the mouths of perſons in every reſpect ſuperior to himſelf. Of modeſty; becauſe we no longer conſider him in the raiſed, but invidious capacity of a teacher. Inſtead of calling us to his feet, and dictating his precepts, he gratifies our curioſity. He turns back a curtain, and admits us to ſome remarkable interviews, or intereſting conferences. We overhear, by a kind of innocent or imaginary ſtealth, the debates which paſs in the receſſes of privacy; which are carried on with the moſt unreſerved freedom of ſpeech, and openneſs of heart.——A circumſtance, which will apologize for ſome peculiarities, that might otherwiſe be inconſiſtent with humility, or offenſive to delicacy. Particularly, it may obviate the diſguſt which generally, and indeed deſervedly, attends the frequent intruſion of that ambitious and uſurping little monoſyllable, I.

The names of the perſons are prefixed, each to his reſpective ſhare of the diſcourſe; in imitation of Cicero, and for the reaſons which he aſſigns. Quaſi enim ipſos induxi loquentes: ne inquam et inquit ſæpius interponerentur. Atque id eo feci, ut tanquam præſentibus coram haberi ſermo videretur *. This method, he very juſtly intimates, is removed fartheſt from the narrative, and makes the neareſt approaches to life and reality. It quite ſecretes the author; and, by introducing the perſons themſelves, renders all that paſſes entirely their own.——It prevents likewiſe the repetition of thoſe interlocutory words, He ſaid, he replied. Which, unleſs the ſpeeches are very long, muſt frequently recur, and have no pleaſing effect upon the ear. And, if the ſpeeches are long, the ſpirit of converſation is loſt. The aſſociates are no longer talking; but one of them, or the author, is lecturing.

Though I have ſo much to ſay in behalf of the model, I have very little to ſay with regard to the execution,—unleſs it be to confeſs the deficiency. There is not, I am ſenſible, that peculiar air and diſtinguiſhing turn, which ſhould mark and characteriſe each ſpeaker. This is what the nature of finiſhed dialogue requires, and what the author applauds in ſome very ſuperior writers. But not having the ability to copy it, he has not the vanity to affect it.——Nevertheleſs, the attentive reader will, all along, perceive a difference in the ſentiment, if not in the language. The materials vary, even when they run into the ſame mould, and take the ſame form.——In the diction alſo there muſt be ſome diverſity; becauſe ſeveral of the objections are propoſed in the very words of one or two eminent writers, who have appeared on the other ſide of the queſtion. Theſe are not particularized by the mark of quotation; becauſe the man of reading will have no occaſion for the aſſiſtance of ſuch an index, and the man of taſte will probably diſcern them by the ſingularity of the ſtyle.

Some of the following pieces it muſt be acknowledged, are of the controverſial kind: A ſpecies of writing, leaſt ſuſceptible of the graces which embelliſh compoſition; or rather, moſt deſtitute of the attractives which engage attention, and create delight.—Yet I have ſometimes thought, that it is not abſolutely impoſſible to make even the ſtern face of controverſy wear a ſmile, and to reap ſome valuable fruit from the rugged furrows of diſputation. Whether this is effected in the preſent work, the public muſt judge; that it has been attempted, the author may be permitted to declare.

To ſoften the aſperities of argument, views of nature are interſperſed. That, if the former ſhould carry the appearance of a rude entangled foreſt, or of a frowning gloomy receſs, there may be ſome agreeable openings, and lightſome avenues, to admit a proſpect of the country; which is always arrayed in charms, and never fails to pleaſe.

The author confeſſes a very peculiar fondneſs for the amiable ſcenes of creation. It is therefore not at all improbable, but his excurſions, on this topic, may be of the diffuſive kind, and his deſcriptions ſomewhat luxuriant. It is hoped, however, that the benevolent reader will indulge him in this favourite foible.——If any ſhould feel the ſame prevailing paſſion for the beauties of nature, 'tis poſſible theſe perſons may be inclined, not only to excuſe, but to approve the fault; and may take part with the lover, even in oppoſition to the critic.

Farther to diverſify the piece, ſketches of philoſophy are introduced; eaſy to be underſtood, and calculated to entertain the imagination, as well as to improve the heart; more particularly, to diſplay the wiſe and beneficent deſign of Providence, in the various appearances and numberleſs productions of the material world. Neither are theſe remarks altogether foreign to the main point; but, as far as the wonders of creation may comport with the riches of grace, ſubſerve the general end.

As to the choice of my ſubjects;——ſome people have deſired to ſee an invective againſt the faſhionable and predominant vices of the age. This, I apprehend, would be like picking off the leaves, or clipping away the twigs, from ſome overgrown and noxious tree. Waving this tedious and ineffectual toil, I would rather lay the axe to the root. Let the knowledge and love of CHRIST take place in the heart, and not only a few of the branches, but the whole body of ſin, will fall at once.

Some would have the author inſiſt upon the conſcientious obſervation of the ſabbath, inculcate the daily worſhip of GOD in the family, and urge a devout attendance on the public ordinances of religion.——But when a perſon is convinced of ſin, and made ſenſible of miſery; when he has taſted the good word of GOD *, and ſeen by faith the LORD's CHRIST †; he will want no ſolicitation or incitement to theſe means of grace, and exerciſes of godlineſs. He will have juſt the ſame diſpoſition to them all, as the hungry appetite has to wholeſome food, or the new-born babe ‡ to the milk of the breaſt.

Others may imagine, that I have neglected the intereſts of morality; becauſe here is no profeſſed attempt to delineate its duties, or enforce its practice.——Let theſe perſons remember, that morality never makes ſuch vigorous ſhoots, never produces ſuch generous fruit, as when ingrafted on evangelical principles.——And if I do not crop the pink, the roſe, and the carnation; if I do not gather the peach, the nectarine, and the pine-apple; and put them into my reader's hand, for his immediate enjoyment: I am endeavouring to ſow the ſeeds, and plant the roots in his garden; which, if cheriſhed by the favourable influence of heaven, will yield him, not an occaſional, but a conſtant ſupply of all.

As ſeveral texts of ſcripture come under conſideration, criticiſms upon the original are frequently ſubjoined; in order to clear up ſome difficulties, to rectify ſome miſtranſlations, or point out the many delicate and maſterly ſtrokes, which occur in the Bible.——And glad ſhould I be, extremely glad, if I might recommend and endear that invaluable book; if, as the divine REDEEMER rideth on in the word of truth, of meekneſs, and righteouſneſs ‖,

* De Amicitia.

* Heb. vi. 5. † Luke ii. 26.

‡ 1 Pet. ii. 2. This compariſon is, perhaps, the moſt exact and expreſſive that words can form, or fancy conceive. Babes covet nothing but the milk of the breaſt. They are indifferent about all other things. Give them riches, give them honours, give them whatever you pleaſe, without this rich, delicious, balmy nutriment, they will not, they cannot be ſatisfied.—How finely does this illuſtrate, and how forcibly inculcate, what our LORD ſtyles, the ſingle eye, and the one thing needful! or the ſalutary doctrines and delightful privileges of the goſpel; together with that ſupreme value for them, and undivided complacency in them, which are the diſtinguiſhing character of the Chriſtian!

‖ Pſal. xlv. 4.

this

this hand might ſcatter a palm-branch, or this performance might lie as a floweret, to ſtrew his way *, and ſolemnize his triumph.

In the courſe of the diſputation, I dare not ſuppoſe that I have diſcuſſed all the arguments, which ſagacity may deviſe, or ſophiſtry urge. Perhaps, I have not removed all the ſcruples, which may awaken prejudice, or embarraſs integrity. This, however, I may venture to affirm, that I myſelf have met with no conſiderable objection, which is not either expreſsly anſwered, or virtually refuted, in theſe conferences.—And, though I ſhould neither ſatisfy nor ſilence the gainſayer, I ſhall think my endeavours happily employed, if they may throw light upon the dim apprehenſion; eſtabliſh the wavering faith; or comfort the afflicted conſcience.

If any ſhould burleſque or ridicule theſe venerable truths, and exalted privileges, I ſhall only ſay with my divine MASTER; O! that thou hadſt known, in this thy day, the things that belong to thy peace! but now they are hid, it is evident from ſuch a procedure, they are hid from thine eyes †.—Should any, in the ſpirit of deceney and candor, either ſtart new, or revive old objections, I doubt not but they will receive both a due examination and a proper reply. As theſe doctrines enter into the very eſſence of the goſpel, and conſtitute the glory of our religion, they can never want a ſucceſſion of advocates, ſo long as the ſun and moon endure.—For my own part, I muſt beg leave to retire from the liſts, and lay down the weapons of controverſy. Virgil's language is my reſolution;

Diſcedam, explebo numerum, reddarque tenebris.

This declaration is made, not from any the leaſt ſuſpicion, that my tenets are indefenſible; but becauſe I would apprize my friends, and the friends of our common Chriſtianity, that the field is clear and open for them to advance; that I reſign to others the glorious combat; and ſhall content myſelf with wiſhing them ſucceſs in the name of the LORD.—Becauſe it becomes a perſon in my declining ſtate, to be more peculiarly intent upon encountering a different adverſary; who is ſure to overcome, and never allows quarter. Yet, by this word of my teſtimony, and by the blood of the LAMB ‡, I hope to triumph even when I fall; and to be more than conqueror, through JEHOVAH my righteouſneſs.

* Alluding to Matth. xxi. 8.

† Luke xix. 42. ‡ Rev. xii. 11.

Should any thing be urged, forcible enough to overthrow my arguments, or detect a miſtake in my ſentiments, the world may depend upon ſeeing a free and undiſſembled retractation. I ſhall look upon it as a duty, which I owe to my conſcience, to my readers, and to my GOD, publicly to acknowledge the error.—It is one thing to be ſilent; another to be obſtinate. As I ſhall inflexibly adhere to the firſt, I would with equal ſteadineſs renounce the laſt. Though I withdraw from the ſtrife of pens and of tongues, I ſhall take care to preſerve a mind ever acceſſible to truth, ever open to conviction; a mind infinitely more concerned for the purity and proſperity of the everlaſting goſpel, than for the prevalence of my own opinion, or the credit of my own performance.

As I have the happineſs of being a member, and the honour of being a miniſter, of the reformed eſtabliſhed church; I cannot but reflect, with a peculiar pleaſure, that every doctrine of note, maintained in theſe dialogues and letters, is either implied in our liturgy, aſſerted in our articles, or taught in our homilies.—It affords me likewiſe ſome degree of ſatisfaction to obſerve, that the moſt material of the ſentiments have been adopted by Milton; are incorporated into his Paradiſe Loſt; and add dignity to the ſublimeſt poem in the world.—To have the higheſt human authority, and the firſt genius of the nation, on a writer's ſide, is no contemptible ſupport. This muſt ſurely give a ſanction, where-ever our religious eſtabliſhment is reverenced, or polite literature is held in repute. Yet even this ſanction, compared with the oracle of revelation, is only like a range of cyphers, connected with the initial figure: which, were they detached, would be inſignificant; but, in ſuch a ſubordination, are conſiderable.

Perhaps it ſhould be farther acknowledged, that I have not alwaysconfined myſelf to the method of our ſyſtematic writers, nor followed their train of thoughts with a ſcrupulous regularity. I would conduct my fellow-creature to the ſupreme and eternal good, CHRIST JESUS. I have choſen the path which ſeemed moſt agreeable and inviting, rather than moſt beaten and frequented. If this leads, with equal certainty, to the great and deſirable end, I dare promiſe myſelf an eaſy excuſe. —However, that method and order, in the doctrinal parts of the plan, are not wholly neglected, the following ſummary of contents may ſhew.

THE

THE CONTENTS.

DIALOGUE I.

CHARACTER of the ſpeakers—On improving converſation—Elegance, dignity, and ſingular uſefulneſs of the ſcriptures.

DIALOGUE II.

Walk through the gardens—The beautiful frame and beneficial ordination of things—Preparatory diſcourſe on the imputation of CHRIST's righteouſneſs—Meaning of the terms ſettled.

DIALOGUE III.

Walk through a meadow—Doctrine of CHRIST's ſatisfaction ſtated—Conſidered as a redemption-price, and as a ſacrifice for ſin—Variouſly typified under the Moſaic diſpenſation.

DIALOGUE IV.

Park and romantic mount—CHRIST's death farther conſidered, as the very puniſhment which our ſins deſerved—Objections, ancient and modern, anſwered—The whole ſummed up, and improved.

DIALOGUE V.

Elegant arbour in the flower-garden—Imputation of CHRIST's righteouſneſs—Objections from reaſon canvaſſed.

DIALOGUE VI.

Gallery of pictures—Library and its furniture—A fordid taſte in painting cenſured: a more grateful manner diſplayed—Imputation of CHRIST's righteouſneſs reſumed—Objections from ſcripture urged and refuted.

DIALOGUE VII.

Hay-making—Pleaſures of nature freely enjoyed—Bleſſings of grace beſtowed with equal freeneſs—Theron's plan of acceptance with GOD, conſiſts of ſincerity, repentance, and good works, recommended by the merits of CHRIST—This ſhewn to be a falſe foundation—No ſuch thing as a good work, till we are accepted through the REDEEMER.

DIALOGUE VIII.

Duelling—Animadverſions on the practice—Spirituality and extent of the divine law—Infinite purity of GOD.

DIALOGUE IX.

Curious ſummer-houſe—No relaxation of the divine law, as to the precept or the penalty—Its inflexible ſtrictneſs, and principal ends.

DIALOGUE X.

Theron's laſt effort to demoliſh the evangelical ſcheme of juſtification—Among other objections, more plauſible and refined than the preceding, he ſtrenuouſly inſiſts that faith is our righteouſneſs—Review of the whole.

DIALOGUE XI.

Ruins of Babylon—Fine paſſage from Mr Howe—Depravity and ruin of human nature, as they are repreſented in ſcripture—Applied, with a view to determine the yet dubious inquiry.

DIALOGUE XII.

Extremely hot day—A ſolemn ſhady bower—True method of deriving benefit from the claſſics—The wonderful ſtructure and œconomy of the human body.

DIALOGUE XIII.

Walk upon the terrace—Depravity of human nature, laid open, and proved from experience—Uſes of the doctrine, and its ſubſerviency to the grand point.

DIALOGUE XIV.

Theron alone in the fields—His ſoliloquy on the charms of rural nature—His reflections on the paſt conferences—Aſpaſio reinforces his arguments for the imputation of CHRIST's righteouſneſs—Recommends ſelf-examination, the keeping of a diary, and prayer for the enlightening SPIRIT—Departs, under an engagement to correſpond by letter.

LETTER I.

Aſpaſio opens the correſpondence with ſome important articles of duty; deſigned to facilitate ſelf-examination, and promote conviction of ſin.

LETTER II.

Theron, convinced of the iniquity of his life, and the evil of his heart, ſees the neceſſity of a better righteouſneſs than his own—Deſires a farther explanation, and fuller proof, of the doctrine under debate.

LETTER III.

Aſpaſio proves the point—from the liturgy—the articles—the homilies of the church of England——and the writings of the fathers.

LETTER IV.

Aſpaſio re-eſtabliſhes the tenet, from the ſcriptures of the Old Teſtament.

LETTER V.

Aſpaſio relates a remarkable panic—Terrors of the day of judgment—CHRIST's righteouſneſs, and its imputation, largely demonſtrated from the New Teſtament.

LETTER VI.

Theron takes a curſory view of the habitable creation—Traces the perfections of nature through the earth, air, and fire—Admirable conſtruction, and advantageous effects, of theſe elements.

LETTER VII.

Aſpaſio takes occaſion to diſplay the no leſs admirable perfection of CHRIST's righteouſneſs—Its principle—extent—perſeverance.

LETTER VIII.

Aſpaſio deſcribes a drought—Majeſty and beauty of the ſun, after a night of rain—The meritorious excellency of CHRIST's righteouſneſs illuſtrated, from the magnificence of his works, and the divinity of his perſon.

LETTER IX.

Theron's account of the weſtern cliffs—the wonders of the ocean—and the benefits of navigation.

LETTER X.

Aſpaſio enumerates the much richer benefits reſulting from the imputation of CHRIST's righteouſneſs—Shews their happy influence on holineſs of heart, and obedience of life.

LETTER XI.

Aſpaſio exemplifies the laſt particular in two very memorable inſtances—Eſpecially in the conduct of Abraham, offering up his ſon Iſaac.

LETTER XII.

Aſpaſio touches upon union with CHRIST—How deſcribed in ſcripture—Its bleſſed and glorious effects.

DIALOGUE XV.

Aſpaſio reviſits Theron—Theron under anxiety of ſpirit—Partly to entertain, partly to comfort his friend, Aſpaſio enlarges upon the bounty of the CREATOR, viſible both in the animal and vegetable world—The new convert is ſlow of heart to believe—Evangelical motives to faith.

DIALOGUE XVI.

Harveſt-ſcene—Philenor's gardens—Statues—Grove of evergreens—Nature of true faith—Its ſure foundation, and firm ſupports.

DIALOGUE XVII.

A river-voyage—The diverſified proſpect—Comparative happineſs—Advantages of peace—A celebration of the goſpel, and its bleſſings, in a kind of rhapſody—CHRIST's righteouſneſs applied to every caſe of diſtreſs, and every time of need.

THERON AND ASPASIO:

OR, A SERIES

OF

DIALOGUES.

DIALOGUE I.

THERON was a gentleman of fine taſte; of accurate rather than extenſive reading; and particularly charmed with the ſtudy of nature. He traced the planets in their courſes, and examined the formation of the meaneſt vegetable; not merely to gratify a refined curioſity, but chiefly to cultivate the nobler principles of religion and morality. Several diſcoveries he made, and every diſcovery he improved, to this important end,—to raiſe in his mind more exalted apprehenſions of the SUPREME BEING,—and to enlarge his affections with diſintereſted benevolence, conformable, in ſome degree, to that boundleſs liberality which pervades and animates the whole creation.

ASPASIO was not without his ſhare of polite literature, and philoſophical knowledge. He had taken a tour through the circle of the ſciences; and, having tranſiently ſurveyed the productions of human learning, devoted his final attention to the inſpired writings. Theſe he ſtudied with the unbiaſſed impartiality of a critic, yet with the reverential ſimplicity of a Chriſtian. Theſe he regarded, as the unerring ſtandard of duty,—the authentic charter of ſalvation,—and the brighteſt mirror of the DEITY; affording the moſt ſatisfactory and ſublime diſplay of all the divine attributes.

Theron was ſomewhat warm in his temper; and would, upon occaſion, make uſe of a little innocent raillery; not to expoſe his friend, but to enliven the converſation; ſometimes diſguiſing his real ſentiments, in order to ſift the ſubject, or diſcover the opinion of others.——Aſpaſio ſeldom indulges the humorous or ſatirical vein, but argues with meekneſs of wiſdom *: never puts on the appearance of guile, but always ſpeaks the dictates of his heart.

Aſpaſio was on a viſit at Theron's ſeat.——One evening, when ſome neighbouring gentlemen we juſt gone, and had left them alone, the converſation took the following turn.

Aſp.—I would always be ready, both to acknowledge and applaud whatever is amiable in the conduct of others. The gentlemen who gave us their company at dinner, ſeem to be all of a different character: yet each, in his own way, is extremely agreeable.

Lyſander has lively parts, and is quick at repartee; but he never abuſes his wit to create uneaſineſs in the honeſt heart, and fluſh the modeſt cheek with confuſion.——What ſolidity of judgment, and depth of penetration, appear in Crito! yet how free are his diſcourſes from the magiſterial tone, or the dictatorial ſolemnity!——Philenor's taſte in the polite arts is remarkably correct; yet without the leaſt tincture of vanity, or any weak fondneſs for applauſe. He never interrupts the progreſs, or wreſts the topic of converſation, in order to ſhine in his particular province.——Trebonius, I find, has ſignalized his valour in ſeveral campaigns. Though a warrior and a traveller, he gives himſelf no overbearing or oſtentatious airs. In Tribonius, you ſee the brave officer, regulated by all the decency of the academic, and ſweetened with all the affability of the courtier.

No one affects moroſe ſilence, or aſſumes an immoderate loquacity *. To ingroſs the talk, is tyrannical; to ſeal up the lips, is monkiſh. Every one, therefore, from a fund of good ſenſe, contributes his quota; and each ſpeaks, not with an ambition to ſet off himſelf, but from a deſire to pleaſe the company.

Ther. Indeed, Aſpaſio, I think myſelf happy in this accompliſhed ſet of acquaintance; who add all the complaiſance and politeneſs of the gentleman, to the benevolence and fidelity of the friend.

Their converſation is as innocent, as their taſte is refined.——They have a noble abhorrence of ſlander, and deteſt the low ungenerous artifices of detraction.——No looſe jeſt has either the ſervice of their tongue, or the ſanction of their ſmile.——Was you to be with them, even in their freeſt moments, you would hear nothing that ſo much as borders upon profaneneſs, or is in the leaſt injurious to purity of morals.

Aſp. There is but one qualification wanting to render your friends completely valuable, and their ſocial interviews a continual bleſſing.

Ther. Pray, what is that?

Aſp. A turn for more ſerious conferences.——Their literary debates are beautiful ſketches of whatever is moſt curious in the ſciences, or moſt delicate in the arts. From their remarks on our national affairs, and on foreign occurrences, a perſon may almoſt form a ſyſtem of politics.—But they never touch up-is a moſt amiable character, and delicately drawn; but is, I think, expreſſed with greater ſtrength and ſuperior beauty by the ſacred penman; Let him ſhew out of a good converſation his works with meekneſs of wiſdom. Jam. iii. 13.

* Mitis ſapientis Lalia, HOR.

* Zeno being preſent, where a perſon of this loquacious diſpoſition played himſelf off, ſaid, with an air of concern in his countenance, That poor gentleman is ill, he has a violent flux upon him. The company was alarmed, and the rhetorician ſtopped in his career. Yes, added the philoſopher, the flux is ſo violent, that it has carried his ears into his tongue.

on on any topic of morality; never celebrate the ſublime perfections of the DEITY; never illuſtrate the beauties, nor enforce the truths——

Ther. Fie upon you, Aſpaſio, for your unpolite hint! Who can forbear interrupting the harangue, which pleads for ſuch an outrageous violation of the mode? would introduce edifying talk into our faſhionable aſſemblies! How is it that you, who, in other inſtances, are a gentleman of refinement, can be ſo ſtrangely inelegant in this particular?

Aſp. For ſuch a practice, Theron, we have no inconſiderable precedents.—Thus Socrates *, the wiſeſt of the Athenian ſages; thus Scipio †, the moſt accompliſhed of the Roman generals, converſed.——Thus Cicero ‡, the prince of orators, improved his elegant retirement at the Tuſculan villa. And Horace ‖, the brigheſt genius in the court of Auguſtus, formed the moſt agreeable hours of his converſation upon this very plan.

Was I to enumerate all the patrons of this, forgive me if I ſay more honourable mode; the moſt illuſtrious names of antiquity would appear on the liſt.

Ther. This practice, however extolled by the philoſophic gentry of ancient times, would make a very ſingular figure in the preſent age.

Aſp. And ſhould not the copy, after which the generality of mankind write, be ſingularly correct? Perſons of exalted fortune are the pattern for general imitation; are the copy, in conformity to which the inferior world adjuſt their manners, and regulate their behaviour. They, therefore, are under the ſtrongeſt obligations, not to give a contemptible ſtamp to the faſhion.—Benevolence to their fellow-creatures calls loudly upon them, a concern for the public good challenges it at their hands, that they ſignalize themſelves by a pre-eminence in all that is excellent.

Ther. Away, away with theſe auſtere notions! Such a ſtrain of converſation would damp the gaiety of our ſpirits, and flatten the reliſh of ſociety. It would turn the aſſembly into a conventicle, and make it lent all the year round.

Aſp. Can it then it be an auſtere practice, to cultivate the underſtanding, and improve the heart?—Can it damp the gaiety of our ſpirits, to refine them upon the plan of the higheſt perfection?—Or, will it flatten the reliſh of ſociety, to ſecure and anticipate everlaſting delights?

Ther. Everlaſting delights, Aſpaſio!—To talk of ſuch a ſubject, would be termed, in every circle of wit and gallantry, an uſurpation of the parſon's office; a low method of retailing by ſcraps, in the parlour, what the man in black vends by wholeſale from the pulpit.—It would infallibly marks us out for pedants; and, for ought I know, might expoſe us to the ſuſpicion of enthuſiaſm.

Aſp. Your men of wit muſt excuſe me, if I cannot perſuade myſelf to admire either the delicacy of their language, or the juſtneſs of their opinion.

The firſt, be it ever ſo humane and graceful, I reſign to themſelves.—As for the other, I would beg leave to enquire, "Are the clergy, then, the only perſons, who "ſhould act the becoming part, and converſe like rational beings? Is ſolid wiſdom, and ſacred truth, the "privilege of their order; while nothing is left for "you and me, but the play of fancy, or the luxuries of "ſenſe?"

I would farther aſk the circles of gallantry, "Where "is the impropriety of interweaving the noble doctrines "diſplayed by the preacher, with our common diſ"courſe? or, what the inconvenience of introducing the "amiable graces, recommended by his lectures, into our "ordinary practice?"

Will ſuch an exerciſe of our ſpeech rank us among pedants? Is this the badge of enthuſiaſm? A ſplendid and honourable badge truly! ſuch as muſt add weight to any cauſe, and worth to any character.

Ther. This would curb the ſprightly ſallies of wit, and extinguiſh that engaging glow of good-humour which enlivens our genteel intercourſes. Accordingly, you may obſerve, that if any formal creature takes upon him to mention, in polite company, a religious truth, or a text of ſcripture; the pretty chat, though ever ſo profuſely flowing, ſtagnates in an inſtant. Each voluble and facetious tongue ſeems to be ſtruck with a ſudden palſy. Every one wonders at the ſtrange man's face; and they all conclude him either mad or a Methodiſt.

Aſp. Agreeable ſtrokes of wit are by no means incompatible with uſeful converſation; unleſs we miſtake an inſipid vivacity or fantaſtic levity, for wit and facetiouſneſs.——Neither have I heard, that, among all our acts of parliament, any one has paſſed to divorce good-ſenſe and good-humour. Why may they not both reſide on the ſame lips, and both circulate through the ſame aſſembly?—For my own part, I would neither have our diſcourſe ſoured with auſterity, nor evaporate into impertinence; but unite (as a judicious ancient adviſes) the benefits of improvement, with the blandiſhments of pleaſantry *.——And as to your polite people: if they can find no more muſic in the magpye's voice, than in the nightingale's note; I muſt own myſelf as much ſurpriſed at their ears, as they are at the ſtrange man's face.

Ther. With all your grey-headed authorities, I fancy you will find very few proſelytes among the profeſſors of modern refinement. Faſhion is, with the world, the ſtandard of morals, as well as of cloaths; and he muſt be of a very peculiar turn indeed, who would chuſe to be ridiculous in either.

Aſp. Rather, Theron, he muſt be of a very pliant turn, who tamely delivers up his conduct to be moulded by a faſhion, which has neither true elegance to dignify it, nor the leaſt uſefulneſs to recommend it.

And which, I beſeech you, is moſt ridiculous?—He who ſervilely imitates every idle faſhion, and is the very ape of corrupt cuſtom?—Or he who aſſerts his native liberty, and reſolutely follows where wiſdom and truth lead the way?

Ther. Would you then obtrude religious diſcourſe upon every company? Conſider, Aſpaſio, what a motley figure this would make.—A wedding, and a ſermon!—quadrille, and St Paul!—the laſt new play, and primitive Chriſtianity!

Aſp. You know the rule, Theron, which is given by the great MASTER of our aſſemblies; Caſt not your pearls before ſwine †. Some there are ſo immerſed in ſenſuality, that they can reliſh nothing, but the coarſeſt huſks of converſation. To theſe, neither offer your pearls, nor proſtitute your intimacy.

But, when perſons of a liberal education, and elevated ſentiments,—when theſe meet together, why ſhould not their diſcourſe be ſuitable to the eminence of their rank, and the ſuperiority of their genius; raiſed far above the level of that trite and effeminate ſtrain,—"Upon my "honour, the actreſs topt her part. Heavens! how "charmingly ſhe ſung! how gracefully ſhe trod the "ſtage!"

Ther. Indeed, my Aſpaſio, I am entirely in your way of thinking; however I have hitherto put on the maſk.——The gift of ſpeech is one great prerogative of our rational nature. And 'tis pity that ſuch a ſuperi-

* Vid. Socratis Memorabilia, per Xenoph.

† See Cicero's dialogue de amicitia; in which we are informed, that it was a cuſtomary practice with Scipio, with his polite friend Lelius, and ſome of the moſt diſtinguiſhed nobility of Rome, to diſcourſe upon the intereſts of the republic, and the immortality of the ſoul.

‡ Vid. Tuſcul. Queſt.

‖ Such were the interviews, of which he ſpeaks with a kind of rapture,

O noctes, cœnæque deum!

* Cum quadam illecebra ac voluptate utiles. AUL. GEL.

† Matth. vii. 6.

or

er faculty ſhould be debaſed to the meaneſt purpoſes.—Suppoſe all our ſtately veſſels, that paſs and repaſs the ocean, were to carry out nothing but tinſel, and theatrical decorations; were to import nothing but glittering baubles, and nicely-fancied toys: would ſuch a method of trading be well-judged in itſelf, or beneficial in its conſequences?—Articulate ſpeech is the inſtrument of a much nobler commerce, intended to tranſmit and diffuſe the treaſures of the mind. And will not the practice be altogether as injudicious, muſt not the iſſue be infinitely more dertrimental, if this vehicle of intellectual wealth is freighted only with pleaſing fopperies?

Aſp. Such folly and extravagance would be hiſſed out of the commercial world. Why then are they admitted and cheriſhed in the ſocial?

Ther. Why indeed? He muſt be far more acute than your Theron, who can aſſign a ſingle reaſon to countenance them. To explode them, ten thouſand arguments occur.—A continual round of gay and trifling converſation *, of viſits quite modiſh, and entertainments not moral, muſt give an indolent turn to the mind; ſuch as will enervate its powers, indiſpoſe it for generous action, and gradually ſap the very foundation of virtue.—Whereas, a frequent conference on the glories of the GODHEAD, or the wonders of creation, would invigorate and ennoble the ſoul; would enlarge her faculties, and elevate her deſires.

Aſp. Did not our hearts burn within us, ſaid the travellers at Emmaus, while HE talked with us by the way †? Thoſe diſcourſes, 'tis true, were conducted with a ſpirit, and enforced with an energy, abſolutely unequalled; yet the ſame happy effects would, in ſome degree, reſult from our friendly conferences, if they turned upon the ſame important points. We alſo ſhould feel our hearts warmed with holy zeal, and glowing with heavenly love.

Ther. Such conferences would not only be productive of preſent advantage, but yield a renewed pleaſure in the retroſpect, We might reflect, with real complacency, on hours ſpent in ſo rational a manner. And who would not prefer the ſilent applauſe of the heart, to all thoſe tumultuous joys, which wanton jeſts create, or the circling glaſs inſpires?

Aſp. One ‡ who thoroughly knew mankind, and had tried the merits of the jovial board, very pertinently compares ſuch flaſhes of mirth to the crackling of thorns under a pot ‖. The tranſient blaze of the one, and the ſenſeleſs noiſe of the other, continue but for a moment; and then expire, that in ſmoke and darkneſs, this in ſpleen and melancholy.

I ſaid, ſpleen and melancholy.—For however jauntee and alert the various methods of modiſh trifling may ſeem; whatever eaſe and grace they are ſuppoſed to give the converſation; ſure am I, it will be afflicted, to look back upon interviews ſquandered away in very vanity; and ſhocking, to look forward upon the account which we muſt all ſhortly render.—What figure will ſuch an article make in the final reckoning, and at the deciſive bar! "Our ſocial hours, which might have promoted "our mutual edification, and been ſubſervient to our "CREATOR's glory, all loſt in merriment and whim; "or worſe than loſt, in flattery and detraction. A blank, "or a blot."

Ther. Venus, we find, has her zealous knight-errants, and Bacchus his profeſſed votaries, in almoſt every company. And is it not truly deplorable, that the GOD of nature alone has none to aſſert his honour, none to celebrate his perfections? though HE is the original of all beauty, and parent of all good.

When I have taken my morning-walk amidſt dews and flowers: with the ſun ſhedding luſtre round him, and unveiling the happy landſcape; how has my eye been charmed with the lovely proſpect! how has my ear been raviſhed with the muſic of the grove! Methought every note was a tribute of harmony; and all nature ſeemed one grand chorus, ſwelling with the CREATOR's praiſe.—But how has the ſcene been reverſed, when, leaving my rural elyſium, I entered the haunts of men! where I ſaw faculties divine, meanly engaging in trifles; where I heard the tongue, prompt to utter, and fluent to expreſs, every thing but its MAKER's glory.

I aſſure you, I have often been chagrined on this occaſion; and ſometimes ſaid within myſelf,—"What! "ſhall trifles be regarded, and the MAJESTY of heaven neglected? Shall every friend, and every viſitant, "receive his ſhare of reſpect? and no acknowledgment "be paid to that exalted BEING, who is worthy, more "than worthy, of all our veneration?"

Aſp. This will be ſtill more afflictive to an ingenuous mind, if we conſider, that the infinite and glorious GOD is preſent at all our interviews; vouchſafes to expreſs his ſatisfaction, and acknowledges himſelf magnified, when with admiration and love, we talk of his tranſcendent excellencies.—Nay, we are aſſured, that the LORD of all lords not only hearkens, but keeps a book of remembrance; and will diſtinguiſh ſuch perſons, at the day of univerſal retribution. When the looſe train of licentious talkers are driven away as the deſpicable chaff; theſe ſhall be ſelected for his peculiar treaſure, and numbered among the jewels of JEHOVAH *.

Ther. If the gentlemen who make high pretenſions to reaſon, think themſelves diſcharged from theſe doctrines of revelation, they ſhould not forget their own ſcriptures.—A philoſopher will tell them the duty of employing their time, as in the awful preſence, and under the immediate inſpection, of the SUPREME BEING †.—An orator will ſhew them the egregious impropriety of waſting their friendly interviews, in the fumes of drollery, or the froth of impertinence ‡.

Aſp. Who then, that is wiſe, would not habituate himſelf to a practice, which comes recommended by the voice of reaſon, and is enforced by the authority of GOD?—A practice, which will adminiſter preſent good,—will afford pleaſing reviews,—and terminate in everlaſting honour?

Ther. 'Tis ſtrange, that ſubjects which deſerve to be received as the univerſal topic, are almoſt univerſally baniſhed from our diſcourſe.——Was this cabinet enriched with a ſeries of antique medals, or a collection of the fineſt gems; my friends would naturally expect to be entertained with a ſight of thoſe rarities, and an explanation of their meaning. Why ſhould we not as naturally expect, and as conſtantly agree, to entertain each other with remarks on thoſe admirable curioſities, which are depoſited in the boundleſs muſæum ‖ of the univerſe?

When a general has won ſome important victory, or an admiral has deſtroyed the enemy's fleet; every com-

* The ſignificancy and importance of ſuch converſation was ſmartly repreſented by the philoſopher; who, being aſked, how he left the company employed? made anſwer; Some in milking the cow, others in holding the pail.

† Luke xxvi. 32. ‡ King Solomon. ‖ Eccl. vii. 6.

* Mal. iii. 16. 17. This is a paſſage much to be obſerved. A moſt emphatical recommendation of religious diſcourſe! perhaps the moſt emphatical that ever was uſed, and the moſt endearing that can poſſibly be conceived.

† Sic certe vivendum eſt, tanquam in conſpectu vivamus: ſic cogitandum, tanquam aliquis in pectus intimum inſpicere poſſit: et poteſt. Quid enim proſit ab homine aliquid eſſe ſecretum? Nihil Deo clauſum eſt. Intereſt animis noſtris, et cogitationibus mediis intervenit. SENEC. epiſt. 83.

‡ Cicero ſays, with an air of graceful indignation; Quaſi vero clarorum virorum aut tacitos congreſſus eſſe oportent, aut ludicros ſermones, aut rerum colloquia leviorum. Academ. Quæſt. lib. IV.

‖ Muſæum—alluding to a remarkable edifice in the city of Oxford, diſtinguiſhed by this name; and appropriated to the reception of curioſities, both natural and artificial; and to the Britiſh Muſæum in London.

company resounds with their achievements; every tongue is the trumpet of their fame. And why should we not celebrate, with equal delight and ardor, that ALMIGHTY hand, which formed the structure, and furnished the regions, of this stupendous system?

Asp. Especially, if to his immensely-glorious, we add his supremely-amiable perfections.—When the victorious commander is our most cordial friend; when he has professed the tenderest love, done us the most signal good, and promised us a perpetual enjoyment of his favours; it will be impossible to neglect such an illustrious and generous person. His name must be engraven upon our hearts; must slide insensibly into our tongues; and be as music to our ears.

Is not all this true, and in the most super-eminent degree, with regard to the blessed GOD!—Can greater kindness be exercised, or greater love be conceived, than to deliver up his own Son to torments and death, for the expiation of our sins?—Can benefits more desirable be granted than to adopt us for his children, and sanctify us by his SPIRIT?—Can promises more invaluable be made, than those which insure to us the preferments of heaven, and the riches of eternity?

All this is attested, concerning the almighty MAJESTY, in the scriptures of truth. What a fund, therefore, for pleasing and delicate conversation, are the scriptures?

Ther. Here also I have the pleasure of concurring with my Aspasio: though I believe he suspects me to be somewhat wavering or defective in my veneration for the scriptures.

Asp. No, Theron; I have a better opinion of your taste and discernment, than to harbour any such suspicion.

Ther. The scriptures are certainly an inexhaustible fund of materials for the most delightful and ennobling discourse. When we consider the author of those sacred books,—that they came originally from heaven,—were dictated by divine wisdom,—have the same consummate excellence as the works of creation;—it is really surprising, that we are not always searching, by study, by meditation, or converse, into one or other of those grand volumes.

Asp. When Secker preaches, or Murray pleads, the church is crouded, and the bar thronged. When Spence produces the refinements of criticism, or Young displays the graces of poetry; the press toils, yet is scarce able to supply the demands of the public.——Are we eager to hear, and impatient to purchase, what proceeds from such eloquent tongues, and masterly pens? And can we be coldly indifferent, when—not the most accomplished of mankind,—not the most exalted of creatures,—but the adorable AUTHOR of all wisdom, speaks in his revealed word? Strange! that our attention does not hang * upon the venerable accents, and our talk dwell upon the incomparable truths!

Ther. I admire, I must confess, the very language of the Bible. In this, methinks, I discern a conformity between the book of nature and the book of scripture.

In the book of nature, the divine TEACHER speaks, not barely to our ears, but to all our senses. And it is very remarkable, how he varies his address!——Observe his grand and august works. In these he uses the style of majesty. We may call it the true sublime. It strikes with awe, and transports the mind.—View his ordinary operations. Here he descends to a plainer dialect. This may be termed the familiar style. We comprehend it with ease, and attend to it with pleasure.—In the more ornamented parts of the creation, he clothes his meaning with elegance. All is rich and brilliant. We are delighted; we are charmed. And what is this, but the florid style?

A variety, somewhat similar, runs through the scriptures.—Would you see history in all her simplicity, and all her force; most beautifully easy, yet irresistibly striking?—See her, or rather feel her energy, touching the nicest movements of the soul, and triumphing over our passions, in the inimitable narrative of Joseph's life.—The representation of Esau's bitter distress †; the conversation-pieces of Jonathan, and his gallant friend ‡; the memorable journal of the disciples going to Emmaus ‡; are finished models of the impassioned and affecting.—Here is nothing studied; no flights of fancy; no embellishments of oratory. Yet how inferior is the episode of Nisus and Euryalus, though worked up by the most masterly hand in the world, to the undissembled artless fervency of these scriptural sketches ‖!

Are we pleased with the elevation and dignity of an heroic poem, or the tenderness and perplexity of a dramatic performance? In the book of Job, they are both united, and both unequalled.—Conformably to the exactest rules of art, as the action advances, the incidents are more alarming, and the images more magnificent. The language glows, and the pathos swells; till, at last, the DEITY himself makes his entrance. He speaks from the whirlwind, and summons the creation: summons heaven, and all its shining host; the elements, and their most wonderful productions; to vouch for the wisdom of his providential dispensations.—His word strikes terror, and flashes conviction; decides the momentous controversy, and closes the august drama, with all possible solemnity and grandeur.

If we sometimes chuse a plaintive strain; such as softens the mind, and soothes an agreeable melancholy; are any of the ancient tragedies superior, in the eloquence of mourning, to David's pathetic elegy on his beloved Jonathan §; to his most passionate and inconsolable moan ¶ over the lovely but unhappy Absalom; or to that melodious woe, which warbles and bleeds, in every line of Jeremiah's Lamentations?

Would we be entertained with the daring sublimity of Homer, or the correct majesty of Virgil? with the expressive delicacy of Horace, or the rapid excursions of Pindar? Behold them joined, behold them excelled, in the odes of Moses, and the eucharistic hymn of De-

* St Luke, in his evangelical history, uses this beautiful image, ἐκρεμαστο. The people hung upon the lips of their all-wise TEACHER. Luke xix. 48. Which implies two very strong ideas;—an attention that nothing could interrupt,—and an eagerness scarce ever to be satisfied.

——Pendetque loquentis ab ore. VIRG.

† Gen. xxvii. 30. &c. ‡ 1 Sam. xviii. 19. 20.

‡ Luke xxiv. 13. &c.

‖ Let a person of true taste peruse, in a critical view, the two first chapters of St Luke. He will there find a series of the most surprising incidents, related with the greatest simplicity, yet with the utmost majesty. All which, extremely affecting in themselves, are heightened and illuminated, by a judicious intermixture of the sublimest pieces of poetry. For my own part, I know not how to characterize them more properly than by Solomon's elegant comparison:—They are as gold rings set with the beryl, or as bright ivory overlaid with sapphires. Cant. v. 14.

§ 2 Sam. i. 19. &c.

¶ 2 Sam. xviii. 33. The king was vehemently affected (נרגז) and went up to the chamber, and wept: and as he went, he said, O my son Absalom! my son, my son Absalom! Would to GOD I had died for thee! O Absalom, my son, my son!—Such a picture, and so much pathos; so artless both, and both so exquisite; I must acknowledge, I never met with, among all the representations of dignity in distress.—The king's troops had gained a signal victory. His crown and his life were rescued from the most imminent danger. Yet all the honours and all the joys of this successful day, were swallowed up and lost in the news of Absalom's death.—The news of Absalom's death struck, like a dagger, the afflicted father. He starts from his seat. He hastens into retirement, there to pour out his soul in copious lamentation. But his anguish is too impetuous to bear a moment's restraint. He bursts immediately into a flood of tears; and cries, as he goes, O Absalom, &c.

What says Mezentius, when his son is slain? when, to sharpen his sorrow, the pale corpse, the miserable spectacle, is before his eyes, and within his arms! The most pathetic word he utters, is,

——Heu! nunc misero mihi demum
Exilium infelix, nunc alte vulnus adactum.

How languid is Virgil! how inexpressive the pince of Latin poetry! compared with the royal mourner in Israel! Most evident, from this and many other instances, is the superiority of the scriptures, in copying nature, and painting the passions.

borah; in the exalted devotion of the pſalms, and the glorious euthuſiaſm of the prophets.

Aſp. Only with this difference, that the former are tuneful trifiers *, and amuſe the fancy with empty fiction; the latter are teachers ſent from GOD, and make the ſoul wiſe unto ſalvation.—The Bible is not only the brighteſt ornament, but the moſt invaluable depoſitum. On a right, a practical knowledge of theſe lively oracles, depends the preſent comfort, and the endleſs felicity of mankind. Whatever, therefore, in ſtudy or converſation, has no connection with their divine contents, may be reckoned among the toys of literature, or the cyphers of diſcourſe.

Ther. Here again the book of ſcripture is ſomewhat like the magazine of nature. What can we deſire for our accommodation and delight, which this ſtore-houſe of conveniencies does not afford? What can we wiſh for our edification and improvement, which that fund of knowledge does not ſupply? Of theſe we may truly affirm, each, in its reſpective kind, is profitable unto all things.

Are we admirers of antiquity?—Here we are led back, beyond the univerſal deluge, and far beyond the date of any other annals.—We are introduced among the earlieſt inhabitants of the earth. We take a view of mankind in their undiſguiſed primitive plainneſs, when the days of their life were but little ſhort of a thouſand years.—We are brought acquainted with the original of nations; with the creation of the world; and with the birth of time itſelf.

Are we delighted with vaſt achievements?—Where is any thing comparable to the miracles in Egypt, and the wonders in the field of Zoan? to the memoirs of the Iſraelites, paſſing through the depths of the ſea, ſojourning amidſt the unhoſpitable deſerts, and conquering the kingdoms of Canaan?—Where ſhall we meet with inſtances of martial bravery, equal to the prodigious exploits of the judges; or the adventurous deeds of Jeſſe's valiant ſon, and his matchleſs band of worthies †?—Here we behold the fundamental laws of the univerſe, ſometimes ſuſpended, ſometimes reverſed; and not only the current of Jordan, but the courſe of nature controlled. In ſhort, when we enter the field of ſcripture, we tread —on enchanted, ſhall I ſay? rather—on conſecrated ground; where aſtoniſhment and awe are awakened at every turn; where is all, more than all, the marvellous of romance ‡, connected with all the preciſion and ſanctity of truth.

If we want maxims of wiſdom, or have a taſte for the laconic ſtyle; how copiouſly may our wants be ſupplied, and how delicately our taſte gratified! eſpecially, in the book of Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, and ſome of the minor prophets.——Here are the moſt ſage leſſons of inſtruction, adapted to every circumſtance of life, formed upon the experience of all preceding ages, and perfected by the unerring SPIRIT of inſpiration.—Theſe delivered with ſuch remarkable conciſeneſs, that one might venture to ſay, every word is a ſentence ‖. At leaſt, every ſentence may be called an apophthegm, ſparkling with brightneſs of thought, or weighty with ſolidity of ſenſe. The whole, like a profuſion of pearls,—each containing, in a very ſmall compaſs, a value almoſt immenſe,—all heaped up (as an ingenious critic ſpeaks) with a confuſed magnificence, above the little niceties of order.

If we look for the ſtrength of reaſoning, and the warmth of exhortation; the inſinuating arts of genteel addreſs, or the manly boldneſs of impartial reproof; all the thunder of the orator, without any of his oſtentation; all the politeneſs of the courtier, without any of his flattery:—let us have recourſe to the acts of the apoſtles, and to the epiſtles of St Paul *. Theſe are a ſpecimen, or rather theſe are the ſtandard, of them all.

I do not wonder, therefore, that a taſte ſo refined, and a judgment ſo correct as Milton's, ſhould diſcern higher attractives in the volume of inſpiration, than in the moſt celebrated authors of Greece and Rome.

——Yet not the more
Ceaſe I to wander, where the muſes haunt,
Clear ſpring, or ſhady grove, or ſunny hill,
Smit with the love of ſacred ſong: but CHIEF Thee, Sion, and the flowery banks beneath,
That waſh thy hallow'd feet, and warbling flow,
Nightly I viſit †.

Aſp. Another recommendation of the ſcriptures, is, That they afford the moſt awful and moſt amiable manifeſtations of the GODHEAD. His glory ſhines, and his goodneſs ſmiles, in thoſe divine pages, with unparallelled luſtre.——Here we have a ſatisfactory explanation of our own ſtate. The origin of evil is traced; the cauſe of all our miſery diſcovered; and the remedy, the infallible remedy, both clearly ſhewn, and freely offered.—The merits of the bleeding JESUS lay a firm foundation for all our hopes; while gratitude for his dying love ſuggeſts the moſt winning incitements to every duty.—Morality, Theron, your (and let me add, my) admired morality, is delineated in all its branches, is placed upon its proper baſis, and raiſed to its higheſt elevation.—The SPIRIT of GOD is promiſed to enlighten the darkneſs of our underſtandings, and ſtrengthen the imbecillity of our wills. What an ample—Can you indulge me, on this favourite topic?

Ther. It is, I aſſure you, equally pleaſing to myſelf. Your enlargements, therefore, need no apology.

Aſp. What ample proviſion is made, by theſe bleſſed books, for all our ſpiritual wants! And, in this reſpect, how indiſputable is their ſuperiority to all other compoſitions!

Is any one convinced of guilt, as provoking heaven, and ruining the ſoul?—Let him aſk Reaſon to point out a means of reconciliation, and a refuge of ſafety. Reaſon heſitates, as ſhe replies; "The DEITY may, perhaps, accept our ſupplications, and grant forgiveneſs."—But the ſcriptures leaves us not to the ſad uncertainty of conjecture. They ſpeak the language of clear aſſurance. GOD has ſet forth a propitiation ‡: He does forgive our iniquities ‖: He will remember our ſins no more §.

Are we aſſaulted by temptation, or averſe to duty?—Philoſophy may attempt to parry the thruſt, or to ſtir up the reluctant mind, by diſcloſing the deformity of vice, and urging the fitneſs of things. Feeble expedients! Juſt as well calculated to accompliſh the ends propoſed, as the flimſy fortification of a cobweb to defend us from the ball of a cannon; or, as the gentle vibrations of a lady's fan to make a wind-bound navy ſail.——The Bible recommends no ſuch incompetent ſuccours. My grace, ſays its almighty AUTHOR,

* Ludit amabiliter.

† See 2 Sam. xxiii. 8. &c. 1 Chron. xi. 10. &c.

‡ ——Heroum fabula veris
Kincitur hiſtoriis.

‖ What Cicero ſaid of Thucydides, is more eminently true concerning our royal moraliſt, and his rich collection of ethics; concerning our evangelical hiſtorians, and their copious variety of facts. Eum adeo eſſe rebus plenum refertumque, ut prope verborum numerum numero rerum æquet.

* Another very remarkable inſtance of propriety in St Paul's writings, is, that though diffuſe in the doctrinal, they are conciſe in the preceptive parts. On the former, it was abſolutely neceſſary to enlarge. On the latter, it is always judicious to be ſhort. The celebrated rule of Horace,

Quicquid præcipies, eſto brevis, was never more exactly obſerved, nor more finely exemplified, than by our apoſtolic author. See that noble ſtring of precepts, 1 Theſſ. v. 16. 17. &c.—See another choice collection of the ſame kind, Rom. xii. 9. 10. &c. In which the energy of the diction is no leſs admirable, than the conciſeneſs of the ſentence.—Αποστυγουντες—κολλωμενοι—φιλοστοργοι—ζεοντες—προσκαρτερουντες—διωκοντες—&c. ſome of the moſt vigorous words that language can furniſh, and form the moſt animated meaning that imagination can conceive.

† That is, "He ſtill was pleaſed to ſtudy the beauties of the "ancient poets; but his higheſt delight was in the ſongs of Sion, in "the holy ſcriptures, and on theſe he meditated day and night." See Dr Newton's edit.

‡ Rom. iii. 25. ‖ Pſal. ciii. 3. §. Heb. viii. 12.

it

is ſufficient for thee *.—Sin ſhall not have dominion over you †.—The great JEHOVAH, in whom is everlaſting ſtrength, he worketh in us both to will, and to do, of his good pleaſure ‡.

Should we be viſited with ſickneſs, or overtaken by any calamity, the conſolation which Plato offers, is, That ſuch diſpenſations coincide with the univerſal plan of divine government. Virgil will tell us, for our relief, That afflictive viſitations are, more or leſs, the unavoidable lot of all men. Another moraliſt whiſpers in the dejected ſufferer's ear, "Impatience adds to the load; "whereas a calm ſubmiſſion renders it more ſupportable."——Does the word of revelation diſpenſe ſuch ſpiritleſs and fugitive cordials?—No: thoſe ſacred pages inform us, that tribulations are fatherly chaſtiſements; tokens of our MAKER's love, and fruits of his care: that they are intended to work in us the peaceable fruits of righteouſneſs, and to work out for us an eternal weight of glory ‖.

Should we, under the ſummons of death, have recourſe to the moſt celebrated comforters in the Heathen world; they would increaſe our apprehenſions, rather than mitigate our dread. Death is repreſented, by the great maſter of their ſchools, as "the moſt formidable of all "evils." They were not able poſitively to determine, whether the ſoul ſurvived; and never ſo much as dreamed of the reſurrection of the body.—Whereas, the book of GOD ſtrips the monſter of his horrors, or turns him into a meſſenger of peace; gives him an angel's face, and a deliverer's hand; aſcertaining to the ſouls of the righteous, an immediate tranſlation into the regions of bliſs; and enſuring to their bodies, a moſt advantageous revival, at the reſtoration of all things.

Inеſtimable book! It heals the maladies of life, and ſubdues the fear of death. It ſtrikes a lightſome viſta, through the gloom of the grave; and opens a charming, a glorious proſpect of immortality in the heavens.

Theſe, with many other excellencies peculiar to the ſcriptures, one would imagine more than ſufficient to engage every ſenſible heart in their favour, and introduce them, with the higheſt eſteem, into every improved converſation.——They had ſuch an effect upon the fineſt genius, and moſt accompliſhed § perſon, that former or latter ages can boaſt. Inſomuch, that he made, while living, this public declaration; and left it, when he died, upon everlaſting record;—How ſweet are thy words unto my taſte! yea, ſweeter than honey unto my mouth *.——O how love I thy law! it is my meditation all the day †.——Mine eyes prevent the night-watches, that I may be occupied in thy precepts; and I will ſpeak of thy teſtimonies even before kings ‡.——If David taſted ſo much ſweetneſs in a ſmall, and that the leaſt valuable, part of the divine word; how much richer is the feaſt to us? ſince the goſpel is added to the law, and the canon of ſcripture completed! ſince (to borrow the words of a prophet) the LORD GOD has ſealed up the ſum; has put the laſt hand to his work; and rendered it full of wiſdom, and perfect in beauty ‖.

* 2 Cor. xii. 9. † Rom. vi. 14. ‡ Phil. ii. 13.

‖ 2 Cor. iv. 17. What are all the conſolatory expedients preſcribed in all the volumes of Heathen morality, compared with this one recipe of revelation? They are, in point of chearing efficacy, ſomewhat like the froth on the conflux of a thouſand rapid ſtreams, compared with a ſingle draught of Homer's Nepenthe; which, he tells us, was

Temper'd with drugs of ſov'reign uſe, t'aſſuage
The boiling boſom of tumultuous rage:
To clear the cloudy front of wrinkled care,
And dry the tearful ſluices of deſpair.
Charm'd with that virtuous draught, th' exalted mind
All ſenſe of woe delivers to the wind. Odyſſ. IV.

§ If we conſider David, in the great variety of his fine qualifications;—the ornaments of his perſon, and the far more illuſtrious endowments of his mind:—the ſurpriſing revolutions in his fortune; ſometimes reduced to the loweſt ebb of adverſity; ſometimes riding upon the higheſt tide of proſperity;—his ſingular dexterity in extricating himſelf from difficulties, and peculiar felicity in accommodating himſelf to all circumſtances;—the prizes he won, as a youthful champion; and the victories he gained, as an experienced general;—his maſterly hand upon the harp, and his inimitable talent for poetry;—the admirable regulations of his royal government, and the incomparable uſefulneſs of his public writings;—the depth of his repentance, and the height of his devotion;—the vigour of his faith in the divine promiſes, and the ardour of his love to the divine MAJESTY:—If we conſider theſe, with ſeveral other marks of honour and grace, which ennoble the hiſtory of his life; we ſhall ſee ſuch an aſſemblage of ſhining qualities, as perhaps were never united in any other merely human character.

This obſervation was expunged. But, upon maturer thoughts, it is offered to the public; in order to convince a polite reader, that the love of the ſcriptures, and the exerciſe of devotion are by no means the low peculiarities of a vulgar mind.

Ther. Another very diſtinguiſhing peculiarity of the ſacred writings juſt occurs to my mind. The method of communicating advice, or adminiſtering reproof, by parables. A method which levels itſelf to the loweſt apprehenſion, without giving offence to the moſt ſupercilious temper; yet is as much ſuperior to plain unornamented precept, as the enlivened ſcenes of a well-wrought tragedy, are more impreſſive and affecting than a ſimple narration of the plot.

Our LORD was aſked by a ſtudent of the Jewiſh law, Who is my neighbour? which implied another queſtion, How is he to be loved?—The inquirer was conceited of himſelf; yet ignorant of the truth, and deficient in his duty. Had the wiſe INSTRUCTOR of mankind abruptly declared, You neither know the former, nor fulfil the latter; probably the queriſt would have reddened with indignation, and departed in a rage.——Therefore, to teach, and not diſguſt; to convince the man of his error, and not exaſperate his mind; the bleſſed JESUS frames a reply, as amiable in the manner, as it was pertinent to the purpoſe.

A certain perſon going down from Jeruſalem to Jericho, fell among thieves §. Not content to rob him of his treaſure, they ſtrip him of his garments; wound him with great barbarity; and leave him half dead.—Soon after this calamitous accident, a traveller happens to come along that very road. And what renders him more likely to adminiſter relief, he is one of the ſacred order: one who taught others the lovely leſſons of humanity and charity; and was, therefore, under the ſtrongeſt obligations to exemplify them in his own practice. He juſt glances an eye upon the deplorable object; ſees him ſtretched on the cold ground, and weltering in his blood: but takes no farther notice; nay, to avoid the trouble of an inquiry, paſſes by on the other ſide.——Scarce was he departed, when a Levite approaches. This man comes nearer, and looks on the miſerable ſpectacle; takes a leiſurely and attentive ſurvey ¶ of the caſe. And though every gaſh in the bleeding fleſh cried and pleaded for compaſſion; this miniſter of the ſanctuary neither ſpeaks a word to comfort, nor moves a hand to help.——Laſt comes a Samaritan †; one of the abhorred nation, whom the

* Pſal. cxix. 103. † ibid. cxix. 97. ‡ ibid. cxix. 46.
‖ Ezek. xxviii. 12. § Luke x. 30. &c.

¶ This ſeems to be the import of ελθων και ιδων. Luke x. 32. This diverſifies the idea, and heightens the deſcription, of Jewiſh inhumanity.

† If this was a parable, we cannot but admire the accuracy of our LORD, both in laying the ſcene, and ſelecting the circumſtances. —It is the maxim of a great critic, Ficta voluptatis cauſa ſint proxima veris.

And how very apparent is the air of probability in the ſacred apologue!—The way from Jeruſalem to Jericho, lying through a deſert, was much infeſted by thieves, and too commodious for their purpoſes of violence.—What could be more likely to happen, than the paſſage of a prieſt and Levite along that road? ſince Jericho was a city appropriated to the Levitical order, and contained no leſs than twelve thouſand attendants on the ſervice of the temple.

How judiciouſly is the principal figure circumſtanced!——Had the calamity befallen a Samaritan, it would have made but feeble impreſſions of pity; and thoſe, perhaps, immediately effaced by ſtronger emotions of hate. But, when it was a

Jew

Jew hated with the moſt implacable malignity. Though the Levite had neglected an expiring brother; though the prieſt had with-held his pity from one of the LORD's peculiar people; the very moment this Samaritan ſees the unhappy ſufferer, he melts into commiſeration. He forgets the embittered foe, and conſiders only the diſtreſſed fellow-creature. He ſprings from his horſe, and reſolves to intermit his journey. The oil and wine, intended for his own refreſhment, he freely converts into healing unguents. He binds up the wounds; ſets the diſabled ſtranger upon his own beaſt; and with all the aſſiduity of a ſervant, with all the tenderneſs of a brother, conducts him to an inn. There he depoſits money for his preſent uſe; charges the hoſt to omit nothing that might conduce to the recovery or comfort of his gueſt; and promiſes to defray the whole expence of his lodging, his maintenance, and his cure.

What a lively picture this of the moſt diſintereſted and active benevolence! A benevolence which excludes no perſons, not even ſtrangers or enemies, from its tender regards; which diſdains no condeſcenſion, grudges no coſt, in its labours of love. Could any method of conviction have been more forcible, and at the ſame time more pleaſing, than the interrogatory propoſed by our LORD, and deduced from the ſtory? Which now of theſe three, thinkeſt thou, was neighbour unto him that fell among the thieves? Or can there be an advice more ſuitable to the occaſion, more important in its nature, or expreſſed with a more ſententious energy, than, Go thou, and do likewiſe?—In this caſe, the learner inſtructs, the delinquent condemns, himſelf. Bigotry bears away its prejudice; and Pride (when the moral ſo ſweetly, ſo imperceptibly inſinuates) even pride itſelf lends a willing ear to admonition.

Aſp. It has been very juſtly remarked, That this eloquence of ſimilitudes is equally affecting to the wiſe, and intelligible to the ignorant. It ſhews *, rather than relates, the point to be illuſtrated. It has been admired by the beſt judges in all ages; but never was carried to its higheſt perfection, till our LORD ſpoke the parable of the prodigal †: Which has a beauty, that no paraphraſe can heighten; a perſpicuity, that renders all interpretation needleſs; and a force, which every reader, not totally inſenſible, muſt feel.

Ther. The condeſcenſion and goodneſs of GOD are every where conſpicuous.——In the productions of nature, he conveys to us the moſt valuable fruits, by the intervention of the loveliеſt bloſſoms. Though the preſent is in itſelf extremely acceptable, he has given it an additional endearment, by the beauties which array it, or the perfumes which ſurround it.——In the pages of revelation likewiſe, he has communicated to us the moſt glorious truths, adorned with all the graces of compoſition: ſuch as may poliſh the man of genius, and improve the man of worth; ſuch as highly delight our imagination, even while they cultivate and refine our morals.——So that they really are, as one of their divine authors very elegantly ſpeaks, like apples of gold in pictures of ſilver *.

Aſp. Who then would not gladly receive that gracious exhortation, Let the word of CHRIST dwell in you richly †? Who would not willingly obey that benign command, Thou ſhalt talk of it, when thou ſitteſt in thine houſe, and when thou walkeſt by the way; when thou lieſt down, and when thou riſeſt up ‡.

When I conſider the language of the ſcriptures, and ſometimes experience their energy on my ſoul, I am inclined to ſay,—"Other writings, though poliſhed with "the niceſt touches of art, only tinkle on the ear, or affect us like the ſhepherd's reed. But theſe, even "amidſt all their noble negligence, ſtrike—alarm—tranſport us—ſomewhat like the voice of thunder, or the "archangel's trumpet."

When I conſider the contents of the ſcriptures, and believe myſelf intereſted in the promiſes they make, and the privileges they confer, I am induced to cry out,—"What are all the other books in the world, compared "with theſe invaluable volumes? No more than an "entertaining novel, or a few prudential rules for domeſtic "œconomy, compared with a parent's will; a royal "charter; or an imperial grant of titles and manors."

All theſe circumſtances remind me of an encomium moſt deſervedly given to the BIBLE; which, though quite artleſs, is, I think, abundantly more expreſſive than the moſt elaborate efforts of rhetoric.—It came from the lips of a martyr; who, being condemned to die, for his inviolable adherence to the doctrines of ſcripture; when he arrived at the ſtake, and had compoſed himſelf for execution, took his final leave in theſe affecting words: "Farewell ſun and moon! farewell all the beauties of "creation, and comforts of life! farewell my honoured "friends! farewell my beloved relations! and farewell, "thou precious, precious book of GOD!"

Aſpaſio had ſcarce uttered the laſt ſentence, when a ſervant came to let them know, "Supper was upon the "table."—Very opportunely, ſaid Theron, has our repaſt waited till our conference is ended. We have ſhewed, what a large field of delightful ſpeculation the ſcriptures open; and what ample materials for the moſt refined diſcourſe ‖ they afford. As nothing can be more ungraceful, than to neglect in our own conduct, what we recommend to the practice of others; let us, this very night, begin to ennoble our interviews with theſe improving ſubjects. Let us endeavour to make religious converſation, which is in all reſpects deſirable, in ſome degree faſhionable.

---

* Diſcentem, ſays Seneca upon the ſubject, et audientem in rem præſentem adducunt. Epiſt. lix.

† Luke xv. 11, &c.

* Prov. xxv. 11.——Theron follows the received tranſlation. I ſhould prefer the expoſition of Glaſſius; who ſuppoſes משכיות to ſignify, Retiacula argentea, in quibus oculi ſunt minutiſſimi, penetrabiles tamen viſu. According to this interpretation, the paſſage will preſent us with apples of gold in net work, or lattice-work of ſilver; where the fine fruit receives a new charm, by ſhewing itſelf through the elegant apertures of the ſalver.

† Col. iii. 16. The word of CHRIST: ſo the apoſtle calls the whole inſpired writings, and thereby aſſerts the divinity of his Maſter.—Dwell; not make a ſhort ſtay, or an occaſional viſit; but take up a fixed and ſtated reſidence.—Richly; in the largeſt meaſure, and with the greateſt efficacy; ſo as to fill the memory, ſway the will, and actuate all the affections.

‡ Deut. vi. 7.

‖ Should the ſerious reader want any farther perſuaſives to this moſt beneficial practice, he may ſee—how particularly our divine MASTER obſerves the ſtrain of our converſation, Luke xxiv. 17—how ſtrictly he has commanded ſuch ſocial communications, as may tend to the uſe of edifying, Eph. iv. 29.—and what an evidence will ariſe from this article, either for our acquittal or condemnation, at the day of everlaſting judgment, Matth. xii. 36, 37.

DIALOGUE II.

THE next morning, when breakfaſt was over, Theron and Aſpaſio took a walk into the garden;—their ſpirits cheared, and their imaginations lively;—gratitude glowing in their hearts, and the whole creation ſmiling around them.

The ſpot adjoining to the houſe, was appropriated to the cultivation of flowers. In a variety of handſome compartments, were aſſembled the choiceſt beauties of blooming nature. Here the hyacinth hung her ſilken bells, or the lilies reared their ſilver pyramids. There ſtood the neat narciſſus, looſely * attired in a mantle of ſnowy luſtre; or the ſplendid ranunculus wore a full-trimmed ſuit of radiant ſcarlet. Pinks were riſing to enamel the borders; roſes were opened to dreſs the walls; ſurrounded, on all ſides, with a profuſion of beauteous forms, either latent in the ſtalk, or burſting the buds, or blown into full expanſion.

This was bounded by a ſlight partition; a ſort of verdant parapet. Through which they deſcend by an eaſy flight of ſteps, and are preſented with the elegant ſimplicity of the kitchen-garden. In one place, you might ſee the marigold flowering, or the beans in bloſſom. In another, the endive curled her leaves, or the lettuce thickened her tufts: cauliflowers ſheltered their fair complexion under a green umbrella: while the burrage diſhevelled † her locks, and braided them with blooming jewels, of a finer azure than the fineſt ſapphires.—On the ſunny ſlopes, the cucumber and melon lay baſking in the collected beams. On the raiſed beds, the artichoke ſeemed to be erecting a ſtandard, while the aſparagus ſhot ‡ into ranks of ſpears. The level ground produced all manner of cooling ſallads, and nouriſhing eſculents. Nothing was wanting to furniſh out the wholeſome luxury of an antediluvian banquet.

Soon, a high wall intervenes. Through which a wicket opens, and tranſmits them into the regular and equidiſtant rows of an orchard.——This plantation is ſo nicely adjuſted, that it looks like an arrangement of rural piazzas, or a collection of diverſified viſtas. The eye is, every where, entertained with the exacteſt uniformity; and darts, with unobſtructed eaſe, from one end of the branching files to the other.—On all the boughs lay a lovely evolution of bloſſoms, arrayed in milky white, or tinged with the ſofteſt red. Crouding into one general cluſter, without relinquiſhing any vacant ſpace for leaves, they formed the faireſt, the gayeſt, the grandeſt alcove, that fancy itſelf can imagine.——It is really like the court of the Graces. None can approach it, without finding his ideas brightened, and feeling his temper exhilarated.

Contiguous to this correct diſpoſition of things, nature had thrown a wilderneſs, hoary groteſque, and magnificently confuſed. It ſtretched itſelf with a large circular ſweep, to the north; and ſecured both the olitory and the orchard from incommoding winds.—Copſes of hazel, and flowering ſhrubs, filled the lower ſpaces; while poplars quivered aloft in air, and pines pierced the clouds with their leafy ſpears. Here grew clumps of fir, clad in everlaſting green: there ſtood groves of oak, that had weathered, for ages, the wintry ſtorm.—Amidſt this woody theatre, ran a winding walk; lined with elms of inſuperable height; whoſe branches, uniting at the top, reared a ſtately arch, and projected a ſolemn ſhade. It was impoſſible to enter this lofty labyrinth, without being ſtruck with a pleaſing dread. As they proceed, every inflection diffuſes a deeper gloom, and awakens a more penſive attention.

Having ſtrolled in this darkſome avenue, without a ſpeck of ſunſhine, without a glimpſe of the heavens; on a ſudden, they ſtep into open day.——Surpriſing! cries Aſpaſio. What a change is this! What delightful enchantment is here!—One inſtant, whelmed in Trophonius's cave *; where horror frowns, and darkneſs lours, and ſolitude reigns: tranſported, the next, into the romantic ſcenes of Arcadia; where all is populous, all is lightſome, and all is gay.—Quick as thought †, the arches of heaven expand their azure. Turrets and ſpires ſhoot into the ſkies. Towns, with their ſpacious edifices, ſpread themſelves to the admiring view. Thoſe lawns, green with freſheſt herbage; thoſe fields, rich with undulating corn; where were they all, a moment ago?—It brings to my mind that remarkable ſituation of the Jewiſh lawgiver; when, elevated on the ſummit of Piſgah, he ſurveyed the goodly land of promiſe;—ſurveyed the rivers, the floods, the brooks of honey and butter;—ſurveyed the mountains dropping with wine and the hills flowing with milk ‡;—ſurveyed all with thoſe eyes, which, for forty tedious years, had been confined to dry ſands, ragged rocks, and the irkſome waſtes of a deſolate howling wilderneſs.

HERE they ſeated themſelves on the firſt moſſy ‖ hillock, which offered its couch. The riſing ſun had viſited the ſpot, to dry up the dews, and exhale the damps, that might endanger health; to open the violets, and expand the primroſes, that decked the green. The whole ſhade of the wood was collected behind them: and a beautiful, extenſive, diverſified landſcape ſpread itſelf before them.

Theron, according to his uſual manner, made many improving remarks on the proſpect, and its furniture. He traced the footſteps of an all-comprehending contrivance, and pointed out the ſtrokes of inimitable ſkill. He obſerved the grand exertions of power, and the rich exuberance of goodneſs, moſt ſignally, moſt charmingly conſpicuous through the whole.——Upon one circumſtance he enlarged, with a particular ſatisfaction.

Ther. See! Aſpaſio, how all is calculated to adminiſter the higheſt delight to mankind.—Thoſe trees and hedges, which ſkirt the extremities of the landſcape; ſtealing away from their real bulk, and leſſening by gentle

* ——————Hiantem flore decoro Narciſſum.

† Referring to the looſe irregular manner of its foliation.

‡ Alluding, not only to the ſhape, but alſo to the growth of this plant; which is ſo unuſually quick, that it may almoſt be ſaid to ſtart, rather than to riſe out of the earth.

* The reader may find a curious account of this cave, together with a very humorous, and (which ſhould always accompany humour, or elſe it will be like a ſting without the honey) an improving deſcription of its effects; Spect. vol. VIII. No. 598. 599.

† Such a ſudden alteration of the proſpect, is beautifully deſcribed by Milton;

——————As when a ſcout,
Through dark and deſert ways, with peril gone
All night, at laſt, by break of chearful dawn,
Obtains the brow of ſome high-climbing hill,
Which to his eye diſcovers unaware
The goodly proſpect of ſome foreign land,
Firſt ſeen; or ſome renown'd metropolis,
With gliſtering ſpires and pinnacles adorn'd,
Which now the riſing ſun gilds with his beams. Book III.

‡ This is the language of the book of Job, and the prophecy of Joel. A language, like the ſcene it deſcribes, not beautiful only, but beautiful and rich even to luxuriancy, Job xx. 17. Joel iii. 18.—One would almoſt ſuſpect, the Lyric poet had read theſe paſſages, and attempted an imitation of their delicacies.

Vinique fontem, lactis et uberes
Cantare rivos, atque truncis
Lapſa cavis iterare mella. Lib. II. Od. xix.

‖ Horace would have called it, ceſpes fortuitus.

diminutions; appear like elegant picturer in miniature. Thoſe which occupy the nearer ſituations, are a ſet of noble images; ſwelling upon the eye, in full proportion, and in a variety of graceful attitudes. Both of them ornamenting the ſeveral apartments of our common abode, with a mixture of delicacy and grandeur.

The bloſſoms that array the branches, the flowers that embroider the mead, addreſs and entertain our eyes with every charm of beauty *. Whereas, to other creatures, they are deſtitute of all thoſe attractives, which reſult from a combination of the loveliest colours, and moſt alluring forms.—Yonder ſtreams, that glide, with ſmooth ſerenity, along the valleys; glittering to the diſtant view, like ſheets of poliſhed cryſtal; or ſoothing the attentive ear, with the ſoftneſs of aquatic murmurs; are no leſs exhilarating to the fancy, than to the ſoil through which they paſs.—The huge enormous mountain; the ſteep and dizzy precipice, the pendent horrors of the craggy promontory; wild and tremendous as they are, furniſh out an agreeable entertainment to the human mind; and pleaſe, even while they terrify. Whereas, the beaſts take no other notice of thoſe majeſtic deformities, than only to avoid the dangers they threaten.

Aſp. How wonderfully do ſuch conſiderations exalt our idea of the CREATOR's goodneſs; his very diſtinguiſhing goodneſs to mankind! And ſhould they not proportionably endear that eternal Benefactor to our affections?—His ever-bountiful hand has ſcattered bleſſings, and with profuſe liberality, among all the ranks of animated exiſtence. But to us he exerciſes a beneficence of a very ſuperior kind. We are treated as his peculiar favourites. We are admitted to ſcenes of delight, which none but ourſelves are capable of reliſhing.

Ther. Another remark, though very obvious, is equally important. The deſtination of all theſe external things is no leſs advantageous, than their formation is beautiful. The bloom, which engages the eye with its delicate hues, is cheriſhing the embryo fruit; and forming, within its ſilken folds, the rudiments of a future deſſert.—Thoſe ſtreams, which ſhine from afar, like fluid ſilver, are much more valuable in their productions, and beneficial in their ſervices, than they are amiable in their appearance. They diſtribute, as they roll along their winding banks, cleanlineſs to our houſes, and fruitfulneſs to our lands. They nouriſh, and at their own expence, a never-failing ſupply of the fineſt fiſh. They viſit our cities, and attend our wharfs, as ſo many public vehicles, ready to ſet out at all hours.

Thoſe ſheep, which give their udders to be drained by the buſy friſking lambs, are fattening their fleſh for our ſupport; and while they fill their own fleeces, are providing for our comfortable clothing. Yonder kine, ſome of which are browzing upon the tender herb; others, fatiated with paſturage, ruminate under the ſhady covert; though conſcious of no ſuch deſign, are concocting, for our uſe, one of the ſofteſt, pureſt, healthieſt liquors in the world.—The bees that fly humming about our ſeat, and purſue their work on the fragrant bloſſoms, are collecting balm and ſweetneſs, to compoſe the richeſt of ſyrups; which, though the produce of their toil, is intended for our good.

Nature, and her whole family, are our obſequious ſervants, our ever-active labourers. They bring the fruits of their united induſtry, and pour them into our lap, or depoſit them in our ſtore-rooms.

Aſp. Who can ever ſufficiently admire this immenſe benignity?—The ſupreme DISPOSER of events has commanded delight and profit to walk hand in hand, through his ample creation; making all things ſo perfectly pleaſing, as if beauty was their only end; yet all things ſo eminently ſerviceable *, as if uſefulneſs had been their ſole deſign.—And, as a moſt winning invitation to our gratitude, he has rendered man the centre, in which all the emanations of his beneficence, diffuſed through this terreſtrial ſyſtem, finally terminate.

But, my dear Theron, is not this apparent in a much more wonderful manner, throughout the whole œconomy of REDEMPTION?—It were a ſmall thing for this inferior claſs of unintelligent creatures, to be continually employing themſelves for our benefit. Even the SON of the moſt high GOD, through all his incarnate ſtate, acted the very ſame part.—He took fleſh, and bore the infirmities of human nature, not for himſelf, but for us men, and our ſalvation. He ſuffered want, and endured miſery in all its forms; that we might poſſeſs the fulneſs of joy, and abound in pleaſures for evermore.—When he poured out his ſoul in agonies, under the curſe of an avenging law; was it not with a compaſſionate view to make us partakers of eternal bleſſedneſs? When he fulfilled, perfectly fulfilled the whole commanding law; was it not for this gracious purpoſe, that his merits might be imputed to us? that we, by his obedience, might be made righteous? Yes;

——For us he liv'd,
Toil'd for our eaſe, and for our ſafety bled.

Nothing in the whole courſe——

Ther. Pardon me for interrupting you, Aſpaſio. I have no objection to the general drift of your diſcourſe. But that particular notion of imputed righteouſneſs has always appeared to me in a very ridiculous light. And I muſt ſay, that ſuch a Puritanical noſtrum makes a very unbecoming figure, amongſt your other manly and correct ſentiments of religion.

Aſp. You know, Theron, I have long ago diſavowed that ignoble prejudice, which rejects doctrines, or deſpiſes perſons, becauſe they happen to be branded with contemptible names. 'Tis true, the writers ſtyled Puritans, are remarkable for their attachment to this peculiarity of the goſpel. It runs through all their theological works; and very eminently diſtinguiſhes them, from the generality of our modern treatiſes.—But muſt it therefore be wrong, becauſe maintained by that particular ſet of people? Or, are they the only advocates for this important truth?

Ther. Aye: It is as I ſupected. I have lately conjectured, from ſeveral hints in my Aſpaſio's diſcourſe, that he has been warping to the low ungentleman-like peculiarities of thoſe whimſical fanatics.

Aſp. I cannot conceive, why you ſhould call them whimſical.——To ſettle faith on its proper baſis, the meritorious righteouſneſs of the REDEEMER; and to deduce obedience from its true origin, the love of GOD ſhed abroad in the heart;—to ſearch the conſcience, and convince the judgment;——to awaken the lethargic, and comfort the afflicted ſoul;—and all from a thorough knowledge, joined to a maſterly application, of the divine word;—theſe, ſure, are not whimſical talents, but real excellencies. Yet theſe, if we

* Therefore, when the prophet deſcribes the Chriſtian church, adorned with all the beauties of holineſs, he borrows his imagery from theſe amiable objects. Iſrael ſhall bud and bloſſom, Iſ. xxvii. 6.—Nay, the very wilderneſs, even the Gentile nations, being converted unto CHRIST, ſhall bloſſom as a roſe, Iſ. xxxv. 1.—I will be as the dew unto Iſrael: he ſhall bloſſom as the lily, and caſt forth his roots as Lebanon, Hoſ. xiv. 5. What an elegant picture! and what a comfortable promiſe! Here is the queen of flowers, and the prince of trees. Nothing fairer than the full-blown lily; nothing firmer than the deep-rooted cedars. Yet theſe are a repreſentation (and but a faint repreſentation) of the comelineſs, which the all-glorious REDEEMER puts upon his people; and of the ſtability which they derive from his inviolable faithfulneſs.

N. B. The fourteenth of Hoſea is one of thoſe chapters, which, for their peculiar importance and excellency, deſerve not only to have a turn in our reading, but a place in our memory.

* Omnes mundi partes ita conſtitutæ ſunt, ut neque ad uſum meliores eſſe poterint, neque ad ſpeciem pulchriores.

CIC. de Nat. Deor. lib. II.

may

may credit history, entered into the preaching; these, if we will examine impartially, are to be found in the writings of the Puritans.—And a pearl, you will please to remember, is a pearl still, though it should hang in the Ethiopian's ear.

Ther. Ethiopian indeed! You have truly characterized that demure and gloomy generation. I hope, you don't intend to introduce their affected solemnity and forbidden reserve, into your own easy and engaging conversation. Though, for aught I can judge, this would be no more ungraceful, than to patch such antiquated notions on the refined scheme of Christianity.

Asp. My dear friend, you are too ludicrous; and I begin to catch the infection. We had better return to our first topic. Let us contemplate the wonders of creation; and as we admire the works, learn to adore the MAKER.

Ther. None of your evasions, good Aspasio. You must not think to put me off at this rate. I have wanted an opportunity, to rally you upon this head; and to argue or laugh you out of these religious oddities.

Asp. If you will not agree to terms of peace, I hope you will allow some cessation of arms. At least, till I can muster my forces, and prepare for the vindication of my principles.

Ther. No: upon the spot, and out of hand, you are required to answer for yourself, and these same queer opinions.——I shall serve you as the Roman consul served the procrastinating monarch. When he demurred about his reply to the demands of the senate, and said, he would consider of the matter; the resolute ambassador drew a circle round him with his cane, and insisted upon a positive answer, before he stepped over those limits.

Asp. This, however, you will give me leave to observe, that the affair is of a very serious nature. Upon condition that you will dismiss your flourishes of wit, and strokes of satire, I will acquaint you with the reasons which have made me a thorough convert to this doctrine.—Once, I held it in the utmost contempt, and pitied the simplicity of (as I then styled them) its deluded admirers. But I am now become such a fool, that I may be truly wise, and substantially happy. I have seen my ruined state, and I bless GOD for this sovereign restorative. It is the source of my strongest consolations, and the very foundation of my eternal hopes.

Ther. Excuse me, Aspasio, if the vivacity of my temper, and the seemingly-uncouth tenet, kindled me into a more humorous gaiety, than became the occasion. You speak of the point with so much seriousness, and in such weighty terms, as check my levity, and command my respect. Be pleased to execute what you have promised; and the most engaged attention of my mind shall atone for the petulant sallies of my tongue.

Asp. To conceive a dislike of any doctrine, only because persons of a particular denomination have been very officious to promote its reception; this is hardly consistent with an impartial inquiry after truth.

Ther. I grant it, Aspasio. And I should be ashamed of my opposition, if it was founded on so slight a bottom. But, abstracted from all party-considerations, I can see nothing in this supposed article of our faith, that may recommend it to the unprejudiced inquirer.—— What can be more awkward than the term, or more irrational than the sentiment?

Asp. The word imputed, when used in this connection, may possibly convey a disagreeable sound to the ears of some people: because they look upon it as the peculiar phraseology of a few superstitious sectarists; and reject it, merely on the foot of that unreasonable surmise.——But how can you be disgusted at the expression, Theron, who have so often read it in the most approved and judicious writers; St Paul, who might affirm with relation to his epistles, much more truly than the painter concerning his portraits, I write for eternity *; scruples not to use this awkward language, several times in the same chapter †. Milton, the correctness of whose taste, and the propriety of whose style, no person of genius will ever question, delights to copy, in various parts of his incomparable poem, the apostle's diction.—— Authorized by such precedents, it is superior to cavil, and warranted beyond all exception.

As to the sentiment, I take it to be the very fundamental article of the gospel: and I believe, whoever is acquainted with ecclesiastical history, will allow, that it bore the principal sway, in extricating us from Popish darkness, and introducing the reformation.—What says our LORD, with regard to the love of GOD, and the love of our neighbour? On these two commandments hang all the law and the prophets. Much the same would I venture to say concerning the imputation of our sins to CHRIST, and the imputation of CHRIST's righteousness to us: On these two doctrines hang all the privileges and the whole glory of the gospel.

Ther. In our last conversation, I must own, I saw a strong resemblance between the works and the word of GOD. But I never observed any thing in nature, that bore the least analogy to imputed sin, or imputed righteousness.——To me your two doctrines seem very unaccountable and irrational.

Asp. That our sins should be charged upon the only begotten SON of GOD, and that his righteousness should be made over to sinful worms, is strange, exceeding strange. The psalmist calls it, marvellous loving-kindness ‡. The apostle styles it love that passeth knowledge ‖. And it has sometimes, I must freely confess, been almost ready to stagger my belief.—However, I have found myself relieved in this perplexity, not only by the testimonies of scripture, but even from the contemplation of nature. All nature is full of strange and mysterious effects; consequently, is a voucher for the mysterious truths of Christianity.

How surprising are the experiments of electricity, and the occult qualities of the loadstone! How surprising those countless legions of effluvia, which transpire from a small odoriferous body! and those infinite myriads of luminous particles, which issue from a smaller flaming substance §! There's not a blade of grass, but surpasses the comprehension of all mankind; and not a single atom, but is big with wonders.—Insomuch, that the intelligent observer can no where fix his thoughts, without being astonished, transported, and even lost in admiration.

Since the procedure of Providence in this visible system, is a continued series of stupendous and unsearchable operations; need we be alarmed, can we reasonably be offended, if the scheme of redemption is equally stupendous, is far more amazing? Yet though amazing, I hope, it will not appear, what you was pleased to insinuate, irrational.

Suppose we state the signification of the terms,

* Alluding to the painter, who, apologizing for the slow procedure and scrupulously-nice touches of his pencil, said, Æternitati pingo, I paint for eternity. And those strokes had need be correct, which are intended to survive, so long as time itself shall last.

† See Rom. iv. in which single chapter, some branch of the word λογίζεσθαι, to be imputed, occurs no less than ten or eleven times.

‡ Psal. xvii. 7. ‖ Eph. iii. 19.

§ Dr Nieuwentyt has computed, that, from a lighted candle, about the size of six to the pound, there issues, in the second of a minute, an effusion of particles, vastly more than ten hundred thousand million times the number of sands, which the whole globe of the earth contains.—To call this a very great multitude, would be saying little. It nonplusses our thoughts, and exceeds the utmost stretch of imagination!

and

and adjuſt the boundaries of our ſubject, before we enter upon a ſurvey of its contents?

Ther. Such a caution would have prevented, at leaſt have ſhortened, many a vehement and tedious controverſy.—You ſee, on yonder heath, the preparations for an approaching race. There ſtand the poſts which are to mark out the limits of the courſe. Without this previous reſtrictive care, how irregular would be the excurſions of the contending ſteeds! How difficult, rather how impoſſible, to declare the conqueror, and award the prize!—A clear definition of terms ſeems equally neceſſary for candid diſputants. Without it, they may wrangle for ages, and never come to a determination.

Aſp. Juſtification is an act of GOD Almighty's grace; whereby he acquits his people from guilt, and accounts them righteous *, for the ſake of CHRIST's righteouſneſs, which was wrought out for them, and is imputed to them.

Ther. Two of your terms want ſome further explication. What do you underſtand by CHRIST's righteouſneſs? And what is the meaning of imputed?

Aſp. By CHRIST's righteouſneſs, I underſtand the whole of his active and paſſive obedience; ſpringing from the perfect holineſs of his heart; continued through the whole progreſs of his life; and extending to the very laſt pang of his death.—By the word imputed, I would dignify, that this righteouſneſs, though performed by our LORD, is placed to our account; is reckoned or adjudged by GOD as our own. Inſomuch, that we may plead it, and rely on it, for the pardon of our ſins; for adoption into his family; and for the enjoyment of life eternal.——Shall I illuſtrate my meaning by a well atteſted fact?

Ther. Nothing gives us ſo eaſy a conception of any difficult point, as this method of explaining, by parallel facts, or proper ſimilitudes.

Aſp. I don't ſay the caſe is parallel. I only produce it, to aid our conceptions.—Oneſimus, you know, was Philemon's ſlave †. He had perfidiouſly deſerted his maſter's ſervice, and ſtill more perfidiouſly ſtole his goods. The fugitive, in his guilty rambles, providentially meets with St Paul. He is charmed and captivated with that gracious goſpel, which proclaims mercy even for the vileſt of ſinners. He becomes a thorough convert to the religion of JESUS, and is received into the ſpiritual patronage of the apoſtle. Who, learning his diſhoneſt conduct, and obnoxious ſtate, undertakes to bring about a reconciliation with his offended maſter; diſpatches him, for this purpoſe, with a letter to Philemon; and, amongſt other perſuaſives, writes thus in the poor criminal's behalf; If he hath wronged thee, or oweth thee ought, put that on mine account. I Paul have written it with mine own hand; I will repay it.

That which the zealous preacher of Chriſtianity offered, the adored AUTHOR of Chriſtianity executed.—We had revolted from the LORD of all lords, and broke his holy commandments. The SON of GOD, infinitely compaſſionate, vouchſafes to become our Mediator. That nothing might be wanting to render his mediation ſucceſsful, he places himſelf in our ſtead.—The puniſhment, which we deſerved, He endures. The obedience, which we owed, He fulfils.—Both which, being imputed to us, and accepted for us, are the foundation of our pardon, are the procuring cauſe of our juſtification.

Ther. Is this the exact ſignification of the original word, which we tranſlate imputed?

Aſp. In the book of Numbers, we meet with this phraſe; and in ſuch a connection, as clears up its meaning. JEHOVAH enacts a decree concerning the Levites, who had no vintages to gather, nor any harveſts to reap. He directs them to preſent the tenth part of their tythes, in the form of a heave-offering; adding, And this your heave-offering ſhall be reckoned * unto you, as though it were the corn of the threſhing-floor, and as the fulneſs of the wine-preſs; as ſatisfactory to me, and as beneficial to you, as if it was the tenth of your own labours, and the tythe of your own increaſe.—So the expiatory ſufferings which CHRIST endured, the complete obedience which he performed, are reckoned to true believers. And are altogether as effectual for obtaining their ſalvation, as if they were their own perſonal qualifications.

Ther. The imputation mentioned in your paſſage, is the imputation of ſomething done by the Levites themſelves, not of ſomething done by another. This, I apprehend, is the true import of the word, when it occurs affirmatively in ſcripture.

Aſp. This is always the import,—ſhould have been ſaid, in order to make the objection forcible. But you could not ſo ſoon forget the inſtance juſt now alledged. St Paul, ſpeaking of the crimes which Oneſimus had committed, and of the injuries which Philemon had ſuſtained, ſays, "Charge them all on me †. I will be reſponſible "for the one and for the other, as much as if the whole "guilt had been of my own contracting."—Here is ſuppoſed, not the imputation of ſomething done by the apoſtle himſelf, but of another's criminal behaviour.

Under the law, Aaron is commanded to put the iniquities of Iſrael upon the ſcape-goat ‡.—The ſame ſentiment is re-inculcated, when the goat is ſaid to bear the iniquities of the people ‖. This was plainly an imputation; yet could not poſſibly be the imputation of any thing done by the devoted animal.—The effects which took place upon the execution of this ordinance, indicate a tranſlation of guilt. For the congregation was cleanſed, but the goat polluted. The congregation ſo cleanſed, that their iniquities were conveyed away, and to be found no more: the goat ſo polluted, that it communicated defilement to the perſon who conducted it into the land not inhabited.——All this was GOD's own appointment; and deſigned, like the whole ſyſtem of Moſaic ceremonies, to inſtruct his church in the knowledge of the great MEDIATOR; in whoſe perſon and office that was done really, which elſewhere could be accompliſhed no otherwiſe than typically.

Ther. If this is your meaning, Aſpaſio, I am apt to think, it will be a difficult matter to make me a proſelyte. I muſt be content to paſs for one of the ſtiff-necked generation; ſince I can ſee neither wiſdom nor equity, in aſcribing to a perſon what he has not, or imputing to him what he does not.

Aſp. It was not Aſpaſio, but his friend, who ſet out with a view of making proſelytes. If I can maintain

* Should any reader object to the definition, apprehending, that juſtification implies no more than the pardon of ſins; I would deſire him to ſuſpend his judgment, till he has peruſed Dialogue X. where this point is more circumſtantially conſidered.

† See the epiſtle to Philemon.

* Numb. xviii. 27. ΛΟΓΙΣΘΗ exactly anſwers to St Paul's ΕΛΟΓΙΣΘΗ, Rom. iv. 9.—The ſame phraſe is uſed, and the ſame doctrine taught, Lev. xvii. 3. 4. What man ſoever there be of the houſe of Iſrael that killeth an ox, or lamb, or goat, in the camp, or that killeth it out of the camp; and bringeth it not unto the door of the tabernacle of the congregation, to offer unto the LORD an offering before the tabernacle of the LORD, blood ſhall be imputed to that man; he hath ſhed blood; and that man ſhall be cut off from among his people.—Here was no murder committed by the offender, yet the crime of murder is charged, or, as the ſcripture ſpeaks, blood is imputed to him. Leſt any ſhould miſtake the meaning of this expreſſion, or not underſtand it in its due latitude, the divine LAWGIVER is his own interpreter; He hath in the eye of my juſtice ſhed blood: he ſhall paſs for a murderer, and be puniſhed as a murderer; he ſhall be cut off from among his people.——Thus alſo ſaith the eternal JUDGE concerning the believers in CHRIST; "The "righteouſneſs of my SON is imputed to them; they are in the eye "of my juſtice righteous; they ſhall be dealt with, as righteous "perſons; and made partakers of the kingdom of heaven."

† Εμοι ελλογει. ‡ Lev. xv. 21. ‖ Lev. xvii. 22.

my

my ground, and vindicate my own belief, it will be no inconsiderable acquisition.—However, I shall not despair of seeing the partner of my heart become a sharer of my faith. When we are convinced of our numberless sins; when we feel the depravity of our nature, and begin to discern the inconceivable sanctity of our JUDGE; THEN, perhaps, this exploded article may be found worthy of acceptance;—its constitution admired, as the wisdom of GOD; and its privilege coveted, as the consolation of our souls.

Ther. I shall wave, at present, an examination of each particular; and only make some remote observations, which seem, nevertheless, pretty nearly to affect your scheme.—Some persons, I dare be positive, have not so much as heard of your terms; many persons have no manner of acquaintance with your doctrine. Will you strike off all these from the list of Christians? Will you condemn all these as desperate infidels?

Asp. Not heard of them!—in a Protestant nation!—where the gospel is publicly preached, and the Bible in every one's hand!—This, if true, is much to be lamented.

In answer to your question;—it is not my custom, much less is it my prerogative, to condemn others. Has GOD committed all judgment unto me, that I should presume to anticipate the decisive sentence, or launch the thunderbolts of eternal vengeance?—Neither do I affirm the condition of such persons to be desperate. There may be those, who have no explicit knowledge of the doctrine, who are even prejudiced against the expressions; yet live under the belief of the truth, and in the exercise of the duty.—"They are never diverted, by the "splendor of any thing that is great, or by the conceit "of any thing that is good in them, from looking upon "themselves as sinful dust and ashes." Their whole dependence is upon that JUST ONE, who expired on the cross, and whom the heavens have received.——They seek the sanctifying SPIRIT, in consequence of their SAVIOUR's death, and give all diligence to add to their faith, virtue *.

Ther. If people may be safe, and their eternal interests secure, without any knowledge of these particularities; why should you offer to puzzle their heads, about a few unnecessary scholastic terms?

Asp. Scriptural terms, you should have said, Theron.—However, we are not very solicitous, as to the credit, or the use, of any particular set of phrases. Only let men be humbled, a repenting criminals, at the REDEEMER's feet, let them rely, as devoted pensioners, on his precious merits; and they are undoubtedly in the way to a blissful immortality. Yet will their way be less clear, and their steps more embarrassed, by not distinctly understanding the benign genius of the gospel. A proper information in this important point, would shed light upon their paths, and encourage them in their journey; would further their progress in vital holiness, and increase their joy in the LORD.

Ther. The followers of your opinion, I have observed, are perpetually dwelling upon this one favourite topic; to the exclusion of that grand and truly-essential part of Christianity, sanctification.

Asp. If you have ever taken notice of such a conduct, you are unquestionably right, in with-holding your approbation. It is a manifest incongruity, and deserves your censure. But, assure yourself, it proceeds from a misapprehension in the persons, and has no connection with the nature of the doctrine.

I am far, very far from reducing the various parts of Christianity (which, when connected, make up so well-proportioned a system) to this single, however distinguished, branch. Sanctification is equally necessary, both to our present peace, and to our final felicity. Indeed they are as reciprocally necessary for the purposes of intellectual and eternal happiness, as the heart and the lungs are to the subsistence of the animal œconomy. The former must transmit, the latter must refine, the vital fluid; or else disease will take place, and death will ensue.—My intention is, that those fundamental truths of the gospel, like these master-organs in the body, may have each its proper office assigned; each concur to support the better health, and to promote the spiritual growth of the Christian.

Ther. Other of your zealous folks I have known, who are all for the sanctifying influence of the SPIRIT; and reckon this affiance on the SAVIOUR's merits among the beggarly elements of religion. They scarce ever mention what CHRIST has done for us, but insist wholly upon what he does in us.—When the religious people are so divided among themselves *, how can a stranger act? which opinion shall he chuse?

Asp. Which, Theron! Let him discard neither, but associate both.——If the all-gracious REDEEMER has poured out his blood on the cross, that my guilt may be expiated; and presents his intercession in heaven that I may be endued with the SPIRIT: If he will be the meritorious cause of my justification, and the operative principle of my sanctification, why should I scruple to receive him, in either, in both capacities? Who would lop off the right hand, in order to impart the higher dignity, or the greater importance, to the left? I would be no partialist in Christianity; neither diminish her dowery, nor mutilate her privileges.

Ther. You seem, if not to mutilate, yet to split the merits of CHRIST, and parcel out the efficacy of his mediatorial undertaking; ascribing so much to his active, and so much to his passive righteousness; pardon to this, and life to that.

Asp. Some, perhaps, may be pleased with this way of stating the matter. But it is a method which I neither attempt to defend, nor wish to imitate.—To distinguish between the active and passive righteousness, I think is not amiss; because this sets the fulness of our LORD's merit in the clearest light, and gives the completest honour to GOD's holy law.——But to divide them into detached portions, independent on each other, seems to be fanciful, rather than judicious. For, had either part of the mediatorial obedience been wanting, I apprehend, neither pardon, nor acceptance, nor any spiritual blessing, could have been vouchsafed to fallen man.

The two parts are inseparable; making, in their connection, a necessary and noble unity for the accomplishment of our salvation: Just as the light and the heat of yonder sun blend their operation, to produce this delightful day, and this fruitful weather. However, therefore, I may happen to express myself, I never consider them as acting in the exclusive sense; but would always have them understood, as the grand and glorious aggregate: looking upon our SAVIOUR's universal obedience, which commenced at his incarnation, was carried on through his life, and terminated in his death:—looking upon all this, in its collective form, as the object of my faith, and the foundation of my hopes †.

* 2 Pet. i. 5.

* Theron's inquiry concerning these two particulars is sometimes made an objection against all religion.—But have the gainsmen who adopt this objection, never seen the naturalists divided in their judgment, with relation to the design and use of several appearances in the material, the vegetable, the animal creation? while one decries as a nuisance, what another admires as a beauty.—Yet no one, I believe, ever took it into his head, from such a diversity of opinions, to doubt whether the frame of nature is a just, a regular, and a finished system; or to deny, that power, goodness, and wisdom, support, pervade, and direct the whole.

† In this opinion, Aspasio has Milton's archangel for his precedent. Michael, speaking of this LORD and our LORD, says;

The law of God exact he shall fulfil,
Both by obedience and by love; though love

Ther. I think, you lay too much ſtreſs upon this controverted, and perhaps merely-ſpeculative point.

Aſp. Merely ſpeculative! Say not thus, my dear friend. —"How I may be juſtified before GOD, my Maker, my Governor, and my Judge?" is an enquiry of all others, the moſt intereſting and important. It is the main hinge, on which every inſtance of practical religion turns *. True comfort, willing obedience, holy communion with the divine MAJESTY, all depend upon this capital point.

Far from being a merely-ſpeculative point, it aſcribes the moſt undivided glory to the ever-bleſſed GOD, and his free grace.—It adminiſters the moſt ſerene and ſubſtantial ſatisfactions to frail, but believing men.—It cheriſhes, with the moſt kindly influence, that pure and undefiled religion, which has its ſeat in the heart; has its birth from love; and is a real antepaſt, both of the buſineſs and the bliſs of ſaints in light.

Can we, then, lay too much ſtreſs upon a doctrine ſo greatly momentous, upon a privilege ſo extenſively beneficial?

Ther. When all this is proved, then for my reply, Aſpaſio.

Aſp. Nay, then thou ſhalt have more than a reply; I promiſe you my cordial aſſent.

Aſp. And if all this be incapable of proof, I aſſure you, Theron, I will not ſolicit your aſſent. Nay more, I will revoke and renounce my own.——

Ther. At preſent, I believe, we muſt go in, and prepare for our viſitants. Some other interview will give us an opportunity to canvaſs this queſtion more minutely.

Aſp. Though I have never much inclination, even when there is the moſt leiſure, for controverſy; yet, if you inſiſt upon it, I ſhall not abſolutely refuſe to engage in a debate with my Theron: becauſe he will come to the amicable rencounter, without bringing angry paſſions for his ſecond.—My reaſons will be impartially weighed, not artfully eluded, much leſs anſwered with invective. —If ſome inadvertent expreſſion ſhould drop from my lips, he will not rigorouſly proſecute the ſlip; nor aggravate an unguarded ſentence unto the crime of hereſy. —Candour will form his judgment, and good-nature dictate his expreſſions.

Ther. I thank you, my dear Aſpaſio, for your genteel admonition. What I am in the language of complaiſance, means what I ſhould be.——Well: I will endeavour to take your hint, and check this my impetuoſity of ſpirit. I have admired, O! that I could imitate, the beautiful example of St Paul. When Feſtus, forgetting the dignity of the governor, and the politeneſs of the gentleman, uttered that indecent reflection, Paul, thou art beſide thyſelf: much learning doth make thee mad: did the great preacher of Chriſtianity kindle into reſentment? —The charge was unjuſt and abuſive. But the apoſtle, with the moſt perfect command of himſelf, returned the ſofteſt, yet the moſt ſpirited anſwer imaginable. I am not mad, moſt noble Feſtus; but ſpeak the words of truth and ſoberneſs *.—Inexpreſſibly graceful was this calm and obliging reply. Though ſhort, infinitely more convincing than a whole torrent of bitter or recriminating words. It diſarmed the judge of his riſing diſpleaſure; it conciliated the favour of his royal aſſeſſor; and brought honour to the Chriſtian cauſe.

This amiable ſelf-regimen, and moderation of temper, I ſhall be ſure to ſee exemplified in my friend's converſation; however I may fail of it myſelf, or be proof againſt all his arguments.

Aſp. Ah! Theron, we want no monitor, to remind us of our ſuppoſed excellencies. And if you begin with your compliments, it is time to put an end to our diſcourſe.

Only let me juſt obſerve, that divine truths cannot be properly diſcerned, but by the enlightening influences of the divine SPIRIT. We muſt addreſs ourſelves to this inquiry, not only with unprejudiced minds, but likewiſe with praying hearts. We muſt bring to this diſpute, not barely the quiver of logic, but that unction from the HOLY ONE, which may teach us all things †.— Let us then adopt the poet's aſpiration;

——Thou celeſtial Light,
Shine inward, and the mind through all her powers Irradiate; there plant eyes; all miſt from thence Purge and diſperſe! MILTON, b. III. l. 51.

Alone fulfil the law; thy puniſhment
He ſhall endure, by coming in the fleſh
To a reproachful life and curſed death;
Proclaiming life to all who ſhall believe
In his redemption. B. XII. 402.

According to the tenor of theſe very valuable lines, our LORD's fulfilling the law, and enduring the puniſhment, are the concurring cauſes, or the one compound cauſe, of life and redemption to ſinners.

* Diffundit ſe, ſays the judicious Witſius, juſtificationis doctrina per totum theologiæ corpus; et prout fundamenta hic vel bene, vel male, jacta ſunt, eo univerſum ædificium vel ſolidius auguſtiuſque aſcendit, vel male ſtatuminatum fœdam minitatur ruinam. De Oecon. See above, p. 114.

* See Acts xxvi. where we have an apology, the moſt delicate and maſterly, perhaps, that ever was made; eminent for fine addreſs, clear reaſoning, and important truth. Which, notwithſtanding all theſe very ſuperior recommendations, is deemed madneſs; and that by a nobleman from Rome; the ſeat of ſcience, and fountain head of polite literature.—A proof this, no leſs demonſtrative than deplorable, of the apoſtle's aſſertion; The natural man, however ingenious or accompliſhed, receiveth not the things of the Spirit of GOD; for they are fooliſhneſs unto him, 1 Cor. ii. 14.

† 1 John ii. 20. 27.

DIALOGUE III.

Ther. WE are now, Aſpaſio, about two miles diſtant from my houſe. The horſe-road lies though a narrow duſty lane. The foot-path leads along a ſpacious pleaſant meadow. Suppoſe we deliver our horſes to the ſervant, and walk the remainder of the way?

Aſp. You could not make a propoſal more agreeable to my inclination; eſpecially, as the air is become cool, and the walk is ſo inviting.

What a magnificent and charming ſcene! hills on either ſide, gently riſing, and widely ſpreading; their ſummits crowned with ſcattered villages, and cluſtering trees: their ſlopes divided into a beauteous chequer-work; conſiſting partly of tillage, with its waving crops; partly of paſturage, with its grazing herds.—— Before us, the trefoil, the clover, and a variety of graſſy plants, differently bladed, and differently branched, weave themſelves into a carpet of living green. Can any of the manufactures formed in the looms, or extended in the palaces of Perſia, vie with the covering of this ample area? vie with it, in grandeur of ſize, or delicacy of decoration?

What a profuſion of the gayeſt flowers, fringing the banks, and embroidering the plain!

——Nature here
Wantons, as in her prime, and plays at will
Her virgin-fancies, pouring forth more ſweet,
Wild above rule or art, enormous bliſs *!

Nothing can be brighter than the luſtre of thoſe ſilver daiſies; nothing deeper than the tinge of thoſe golden crowfoots. Yet both ſeem to acquire additional beauty, by ſucceeding to the deformity of winter, and flouriſhing amidſt ſo much ſurrounding verdure.

* MILT. b. V.

Ther. Nature is truly in her prime.——The vegetable tribes are putting on their richeſt attire. Thoſe cheſnuts, on our right hand, begin to rear their flowering pyramids; thoſe willows, on our left, are tipt with taſſels of grey; and yonder poplars, which overlook the river, and ſeem to command the meadows, are pointed with rolls of ſilver.

The hawthorn, in every hedge, is partly turgid with ſilken gems, partly diffuſed into a milk-white bloom. Not a ſtraggling furze, nor a ſolitary thicket, but wears a rural noſegay. All is a delightful diſplay of preſent fertility, and a joyous pledge of future plenty.—Now we experience what the royal poet, in very delicate imagery, deſcribes: The winter is paſt; the rain is over and gone. The flowers appear on the earth; the time of the ſinging of birds is come; and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land. The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs; and the vine, with the tender grapes, give a good ſmell *.

Aſp. Your quotation and the ſcene remind me of a remark, which ſhould have taken place in our laſt night's diſcourſe. When we were enumerating the excellencies of the ſacred writings, methinks, we might have added:—Are you fond of paſtoral, in all its flowery graces, and blooming honours? Never have we ſeen ſuch exquiſite touches of rural painting, or ſuch ſweet images of endearing affection, as in the Song of ſongs, which is Solomon's. All the brilliant and amiable appearances in nature are employed, to delineate the tenderneſs of his heart, who is love itſelf:—to pourtray the beauty of his perſon, who is the chieſeſt among ten thouſand;——and deſcribe the happineſs of thoſe ſouls, whoſe fellowſhip is with the FATHER, and with his Son JESUS CHRIST †.

See! Theron, what the chearing warmth and the genial ſhowers of ſpring have done! Such a change, ſo pleaſing and ſo ennobling, the goſpel of CHRIST introduces into the ſoul.——Not a day, ſcarce an hour paſſes, but this ſeaſon of univerſal fecundity produces ſomething new. And is there any ſtate or any circumſtance of life, on which the faith of CHRIST does not exert a ſimilar efficacy, and bring forth fruit unto GOD?

This is ſuppoſed to be the ſpiritual meaning of that fine deſcriptive picture which you have borrowed from the Canticles. It diſplays the benign agency of grace and its doctrines; eſpecially of our LORD's ſatisfaction for ſin, and of his righteouſneſs imputed to ſinners. Theſe operate, with much the ſame favourable and happy energy, both on our morals and our comforts, as the ſweet influences of the vernal ſun operate on the ſprouting herbs, and opening flowers.

Ther. If ſuch were the effects of your doctrine, it would ſtand the fairer chance for general acceptation.—But there are ſeveral weighty ſcruples to be removed, before perſons of a liberal and enlarged way of thinking can acquieſce in your opinion. Who, for inſtance, can perſuade himſelf, that what you call the ſatisfaction of CHRIST, is conſiſtent with the dictates of reaſon, or with the perfections of the DEITY?

Aſp. Let gentlemen be candid in their inquiries, and truly liberal in their way of thinking; then, I flatter myſelf, theſe ſcruples may be removed without much difficulty.

GOD, the almighty Creator, and ſupreme Governor of the world, having made man, gave him a law; with a penalty annexed, in caſe of diſobedience.——This ſacred law our forefather Adam preſumptuouſly broke; and we, his poſterity, were involved in his guilt. Or, ſhould that point be controverted, we have undeniably made, by many perſonal tranſgreſſions, his apoſtaſy our own.——Inſomuch, that all have ſinned; have forfeited their happineſs, and rendered themſelves obnoxious to puniſhment.

Man being thus ruined, none could recover him, except his injured MAKER. But ſhall he be recovered, ſhall he be reſtored, without ſuffering the puniſhment due to his crime, and threatened by his CREATOR?——What then will become of the juſtice of the divine LAWGIVER? And how ſhall the honour of his holy law be maintained? At this rate, who would reverence its authority, or fear to violate its precepts?

Sinners might be emboldened to multiply their tranſgreſſions; and tempted to think that the GOD of immaculate holineſs, the GOD of unchangeable veracity, is altogether ſuch an one as themſelves *.——Does it not appear needful, that ſome expedient be deviſed, in order to prevent theſe diſhonourable and horrid conſequences?

Ther. Proceed to inform us what the expedient is.

Aſp. To aſcertain the dignity of the ſupreme adminiſtration, yet reſcue mankind from utter deſtruction, this admirable purpoſe was formed, and in the fulneſs of time executed. The ſecond perſon of the ever-bleſſed TRINITY unites the human nature to the divine; ſubmits himſelf to the obligations of his people; and becomes reſponſible for all their guilt. In this capacity, he performs a perfect obedience, and undergoes the ſentence of death; makes a full expiation of their ſins, and eſtabliſhes their title to life.——By which means, the law is ſatisfied; juſtice is magnified; and the richeſt grace exerciſed. Man enjoys a great ſalvation, not to the diſcredit of any, but to the unſpeakable glory of all, the divine attributes.

This is what we mean by CHRIST's ſatisfaction. And this, I ſhould imagine, wants no recommendation to our unprejudiced reaſon; as, I am ſure, it is moſt delightfully accommodated to our diſtreſſed condition.—It is alſo confirmed by many expreſs paſſages of ſcripture, and illuſtrated by a variety of very ſignificant images.

Ther. Pray, let me be favoured with ſome of your ſcriptural images.—After which, we may inquire, whether your doctrine will ſtand the teſt of reaſon.

Aſp. What is your notion of a ranſom? When Priam redeemed the dead body of Hector from the victorious Achilles, how was it done?

Ther. By paying a price †.——Thus Fabius recovered the captives which were taken by Hannibal. He tranſmitted the ſum required, and they were diſcharged from their confinement.

Aſp. Such is the redemption procured for ſinners by our LORD JESUS CHRIST. Of ſuch a nature, (though incomparably more grand and auguſt in all its circumſtances), and expreſſed by the very ſame word ‡. The Son of man came not to be miniſtered unto, but to miniſter; and to give his life a ranſom for many.

CHRIST alſo paid a price,—a real price,—a moſt ſatisfactory price. In conſideration of which, our freedom from every penal evil is granted. Ye are redeem-

* Cant. ii. 11. 12. 13. † 1 John i. 3.

* This was actually the caſe, as we are informed by the SEARCHER of hearts, when, on a particular occaſion, puniſhment was only retarded. How much more would ſuch impious opinions have prevailed, if, on this grand act of diſobedience, puniſhment had been entirely forborne? Pſal. l. 21.

† ——————————ἕρκος ὀδόντων ἔφυγε, ——————————

an infinitely rich price. Hyperbolical this, as applied by Homer; ſtrictly true, when referred to CHRIST.

‡ Λύτρον ἀπολύτρωσις, are uſed in this preciſe ſignification, by the moſt approved authors of Greece.——Ἀπολύσασθαι τοὺς ἄνδρας ἀνδρῶν, καὶ τοὺς αἰχμαλώτους ἀντιλαβεῖν, ſays Plutarch. Ὡς τοῦ αὐτοῦ τοῦτο ἦλθε δοῦναι τὴν ψυχὴν αὐτοῦ λύτρον ἀντὶ πολλῶν, ſays our bleſſed SAVIOUR, Matth. xx. 28.——Ἀπολύσασθαι τοὺς αἰχμαλώτους ἐπὶ, is the language of Demoſthenes. Ἐν ᾧ ἔχομεν τὴν ἀπολύτρωσιν διὰ τοῦ αἵματος αὐτοῦ, are the words of St Paul, Eph. i. 7.—To eſtabliſh this important point, and to familiarize the comfortable idea to our minds, the ſacred writers abound in this phraſeology. See Luke i. 68, ii. 38. xxiv. 21.—Rom. iii. 24.—Tit. ii. 14.—Heb. ix. 12.

ed,

ed †, says the apostle, not with corruptible things, silver and gold, but with the precious blood of CHRIST.——Let me add one text more, which, in the same style of commutative justice, asserts the same truth. CHRIST has redeemed us †, hath bought us off, from the curse of the law.——Yes, my friend,

The ransom was paid down. The fund of heav'n,
Heav'n's inexhaustible exhausted fund,
Amazing and amaz'd pour'd forth the price,
All price beyond. Though curious to compute,
Archangels fail'd to cast the mighty sum ‡.

Ther. Hold a little, good Aspasio. Consider the consequence of what you maintain. If there was a ransom in the case, to whom was it paid?——The devil had led sinners captive. They are said to be the slaves of Satan. And shall the blessed JESUS pay his life to that accursed fiend? Shocking to imagine!——Yet, shocking as it is, it must follow from your own, and your poet's assertion.

Asp. You misapprehend the case, Theron. The ransom was paid to GOD. Thou hast redeemed us to GOD ||, is the confession of the saints in light.——Satisfaction was made to the divine law, and to the divine justice. The one of which was offended; the other violated; and both concurred to denounce the transgressor's doom. Of which doom Satan was only the destined executioner; whose malignity, and implacable rage, GOD is pleased to make the instrument of inflicting his vengeance; as he formerly used the idolatrous kings of Assyria and Babylon, to chastise the disobedient Israelites.

When we were without strength §, utterly ruined, yet absolutely helpless; when none, in heaven or earth, could afford us any succour; then our LORD JESUS CHRIST most graciously and most seasonably interposed. He said, as it is very emphatically represented by Elihu, Deliver them from going down into the pit; I have found a ransom †.——He did, what is very beautifully described by our English classic;

——So man, as is most just,
Shall satisfy for man, be judg'd, and die;
And dying rise, and rising with him raise
His brethren, ransom'd with his own dear life ¶.

Ther. But pray, do not you allow, that CHRIST is truly and properly GOD?

Asp. We not only allow it, but we insist upon it, and make our boast of it. This is the very foundation of his merit, and the support of our hope.

Ther. This may aggrandize the merit of CHRIST, but it will increase the difficulty of your task. For, according to this opinion, CHRIST must make satisfaction to himself. And is not this a practice quite unprecedented? a notion perfectly absurd?

Asp. It is quite unprecedented, you say. On this point, I shall not vehemently contend. Only let me mention one instance, Zaleucus, you know, the prince of the Locrians, made a decree, That whoever was convicted of adultery, should be punished with the loss of both his eyes. Soon after this establishment, the legislator's own son was apprehended in the very fact, and brought to a public trial. How could the father acquit himself, in so tender and delicate a conjuncture? Should he execute the law, in all its rigour, this would be worse than death to the unhappy youth. Should he pardon so notorious a delinquent, this would defeat the design of his salutary institution. To avoid both these inconveniencies, he ordered one of his own eyes to be pulled out, and one of his son's. By which means, the rights of justice were preserved inviolate; yet the tenderness of a parent was remarkably indulged. And may we not venture to say, that, in this case, Zaleucus both received and made the satisfaction? received it as a magistrate, even while he made it as a father.

Ther. I cannot see, how this suffering of the father was, in any degree, satisfactory to the law; since the father and the son could not be considered as one and the same person. It may pass for an extraordinary instance of parental indulgence; it may strike the benevolent and compassionate hearer: but if tried at the bar of equity and reason, it will hardly be admitted as any legal satisfaction; it will probably be condemned, as a breach of nature's first and fundamental law, self-preservation.

Asp. What you observe, Theron, I must confess, has weight. It will oblige me to give up my illustration. Nevertheless, what you urge against the propriety of the comparison, tends to establish the certainty of the doctrine. For CHRIST and his people are actually considered as one and the same person. They are one mystical body; he the head, they the members; so intimately united to him, that they are bone of his bone, and flesh of his flesh *. By virtue of which union, their sins were punished in him, and by his stripes they are healed †, they obtain impunity and life.

Though there may be nothing in the procedure of men, which bears any resemblance to this miracle of heavenly goodness; it receives a sufficient confirmation from the language of scripture. He who wrote as an amanuensis to the unerring SPIRIT, has declared, that GOD was in CHRIST, reconciling the world,——unto whom? unto some third party? No; but reconciling it, by the death and obedience of CHRIST,——unto himself ‡. And I can very readily grant, that this divine exertion of benignity and wisdom should be without a precedent, and without a parallel ||.

Difficulties, I own, may attend the explication of this article, or be interwoven with its consequences. At the same time I must affirm, that our apprehensions of heavenly things are so obscure, and our ideas of the divine benevolence so scanty, that we may very possibly mistake; and fancy that to be absurd, which is only great, wonderful, and incomprehensible §. Nor shall I be thought presumptuous in adding, that it will be impossible for all the sagacity in the world, to prove this doctrine an absurdity, though it should ever remain an inexplicable mystery. How many phænomena in the constitution of external nature, are confessedly mysterious and inexplicable! They challenge, they command our assent; yet baffle all our researches, and defy our utmost penetration. If then we find this

* 1 Pet. i. 18. We have an equivalent expression, used in the same signification, by one of the correctest writers in the world;

Et fratrem Pollux alterna morte redemit. VIRG.

† Gal. iii. 13. Ἐξηγορασεν. We are said to be bought, 1 Cor. vi. 20. not in a metaphorical sense, but really and properly. For here the price is mentioned; and by St Peter the price is specified, 1 Pet. i. 18. 19.

‡ Night-Thoughts, No. IV. || Rev. v. 9.

§ Rom. v. 6. † Job xxxiii. 24. ¶ MILT. b. III. 294.

* Eph. v. 30. Col. i. 20. † Is. liii. 5.

‡ 2 Cor. v. 19.

|| Fancy, in the person of Horace, said of Jupiter and his fabulous exploits, Cui nihil viget simile aut secundum.

Much more will Reason, in the character of a believer, say the same of JEHOVAH and his marvellous grace.

§ Its unparalleled, nay, its incomprehensible nature, is no objection to its truth and reality. This is rather a circumstance, which perfectly agrees with the testimony of the inspired writers; and affords, in my opinion, an unanswerable argument for the divine origin of Christianity.

It agrees with the testimony of the inspired writers; who call it, not only GOD's wisdom, by way of super-eminent distinction, but his wisdom in a mystery, even his hidden wisdom: which could not possibly have been conceived by any finite mind, however enlarged or sagacious.——Affords an unanswerable argument for the divine origin of Christianity. Since it was infinitely too deep for the contrivance of men, and absolutely undiscoverable by the penetration of angels; how could it be known, but by manifestation from above? Whence could it take its rise, but from an especial revelation?

truth

truth fully and incontestably revealed in the Bible, we must renounce the philosopher, before we can consistently ask the sceptic.

Ther. Let us see then, whether it be so fully and incontestably revealed in the Bible. You have given me, as yet, but one of your scriptural images.

Asp. I have another at your service. CHRIST is called an High Priest. What do you take to be the nature of the priestly office?

Ther. The business of the priest was, I apprehend, to offer sacrifices, and to make intercession for the people.

Asp. Very true: and CHRIST could not with any propriety receive this appellation, if he had not been detective in performing either of the sacerdotal functions. Now, that he offered no such victim as slain beasts, is universally acknowledged. We might presume therefore, even though we had not the authority of an apostle to assure us, that he offered HIMSELF, through the eternal SPIRIT, to GOD *.

The cross, shall I say †? rather his divine nature was the altar. His soul and body, each immaculately pure, were the holocaust. These he resigned; the one, to deadly wounds; the other, to inexpressible anguish; and both, to be instead of all whole burnt-offerings — On this invaluable oblation, his intercession at the right hand of his FATHER is founded; from this it derives that prevailing efficacy, which is the security of his standing, and the recovery of his fallen disciples.

Give me leave to ask farther, What is your idea of a sacrifice? When Iphegenia was slain at the altar, what was the import of that memorable action?

Ther. It was intended, if we may credit Virgil's account ‡, to appease the indignation of the superior powers, and to obtain a propitious gale for the wind-bound fleet, and confederate forces of Greece. But, I hope, you would not make that solemn butchery of the royal virgin, a pattern for the supreme goodness; nor the practice of gross idolaters, a model for the religion of the holy JESUS.

Asp. By no means, Theron. Only I would observe, that the custom of offering sacrifices obtained among the most cultivated nations of the Heathen world; that these sacrifices were frequently of the vicarious § kind;

* Heb. ix. 14.

† The cross is, by some authors, styled the altar. But, I think, improperly. This notion seems to have sprung from, or given rise to, the Popish practice of idolizing the crucifix. At least, it countenances such a kind of foppish or sacrilegious devotion, more than a Protestant writer could wish. It was the property of the altar, to sanctify the gift. This therefore, when referred to our LORD's sacrifice, is a far more exalted office, than we dare ascribe to the instrument of his suffering. This must be the honour and prerogative of his DIVINE NATURE, which did indeed sanctify the great obligation; gave it a dignity, a merit, an efficacy, unspeakable and everlasting.

‡ Sanguine placasti ventos, et virgine cæsa.

§ Seneca says, alluding to the custom of sacrifices, and the prevailing opinion concerning them; Fuerim tantum nunquam amplius dolituræ domus piamentum.—What we are to understand by piamentum, our author himself explains, in the preceding clause; Quicquid matri dolendum fuerit, in me transierit; quicquid aviæ, in me. To which his judicious commentator Lipsius, from an extensive knowledge of antiquity, adds; xabagua sive piacularis victima. SEN. ad Helv.

The same writer, in the same consolatory epistle, has another sentence, still more to our purpose; Nobilitatur omnium carminibus, quæ se pro conjuge vicariam dedit.—Juvenal, speaking of this very fact, expresses himself in very remarkable language; such as shews us, with the utmost clearness and precision, what the ancients meant, when they affirmed of a suffering or dying person, that he gave himself for another:

——Spectat subeuntem fata mariti
Alcestim, et similis si permutatio detur. Sat. VI.

There is a passage in Livy, which most of all deserves our notice; as it seems to imply a popular belief of the dignity, the more than human dignity, of the sacrifice which was necessary to appease the wrath of heaven. It relates to Decius, devoting himself for the public good; Confestim ab utroque pede, aliquanto augustior humano visu, fœruti cælo missus, piaculum omnis deorum iræ. Lib. VIII. cap. ix.

in which the victim was substituted instead of the offerer; and the former being cut off, the latter was discharged from punishment: consequently, that the classic authors would (in case there was any need of such auxiliaries) join with the sacred writers, to declare the expediency, and explain the nature of sacrifices. This also you will permit me to add, that, if the Heathens talk sensibly on any part of religious worship, it is on the subject of sacrifices. Their sentiments concerning expiatory oblations, seem to be the faint and distant echo of revelation. And I have usually considered them, not as the institutions of mere reason, but as the remains of some broken tradition.

However, the truest and most authentic signification of a sacrifice, is to be learned from the Jewish ritual, explained by the gospel-comment. Do you remember the Mosaic account of that ordinance?

Ther. You are much better acquainted, Aspasio, with those sacred antiquities; and can give the most satisfactory information with regard to this particular. Only let me remind you, that alms are styled offerings; and praises, both in the prophetical and evangelical writings, come under the denomination of sacrifices.

Asp. Though praises and alms are styled sacrifices, they are not of the propitiatory, but eucharistic kind. They are never said to expiate transgressions, only are represented as acceptable to GOD through JESUS CHRIST; that divinely-precious victim, whose merits both cancel our guilt, and commend our services! According to—

Ther. Stay a moment, Aspasio.——Let me recollect myself.—This may be the meaning of sacrifices, as ordained by Moses, and solemnized among the Jews.—— "Sacrifices were a symbolical address to GOD; intended "to express before him the devotion, affections, dispo- "sitions, and desires of the heart by significative and em- "blematical actions."——Or thus; "The priest made "atonement for sin, by sacrificing a beast, only as that "was a sign and testimony of the sacrificer's pure and "upright heart."

Asp. Sacrifices, I acknowledge, were a symbolical address to GOD.—But would you confine their efficacy, only to the death of the animal, and the purity of the offerer? No, Theron: they always had a reference to the great sacrifice,—ordained in the eternal counsels of JEHOVAH;—prepared, when the co-eternal SON was made flesh;—offered, when the blessed JESUS surrendered himself, to be led as a lamb to the slaughter. —They were so far from being independent on this divine oblation, that they acted in perpetual subserviency to it, and derived all their virtue from it. They were the shadow, but the body was CHRIST.

"They expressed," you say, "the devotion, affec- "tions, dispositions, and desires of the heart." But I rather think, they expressed the guilt and the faith of the offerer.—His guilt; for this seems to be intimated, by the very names of the propitiatory sacrifices: the sin and the sacrifice, the offending action and the expiatory rite, being signified by one and the same word *. It is somewhat more than intimated, by the occasion of the offering, and the state of the offerer. Since it was only on account of guilt contracted, that piacular oblations were made; and only from a guilty person that they were required.—His faith; or firm belief, that ceremonial guilt, which shut him out from the communion of the visible church, and subjected him to the infliction of temporal judgments, was removed by these; but that moral guilt, which defiles the ſoul, and excludes from heaven, ſhould be purged by ſome better ſacrifice than theſe *. In the exerciſe of this faith, Abel offered up a more acceptable ſacrifice than Cain; and without this faith, exerciſed in ſome degree, it was impoſſible to pleaſe GOD.

* חטאת denotes a sin, and sin-offering, Lev. iv. 3. 24. אשם signifies the trespass, and the trespass-offering, Lev. v. 15. 19.

If ſacrifices were intended to beſpeak integrity of heart, methinks, the ſtate of innocency had been the propereſt period for their inſtitution and oblation. But we never hear of this awful ceremony till man is fallen, and ſin committed.——If intended to denote purity of heart, why ſhould they be particularly enjoined on that ſolemn day, when confeſſion was made of all the ſins † of the whole congregation? An oddly-concerted device this! in which the tongue muſt contradict what the ceremony would recognize. Or, how could it be proper, after the violation of ſome law, or the neglect of ſome ordinance, immediately to go and offer a ſacrifice? What would be the language of ſuch a practice? "I have done wickedly, but my heart is pure and upright." Is this conſiſtent with the ſpirit of humility, of modeſty, or of common ingenuity? Is this the way of giving glory to GOD, or of taking ſhame to ourſelves? Whereas, let the ſacrifice be a typical expiation, and this is the ſignificancy of the action. "LORD, I confeſs myſelf guilty. "Puniſhment and death are my due. Let them fall, I "beſeech thee, on my victim ‡; that thy juſtice being "glorified, and thy law ſatisfied, thy mercy may be ho"nourably diſplayed in my forgiveneſs."

Beſides, Theron, what likeneſs, what agreement, is there, between the profeſſion of integrity, and an animal mortally wounded, wallowing in its own blood, and ſtruggling in the agonies of death? Whereas, between theſe dying pangs, and the puniſhment due to ſin, or the ſorrows ſuſtained by the crucifying SAVIOUR, there is an apparent, a ſtriking, and, in various reſpects, an edifying reſemblance.

Ther. They declared, perhaps, the ſacrificer's readineſs and reſolution to ſlay the brute in himſelf, and to lay down his life in adherence to GOD.

Aſp. I don't remember any aſſertion of this kind in the Bible, or any hint to countenance ſuch an interpretation. It ſeems, in ſome caſes, to be incompatible with the very nature of things, and contrary to the expreſs declarations of ſcripture. Doves, you know, lambs, and ſheep were offered in ſacrifice. But ſhall we ſlay the lamb, the dove, the ſheep, in ourſelves? So far from it, that CHRIST's diſciples are either deſcribed by theſe creatures, or commanded to imitate their properties. Be ye harmleſs as doves ‖. Peter, feed my lambs †. My ſheep hear my voice ¶.

Suppoſe, however, that this might be a ſubordinate deſign, or a valuable improvement of the ſacrificial acts; yet their primary intention, and ultimate end, were widely different: were much more ſignificant of the divine compaſſions, and much better adapted to the comfort of mankind. They were an awful indication, that death was the wages of ſin: at the ſame time, a chearing declaration, that GOD was pleaſed to accept the death of the animal, inſtead of the ſinner's; a figurative repreſentation ++ alſo of that illuſtrious PERSON, who was to bear the ſin of many, and pour out his ſoul for tranſgreſſors.

Ther. Since ſacrifices were of a religious nature, they ſhould not only be inſtructive and beneficial in their tendency; but have their due effects, with regard to GOD, to ſin, and to the perſon who brought them.

Aſp. They had their effects with regard to GOD; that his juſtice might be magnified, and his anger appeaſed: —to ſin; that its demerit might be diſplayed, yet its guilt be done away:—to the perſon who brought them; that he might obtain pardon, be exempted from puniſhment, and exerciſe his faith on the LORD JESUS CHRIST.

Ther. There are ſo many ſorts of ſacrifice appointed in the Jewiſh rubric, that I am at a loſs for a diſtinct idea; unleſs ſome one be ſingled out, and ſeparately conſidered.

Aſp. Among all the ſacrifices inſtituted by Moſes, none more circumſtantially typified the bleſſed JESUS, or more appoſitely expreſſed the benefits of his oblation, than the paſchal lamb, and the ſin-offering on the day of atonement.

An expoſitor, who cannot be miſtaken, has given us this interpretation of the paſchal lamb; CHRIST our paſſover is ſacrificed for us *: declaring hereby,—that CHRIST is a real ſacrifice;—that he was prefigured, in this capacity, by the paſchal lamb;—that the circumſtances, which diſtinguiſhed it, met in him; and the advantages, which reſulted from it, were procured by him; theſe, in their trueſt import; theſe, in their largeſt extent.—The words of the apoſtle ſpeak this ſenſe, to the plaineſt, ſimpleſt reader. Whereas, to extort any other ſignification from them, what ſubtilty of wit, and what refinement, or rather violence of criticiſm, muſt be uſed!

The paſchal lamb was without blemiſh. Such was the LAMB of GOD; free from all taint of original ſin, and from every ſpot of actual tranſgreſſion.——A lamb of the firſt year, in all the ſprightlineſs and floridity of youth. CHRIST alſo laid down his life, not when worn with age, or debilitated with ſickneſs; but in the very prime of his days; amidſt all the bloom of health, and all the vigour of manhood.—The lamb was to be ſlain in ſuch a manner, as might occaſion the moſt copious effuſion of its blood. And was not this very exactly fulfilled in our ſuffering SAVIOUR? His blood flowed out, in vaſt abundance, by the amazing ſweat in the garden; by the rending laſhes of the ſcourge; by the lacerating points of the thorns; by the dreadful nails, which cleft his hands and his feet; by the deadly ſpear, which ripped open his ſide, and cut its way to his heart. —Though his blood was to be ſo liberally ſpilt, a bone of the LAMB was not to be broken. And you cannot but recollect, you cannot but admire, the wonderful interpoſition of Providence, to accompliſh this emblematical preadtion. When the ſoldiers had received a command to break the legs of the three crucified perſons; when they had ac-

And ſhadows, of that deſtin'd ſeed to bruiſe
The ſerpent, by what means he ſhall achieve Mankind's deliverance. B. XII. ver. 231.

* They ſanctified to the purifying of the fleſh, Heb. ix. 13. but could not make him that did the ſervice perfect, as pertaining to the conſcience, Heb. ix. 9.

† Lev. xvi. 21.

‡ What ſays that prodigy of oriental learning, Bochart? Hoc eodem ritu tram Dii peccator deprecabatur, eamque immitti petebat in illius victimæ caput, quam ſuo loco ponebat. Hierozoic. tom. I. lib. ii. cap. 54.

‖ Matth. x. 16. † John xxi. 15. ¶ John x. 27.

++ What ſays Milton upon this ſubject of ſacrifices, and with reference to their principal deſign? He calls them

——Religious rites
Of ſacrifice; informing men by types

* 1 Cor. v. 7. Would any one venture to ſay, Paul our paſſover is ſacrificed for us? Yet this, I think, may be, or rather is in effect ſaid, by the account which ſome perſons give of CHRIST's ſatisfaction.—The very thought of ſuch a blaſphemous abſurdity, is too painful and offenſive for the ſerious Chriſtian to dwell upon. I would therefore divert his attention to a more pleaſing object. Let him obſerve the exquiſite ſkill, which, here and every where, conducts the zeal of our inſpired writer.—The odes of Pindar are celebrated for their fine tranſitions; which, though bold and ſurpriſing, are perfectly natural. We have in this place, a very maſterly ſtroke of the ſame beautiful kind. The apoſtle, ſpeaking of the inceſtuous criminal, paſſes, by a moſt artful digreſſion, to his darling topic, a crucified SAVIOUR. Who would have expected it, on ſuch an occaſion? Yet, when thus admitted, who does not ſee and admire, both the propriety of the ſubject, and the delicacy of its introduction?

tually

tually broke the legs of each malefactor, which hung on the right side of our LORD and on the left; their minds were over-ruled (by a divine influence, no doubt) to spare the bleſſed JESUS, and to leave all his bones unhurt, untouched.

The lamb was to be killed before the whole aſſembly; in the preſence, either of the whole congregation of Iſrael, or elſe of that particular ſociety, which concurred in eating the fleſh. And did not the whole multitude of the Jews conſpire againſt our REDEEMER, to put him to death? Did they not all cry out, as with one voice, Crucify him! Crucify him! Was he not executed, at one of their grand feſtivals, and in the ſight of the whole aſſembled nation?—The blood was not to be pour-ed heedleſsly upon the ground, but received carefully into a baſon; and ſprinkled, with the utmoſt punctuality, upon the door-poſts. In like manner, the blood of the heavenly LAMB is not to be trampled under foot, by a contemptuous diſregard. It is the treaſure of the church, and the medicine of life; to be received there-fore by an humble faith, and devoutly applied to our conſciences.——The ſprinkling of that blood ſecured every Iſraelitiſh family from the deſtroying angel's ſword. So the merits of the ſlaughtered SAVIOUR * ſcreen every believing ſinner from the ſtroke of offended juſ-tice, and from the pains of eternal death. What muſt have become of the Iſraelite, who, truſting to the up-rightneſs of his heart, ſhould neglect to make uſe of this divinely appointed ſafeguard? He muſt inevitably have been puniſhed with the death of his firſt-born. Equally certain, but infinitely more dreadful, will be his condemnation, who, before the omniſcient JUDGE, ſhall preſume to plead his own integrity, or confide in his own repentance, and reject the atonement of the dying JESUS.

Ther. Now, if you pleaſe, for the ſin-offering †, which ſeems to have been the moſt eminent ſacrifice of them all.

Aſp. It was the moſt comprehenſive; becauſe it ſha-dowed forth not only the death of CHRIST, but his reſurrection from the dead, and his aſcenſion into hea-ven.——As the various actions of ſome illuſtrious per-ſonage, which cannot be exhibited by the painter in a ſingle draught, are diſplayed in ſeveral compartments; yet all conſtitute one and the ſame grand hiſtorical picture: ſo, theſe glorious events, incapable of being repreſented by any ſingle animal, were typified by two kids of the goats; which nevertheleſs were reputed but as one ‡ offering.

These goats were brought to the door of the taber-nacle, and there preſented before the LORD. CHRIST alſo preſented himſelf before GOD, when he went up to Jeruſalem, that all things written by the prophets concerning him might be accompliſhed *.——The goat, on which the LORD's lot fell, was devoted to death. CHRIST alſo being delivered by the determinate counſel and fore-knowledge of GOD †, was crucified and ſlain.——The body was burnt without the camp. Which pointed at the very place, and pictured out the very nature of our LORD's ſufferings. For he ſuffered without the gate ‡; was there expoſed to the rage of men, and the wrath of GOD; under the moſt exquiſite pains of body, and the moſt unſupportable agonies of ſoul. All ſignificantly typified by the flame of a devouring fire. Than which nothing is more fierce, more penetrating, or more ſe-verely tormenting.

As the animal which was ſlaughtered, ſhewed forth the REDEEMER dying for our ſins; that which eſcaped, preſigured the ſame SAVIOUR, riſing again for our juſ-tification.——The high prieſt put his hands upon the head of the ſcape-goat, and with great ſolemnity, confeſ-ſed the ſins of the whole congregation. The import of this ceremony is expreſsly declared in the ſacred canon; The goat ſhall bear upon him their iniquity ‖. It is charm-ingly explained by the prophet, The LORD laid on HIM the iniquity of us all §; and moſt delightfully confirmed by the apoſtle, He himſelf bare our ſins in his own body on the tree ¶.

This done, the goat was diſmiſſed into a land not inha-bited; a place ſeparated from all reſort of men; where he was never likely to be found any more: to teach us, that our offences, having been expiated by the bleeding JESUS, are entirely done away; ſhall never riſe up in judgment againſt us; but, according to the prophecy of Jeremiah, when the iniquity of Iſrael ſhall be ſought for, there ſhall be none; and the ſins of Judah, they ſhall not be found †.——It is farther injoined, that Aaron ſhall confeſs all the iniquities of the children of Iſrael, and all their tranſgreſſions, in all their ſins. Iniquities, tranſgreſſions, ſins, are particu-larized; and, to this cluſter of expreſſions, the word all is added; to inform us, that the leaſt ſins need the atone-ment of CHRIST's death; to aſſure us, that the greateſt ſins are not beyond the compaſs of its efficacy; and that all ſins, be they ever ſo heinous, or ever ſo nume-rous, are forgiven to the true believer.

The high prieſt carried the blood of the victim into the ſecond tabernacle, even within the veil. So CHRIST entered with his own blood, not into the holy places made with hands, but into heaven itſelf ††.——The blood was ſprinkled before the mercy-ſeat; ſprinkled upon the mercy-ſeat; and left in the holy of holies, that it might always remain before the LORD. And does not CHRIST always appear in the preſence of GOD for us? does he not ever live to make interceſſion for us? to plead his all-ſufficient propitiation in our behalf; that the benefits procured thereby, may be communicated, ratified, and perpetuated to his people?

Ther. Theſe benefits, Aſpaſio, are aſcribed, in ſcrip-ture, to repentance and reformation of life, qualifica-

* Both St Peter and St Paul ſpeak of the blood of ſprinkling, 1 Pet. i. 2. Heb. xii. 24; intimating, by this remarkable form of ſpeech, that the death of CHRIST will be of no advantage to the ſinner, unleſs it be applied to his heart; as the blood of the paſchal lamb was no protection to an Iſraelite, till it had tinged the poſts of his door.—Iſaiah, uſing the ſame phraſe, and alluding to to the ſame cuſtom, ſays of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, He ſhall ſpringle many nations, lii. 15. Not only initiate them into his church by baptiſm; but alſo, by the application of his blood, ſhall cleanſe them from their guilt, and deliver them from the wrath to come.

† For the circumſtances relating to the ſin-offering the reader will conſult Lev. xvi—For thoſe which concern the paſchal lamb, he will have recourſe to Exod. xii.

‡ How runs the divine command? He (the high prieſt) ſhall take of the congregation two kids of the goats for a ſin-offering, Lev. xvi. 5. Are not theſe two kids ſtyled in the ſingular number and collective ſenſe, an offering?—That we might not miſtake, GOD is pleaſed to add, and one ram for a burnt-offering. Here he names one, to prevent a miſapprehenſion of his meaning, when he had before ſaid two.—To render his meaning ſtill more apparent, and that we may regard this goat as joined in the ſame offering with the other; the LORD, contrary to his own rule in all other caſes, orders the high prieſt to lay his hands upon the head of the ſcape-goat, not upon the head of the goat devoted to death. He divides the neceſſary circumſtances of a ſacrifice between them both; to intimate, in the cleareſt manner, that neither the one nor the other ſeparate, but both taken together, were the one ſacrificial oblation, appointed for this diſtinguiſhed ſolemnity.

If this be true, I think, the paſſage is a pretty conſiderable proof, that atonement was made by ſuffering vicarious puniſhment; not-withſtanding what has been urged againſt it, from the tenth verſe of the chapter.—Should we require human authority for the ſupport of this interpretation, one of the greateſt human au-thorities may be ſeen in the celebrated Witſius: Utrique hircus pertinebat ad unum ſacrificium pro peccato, hoſtiæ unius loco. Utrique erat pecus piacularis, vicaria Iſraeli peccatori, ejuſque peccatum ferens. De Oecon. lib. IV. cap. vi.

* Luke xviii. 31. † Acts ii. 23. ‡ Heb. xiii. 12.

‖ It is obſervable, that whereas the ſcape-goat is ſaid to bear NW3 the ſins of Iſrael, Lev. xvi. 22. the very ſame phraſe is applied to CHRIST, Iſ. liii. 12.

§ Iſ. liii. 6. ¶ 1 Pet. ii. 24 † Jer. l. 20. †† Heb. ix. 14.

tions

tions of our own; not to any such cause as a vicarious sacrifice; where the merit must necessarily subsist in another. What says the apostle Peter, when he had just received his instructions from the HOLY GHOST? Repent and be converted, not look unto an atonement, or depend upon a propitiation, that your sins may be blotted out *.

Asp. 'Tis true, the benefits of the new covenant are promised to penitents, as their happy portion; but never assigned to their repentance, as the procuring cause. Never to their repentance, but to the blood of the great HIGH PRIEST, called therefore the blood of the everlasting covenant †; being the condition stipulated in it, required by it, and in consequence of which, all its unspeakable privileges are bestowed.

Besides, the qualifications you suppose, are the gift of the LORD. We are not able to exercise, till CHRIST, who is exalted for this very purpose, gives repentance ‡. ——A conversion to GOD, and a newness of life, are not the effect of human abilities, but the work of the divine SPIRIT, and the fruit of the REDEEMER's death.—Indeed, this death is the purchase of every heavenly blessing. This opens the heaven of heavens, and all its inexhaustible stores. By this we have the enjoyment of grace, and by this the hope of glory.

Ther. You begin to be in raptures, Aspasio!

Asp. Excuse me, Theron. It is not easy to repress the sallies of delight and devotion, when we muse upon such amazing loving-kindness, and are touched with a sense of such immensely-rich benefits.——A great HIGH PRIEST! who is higher than the heavens ‖; yet humbled himself to death, even the death of the cross! who is consecrated for evermore §; and pleads all his merit, improves all his influence, for our consummate felicity!

What heart of stone but glows at thoughts like these;
Such contemplations mount us, and should mount
The mind still higher; nor ever glance on man
Unraptur'd, uninflam'd ¶.

But I check myself; and will either reply to your objections, or listen to your sentiments; listen as attentively, as you yourself attend to the music of that shrill-tongued thrush.

Ther. Its sweetly-modulated lays, eminent even in the symphony of spring, have indeed attracted my ears. But my mind is disengaged, and free for your conversation.

Asp. I can repeat a song, sweeter far than this, or all the melody of the woodland choirs: A song, which has harmony enough, to make the brow of melancholy wear a smile, or to sooth away the sorrows of death itself. Who shall lay any thing to the charge of GOD's elect? It is GOD that justifieth; who is he that condemneth? It is CHRIST that died; yea rather, that is risen again; who is even at the right hand of GOD; who also maketh intercession for us ††.——According to my friend's principles, the strain of this triumphant exclamation was ill-judged, and should have run in the following manner: "Who "shall lay any thing to our charge? We have endea- "voured to preserve a rectitude of disposition, and to "persist in a laudable course of action. Where-ever we "failed, we have been sorry for the fault, and have im- "plored pardon from the divine MAJESTY. What "then shall dismay us? or who shall condemn us."—— Your topics of consolation would be complete, without having recourse to the death of CHRIST, as an atonement for sin; or to the resurrection of CHRIST, as an evidence that the atonement is accepted; or to the intercession of CHRIST, as the cause of our interest in that transcendent blessing.

* Acts iii. 19. † Heb. xiii. 20. ‡ Acts v. 31.

‖ Heb. vii. 26. § Heb. vii. 28.

¶ Night-Thoughts, No IV. †† Rom. viii. 33. 34.

Ther. Since you so frequently mention, and so earnestly insist upon atonement, I should be glad to know the precise signification of the word. I am told, the original phrase has nothing to do with the idea of making satisfaction.

Asp. We may learn the precise signification of atonement, by considering the means; the effect; and the manner, whereby the means accomplish the effect.—— The effect of atonement, is pardon.—The means of obtaining it, are the death of CHRIST.——The way or manner, whereby the death of CHRIST becomes efficacious for this blessed purpose, is the sovereign appointment of his FATHER; the infinite dignity of his person; and especially the vicarious nature of his sufferings, or their being undergone in the stead of sinners.

Ther. It has been supposed, and is affirmed too, that our SAVIOUR's obedience and death were conducive to our redemption, only in virtue of his FATHER's will and appointment.

Asp. I am glad it is some other and not my Theron, who espouses this opinion: which is highly injurious to the dignity of our REDEEMER's person, and to the merit of his obedience. Neither is it very honourable to the wisdom of the FATHER, unless we suppose him therefore to have appointed the death of CHRIST, because he knew it was fully sufficient for the glorious purpose.

And why should we use that weak inadequate expression, conducive to our redemption? Would any one say, of Solomon's elegant and sumptuous temple, that it was conducive to the accomplishment of what Moses foretold *?—David's provision of stones, of timber, and of gold, was, if you please, conducive to it. But Solomon's act was perfective of it; was the very execution of the thing itself. Such are the obedience and death of CHRIST, with respect to our redemption.

Ther. But we forget the original word, and neglect to inquire into its genuine import.

Asp. The word, which we translate atonement, implies, in its primary acceptation, the notion of covering. Thus the ark was covered †, was overlaid with pitch, within and without: that all its chinks might be secured against the insinuating attempts of the water; and all its timber defended from the injuries of the liquid element.—— When an object, in this or any other manner, is covered over for safety; the covering receives every shock, and sustains all damages, which would otherwise fall upon the thing covered. The image, therefore, is very pertinently used, to express the true evangelical nature of atonement; and the word is used, with equal propriety, to describe the mercy-seat ‡; which was a costly covering for the ark, made of pure gold, and exactly commensurate to that sacred repository. In this were lodged the tables of the law; whose precepts we have violated, and to whose curse we were subject. Consequently the mercy-seat, both by its situation, its extent, and its office, prefigured the REDEEMER: who interposes between the law and the offender; fulfils the commands, and sustains the curse of the former; merits pardon, and procures salvation for the latter.

As some fine flower; having entertained our eye with one beautiful colour, suddenly breaks, or gradually softens into another; and gives us a renewed pleasure: such, methinks, is the nature of this delightful word.——It is expressive of the hoar-frost ‖;

* Exod. xv. 17.

† כפרת Thou shalt besmear, cover, or overlay, Gen. vi. 14. This is the first place, in which our word occurs. It is supposed to give us the genuine and native sense of the phrase.—Perhaps the English expression cover, may be derived from the participle כפר copher.

‡ כפרת Exod. xxv. 17.

‖ כפור Psal. cxlvii. 16. The idea deduced from hoar-frost, which, in a ſerene, but ſharp wintry morning, covers the houſes, covers the trees, covers the whole face of nature. So, the blood of JESUS, according to the ſalmiſt's repreſentation, covers all our guilt, and hides every offence. Inſomuch that, when this blood is applied by the divine SPIRIT, the LORD ſees no iniquity in Jacob †. He acts, as if he ſaw none; neither punithes the guilty, nor abhors the polluted ſinner.

The ſame expreſſion is uſed with reference to a covenant, and ſignifies the abolition of the contract ‡; which was done by cancelling the deed, or expunging the articles of ſtipulation.—By the covenant of works, all mankind became obnoxious to condemnation; were bound over to death. By the grace of CHRIST, our obligation to puniſhment is diſannulled, and the hand-writing of condemnation is blotted out.—Should you aſk, How this is effected? By paying a ranſom, and offering a ſacrifice. Should you farther inquire, Of what this ranſom and this ſacrifice conſiſted? Of nothing leſs than the precious blood ‖, the ineſtimable life §, the divinely magnificent perſon of CHRIST ¶.

Ther. Theſe then are the capital ideas included in the original word, a covering by way of defence, and a covering by way of concealment.

Aſp. They are, Theron.—As the brain, in the animal body, is the ſource of ſenſation; ſends out various detachments of nerves, to animate and actuate all the parts of the vital ſyſtem: ſo, theſe two capital ideas branch themſelves into a variety of ſubordinate, yet ſimilar ſignifications; which run through the whole œconomy of the goſpel, to enliven and quicken the ſpirit of a believer. Let me inſtance in a few particulars. This richly-ſignificant word denotes—the exerciſe of divine mercy ⊥,—the pardon of ſin +,—a cleanſing from guilt ++,—purging from tranſgreſſion =,—reconciliation for iniquity ≃,—the pacifying of wrath .——Do not theſe paſſages (which are expreſſed by ſome branch of the verb, that conveys to us the idea of atoning) plainly intimate,—that the atonement of CHRIST is the meritorious cauſe of all theſe deſirable effects; is the foundation of every act of divine goodneſs; and the origin of every bleſſing vouchſafed to ſinners?

Ther. After all, this is the conſideration, which principally offends and perplexes me:—GOD is a ſpirit; an abſolutely-perfect and infinitely-pure being; remote, inconceivably-remote, from whatever is groſs or corporeal. How then can he take pleaſure in the effuſion of blood, or the burning of fleſh? How can any ſuch low carnal inducements make him merciful to ſinners; or appeaſe, what you call, his wrath?

Aſp. Rather, what the ſcriptures call his wrath.——You miſtake our doctrine, my dear Theron. We never maintain, that any ſacrifice whatever, not even the propitiation of CHRIST's death, was intended to make GOD merciful; only to make way for his eternal purpoſes of mercy, without any prejudice either to the demands of his law, or the rights of his juſtice.—Our ſentiments on this head, are exactly conſonant to his own declaration, and his own procedure, in the caſe of Job's friends *. Though diſpleaſed with their conduct, he was merciful to their perſons. Nevertheleſs, he would not exerciſe that mercy, till they had firſt offered a ſacrifice, and acted faith in a dying SAVIOUR.

Neither is it ever ſuppoſed, that the infinitely wiſe and pure GOD can take pleaſure in the effuſion of blood, or the burning of fleſh, ſimply conſidered; only as they had a reference to that noble and ineſtimable ſacrifice, which brings the higheſt honour to his name; which thoſe ſlaughtered animals exhibited in a figure; and to which every true Iſraelite had a believing regard.

I ſay, had a believing regard. For it is affirmed by the author to the Hebrews, that the goſpel was preached to the Iſraelites in the wilderneſs †.——What does he mean by the goſpel? The very eſſence of this benevolent ſcheme, according to the apoſtle's own definition, is, that CHRIST died for our ſins ‡.—How was this goſpel preached to our fathers in the wilderneſs? By ſignificant emblems; eſpecially by ſlaughtered animals, and bleeding victims; by which CHRIST was almoſt continually, though not ſo evidently as in theſe latter times, ſet forth crucified ‖ for ſinners.

In this ſenſe alone, thoſe carnal uſages were worthy the wiſdom of GOD to appoint, and the majeſty of GOD to accept.——This gave them a peculiar dignity and importance; and ſet them far above all the ſimilar obſervances uſed in the Heathen worſhip.—They were alſo, when thus explained, thus improved, extremely profitable to believers; as they directed their contemplation to the future ſufferings of a SAVIOUR, and ratified to their faith the benefits of his ever-operating ſacrifice; which, we are aſſured by an infallible voice, was effectual for the redemption of the tranſgreſſions under the firſt covenant §.

Ther. So you apprehend, that, in thoſe uſages practiſed by the ancient Jews, the goſpel was emblematically preached, and CHRIST in a figure exhibited.

Aſp. Moſt certainly, Theron. And for this cauſe, under the law, almoſt all things were purged with blood ¶. The multiplicity, the variety, the conſtancy of their ſacrifices, were all deſigned to impreſs upon their minds, and familiarize to their thoughts, this great evangelical truth.—Was any one overtaken by a fault? He muſt not ſo exact and ſtriking, in our northern clime, as in the more ſouthern regions. There, the exhalations and dews being more copious, the hoar-froſt muſt fall thicker, lie deeper, and more fully correſpond with the notion of covering.

---

* Pſal. xxxii. 1. † Numb. xxiii. 21.

‡ Iſ. xxviii. 18. כפר abolebitur. Proprie ſonat, oblinetur, obliterabitur, eſt enim כפר Hebræis proprie quid obducere atque inde eam obducta et oblita diſparent) delere, abolere. (Thus I apprehend, the words ſhould be pointed. According to the preſent punctuation, at leaſt in my edition, I can make out neither ſyntax nor ſenſe). Alluditer hoc loco ad fœdera ſcripto comprehenſa, quæ abolentur et irrita fiunt, ſi ſcriptura inducatur, cancelletur, antiquetur, obliteretur. VITRING. in loc.

‖ Not by the blood of goats and calves, but by his own blood. Heb. ix. 12.

§ The Son of man came to give his life a ranſom for many. Mark x. 45.

¶ Who through the eternal SPIRIT offered himſelf without ſpot to GOD. Heb. ix. 14.

† Deut. xxxii. 43. + Deut. xxi. 8. 2 Chron. xxx. 18.
++ Numb. xxxv. 33. = Pſal. lxv. 3. ≃ Dan. ix. 24.
 Ezek. xvi. 63.

---

* See Job xlii. 7. 8. † Heb. iv. 2. ‡ 1 Cor. xv. 3. ‖ Gal. iii. 1.

§ Heb. ix. 15. When I reflect on theſe words, I wonder how any one can aſſert, That all the Jews died under the curſe of the law. Died under the curſe of the law! Even though the apoſtle has warranted it for a truth that all theſe (meaning Abraham, Sarah, Iſaac, Jacob, &c.) died in faith, Heb. xi. 13. Even though he has elſewhere laid it down as a maxim, So then they which are of faith, in whatever period of time they live, or under whatever diſpenſation of religion they worſhip, are bleſſed with faithful Abraham. Gal. iii. 9.—Even though the pſalmiſt in one place, affirms, Bleſſed are they whoſe unrighteouſneſſes are forgiven, and whoſe ſin is covered; and in another place, declares concerning himſelf and his pious contemporaries; Look how wide the eaſt is from the weſt! ſo far hath he ſet our ſins from us, Pſal. xxxii. 1. Pſal. ciii. 12.

From theſe and many other texts, I think, it is evident, that the faithful Jews no more died under the curſe of the law, than the faithful Chriſtians. The death of CHRIST procured the pardon and acceptance of believers, even before he came in the fleſh. From the beginning, he had covenanted with the FATHER, to be their MEDIATOR; and GOD, to whom all things are preſent, ſaw the certain accompliſhment of his undertaking. He was therefore, by virtue of the divine decree, and in point of ſaving efficacy, a LAMB ſlain from the foundation of the world. Though he laid down his life in the reign of Tiberius, he was a real REDEEMER in all ages.

¶ Heb. ix. 22.

present a victim, and the priest must slay it, by way of trespass-offering; to signify, that the guilt which was contracted, could be done away only by the atoning death of CHRIST.—Had any one received a signal blessing? A beast was slain by way of peace-offering; as a public expression of gratitude for the mercy, and also as an emphatical declaration, that all good vouchsafed to fallen man, is owing to the REDEEMER's ransom.—Was any one to be invested with the priestly office, or admitted to minister in the sanctuary? A ram or a bullock must bleed by way of atonement, and for the purpose of consecration *; in order to testify, that no man can officiate with acceptance in the worship of GOD; that no service, though of a religious kind, can be pleasing in his sight; till the former is interested in the merits, unless the latter is recommended by the death, of the great HIGH PRIEST.

And not only by their solemn sacrificial acts, but even by their ordinary meals, this grand lesson was inculcated. They were forbidden to eat the blood, in order to awaken and preserve in their consciences, a reverential and fiducial regard to the precious blood of CHRIST. The HOLY GHOST, assigning a reason for this sacred prohibition, says expressly, Because the blood maketh an atonement for your † soul; the blood of beasts typically, the blood of CHRIST effectually.—O! that Christians would, in this particular, learn of Jews; learn, at least from Jewish ordinances, to have their attention incessantly fixed on that divine HIGH PRIEST; who, by one offering, hath perfected for ever,—not barely conduced or contributed to the work; but hath fully accomplished it, and obtained complete remission for—them that are sanctified ‡.

Ther. Some offerings were made without any effusion of blood. What could those mean? Or how could they typify the sacrifice of CHRIST?

Asp. Perhaps the apostle might foresee such an objection, when he used that guarded expression, Almost all things were purged with blood.—If, in these cases, there was no effusion of blood, yet there was a destruction of the substance. The meat-offerings were consumed by fire; which is much the same to inanimate things, as shedding of the blood is to living creatures.—The same effect is ascribed to these oblations, as to those of the sanguinary kind. It is expressly declared of the poor man's trespass-offering, which consisted of fine flour, and was burnt upon the altar, It shall make an atonement for him ||.—So that here also was, what we may truly call a visible prediction of CHRIST. The offerings which flamed, as well as the victims which bled, shewed forth our dying LORD, whose "one oblation of himself once offered," comprised all the qualities, and realized the whole efficacy represented by every other sacrifice.

Ther. Another odd circumstance has oft given me disgust, and been apt to prejudice me against the institutions of the Old Testament. Many of them appear mean, contemptible, and perfectly puerile. "Can these," I have said within myself, "be ordained by a GOD of "infinite wisdom, and transcendent glory? Can we rea- "sonably imagine, that a mandate should be issued "from the court of heaven, on purpose to forbid the "boiling, and injoin the roasting §, of some particular "piece of meat?—Will the great RULER of the skies "concern himself about the precise manner of killing "one bird, and releasing another ¶?—Will he, who "claims the worship of the heart, have such an especial "regard to a drop or two of despicable blood, put upon "the tip of the right ear, or the thumb of the right hand †? "—Surely, such childish ceremonies are too minute and "trivial for the notice, much more for the solemn ap- "pointment, of the supreme MAJESTY!"

* Lev. viii. 22. Numb. viii. 12. † Lev. xvii. 11.
‡ Heb. x. 14. || Lev. v. 11. 12. 13. § Exod. xii. 9.
¶ Lev. xiv. 4. 5. 6. 7. † Exod. xxix. 20.

Asp. You will please to remember, that, when those ceremonies were ordained, it was the infancy *, at least the minority, of the church. If we advert to this circumstance, we shall have reason to admire, both the all-comprehending wisdom, and the no less condescending goodness, of JEHOVAH.——His all-comprehending wisdom, in conforming, so accurately and so minutely the type to the event; though the former was established long, long before the latter existed. Many ages before the Desire of nations appeared, his picture was drawn, was presented to public view; and is now found to correspond, in every feature, with the illustrious original. What hand could be equal to such a task, but only the hand of an omniscient LIMNER?—His condescending goodness, in adapting the tenor of his revelation to the state of his people; speaking unto them, even as unto babes; not by naked precepts, or abstracted truths; but by earthly similitudes ‡, and (if I may so express myself) by embodied instructions; such as were level to their low capacities, and calculated to affect their dull apprehensions.

The institutions, to which you hint, were undoubtedly mean and trifling, if considered in themselves.—Accordingly their wise and majestic AUTHOR cautions his people against such erroneous and unworthy notions. "I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded "them, in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, "concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices ||. It was not my "design, that they should acquiesce in the shadow, and "neglect the substance. I never intended, that they "should rest in the porch, but pass through these ordi- "nances, to much sublimer things. CHRIST and "spiritual blessings were principally in my view: to "which all the Mosaical usages were relative, subser- "vient, and one continual manducation."—Considered in this light; as bearing a reference to the ever-blessed MEDIATOR; as emblems of his person, and pledges of his grace; they acquire a real magnificence, and convey the most salutary lessons.

The blood put upon the tip of the ear, and thumb of the hand, denotes our personal application of the death of CHRIST: without which all its virtue, though boundless and inconceivable, will profit us nothing. Those particular parts of the body, may signify the perceptive and executive faculties; in both which we offend, and for both which we need the great propitiation.——Of the two birds you mention, one was to be killed, the other was to fly away, after it had been dipped in the blood of its fellow. Thus the LORD JESUS was crucified for our sins; and we being washed in his blood, being interested in the atonement of our holy victim and elder brother, are acquitted from guilt, and escape condemnation.——Concerning the paschal lamb it was particulary injoined, That the flesh should not be eaten raw, nor sodden with

* St Paul calls the church of those times νηπιος, an infant, or babe, Gal. iv. 1. 3. And the ceremonial institutions have been styled with as much truth as ingenuity, Evangelium elementare et præliminare.
† 1 Cor. iii. 1.

‡ This seems to be our LORD's meaning, when he says to Nicodemus, If I have told you earthly things. He had been treating of that internal spiritual renovation, which is the root and spring of all holiness. He had been speaking of that divine SPIRIT, whose gracious and almighty agency produces this desirable change. The nature of the former was represented, under the similitude of a birth; by which we enter upon a new state, form new ideas, and habituate ourselves to new practices, pleasures, pursuits. The operations of the latter were described, by the common and well-known properties of the wind.—This he mentions as a plain and familiar method of teaching: this he opposes to telling him of heavenly things: or delivering refined and exalted truths, not accommodated to the capacity, not brought within the compass of an infantile understanding, by any assimilation to sensible objects. John iii. 12.
|| Jer. vii. 22.

water, but roaſted with fire; and of every offering from the herd, or from the flock, the fat and the inwards were, by an expreſs command of GOD, delivered up to the devouring flame. All this was an emblem of that tremendous indignation, which is poured out like fire *; which ſeized our immaculate SACRIFICE, that it might ſpare polluted ſinners; and which muſt have conſumed utterly any mediator, who was leſs than infinite, or other than divine.

Had you beheld our renowned Newton blowing up, with great aſſiduity and attention, his little watery veſicles into the air; you would, perhaps, have deſpiſed the venerable philoſopher, and have thought him little better than a hoary idiot. But when you was told, that, in every one of theſe volatile ſopy bubbles, he diſcovered the beauteous colours of the rainbow: and, from this ſeemingly-childiſh experiment, he explained the nature of that wonderful arch; you would then entertain a different notion, both of the man and of his employ.—So, when you diſcern the bleſſed JESUS looking forth at theſe windows, and ſhewing himſelf through theſe lattices † of the Jewiſh œconomy; you will, I hope, conceive a higher opinion of them, and derive richer advantage from them.

Ther. There are ſeveral perſons, as well as ritual obſervances, of a very ſingular character, mentioned in the Moſaic law. The leper, for inſtance, the Nazarite, with others of the ſame antiquated and groteſque ſtamp: which ſeem, to me at laſt, ſo many unmeaning narratives, that convey no manner of edification to readers in the preſent age.—I have frequently had an inclination, and now I have a proper opportunity, to aſk your opinion upon theſe points.

Aſp. I thank you, Theron, for giving me the hint. What you propoſe, is by no means foreign to the topic of our diſcourſe.—Thoſe perſons were truly remarkable; neither are the peculiarities of their caſe recorded in vain. They picture out, in diſmal and delightful colours, the ſinner and the SAVIOUR.—To know ourſelves, and to know CHRIST, is true wiſdom; is indeed the conſummation of all knowledge. Here we have a lecture of hieroglyphical inſtruction, on both thoſe important ſubjects.

The leper ‡ was an emblem of a ſinner.—His diſeaſe extremely-afflictive to himſelf, and intolerably-loathſome to others. Sin likewiſe is the ſoreſt of all miſeries, to the wretch who commits it; and moſt deteſtably-odious to the GOD who forbids it.—The leper was ſecluded from the benefits of ſociety, and all communication with his fellow-citizens. The ſinner alſo, while impenitent and unpardoned, is an alien from the common-wealth of Iſrael ‖; without any enjoyment of the comforts, or any intereſt in the privileges of the goſpel. If he dies in this condition, he muſt be for ever ſhut out from the kingdom of heaven; for ever cut off from the preſence of the LORD.

The contagion was ſometimes ſo peſtilent, that it not only tainted the clothes of the diſeaſed, but ſpread itſelf over the walls of his houſe, and infected the timber of the beams. It was ſometimes ſo inveterate, that it could be eradicated no other way, but by burning the garment, and demoliſhing the building. Does not this give us a clear, but melancholy view, of original corruption? which has transfuſed its poiſon through all the faculties of the ſoul, and all the members of the body; nor will ever be entirely expelled, till death releaſes the former, and conſigns the latter to the duſt.

What could cure this terrible diſtemper, even in its mildeſt ſtate? Not all the balm of Gilead; not all the drugs on a thouſand hills; nothing but the conſecrated oil and ſacrificial blood, duly applied by the high prieſt. And what can heal the diſorders of our fallen ſouls? ſo far heal them, as to purge away their guilt, and ſubdue the prevalence of their iniquities? No acts of mortification, no vigilance, nor any efforts of our own; nothing but the atoning death, and ſanctifying SPIRIT of the bleſſed JESUS. The malignity and virulence of this plague of the heart, are abſolutely incorrigible by any other expedient. But bleſſed be divine grace, this remedy, provided by our great HIGH PRIEST, and adminiſtered by our great PHYSICIAN, is ſovereign and never fails.

The caſe of the Nazarites * was the very reverſe of the ſtate of the lepers. Her Nazarites, Jeremiah ſays, were purer than ſnow, they were whiter than milk: they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their poliſhing was of ſapphires †. A faint repreſentation of the only begotten SON, who is the faireſt among ten thouſand: the brightneſs of his FATHER's glory, and the expreſs image of his perſon; both GOD and man in one ſacred, wonderful, adorable SAVIOUR.—They, during the time of their ſeparation, abſtained from wine; withdrew from ſecular buſineſs; avoided every kind of pollution; and dedicated themſelves, in an eſpecial manner, to the ſervice of GOD. A type of that glorious NAZARITE, who was ſeparated, for a ſeaſon, from the fruitions of heaven; who was holy, harmleſs, and undefiled, both in his nature and all his converſation; who ſanctified himſelf, and devoted his life and labours, his ſoul and body, to the glory of his FATHER, and the redemption of his people.—The Nazarites, even when they had diſcharged their vow, and were ceremonially clean, yet were obliged to offer a ſin-offering, a burnt-offering, and a peace-offering. So the great REDEEMER, though he had perfectly obeyed all the preceptive parts of the divine law, yet was required to offer up a ſacrifice,—even the incomparably-precious ſacrifice of himſelf,—in order to conſummate the work of our ſalvation.

Ther. Have you a ſufficient warrant for this ſtrain of interpretation? Is it ſound, is it rational, or conformable to any authentic ſtandard of ſcriptural expoſition? Methinks, it looks more like the child of fancy, than the offſpring of judgment; more like the ſally of a ſportive imagination, than the reſult of a ſober diſquiſition.

You cannot be ignorant, Aſpaſio, how the ruling paſſion tinctures the whole conduct. Hence it is, I apprehend, that your religious inamoratoes find heavenly beauties, where ſcripture intended no more than natural truths. Hence it is, that they turn plain facts into profound figures, and allegorize common ſenſe into pious abſurdity.—Have you never ſeen the myſtic interpretations of ſome ancient, and, I may add, ſome modern divines? The honeſty of their deſign is tranſparent, and the piety of their lives is unqueſtionable; otherwiſe we ſhould be tempted to ſuſpect, that they meant to burleſque the ſcriptures, and diſgrace their author.

Who can ever perſuade himſelf, that the ſupremely-wiſe GOD, would ſend us to ſearch for a body of divinity, in a bundle of rods? or ſet us to ſpin all the myſteries of Chriſtianity, from a few fleeces of wool, ring-ſtreaked, ſpeckled, and ſpotted ‡? Thus to expound the ſcriptures, is, not to open them clearly, and apply them judiciouſly, but rather to whip them into froth ‖.

Aſp. We have the authority of our LORD him-

---

* Nah. i. 6.

† Cantic. ii. 9. The word, in the firſt edition, is flouriſhing through. It was taken from the Hebrew, without conſulting the Engliſh Bible, and is a literal tranſlation of פרח. Which ſignifies more than barely ſhewing himſelf; ſhewing himſelf with luſtre and beauty: like a delicate flower, in its blooming ſtate, and gloſſy colours: yet flouriſhing through lattices; manifeſting himſelf, not completely, but in part; concealing ſome, while he reveals much, of his mediatorial glory.

‡ See Lev. chap. xiii. xiv. ‖ Eph. ii. 12.

* See Numb. chap. vi. † Lam. iv. 7.

‡ Gen. xxxi.

‖ Luther uſed to call ſuch far-fetched and unnatural allegories, ſpumam ſcripturæ.

ſelf; who has informed us,—That the brazen ſerpent lifted up in the wilderneſs *, was figurative of his own ſuſpenſion and death on the croſs:—That the temple, built on mount Sion, was typical of his immaculate body, in which dwelt all the fulneſs of the GODHEAD †:—That the prophet Jonah, lodged in the belly of the whale and diſcharged from that ſtrange confinement, on the third day ‡, was an emblem of his own deſcending into the grave, and riſing again before his fleſh ſaw corruption.

We have alſo the teſtimony and the practice of the chiefeſt of the apoſtles, for our warrant. He aſſures us, that the rock ſmitten by Moſes, had a reference to CHRIST ‖; who was wounded for our ſins, and is the foundation of our hopes: That the waters, iſſuing at the ſtroke, were ſignificative of thoſe ſpiritual bleſſings, which flow from a crucified SAVIOUR: That, as the former followed the ſons of Jacob, through all the circumvolutions of their tedious journey; the latter accompany the diſciples of JESUS, in every ſtage of their earthly pilgrimage.——Let the great teacher of the Gentiles be our expoſitor, and we ſhall ſee the veil of the temple dignified with a ſignificancy, richer far than its coſtly materials, and curious workmanſhip. Its ſilk and embroidery exhibit, to the eye of faith, the pure and ſpotleſs fleſh of CHRIST §. As, by rending the material veil, the holy of holies became viſible and acceſſible; ſo, by piercing the body, and ſpilling the blood of CHRIST, the GOD of heaven was manifeſted, and the way to heaven opened.

Every reader muſt admire thoſe divided waves; which, inſtead of overwhelming the Iſraelites with a reſiſtleſs deluge, ſtood like a wall of defence on their right hand, and on their left, as they marched through the depths of the ſea.—Every reader muſt admire that ſuſpended cloud, which ſpread itſelf like a ſpacious canopy over the hoſts of Iſrael; and ſcreened them from the annoying ſunbeams, as they paſſed through the ſultry deſert.—Our admiration muſt be heightened, when we find that which was a cloud by day, becoming a pillar of fire by night; and illuminating their camp with the moſt amazing, as well as the moſt chearing ſplendor—But St Paul diſcerned a greater glory, and a deeper deſign, in theſe unparallelled events. The people, he ſays, were baptized unto Moſes, in the cloud and in the ſea ¶. Theſe ſymbolically repreſented the baptiſm of water and of fire; or the application of CHRIST's blood to our ſouls, and the efficacy of his SPIRIT on our hearts. In the former of which, conſiſts our juſtification; from the latter of which, proceeds our ſanctification.

I fear, you will think my diſcourſe ſomewhat like the journey juſt now mentioned; but I muſt not wholly omit the epiſtle to the Hebrews; which is the moſt unexceptionable vindication, as well as the faultleſs model, of allegorical expoſition.——It is delightful to obſerve, what propriety of addreſs the inſpired writer uſes. He ſpeaks to the Jews in their own way; alludes to their own uſages, ordinances, and ceremonies; proves them to be types of, and guides to a more clear, a more benign, and in all reſpects a more excellent ‡ œconomy. More particularly he diſplays the tranſcendent ſuperiority of CHRIST and his gifts, even to thoſe perſons and privileges, which they held in the higheſt eſteem. Theſe, like the morning-ſtar, were introductory to, yet totally eclipſed by, the riſing ſun.

They had exalted apprehenſions of the angelic excellencies. The apoſtle therefore celebrates the REDEEMER, as the LORD whom angels obey, as the GOD whom angels adore.——They always reckoned Moſes to be the firſt favourite of heaven, and chief among the children of men. He lets them know, that Moſes, with all his extraordinary endowments, was but a ſervant in the houſe of JESUS. It was his greateſt honour, to miniſter unto this Prince of Peace.——As the prieſthood and ſacrifices were ſome of their diſtinguiſhing privileges; he ſhews the pre-eminence of CHRIST's office to all the Aaronic orders. He demonſtrates the extenſive and everlaſting efficacy of his one atonement, in preference to every form, and the whole ſeries of Levitical oblations.

Ther. Thus interpreted, I muſt acknowledge, the book of Levitical ceremonies is ſignificant and edifying. Whereas, abſtracted from this evangelical improvement, nothing can be more empty and jejune. I once thought, that, to peruſe thoſe obſolete canons, was like ſitting down to an entertainment of dry bones. But, if ſuch be their import, they may yield marrow and fatneſs to the attentive mind.

Due care, however, ſhould be taken, not to ſuppoſe a type, where there is no apparent foundation of analogy in the thing itſelf; or no hint of this nature given us by the unerring SPIRIT; leſt, inſtead of being guided by truth, we are bewildered by fancy.——And, when either or both theſe handles preſent themſelves, I think, we ſhould beware of ſtraining the ſubject beyond the bounds of a juſt and reaſonable compariſon: leſt, inſtead of following the clue, we ſtretch it till it breaks.——If the firſt caution is not obſerved, the ſenſe of ſcripture will lie ſo deep, or be removed to ſuch a diſtance, that none but perſons of the moſt acute diſcernment can find it, or none but perſons of the moſt excurſive imagination can reach it. If the ſecond is not regarded, the meaning of thoſe divine volumes will become ſo vague and volatile, that there will hardly remain any poſſibility of aſcertaining or fixing it.

Aſp. As to the expedience and neceſſity of theſe cautionary limitations, I have the pleaſure of agreeing entirely with my friend.——Let our fancy ſubmit to the reins of judgment, otherwiſe her excurſions will be wild and lawleſs. Let our zeal borrow the eyes of diſcretion, otherwiſe her efforts will be blind and extravagant. And let all, thus tempered, thus regulated, be under the influence of enlightening grace. Then, to ſpiritualize the ancient ſcriptures, will be to convert the ſtones of the ſanctuary into the jewels of a crown; and to fetch, not water only, but milk and honey, from the flinty rock.

Then, how pleaſing muſt it be, as well as inſtructive, to diſcover the bleſſed JESUS, in all the inſtitutions of the Moſaic law!—To ſee his incarnation prefigured by the feaſt of tabernacles *, when the Iſraelites were to relinquiſh their houſes, and lodge in booths. Even as the SON of GOD left the boſom of his FATHER, and the ſeats of bliſs, to inhabit a cottage of clay, and ſojourn in a vale of tears.——To ſee our ſpotleſs and divine VICTIM, typically ſlain at the joyful ſolemnity of the paſſover, and the anniverſary faſt of expiation.——To ſee his death, that ineſtimable ranſom for our ſouls, preſented to our faith, in every morning and evening ſacrifice †: his interceſſion, that prevailing recommendation of our prayers, moſt ſweetly

* John iii. 14. † John ii. 19. 21. Col. ii. 9.

‡ Matth. xii. 39. 40. ‖ 1 Cor. x. 4. § Heb. x. 20.

¶ 1 Cor. x. 2.

‡ He ſtyles the legal oblations, and indeed the whole ſervice of the Jewiſh ſanctuary, the example and ſhadow of heavenly things; or of CHRIST JESUS and evangelical worſhip, and ſpiritual bleſſings, Heb. viii. 5.—Υποδειγμα, the pattern: ſomewhat like the ſtrokes, pencilled out upon a piece of fine linen; which preſent you with the figure of ſprigs, of leaves, and of flowers; but have not yet received their ſplendid colours, their curious ſhades, and beautiful enrichments, from the labours of the needle.—Σκια, a ſhadowy repreſentation; which gives you ſome dim and imperfect idea of the body; but not the fine features, not the diſtinguiſhing air, none of thoſe living graces, which adorn the real perſon.—Yet both the pattern and the ſhadow lead our minds to ſomething nobler than themſelves. The pattern, to that which completes it; the ſhadow to that which occaſions it.

* Lev. xxiii. 34. 40. 42. † Exod. xxix. 38. 39.

ſweetly expreſſed by the rich incenſe, which attended the ſacred rite.—To ſee the various methods of purification; ſome pointing at the fountain * for ſin and for uncleanneſs, opened in our REDEEMER's bleeding heart; others referring to thoſe ſanctifying operations of the SPIRIT, which act as a refiner's fire †, or as fuller's ſoap.—To ſee, in the city of refuge ‡, that perfect ſecurity, which CHRIST's meritorious ſufferings in our ſtead, afford to every penitent and believing ſinner.

Was it ſo very affecting and ſo very encouraging to Æneas, when he beheld the ſtory of the Trojan heroes, pictured upon the walls of the Carthaginian temple ‖? How much greater encouragement and joy muſt ariſe in the Chriſtian's breaſt, when he perceives the amiable lineaments of his everlaſting FRIEND, pourtrayed in all the peculiarities of the Jewiſh worſhip, and in the moſt diſtinguiſhing events of the Jewiſh hiſtory! This muſt highly ennoble the Bible, and inexpreſſibly endear it to our affections. This ſpreads luſtre, life, and glory, through every page of that bleſſed book.—And though I would forbear indulging what might be called a pious wantonneſs of imagination; yet I ſhould much rather chuſe, in expounding the ſcriptures, to ramble with Auguſtine, than err with Grotius: ſee, or think I ſee my SAVIOUR, even where it may not, perhaps, be eaſy to make out the traces of his dignity, to the ſatisfaction of a rigorous inquirer; rather than ſhut my eyes upon the diſplay of his perfections, when they beam forth with the moſt inviting beauty.

Ther. How ſoon is this walk finiſhed! How imperceptibly has the time ſtole away!—Theſe garden-gates I always uſed to approach with a particular complacency. They ſeemed to afford me a welcome retreat from the impertinence and vanity of the world. Now, methinks, I enter them with reluctance, becauſe they are likely to put a period to this agreeable converſation.—However, as my Aſpaſio enters with me, I am reconciled, I am ſatisfied. It will be in his power to reſtore the pleaſure, which muſt now be interrupted. And this is what I ſhall 'ere long requeſt; becauſe I have not ſpoke my whole mind upon the preſent ſubject.

Aſp. Whenever you think proper, Theron. This is, to me, a favourite ſubject; and not to me only, but to incomparably better judges.—The man, who had been caught up into the third heavens, and ſeen the viſions of GOD, determined to know nothing but JESUS CHRIST and him crucified *.—At the grandeſt aſſembly, that ever was convened on earth, this furniſhed the principal, if not the only topic of converſation.—And in that world, where the voice of joy and thankſgiving is perpetually heard, this conſtitutes the burden of the ſong, Thou waſt ſlain, and haſt redeemed us to GOD by thy blood †.

* Exod. xxix. 4. Pſal. li. 7. Iſ. iv. 4. † Numb. xxxi. 23. ‡ Numb. xxxv. 11. 12. ‖ VIRG. Æn. I.

* 1 Cor. ii. 2. † Rev. v. 9.

DIALOGUE IV.

Ther. I MUST now deſire my Aſpaſio to inform me, what that grand aſſembly was, (which he mentioned in the cloſe of our laſt diſcourſe), and where convened?

Aſp. Can't you gueſs, Theron?—Was it in the plains of Theſſaly, when Xerxes drew together the forces of more than half the known world, and appeared at the head of all the potentates of the eaſt?—Was it in the Roman forum, when the ſenators were aſſembled in their robes, and the barbarians took them for a ſynod of gods?—No; it was on the mount of Tranſfiguration; where the SON of the true GOD, the LORD of eternal glory, ſhone forth in ſome of his celeſtial and native ſplendor; with garments white as the ſnow *, and a countenance bright as the ſun: where he converſed with two of his moſt diſtinguiſhed ſaints, juſt come down from the regions of bliſs and immortality: with Moſes the great deliverer of the law, and with Elijah the reſolute reſtorer of its honours: where he was attended by three of his principal ambaſſadors, who were to be the reformers of mankind, and the lights of the world.

This, I think, is the moſt venerable and auguſt aſſembly, that the annals of hiſtory have recorded.——And what was the topic of converſation, among theſe illuſtrious perſonages?—Not the affairs of ſtate, nor the revolutions of empire; not the curious refinements of literature, nor the wonderful diſcoveries of philoſophy; but the ignominious and bloody exit †, which the divine JESUS was ſoon to make at Jeruſalem.—This circumſtance, methinks, ſhould recommend the ſubject to our frequent diſcourſe; even though it was leſs eminent, for intrinſic dignity, and comfortable import.

Talking in this manner, they arrive at the park; which, the moment you enter, fills the view with its bold, enlarged, and magnificent ſweep.—It was diverſified with level and riſing ground. Here ſcooped into mimic amphitheatres; with the deer pendent on the little ſummit, or ſhooting down the eaſy precipice: there raiſed into gentle hillocks; ſome of which were canopied with a large, ſpreading, ſolitary oak; others were tufted with a cluſter of tapering and verdant elms. Two or three caſcades, gleaming from afar, as they poured along the ſlanting rock, or the graſſy ſlope, gave a pleaſing variation to the proſpect; while they ſtartled the timorous unexperienced fawns, with their foaming current, and watery roar.——Grandeur and ſimplicity ſeemed to be the genius of the place. Every thing breathed an air of noble negligence, and artleſs majeſty.

In the centre of all, roſe a curious romantic mount.——Its form was exactly round; ſomewhat like a ſugar-loaf, lopt off a little below the point.—Not coeval with nature, but the work of human induſtry. Thrown up, 'tis ſuppoſed, in thoſe perilous times, when Britain was alarmed by foreign invaſions, or bled with inteſtine wounds.——It was covered, all around, with alder-ſhrubs: whoſe ranks, gradually ariſing, and ſpreading ſhade above ſhade, compoſed a kind of woody theatre; through which were ſtruck two or three ſpiral walks; leading, by a gentle aſcent, and under embowering verdure, to the ſummit.—At proper intervals, and on every ſide of the hill, were formed little arborets; with apertures, cut through the boughs, to admit a proſpect of the country.——In one or other of theſe leafy boxes, you command, at every hour of the day,

* Mark ix. 3. The evangeliſt's deſcription is, like the ſcene, remarkably bright; and the gradation of his images is almoſt as worthy of obſervation, as the memorable fact.—The garments were white,—exceeding white,—white as the ſnow,—whiter than any fuller on earth could make them;—ſurpaſſing all the works of art, equalling the firſt and fineſt productions of nature.—Nay, ſo great was the luſtre, that it gliſtered (ἀστίλβοντα) like the lightning, and even dazzled the ſight.

† Does not this very delicately, yet very ſtrongly intimate, that the ſuffering and death of CHRIST were the principal end of the Moſaic inſtitutions, and the principal ſubject of the prophetic teachings? For is it not natural to ſuppoſe, that Moſes and Elijah intended, when miniſtering on earth, that very thing, which their converſation dwelt upon, when they deſcended from heaven?

either the enlivening ſun, or the refreſhing ſhade.—All along the circling avenues, and all around the beauteous reſts, ſprung daffodils, primroſes, and violets; which, mingling with hyacinths and cowſlips, compoſed many a charming piece of natural moſaic.

How agreeable, as they climb and wind themſelves round the hill, to reflect on the happy change which has now taken place!—Where ſteely helmets gleamed, or brazen ſhields claſhed, the goldfinches twitter their loves, and diſplay their painted plumes. The dens of rapine, or the horrid haunts of bloodſhed, are become the retreats of calm contemplation, and friendly converſe.—In yonder lower ſpaces, where the armed troops were wont to patrol; from whence they made excurſions, to ravage the villages, or terrify the ſwains; the fallow-deer trip lightly, or the full-headed ſtags ſtand at bay.

From a ſmall eminence, but at a conſiderable diſtance, guſhed a couple of ſprings; which, rambling through a grove, loſt one another in the ſhady labyrinth. Emerging, at length, from the gloom, they approached nearer and nearer, and fell into embraces at the foot of this hill. They rolled, in amicable conjunction, along the pebbly channel, which encircles its baſis; and added their ſober melody to the ſprightly warbling of the birds.—Flowing off in one common ſtream, they formed the fine pieces of water, which beautified the park. From thence, they ſtole into the meadow, and widened into a river. There, enamoured as it were with each other, they glide by wealthy towns, and ſweep through flowery vales; regardleſs of the blooming toys which deck the one, and of the noiſy crouds which throng the other.

So, ſaid Aſpaſio, my Theron and his Selina, pleaſing and pleaſed with each other, paſs through the buſy and the amuſing ſcenes of life; neither captivated by the one, nor anxious for the other. With ſuch harmonious agreement, and indiſſoluble union, may they purſue the courſe, marked out by Providence; their happineſs increaſing, and their uſefulneſs enlarging, as they draw nearer the ocean of all good! Then, parted by a gentle ſtroke of fate, like the waters of ſome ample ſtream ſevered by the piers of an intervening bridge, may they ſpeedily reunite!—reunite in conſummate bliſs, and never be ſeparated more!

Ther. I thank you, Aſpaſio, for your affectionate compliment. Nor can I with you, by way of return, a greater recompence, than the continual exerciſe of ſuch a benevolent temper. For to exerciſe benevolence, is to enjoy the moſt refined and exalted pleaſure; ſuch as makes the neareſt approaches to the felicity of the eternal mind; who, as the ſcripture moſt beautifully ſpeaks, has pleaſure in the proſperity of his ſervants.

But while we are ſeated on this mount, our ſituation reminds us of (what you juſt now mentioned) the grand conference relating to the death of CHRIST:—A buſineſs, for which you have indeed accounted; but in a manner that may be thought not the moſt honourable to the divine attributes.

Aſp. I have repreſented it as a ranſom for our ſouls, and a ſacrifice for our ſins. If you diſapprove my account, be pleaſed to favour me with your own.——For what purpoſe, according to your opinion, did that ever-bleſſed PERSON die?

Ther. To confirm the truth of his doctrine, and leave us a pattern of the moſt perfect reſignation.

Aſp. And is this all? Shall we thus impoveriſh the riches of grace?—Was this notion defenſible, it could never be deſirable. But it has as little to ſupport it as it has to recommend it.——For, upon ſuch a ſuppoſition, where is the difference between the death of CHRIST, and the death of the martyrs? They confirmed the truth of the goſpel. In their ſufferings was obedience and reſignation; the ſame in quality, though not in degree. Upon ſuch a ſuppoſition, what benefit could the ancient patriarchs receive from the REDEEMER? ſince none could be improved by the example of his patience, or the pattern of his obedience, till they were actually exhibited.—Or how could CHRIST be ſtyled *the LAMB ſlain from the foundation of the world? the advantages of whoſe death, commenced from the very beginning, as they will be prolonged even to the end of time.

Not to depend on conſequential arguments, let us hear the expreſs declaration of our divine MASTER himſelf: This is my blood, which is ſhed—for what? To give credibility to my goſpel, or yield an example of entire reſignation? Rather—for the remiſſion of ſins†. Will any one attempt to make the remiſſion of ſins, and the propoſal of a pattern, or the ratification of a doctrine, ſynonymous terms?—They who can torture and tranſmute the genuine ſenſe of words, at this extraordinary rate, may metamorphoſe any expreſſion into any meaning.

If then you would conſider our LORD's death in its due amplitude, we muſt conſider it, both as a pattern of piety, and as a ranſom for ſinners. We muſt neither ſeparate nor confound theſe very diſtinct, yet very conſiſtent effects.

Ther. Is it not inconſiſtent with the acknowledged principles of juſtice, that the innocent ſhould be puniſhed, inſtead of the offender?

Aſp. If the innocent perſon has an abſolute power over his own life; willingly ſubſtitutes himſelf in the place of the guilty; and, by his vicarious ſufferings, fully anſwers all the purpoſes of a righteous government;—in this caſe, which was the caſe with our LORD, I ſee not the leaſt repugnancy to the rules of juſtice.

The Bible, that authentic tranſcript of the counſels of heaven, avows; and, by avowing, vindicates the practice. The LORD hath laid on him the iniquity of us all‡. When all we like ſheep had gone aſtray, and were expoſed to the ſtroke of vengeance, as thoſe wandering creatures to the ravenous beaſt; the good

* Rev. xiii. 8. † Matth. xxvi. 28.

‡ Iſ. liii. 6. הפגיע בו made to meet, or fall upon, in an hoſtile, vindictive manner; with a deſign to take vengeance, or inflict death; as an armed man falls upon his enemy, or a fierce lion on the helpleſsla mb. This is by far the moſt uſual ſignification of the phraſe.

I could not obſerve, without ſurpriſe and ſorrow, the late attempt of a learned writer, to interpret away the force and ſpirit of this text. He ſays, "The word we tranſlate hath laid, is the "ſame that we render meet, Exod. xxiii. 4. If thou meet thine "enemy's ox or aſs going aſtray, thou ſhalt ſurely bring them back to "him again. And the meaning is, By him the LORD hath "cauſed to meet, and ſtop the iniquities of us all, wherein we have wandered from him."

To this I might object, that though the verb is the ſame, the conſtruction is by no means parallel. The prefix ב occurs in one caſe, is omitted in the other.—I might farther inquire, whether the language be conformable to the laws of grammar, and ſuch as ſufficiently expreſſes what I ſuppoſe is intended, "The LORD "cauſed our iniquities to be met, and to be ſtopped,"—But theſe particulars I wave, and ſhall only examine, whether the ſenſe is ſuitable to ſcripture. According to this gentleman's idea, the prophet's doctrine is as follows: "Our ſins were running away, "like a ſtray ſheep, or like a wandering ox. But they were met "by CHRIST, who graciouſly turned them back, and reſtored "them to their rightful owner."—To avoid this glaring impropriety, our author has added a kind of ſalvo; "to turn us back to himſelf, who is "the SHEPHERD of ſouls." But this is to depart from the prophet's ſubject, who is ſpeaking not of us, but of our iniquities. This is to depart from the tenor of his own explication. If he adheres to the clue, which he borrows from the book of Exodus, what I have repreſented, is the unavoidable conſequence.

See! to what wretched ſhifts, diſhonourable to the word of GOD, and even to the art of criticiſm, they muſt have recourſe, who refuſe to acknowledge the real ſubſtitution of CHRIST in our ſtead, and the proper atonement made by his death!—How much more like a true critic, and like a true Chriſtian, has Vitringa explained the paſſage! Cum nos inſtar ovium diſperſarum eſſemus in erroribus, et pœna criminum noſtrorum, inſtar lupi aut beſtiæ voracis, nos perſequeretur ad exitium: intervenit ſervus JEHOVÆ juſtus, qui illam pœnam in ſe ſuſcepit: in quem irruit ad necem uſque: quique adeo medius inter pœnam et nos, eandem pœnam tulit, et nos ab exitio vindicavit.

SHEPHERD

SHEPHERD interpoſed, and the juſt GOD made that vengeance to fall upon him, which muſt otherwiſe have been executed upon us. He ſuffered, ſays another inſpired writer, the juſt for the unjuſt *, that, by expiating our guilt, he might bring us to GOD, now to his gracious favour, hereafter to his bliſsful preſence.

You will permit me to add a paſſage, from our common favourite Milton: becauſe it is no leſs beautiful in itſelf, than it is pertinent to the occaſion; muſt pleaſe the critic, and may expound the apoſtle.—MESSIAH, pleading in behalf of fallen man, thus addreſſes his Almighty FATHER:

——Man, dead in ſins and loſt,
Atonement for himſelf, or offering meet
(Indebted and undone!) hath none to bring.
Behold me then! me for him! life for life
I offer. On me let thine anger fall.
Account me man: I for his ſake will leave
Thy boſom, and this glory next to thee
Freely put off; and for him laſtly die
Well-pleas'd; on me let death wreak all his rage †.

Ther. The fine imagination of a poet, will hardly paſs for a deciſive argument. When we are ſearching after truth, we muſt attend to the dictates of reaſon, not follow the vagaries of fancy. And Reaſon, Aſpaſio, remonſtrates againſt your notion of a vicarious ſacrifice: Reaſon! that primary guide, and final teſt, both in diſcovering and determining the ſenſe of ſcripture.

Aſp. Suppoſe you then, my dear Theron, that none are in poſſeſſion of reaſon, but the pupils of Socinus, and the zealots for Deiſm? or that none make uſe of reaſon, in their religious inquiries, but men of this mould?

Wrong not the Chriſtian, think not reaſon yours;
'Tis reaſon our great MASTER holds ſo dear;
'Tis reaſon's injur'd rights his wrath reſents;
'Tis reaſon's voice obey'd his glories crown.
Through reaſon's wounds alone thy faith can die ‡.

Poets, you ſee, are far from diſclaiming Reaſon.—Equally far is Chriſtianity from diſcarding the ſober, the ſanctified uſe of this noble faculty. When reaſon is under the influence and direction of the divine SPIRIT, we have the ſame high opinion of her excellence, as yourſelf. And, when thus regulated, we have, I am perſuaded, the ſanction of her authority, for all our ſentiments.

Reaſon, as ſhe operated in the ſages of the Heathen world, inſtead of rejecting, approved and adopted this very ſcheme; approved it, even under the diſadvantage of a mutilated and defective, or rather of a perverted and dead form. The current language of the claſſic authors, and almoſt every hiſtorian of Greece and Rome, are vouchers for the truth of this obſervation ‖.——As the Gentiles were unanimous in the cuſtom of offering ſacrifices, and equally unanimous in ſuppoſing their vicarious nature, ſo alſo are the Jewiſh writers.

Ther. What man of ſenſe pays any regard to the Jewiſh writers? Legendary they are, and extravagant to the laſt degree. Dotards I might call them, rather than writers.

Aſp. They are, I believe, extravagant enough in their comments upon ſcripture. But they relate, with ſufficient exactneſs and fidelity, the prevailing belief of their nation. In this caſe, their teſtimony is as unexceptionable, as, in the other, their notions are chimerical.—Now, had it been a miſtaken belief, ſurely our bleſſed LORD, that infallible Judge, and impartial Reprover, would have teſtified his diſapprobation of it. Surely his diſciples, who were actuated by the unerring and undaunted ſpirit of their MASTER, would have entered their proteſt againſt it. Surely St Paul, in his epiſtle to that very people, and in his treatiſe on that very ſubject, would have ſet himſelf to rectify ſuch an error; and have weeded out the tares, before he ſowed the good ſeed. But there is not the leaſt hint of this kind, in all the diſcourſes of our SAVIOUR, or in all the writings of his apoſtles.

They ſpeak to a people, who were accuſtomed to look upon their ſacrifices as piacular oblations *, and a typical expiation of guilt. They ſpeak of our REDEEMER's crucifixion, and the benefits of his death, in the ſacrificial terms, that were of current uſe, and eſtabliſhed ſignification. If therefore the popular opinion was improper, their manner of expreſſion and addreſs muſt be calculated rather to authenticate error, than to propagate truth.—So that, I think, even the ſilence of the inſpired penman on this occaſion, is but little inferior to a loud atteſtation. Did they only ſay nothing againſt the doctrine of ſatisfaction by ſacrifice; it would in effect, and circumſtances conſidered, be ſaying abundance for it.——But they are very copious and explicit upon the point.

Ther. Where are they ſo copious? If you have ſuch a heap of their allegations, it will be eaſy to pick out a few, and give us a ſpecimen.

Aſp. It is as eaſy, Theron, as it is delightful.—MESSIAH ſhall be cut off, ſays the prophet Daniel, but not for himſelf †.——For whom then, and for what? Iſaiah informs us concerning both: For the tranſgreſſion of my people was he ſtricken ‡.—Becauſe this is an article of the laſt importance, it is repeated, it is confirmed, it is explained, with the moſt remarkable particularity: He was wounded for our tranſgreſſions; he was bruiſed for our iniquities; the chaſtiſement of our peace was upon him, and with his ſtripes we are healed ‖.——Our LORD himſelf aſſerts the ſame truth in the very ſame ſtyle; I am the good ſhepherd, and lay down my life for the ſheep §. St Paul, in a multitude of paſſages, ſets his ſeal to this momentous doctrine.——St Peter maintains it, in very forcible words; Who his own ſelf bare our ſins in his own body on the tree ¶.

The ſacred writers not only aſſert this capital article, but uſe every diverſity of ſpeech, in order to give it the fulleſt evidence, and the ſtrongeſt eſtabliſhment.—He made reconciliation for the ſins of the people ⸸.——JESUS CHRIST the righteous is the propitiation for our ſins ⸸⸸.——He loved us, and waſhed us from our ſins in his own blood ⸸⸸⸸.——He was made ſin for us, though he knew no ſin ⸸⸸⸸⸸.

Ther. No body makes any objection to theſe texts. But the ſenſe, the true ſenſe of ſuch phraſes, is the thing in queſtion.

Aſp. What you call the queſtion, to me appears ſo plain, as not to want a deciſion, or admit of a doubt.

However, ſince you ſeem to demand a critical ſcrutiny, it will not be thought pedantic, if I make an obſervation or two upon the original languages; or rather, as you are not acquainted with the Hebrew, on that language, of which you yourſelf are a judge and a maſter.

If one died for all, then were all dead. The preposition ὑπὲρ, in this connection, muſt neceſſarily ſignify more than "on our account, or for our advantage." Becauſe, if it be taken in this unſettled rambling ſenſe, the apoſtle's argument is vague and inconcluſive.——In caſe our LORD had ſuffered, only "to free us from

* 1 Pet. iii. 18. † MILTON, book III. 233.
‡ Night-Thoughts, No. IV.
‖ See the note ‖, in Dialogue III. page 133.

* This, I think, is inconteſtibly proved by Outram, in his treatiſe de ſacrificiis.

† Dan. ix. 26. ‡ Iſ. liii. 8. ‖ Iſ. liii. 5.
§ John x. 15.

¶ 1 Pet. ii. 24. Very forcible words indeed.——Ος—αὐτος—ἁμαρτιας ἡμων—ἐν τῳ σωματι αὐτου—He bare—himſelf bare—our ſins—in his own body: intended, one would imagine, to make the article of our LORD's vicarious ſufferings clear beyond all miſapprehenſion, and ſure beyond all doubt.

⸸ Heb. ii. 17. ⸸⸸ 1 John ii. 2. ⸸⸸⸸ Rev. i. 5. ⸸⸸⸸⸸ 2 Cor. v. 21.

"ſome

"ſome evil, and procure us ſome benefit;" this would by no means imply, that all were dead, under the ſentence of condemnation, obnoxious and doomed to death *. The utmoſt you can infer from ſuch premiſes, is, that all ſtood in need of a deliverance from ſome evil, or wanted the procurement of ſome good. Whereas, ſuppoſe the ſacred writer to intend, that our LORD's death was truly vicarious, and undergone in our ſtead; that he ſuffered what was our due and our doom; then the reaſoning is juſt, and the inference undeniable.

He gave himſelf αντιλυτρον υπερ παντων †, a ranſom for all. If this does not imply the notion of vicarious, I very much queſtion, whether language itſelf can expreſs it.—Λυτρον, is a ranſom; which conveys a vicarious ſenſe, in its moſt common and authoriſed acceptation.—Αντι, which is equivalent to inſtead ‡ ſtill more fully aſcertains and ſtrengthens the idea.—Υπερ, which is tranſlated for, and denotes a ſubſtitution of one in the place of another ‖; this added to all, renders the expreſſion as determinate and emphatical for the purpoſe, as words can poſſibly be.

Shall I argue from a more obvious topic, which has no ſuch dependence on the preciſe ſignificancy of the original?—Surely, ſays the prophet; he ſpeaks with vehemence, as of an affair which is very weighty; he ſpeaks with confidence, as of a fact which is very certain: he hath borne our griefs, and carried our ſorrows §. What can this mean, but he hath taken upon himſelf that affliction, and thoſe miſeries, which properly belonged to us?—Let us read on, and this meaning will preſent itſelf in the cleareſt view. We did eſteem him ſtricken, ſmitten of GOD, and afflicted: we took him for a real malefactor, and thought that he was puniſhed for his own miſconduct. In oppoſition to which injurious and falſe ſurmiſe, it is added; But he was wounded for our tranſgreſſions, he was bruiſed for our iniquities.——May I not here borrow the prophet's language, and ſay with an air of certainty? Surely this is the plaineſt proof in the world, that our ſins were the meritorious cauſe of CHRIST's ſufferings. And if our ſins were the meritorious cauſe of his ſufferings, our guilt muſt be charged upon him, and puniſhed in him.

St Paul affirms, that CHRIST has delivered us from the curſe of the law *. How? By taking our place, and enduring what we deſerved; or, as the apoſtle himſelf ſpeaks, to the ſame effect, but in a much more emphatical manner, by being made a curſe for us. Does not this evidently denote both a commutation of perſons, and a tranſlation of puniſhment? He ſuffered, who was innocent; not we, who are guilty.——He alſo ſuffered that very ſentence, which the law denounced on us. For it is written, Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things †: to this we were obnoxious. It is written again, Curſed is every one that hangeth on a tree ‡; to this CHRIST ſubmitted. And if CHRIST endured the very curſe, which we deſerved; if, by this means, he delivered us from all malediction; either this muſt be ſuffering in our ſtead ‖, or elſe nothing can be called by that name.

Shall I deſcend lower ſtill, and refer our point to the determination of illiterate men?—Aſk any of your ſerious tenants, what ideas ariſe in their minds, upon the peruſal of the aforementioned texts?—I dare venture to foretel, that, artleſs and unimproved as their underſtandings are, they will not heſitate for an anſwer. They will neither complain of obſcurity, nor aſk the aſſiſtance of learning; but will immediately diſcern in all theſe paſſages, a gracious REDEEMER ſuffering in their ſtead; and, by his bitter, but expiatory paſſion, procuring the pardon of their ſins.——Nay farther, as they are not accuſtomed to the fineſſes of criticiſm, I apprehend they will be at a loſs to conceive, how it is poſſible to underſtand ſuch paſſages in any other ſenſe.

Say not, this is an improper appeal; or theſe are incompetent judges. The ſcriptures were written for their edification; not to exerciſe the ingenuity of ſubtile diſputants, but to inſtruct the meaneſt of mankind in the way of ſalvation. Therefore, on fundamental articles, we may aſſuredly conclude, the expreſſion will be eaſy, and the doctrine perſpicuous: ſo that he who runs may read, and the wayfaring men, though fools §, ſhall not err therein.——And, though I am far from undervaluing the aids of literature, yet, upon thoſe momentous ſubjects, which are inſeparably connected with our eternal felicity, I cannot but regard the common ſenſe of plain, honeſt, humble Chriſtians, as the very beſt of critics.

Ther. It has been ſaid by a learned critic, That vicarious puniſhment or ſuffering, gives us too low ideas of the SON of GOD, as it ſinks them to the pain and ſuffering of a malefactor, the very meaneſt idea we can have of them.

* 2 Cor. v. 14. † 1 Tim. ii. 6.

‡ Αντι, Matth. ii. 22. By this word the Septuagint tranſlate the Hebrew תחת. And that תחת denotes the ſubſtitution of one inſtead of another, no ſtudent of the ſacred language will venture to deny. See Gen. xxii. 13. 2 Sam. xviii. 33. 2 Kings x. 24.

‖ Δεομεθα υπερ Χριστου, We beſeech you in CHRIST's ſtead, 2 Cor. v. 20.—Ινα υπερ σου διακονη μοι, that in thy ſtead he might have miniſtered unto me, Philem. ver. 13. As I was conſidering the force of this argument, a certain four-looking gloomy mortal came in my way; and deſired, I would introduce him to Theron and Aſpaſio, as an evidence for fixing the ſignification of the prepoſition υπερ, when relative to the death of CHRIST.—I muſt confeſs I did not like either his character or his aſpect; and cannot certainly tell, whether any perſon has made uſe of him, on this occaſion. But St John ſtood by, and ſaid, "Introduce him. He propheſies in this "inſtance."—Perhaps the reader is at a loſs to gueſs whom I mean. To keep him no longer in ſuſpenſe, I mean Caiaphas the high prieſt.—He bears the following teſtimony; IT IS EXPEDIENT FOR US, THAT ONE MAN DIE FOR THE PEOPLE; AND THAT THE WHOLE NATION PERISH NOT.—Now, as to periſh ſignifies, not only to die, but to die miſerably; if one man dies for the people, that the people may not die miſerably, he ſaves them from death, by dying himſelf; and what is this, but to die in their ſtead? See John xi. 50.

To this teſtimony from the mouth of an enemy, let me add an atteſtation under the hand of our friends, and then leave the impartial reader to determine, concerning the validity of all. Thus writes Clemens Romanus; Το αιμα αυτου εδωκεν υπερ ημων Ιησους Χριστος ο Κυριος ημων, και την σαρκα υπερ της σαρκος ημων, και των ψυχην υπερ των ψυχων ημων. Epiſt. 1. ad Corinth.—Exactly to the ſame purpoſe, Juſtin the Martyr expreſſes himſelf; Αυτος του ιδιου υιου απεδοκε λυτρον υπερ ημων, του αξιου υπερ ανομων, του αναιτιου υπερ των κακων, του δικαιου υπερ των αδικων, του αφθαρτου υπερ των θνητων. Epiſt. ad Diogn. § Iſ. liii. 4.

* Gal. iii. 13. † Deut. xxvii. 26. ‡ Gal. iii. 13.

‖ "This (ſays Dr South, in his ſmart manner) is ſpoke ſo plain "and loud by the univerſal voice of the whole book of GOD, that "ſcripture muſt be crucified as well as CHRIST, to give any other "tolerable ſenſe of the expreſſions."—And not ſcripture only, but the common import of language. What ſays Mezentius, when his ſon, interpoſing in his behalf, is ſlain by Æneas?

——Pro me hoſtili paterer ſuccedere dextræ
Quem genui? tuane hæc, genitor, per vulnera ſervet?
Morte tua vivens?

Here, the father is ſaved by his ſon's wounds; lives by his ſon's death. How, and in what manner? By a ſubſtitution of one inſtead of the other; by the ſon's ſuffering, what muſt otherwiſe have fallen upon the father.—Should the Socinian interpreters try the ſame experiment on theſe lines of Virgil, which they make upon paſſages of a parallel ſignification in ſcripture; is there a critic in the whole world, that could approve, that could endure, ſuch flagrant violations of grammar, ſenſe, and taſte?—Yet I believe, there is no ſincere Chriſtian, but would readily and gratefully ſay;

——Pro me ultrici ſuccedere dextræ
Dignaſti. Tua, CHRISTE DEUS, per vulnera ſervet: Morte tua vivens.

§ Iſ. xxxv. 8. The word fools, ſeems to denote perſons of ſlow underſtanding, and dull apprehenſion; as Luke xxiv. 25. Or elſe it ſignifies thoſe, who, for want of a cultivated education and the improvements of literature, are accounted fools by the ſons of ſcience; as 1 Cor. i. 27.

Aſp.

Asp. The idea is plainly ſuggeſted by the word of prophecy, and ſupported by the atteſtation of ſacred hiſtory. Thus it was foretold, and in this it is recorded, that he was numbered with tranſgreſſors *.—To this purpoſe ſpeaks St. Paul, though ſomewhat more cautiouſly than your Socinian. He was made, not indeed ſinful fleſh, but in the likeneſs of ſinful fleſh; and, though perfectly innocent, was left to endure the vengeance due to the vileſt miſcreants.

Yes, my dear Theron; that glorious PERSON, whom the higheſt angel adores, "ſuffered, as if he had been the criminal, the pain and puniſhment, which we, or equivalent to that which we, the real criminals, ſhould have ſuffered."—If to conſider this, gives us a low idea; to ſuffer this, was a deep abaſement; how exceedingly high, and how immenſely grand, is the goodneſs and the grace manifeſted therein! The lower you draw the arrow on the ſtring, the loftier flight it makes in the ſky. And the greater our LORD's humiliation for us, the more wonderful and adorable his love to us.

Ther. As there cannot be a vicarious guilt, or as no one can be guilty in the ſtead of another; ſo there cannot be a vicarious puniſhment, or no one can be puniſhed inſtead of another: becauſe puniſhment, in its very nature, connotes guilt in the perſon who bears it.

Aſp. If you mean by guilt, the conſciouſneſs of having committed a ſin, and the internal defilement conſequent upon it, we never ſuppoſe ſuch a vicarious guilt. It is not ſo much as intimated, that CHRIST was ſtung with the remorſe, or ſtained with the pollution of the adulterous David, the perfidious Peter, and the perſecuting Saul; but that he was treated by the righteous GOD, as if he had perpetrated theſe, and all the crimes of all believers, either in the paſt or ſucceeding ages.

If by guilt you mean, the charge of a criminal action, and the obligation to ſuffer penalty, your aſſertion is nothing more than begging the queſtion. It nakedly affirms the very thing in debate. And bare affirmations, unſupported by evidence, are ſeldom admitted as deciſive proofs.—We, on the other hand, are inclined to believe, that all our criminal actions were charged upon CHRIST, and that he ſuffered the puniſhment which they deſerved. The former of theſe is not ſo properly called vicarious guilt, as real guilt, contracted by one, imputed to another. The latter we readily allow to be vicarious puniſhment, ſuſtained in their ſtead, whoſe guilt was imputed.——For both theſe points we have the authority of truth itſelf, ſpeaking in the ſcriptures. The LORD laid on him the iniquities of us all; here is the imputation. CHRIST has redeemed us from the curſe of the law, being made a curſe for us; here is the vicarious puniſhment. And you know, to what caſuiſts we ſubmit the interpretation of theſe texts;—common ſenſe, and an honeſt heart.

Ther. Is not this ſhocking to ſuppoſe? horrid to affirm? If guilt was really imputed to CHRIST, then puniſhment was his due.—Juſtice might inſiſt upon it,—and he could not eſcape it.

Aſp. To ſuppoſe this, is ſo far from ſhocking my apprehenſion, that it appears, even on your own principles, right and neceſſary.——Right, becauſe puniſhment, as you yourſelf have declared, always connotes guilt; I would add, either contracted, or at leaſt imputed. And indeed the ſufferings of CHRIST could not be of a penal nature, unleſs he endured them as under a charge of guilt.——It is neceſſary to ſuppoſe this, otherwiſe how will you vindicate the juſtice of GOD? He bid his ſword awake, and ſmite the † the bleſſed JESUS. But ſhall the JUDGE of all the earth do wrong? Shall he ſmite, where there is nothing but innocence? no guilt, either perſonal or imputed? That be far from him! The thought be far from us!

Whereas, upon this ſuppoſition, it becomes a juſt and righteous thing, that GOD ſhould inflict, and that CHRIST ſhould ſuſtain, the moſt rigorous puniſhment. And I do not know, but this might be the cauſe of our LORD's ſilence, when he was accuſed at Pilate's bar, and at Herod's judgment-ſeat. It is probable, he conſidered himſelf as ſtanding before a higher tribunal; and reſponſible to eternal juſtice, for the criminal actions of all his people. In this ſituation, and in this capacity, clear himſelf of perſonal demerit he could; clear himſelf of imputed guilt he could not. Therefore he was dumb; he opened not his mouth. For though, as the SON of the moſt high GOD, glory and immortality were his undoubted right; yet, as the SURETY for ſinful men, tribulation and death were his condign portion.

And why ſhould this be thought ſhocking? It is not the leaſt derogation to the tranſcendent excellency of CHRIST. It caſts not the leaſt ſtain on the unſpotted ſanctity, either of his nature, or his life.—To bear ſin, as a voluntary ſurety, is infinitely different from committing it, as an actual tranſgreſſor. To ſay, that CHRIST was puniſhed for any irregularity of his own, would be falſe, impious, and horrid. To ſay, that he was charged with our guilt, and endured the puniſhment due,—in the plain and full ſenſe of the word due,—to our ſins, is ſo far from being injurious to his dignity, that it pays the proper honour to his mediatorial undertaking. It pays him the honour of—the higheſt obedience to his FATHER's will,—the deepeſt humiliation of his own illuſtrious perſon,—and the moſt boundleſs benevolence to mankind.

Ther. GOD is love, Aſpaſio, all love. Whereas you would——

Aſp. not often interrupt a friend's diſcourſe. But I cannot forbear interpoſing a query, on this occaſion.—Is there, then, no juſt diſpleaſure in the DEITY? What meaneth that ſolemn denunciation of the ſupreme LAWGIVER? The anger of the LORD ſhall ſmoke againſt that man *.——What meaneth that awful declaration of the apoſtle? The wrath of GOD is revealed from heaven, upon all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men †.——Or in what ſenſe are we to explain that alarming interrogatory of the prophet? Who can ſtand before his indignation? and who can abide in the fierceneſs of his anger ‡?—Whence could thoſe avenging viſitations proceed, which deſtroyed Sodom and Gomorrah with a tempeſt of fire ‖? which ſwept away ſo many thouſands of the polluted Iſraelites with a raging peſtilence §? and conſigned over ſo many millions ¶ of rebellious angels to chains of darkneſs?

Surely, Theron, if there be any determinate ſignification in language; if any leſſon to be learned from the moſt tremendous judgments; it is, that the LORD, though free from all the diſcompoſure of paſſion, is nevertheleſs angry with the wicked ‡; and will make impenitent offenders feel the effects of his wiſe and holy indignation.

* If. liii. 12. Luke xxii. 37.

† Zech. xiii. 7.

* Deut. xxix. 20. † Rom. i. 18. ‡ Nah. i. 6.

‖ Gen. xix. 24. § Numb. xxv. 9.

¶ Millions.—The number of the fallen angels is no where ſpecified; and the veil ſits deep upon the ſpiritual world; ſo that we can ſee no farther than revelation has diſcovered. Yet, I think, there is ſufficient room to ground a conjecture upon the reply which one of thoſe execrable apoſtates made to our LORD. My name is legion, (a word ſignifying a great multitude, five or ſix thouſand); for we are many. If ſo many were employed in tempting and tormenting a ſingle perſon, what armies, what myriads of thoſe inviſible enemies, muſt exiſt through univerſal nature!—It is an alarming thought; ſhould make us fly to our divine PROTECTOR, and almighty DELIVERER. See Mark v. 9. and 2 Pet. ii. 4.

† Pſal. vii. 11. Deut. ix. 8.

Ther. Does not your doctrine repreſent the all-merciful GOD as a rigorous being? who, when once diſpleaſed, will hardly be pacified? Whereas, the LORD himſelf declares by his prophet, Fury is not in me.——Men of ſatirical wit would be apt to inſinuate, that you had miſtaken JEHOVAH for Moloch, and was erecting a Chriſtian church, in the valley of the ſon of Hinnom.

Aſp. We take our repreſentations of GOD, not from the vain conjectures of men, but from the records of infallible truth. There he is deſcribed as a righteous GOD; a jealous * GOD; and, to incorrigible ſinners, a conſuming fire †; though wonderfully condeſcending, yet tranſcendently majeſtic; inſomuch that none of the fallen race are permitted to approach his throne, but only through the intervention of a great MEDIATOR ‡; and without ſhedding of blood, even the blood of a PERSON higher than the heavens, there is no remiſſion ‖ of any offences.

When the LORD ſays, Fury is not in me §, the words have a peculiar reference to his church; which, in a preceding verſe, he had ſtyled, a vineyard of red wine. The connection ſeems to denote, that his fierce anger was turned away from his people, on account of the ſatisfaction made by their SAVIOUR.—Though his own people are the objects, not of his indignation, but of his love, let no ungodly wretches audaciouſly preſume. It is not ſo with them. They are the briers and thorns ¶ mentioned in the next clauſe; cumberers of the ground, unprofitable and noxious. Them he warns; them he challenges; Who will ſet them in battle againſt me! Let them come on; they ſhall find it a fearful thing to fall into the hands of the living GOD.—Nay; he will not ſtay for their approach: I will mareh againſt them, is his threateniug; I will paſs through them; I will burn them together.—This will certainly be the caſe, if not in the preſent, yet in a future world. When once the maſter of the houſe is riſen up, and has ſhut to the door, mercy is gone for ever. Then nothing muſt be expected, nothing will then be experienced, but vengeance and fiery indignation, to devour the adverſaries of the goſpel. GOD will then execute judgments in anger, and in fury, and in furious rebukes †; with ſuch awful ſeverity and immenſe glory, as will cauſe heaven to adore, and hell to tremble.

Yet in all this there is not the leaſt tincture of that outrageous temper, which in man we properly call fury. In man fury implies an immoderate degree of reſentment, which will hearken to no reaſoning, and accede to no terms. The goſpel-account proves, even to a demonſtration, that this has no place in the divine nature. So far from it, that GOD, though highly provoked, has provided an atonement,—has made overtures of reconciliation to his diſobedient creatures,—has even beſought ++ a guilty world, to accept forgiveneſs. This is the purport of that gracious invitation, which follows in the prophet: Let him, let the wicked man, forſake his way; and take hold of my ſtrength: let him fly to my crucified SON, who is the power of GOD for the ſalvation of ſinners; cleaving to his merits by faith, as ſome poor delinquent to the horns of the altar *. Thus he ſhall make peace: all his iniquities ſhall be forgiven, and all my diſpleaſure ſhall be pacified.—So that the inſinuations of our ſatirical gentlemen are as egregiouſly miſtaken, as they are ſhockingly worded.

You are a man of ſenſe, Theron; and eſteem that character, far above the idle reputation of a wit. As ſuch, let me aſk you ſeriouſly, Is it not for the honour of the divine MAJESTY, to exerciſe juſtice, as well as mercy? Always to pardon and never to puniſh, would be tameneſs, rather than benignity; a renunciation of holineſs, rather than a diſplay of goodneſs.—Or can it be right in us, ſo extravagantly to magnify the amiable, as to depreciate, nay even annihilate, the awful attributes of the DEITY?—This, ſays a poet, is the theology, not of Chriſtians, but of infidels;

Who ſet at odds heav'ns jarring attributes,
And with one excellence another wound;
Maim heaven's perfection, break its equal beams,
Bid mercy triumph over—GOD himſelf,
Undeified by their opprobrious praiſe:
A GOD all mercy is a GOD unjuſt †.

Ther. But we have lately been told, that the pardoning grace of the LAWGIVER is not obſtructed by any demands of law and juſtice. For he can ſet them aſide.

Aſp. What! Set aſide a law, which is holy, righteous, and good!—Set aſide a juſtice, which is eternal, inflexible, and infinite!—St Paul gives a very different ſolution of this difficulty. He tells us,—not that GOD ſet aſide his law and his juſtice;—but that he ſet forth the bleſſed JESUS for a propitiation, through faith in his blood; with this expreſs deſign; that he might declare his righteouſneſs ‡; might demonſtrate, not only his clemency, but his juſtice; even that vindictive juſtice, whoſe eſſential character and principal office is, to puniſh ſin.

This ſeems to be the import of the word righteouſneſs, in the preſent connection, and, I think, more than ſeems, if we conſult the following verſe: To declare, I ſay, at this time his righteouſneſs; that he might be juſt ‖, evidence himſelf to be ſtrictly and inviolably righteous, in the adminiſtration of his government; even while he is the all-forgiving, gracious JUSTIFIER of the ſinner that believeth in JESUS.—According to this plan, mercy and truth meet together; righteouſneſs and peace kiſs each other §; all the attributes harmonize; every attribute is glorified; and not one ſuperſeded, no, nor ſo much as clouded.

Ther. If ſome are verging to one extreme, are not you inclining to the other? Our ears tingle and our blood runs chill, at the very thoughts of ſo ſevere a vengeance, executed on an object ſo worthy and illuſtrious.——Beſides, how can we ſuppoſe, that the beneficent CREATOR and PRESERVER of men ſhould take pleaſure in the ſufferings of the moſt unblameable perſon that ever exiſted? eſpecially, ſince

---

* Exod. xx. 5. † Heb. xii. 29. ‡ John xiv. 6.

‖ Heb. ix. 22. Heb. vii. 26. § Iſ. xxvii. 4.

¶ There is a fine contraſt between the vineyard and the thorns; at the ſame time a regular continuation of the metaphor. As nothing is more common, than to ſee the latter ſhooting up amidſt the former; ſo nothing is more common, than to have hypocrites intermingle themſelves with believers.

† Ezek. v. 15.

++ 2 Cor. v. 20. It was an inſtance of ſingular compaſſion in the bleſſed GOD, that, though offended with Job's friends, he admitted of a ſacrifice, and directed them to an intercеſſor; both typical of CHRIST JESUS. But what unparalleled condeſcenſion, and divinely tender mercies, are diſplayed in this verſe! As though GOD did beſeech you by us; we pray you in CHRIST's ſtead be ye reconciled to GOD.—Did the judge ever beſeech a condemned criminal, to accept of pardon? Does the creditor beſeech a ruined debtor, to receive an acquittance in full? Yet our almighty LORD, and our eternal JUDGE, not only vouchſafes to offer theſe bleſſings, but invites us,—entreats us,—with the moſt tender and *re*importunity ſolicits us,—not to reject them!

* This is the preciſe idea included in the original פגע; and the idea is as charming, as the image is expreſſive. Iſ. xxvii. 5. 1 Kings i. 50.

† Night-Thoughts, No. IV.

‡ Rom. iii. 25.

‖ Rom. iii. 26. The attribute of juſtice muſt be preſerved inviolate. And inviolate it is preſerved, if there was a real infliction of puniſhment on our SAVIOUR. Nothing leſs can thoroughly clear up this great evangelical paradox,—JUST, YET JUSTIFIER OF THE UNGODLY!

§ Pſal. lxxxv. 10.

he

he himſelf has made this tender declaration, I will have mercy, and not ſacrifice *.

Aſp. A tender declaration indeed it is; ſignifying, that GOD is better pleaſed with the duties of humanity and charity, than with the moſt coſtly and pompous train of ſacrifices; nay, that he will even diſpenſe with the obſervance of his own ceremonial inſtitutions, when they interfere with our exerciſe of beneficence one to another; thus reſigning (ſo admirable is his goodneſs!) the ſervices due to himſelf, for the benefit and comfort of his creatures.——But all this has no ſort of relation to the ſacrifice of CHRIST; which was the moſt noble, and the moſt acceptable oblation, ever made to the KING of heaven.

We are aſſured by a prophet, that it pleaſed the LORD to bruiſe his holy child JESUS. GOD not only gave up his SON to ſufferings, but gave him up with a divine complacency †.——In like manner, the bleſſed JESUS addreſſed himſelf to the dreadful taſk, not only without reluctance, but with the utmoſt alacrity ‡. I delight to do thy will, was the language of his ſoul.——Should you aſk, How could the SON take pleaſure in undergoing, or the FATHER in inflicting, ſuch amazing ſorrows? No otherwiſe, than upon account of thoſe grand and everlaſting advantages which were to reſult from them.

"A ſevere vengeance," you ſay, "ſuch as makes our "ears to tingle."——This is the very thing intended, to awaken and alarm preſumptuous offenders; that they "may hear, and fear, and do no more wickedly." It is ſuch a method of diſpenſing grace, as is calculated to ſtrike the deepeſt terror, even while it cheriſhes the brighteſt hope;—ſtrike the deepeſt terror on every perſevering ſinner,—while it cheriſhes the brighteſt hope in every penitent tranſgreſſor.

Ther. If one of my ſervants had affronted or injured me; I ſhould, upon his ſubmiſſive acknowledgment, forgive his fault, and not inſiſt upon ſatisfaction for the wrong. Will you make the FATHER of compaſſions more inexorable in his nature, more rigid in his demands, than a human MASTER?

Aſp. When you have a ſervant, that owes his being to your power; that has received innumerable benefits from your bounty; yet has offered you innumerable affronts, all attended with the moſt aggravating circumſtances, and all in defiance of the moſt righteous threatenings;—when you are poſſeſſed of infinite majeſty, and unblemiſhed ſanctity; when truth inviolable, and juſtice inflexible, are eſſential to your character;—then, Theron, the parallel will hold good; and your conduct ſhall be a pattern for the procedure of JEHOVAH.

Till then, you and I muſt be willing to forgive, becauſe GOD has made it our bounden duty; and becauſe we have incomparably more to be forgiven by the JUDGE of the world, than we can poſſibly remit to our fellow-creatures. In the mean time, you will allow the great GOD, who is glorious in holineſs, to communicate his heavenly favours in a manner becoming himſelf; on ſuch auguſt and honourable terms, as ſhall maintain the rights of his univerſal government, and manifeſt the glory of his adorable attributes.

Ther. Might not GOD have cancelled our tranſgreſſions, and received fallen men into his favour, without any propitiation?—To deny this, would be to limit the HOLY ONE of Iſrael; and impoſe conditions on that uncontrollable Sovereign, who giveth no account of any of his matters.

Aſp. We need not embarraſs ourſelves, by entering upon inquiries, which may ſeem to lie beyond the limits of human underſtanding. Enough for us to know, that this propitiation was abſolutely neceſſary with regard to the firſt covenant. For as GOD had ſolemnly declared, In the day thou eateſt thereof, dying thou ſhalt die; his truth and juſtice ſtood engaged to execute the threatening. And no ſecond Adam could reſtore the firſt, but by taking this curſe upon himſelf.

Die man, or juſtice muſt; unleſs for him
Some other able, and as willing, pay
The rigid ſatisfaction, death for death *.

Therefore the divine JESUS, who lay in the boſom of the FATHER, and knew the counſels of heaven, ſays, The Son of man muſt be lifted up † on the croſs.—— There was a neceſſity for his crucifixion: Becauſe this was ſtipulated in the covenant of peace, made between the FATHER and the SON:—Becauſe it was expreſsly foretold by the ancient prophets, (and the ſcripture cannot be broken), that the MESSIAH ſhould be cut off out of the land of the living:—Becauſe a variety of types, and a multitude of ſacrifices, prefigured his death: one of the types pointed out the very manner of his ſuffering; and all the ſacrifices, detached from their dependency on this great oblation, would have been beggarly elements,—mere unavailing empty ceremonies.

I apprehend, it is no limitation of the great GOD, to ſuppoſe him incapable of acting otherwiſe, than in perfect and perpetual conſiſtency with himſelf.——Neither is it any infringement on his abſolute ſovereignty, that he cannot but order all affairs for the honour of his juſtice, his fidelity, and each of his exalted perfections.—This is the very thing which the ſacred writers expreſs in their plain but ſtrong language, GOD who cannot lie ‡; He cannot deny himſelf ‖.

Ther. GOD is often ſaid to forgive our ſins; particularly, in that ſublime paſſage, where he proclaims his name to Moſes; The LORD, the LORD GOD, merciful and gracious, long-ſuffering, abundant in goodneſs and truth; keeping mercy for thouſands, forgiving iniquity, tranſgreſſion, and ſin. Now, pardon is a free thing. Freeneſs is implied in the very nature of forgiveneſs. Take

* Matth. ix. 13.

† Divine complacency.—This is the idea included in the original word חפץ, Iſ. liii. 10. Which is but poorly and faintly repreſented by the εὐδόκησε of the Septuagint. It correſponds with the vigorous phraſe, uſed by the voice from heaven, ἐνδόκησα, Matth. iii. 17. Or it may be very exactly tranſlated by St Paul's beautiful expreſſion, εὐαρεστεῖται, Heb. xiii. 16.—In conformity to this ſentiment, the great JEHOVAH is ſaid to ſmell a ſweet ſavour, or a ſavour of reſt ריח נחוח in thoſe ſacrifices, which prefigured the crucified JESUS, Gen. viii. 21.

‡ Utmoſt alacrity.—There is no inconſiſtency between this aſſertion, and our LORD's ſupplication; FATHER, if it be poſſible, let this cup paſs from me; nevertheleſs, not my will, but thine be done. Such a deprecatory requeſt, put up with ſo much earneſtneſs, yet with ſo much ſubmiſſion, only ſhews the extreme ſeverity of our REDEEMER's anguiſh, and the prodigious weight of his woes. And this indeed it ſhews beyond the power of deſcription.—His ardent love to mankind, and his fervent zeal for his FATHER's glory, prompted him to deſire theſe ſufferings. His invincible reſolution and unequalled magnanimity, emboldened him not to decline, but to meet them. Yet they were ſo great, ſo terrible, that his nature, being human, could not but recoil a little, and be ſtartled at their approach; and, had it not been divine alſo, muſt inevitably have ſunk under the load.

* Milton, Book III. 210.

† John iii. 14. Δεῖ τον, &c. The ſame expreſſion is uſed, Luke xxiv. 26.—Perfectly conformable to this leading truth, is the current language both of the law and of the goſpel. Under the law, GOD himſelf ſays, I have ſworn, that the iniquity of the houſe of Eli ſhall not be purged כופר וכמנחה with ſlaughtered-offering, or with meat-offering for ever; that is, no kind of oblation ſhall be accepted; the guilt ſhall never be expiated, 1 Sam. iii. 14. Under the goſpel, the apoſtle declares, If we ſin wilfully, by a final apoſtaſy from CHRIST, there remaineth no more ſacrifice for ſins; they are, to ſuch perſons, and in ſuch circumſtances, abſolutely irremiſſible, Heb. x. 26.—Which phraſes are evidently connected with, and founded on, this grand doctrine, That the appointed, the only way of obtaining pardon from the righteous GOD, is by the intervention of an expiatory ſacrifice.

‡ Tit. i. 2. ‖ 2 Tim. ii. 13.

away

away the former, and you deſtroy the latter.——If an equivalent be given, pardon is no longer pardon, but a purchaſe. Forgiveneſs ceaſes to be an act of grace, and becomes the payment of a debt.

Aſp. The text you quote is truly ſublime, and equally comfortable. But you forget to mention one article of very great moment, which cloſes and completes the glorious character; which ſeems added on purpoſe, to prevent any wrong apprehenſions of the DEITY, and to guard againſt all abuſe of the doctrine: He will in no wiſe clear the guilty *.——GOD will not, on any conſideration whatever, abſolve the obſtinate, perſevering, irreclaimable offender; neither will he acquit any of the guilty race, abſolutely, unconditionally, or without ſuch a ſatisfaction as may repair the honour of his injured law.

We have redemption through his blood, ſays the apoſtle, even the forgiveneſs of our ſins †. It is forgiveneſs, you ſee, though bought with a price. It is remiſſion, though procured by blood.——It is free, with regard to that ſovereign BEING, who pardons. For he was under no obligation to admit of a propitiatory ſacrifice; but might, without any diminution of his dignity, have left all mankind to periſh in their ſins.——It is free, with regard to the obnoxious creatures, who are pardoned. For it is vouchſafed, without any ſatisfaction demanded at their hands, or any penalty inflicted on their perſons.——It is in this reſpect alſo free, that an intereſt in the great atonement is granted to us, without the leaſt merit, or any deſerving qualifications of our own.

In all this, GOD is not only merciful, but moſt tenderly and immenſely merciful. And will any one calumniate this adorable method of exerciſing mercy? becauſe proviſion is alſo made for the glory of GOD's truth, GOD's holineſs, and ſupreme authority?

Ther. Does not your notion of a propitiatory ſacrifice, derogate from the goodneſs of the almighty FATHER, and transfer all our obligations to the incarnate SON?

Aſp. Is there not goodneſs, in allowing a ſubſtitute to ſuffer in our ſtead?——Is there not ſtill greater goodneſs, in providing a ſubſtitute for us, without any ſolicitation on our part?—Is there not the very higheſt exertion of goodneſs, in appointing a dear, an only, an incomparably-excellent SON for the purpoſe?——This marvellous ſcheme, far, very far from obſcuring, moſt illuſtriouſly diſplays the ſuperabundant loving-kindneſs of the FATHER.

GOD ſo loved the world, apoſtate and pollated as it was ——How did he love it? To a degree unutterable by any tongue; inconceivable by any imagination; and only to be expreſſed by the infinitely-precious effects. Loved it ſo, that he gave his only begotten SON, that whoſoever believeth on him ſhould not periſh, but have everlaſting life ‡. And does this derogate from the goodneſs of the almighty FATHER, to give, not barely pardon and life, but give them through the hands, nay, through the wounds, the agonies, the death of his divineſt, deareſt SON?

Such privileges, vouchſafed on any terms, muſt challenge the devouteſt acknowledgments. But, when attended with this additional demonſtration of favour, they are enough to inflame us with gratitude, and tranſport us with admiration. They not only manifeſt, but commend * the divine love; ſhew it to the greateſt advantage, in the higheſt perfection, with every circumſtance of recommendation and endearment.——By this means, bleſſed GOD, thou haſt unſpeakably enhanced thy benefits! thou haſt rendered them, though invaluable in themſelves, exceedingly more ſo, by the manner of conferring them!

Ther. Again in your elevations, Aſpaſio?—The world, you know, is grown very rational and inquiſitive; will admit nothing but upon clear evidence, and full conviction. We expect, in all religious inquiries, not the flights of fancy, or the ſallies of zeal, but a ſobriety of reaſon and ſolidity of argument.

Aſp. The world, rational as it is, ſeems, by the taſte of the preſent age, no enemy to works of fancy. The world, therefore, may not be diſpleaſed with an affecting ſtory. And a ſtory, ſuitable to the occaſion, juſt occurs to my mind; ſuch as may ſerve to ſhadow forth, though very faintly, the ſurpaſſing benignity and grace of our crucified LORD.

An Aſiatic queen, departing this life, left behind her three accompliſhed ſons; all arrived to years of maturity. The young princes were at ſtrife, who ſhould pay the higheſt reſpect to their royal mother's memory. To give ſcope for their generous contention, they agreed to meet at the place of her interment; and there preſent the moſt honourable gift they knew how to deviſe, or were able to procure.——The eldeſt came, and exhibited a ſumptuous monument, conſiſting of the richeſt materials, and ornamented with the moſt exquiſite workmanſhip.——The ſecond ranſacked all the beauties of the blooming creation; and offered a garland of ſuch admirable colours, and delightful odours, as had never been ſeen before.——The youngeſt appeared, without any pompous preparation; having only a cryſtal baſon in one hand, and a ſilver bodkin in the other. As ſoon as he approached the tomb, he threw open his breaſt, pierced a vein, that lay oppoſite to his heart; received the blood in the tranſparent vaſe; and, with an air of affectionate reverence, placed it on the beloved parent's monument.——The ſpectators, ſtruck with the ſight, burſt into a ſhout of general applauſe, and immediately gave the preference to this laſt oblation.

If it was reckoned ſuch a ſingular expreſſion of love, to expend a few of thoſe precious drops, for the honour of a parent; O! how matchleſs! how ineffable was the love of JESUS, in pouring out all his vital blood, for the ſalvation of enemies!

Ther. My greateſt objection is ſtill to come.——If CHRIST ſuffered in our ſtead, he muſt ſuffer that very puniſhment which was due to our iniquities. This your orthodox divines affirm to be incomparably worſe than bodily death; to be nothing leſs than the everlaſting diſpleaſure of GOD.

Aſp. The puniſhment due to our iniquities, was ſhame, death, and the divine wrath.

As for ſhame——Was ever ſhame like that ſhame which our deſpiſed REDEEMER bore! Though Prince

* He will in no wiſe clear the guilty, Exod. xxxiv. 7. This text is not without its difficulty, eſpecially in the original.—Steuchus interprets the words, Et innocens non erit ſine piaculo: He ſhall not be acquitted without a piacular ſacrifice.—I think, they may be tranſlated, with a little more propriety and exactneſs, thus; Pardoning iniquity, tranſgreſſion, and ſin, נקה לא ינקה though not with impunity; or rather, though he will by no means let it go unpuniſhed, meaning ſin: which is the immediate antecedent; is expreſſed in the three preceding words; and may very properly be referred to in this clauſe. Then the ſenſe will be as follows; "Though "GOD pardons ſin, yet it ſhall not go unpuniſhed. He will "certainly inflict his righteous vengeance, and exerciſe his puni- "tive juſtice, though not on the ſinner, whom he ſpares; yet on "the SURETY, whom he has provided."—In the ſame manner Coccejus renders the paſſage, et non exercens impunitatem; and expounds it much to the ſame purpoſe.—We have this very word in the ſame remarkable conſtruction, Jer. xxx. 11. נקה לא אנקך which is tranſlated, and with ſufficient fidelity; I will not leave thee altogether unpuniſhed.

† Eph. i. 7. ‡ John iii. 16.

* Rom. v. 8. Συνιστησι. It ſeems to be an image taken from the practice of tradeſmen; who, in ſhewing their goods, point out their excellencies, and ſet, in the cleareſt light, whatever may beſpeak their worth, or recommend them to the purchaſer.—Perhaps, it may allude to the cuſtom of ſending, with ſome favourite and worthy perſon, recommendatory letters: in which his good qualities are deſcribed, and every thing is mentioned, that may embelliſh his character, and render his preſence reſpectable. In this ſenſe St Paul uſes thoſe nearly-related words, συνιστανειν, συνιστανες, 2 Cor. iii. 1.

of the kings of the earth, yet born in a ſtable, and laid in a manger. When an infant, exiled, from his own country, and a vagabond in a foreign land.—When engaged in the diſcharge of his miniſtry, accuſed of the moſt flagitious crimes, and branded with the blackeſt names.——When brought to his exit, apprehended as a thief; condemned as a malefactor; nay, the vileſt of malefactors, a robber and a murderer is preferred before him.——His executioners poured contempt upon all his venerable offices. As a king, they ridiculed him, but putting a mock-ſceptre into his hand; and crowning him with ragged thorns *, inſtead of a royal diadem. They vilified his prophetic character, by hood-winking his eyes; ſtriking his bleſſed head; and then aſking, in cruel deriſion, Who it was that ſmote him †. They caſt reproach upon his prieſtly undertaking, when they ſharpened their tongues with malicious irony, and ſhot out thoſe bitter words; He ſaved others, himſelf he cannot ſave ‡.—To render his infamy as public, as it was ſhocking, they hung him on a tree; and expoſed him, defiled as he was with ſpitting, and diſfigured with wounds, to the gazing eyes and contumelious ſcoffs of numberleſs ſpectators.

If you doubt, whether CHRIST ſuſtained the wrath of GOD, let us follow him to the garden of Gethſemane. A ſcene, which I would always recollect, when I walk along the fertile vale, or expatiate amidſt the flowery garden ‖, or enjoy the delights of any rural retirement.—— He had no remorſe, to alarm his ſpotleſs conſcience; yet fearfulneſs and trembling came upon him. No violence was offered to his ſacred perſon; yet a horrible dread overwhelmed him.—'Twas night, cold night; and though our divine MASTER lay proſtrate upon the earth, amidſt the fall of chilling dews, he ſweat,—ſweat blood,—ſweat great drops of blood, running down in reeking ſtreams to the ground.——He was anointed with the oil of gladneſs above his fellows §; yet ſo inſupportable was his affliction, that he could not forbear crying out, My ſoul is ſorrowful,—exceeding ſorrowful,—ſorrowful even unto death ¶!—What cauſe, what adequate cauſe, can be aſſigned for this amazing anguiſh? None but the wrath of his almighty FATHER; who was now become an inexorable JUDGE; treated him no longer as the SON of his love, but as the SURETY for unnumbered millions of guilty creatures.

Ther. Was it poſſible, that the innocent and holy JESUS, the dearly-beloved SON of GOD, ſhould be an object of his FATHER's wrath?

Aſp. It was not only poſſible, but unavoidable and neceſſary. Unavoidable, with reſpect to the divine holineſs; neceſſary, for the procurement of our redemption.—Sin was charged upon CHRIST; all the ſins of all believers, in all ages and places of the world. And could the infinitely-righteous GOD behold ſuch a deluge of iniquities, (thoſe abominable things, which he hateth), without expreſſing his diſpleaſure? Or could the bleſſed JESUS be puniſhed, truly puniſhed for them, without any painful ſenſation of their horrid evil, and of that tremendous indignation which they deſerved?

If this was not the caſe, who can maintain the dignity of his conduct, during the agony in the garden? Was there no pouring out of the divine diſpleaſure? Then his behaviour in that hour of trial, did not equal the intrepidity of the three Hebrew youths; who continued calm, and without the leaſt perturbation, while the furnace was heated into ſevenfold rage *.—But if this was the time, in which, no created arm being ſtrong enough to give the blow, it pleaſed the LORD to bruiſe him †; if the moſt high GOD bent his bow like an enemy, and ſtood with his right hand as an adverſary ‡; it is eaſy to account for the prodigious conſternation of our REDEEMER. It is not to be wondered, that his heart, though endued with otherwiſe invincible fortitude, ſhould become like melting wax. For who knoweth the power of that wrath, at which the pillars of heaven tremble ‖?

Ah! Theron, the vinegar and the gall which they gave him to drink, were not half ſo bitter, as the cup of his FATHER's wrath. Yet, for our ſake, he drank it off to the very dregs.—The nails that pierced his hands, and the ſpear that cleft his heart, were not half ſo ſharp, as the frowns of his eternal FATHER's countenance; which, for our conſolation, he patiently ſubmitted to bear.—He was rent with wounds, and racked with pain; his bones were diſlocated, and his nerves convulſed; a thouſand thorny daggers were planted in his temples, and life flowed out at ten thouſand guſhing veins. Yet this, all this was gentle, was lenient, in compariſon of thoſe inexpreſſible agonies, which penetrated his very ſoul. The former fetched not a ſingle complaint from his mouth; the latter wrung from his breaking heart that paſſionate exclamation; My GOD! my GOD! why haſt thou forſaken me?—Aſtoniſhing words! Surely, a diſtreſs, beyond all imagination grievous §, uttered them. Surely, the vengeance, not of men, but of heaven itſelf, extorted them. Every ſyllable of which ſpeaks, what the mourning prophet deſcribes, Is it nothing to you, all ye that paſs by? Behold and ſee; if there be any ſorrow like unto my ſorrow, wherewith the LORD hath afflicted me, in the day of his fierce anger ¶?

Here, now, is our whole puniſhment endured; the ſhame of the croſs, and the ſorrows of death; the ſuſpenſion of the ALMIGHTY's favour, and the terrible ſenſations of his wrath.

Ther. Be it ſo. Yet all this amounts to no more than part of payment. For theſe ſufferings were tranſient; temporary only, not eternal. Therefore the main circumſtance, the moſt bitter ingredient, was wanting.

Aſp. In the eſtimate of divine juſtice, and in point of penal ſatisfaction, they were equivalent to our endleſs puniſhment; eſpecially, if we conſider the ſeverity of the ſufferings, and the dignity of the SUFFERER.

The ſeverity of the ſufferings.——At the laſt day, all thoſe fierce eruptive flames, which have raged in Ætna, in Veſuvius, and in every other burning mountain throughout the world;—all thoſe confined ſubterra-

* To have crowned the bleſſed JESUS with ſtraw, would have been a vile inſult, and treating him like an ambitious madman. But to crown him with keen, pungent, lacerating thorns, was adding cruelty to their inſults; unheard of barbarity to the moſt contemptuous mockery, Matth. xxvii. 29.

† Scornfully inſinuating, that his ſacred prophetic office was fit for nothing, but to ſerve ſuch deſpicable purpoſes, Matth. xxvi. 68.

‡ Matth. xxvii. 42.

‖ Alluding to the evangeliſt's deſcription of Gethſemane, who repreſents it as a garden; and to the etymology of the word, which ſignifies a fat or fruitful valley, גת שמנים John xviii. 1. Matth. xxvi. 36.

§ Pſal. xlv. 7. ¶ Matth. xxvi. 38.

* Dan. iii. 16, 17, 18.

† Iſ. liii. 10. ‡ Lam. ii. 4. ‖ Job xxvi. 11.

§ To heighten our idea of this diſtreſs, the evangeliſts make uſe of the moſt forcible words—ηρξατο εκθαμβεισθαι, he was ſeized with the moſt alarming aſtoniſhment—αδημονειν, he was overwhelmed with inſupportable dejection—περιλυπος, he was beſieged on all ſides, as it were, with an army of invading ſorrows—He wreſtled, amidſt ſtrong cries and tears, not only with the malice of men, and rage of devils, but with the infinitely more dreaded indignation of GOD: he wreſtled even unto an agony of ſpirit, γενομενος εν αγωνια. All theſe circumſtances of horror and anguiſh, conſtitute what a celebrated poet very juſtly ſtyles,

A weight of woe more than ten worlds could bear!

The critic, probably, will admire the propriety and beauty of this line: which, compoſed of nothing but monoſyllables, and clogged with the frequent repetition of a cumbrous conſonant, makes the ſound remarkably appoſite to the ſenſe.—May we all be ſacred critics! have, not only a refined taſte, to reliſh ſuch elegancies of compoſition, but an awakened heart, to feel the energy of ſuch important truths!

‡ Lam. i. 12.

rean fires, which have ſo terribly ſhaken the foundations of Jamaica, Sicily, and Conſtantinople;—in a word, the whole element of fire, however employed through all the revolutions of time, where-ever diffuſed through all the regions of the globe, will then be collected from all quarters, and burſt forth in one vaſt, reſiſtleſs, general conflagration. In ſome ſuch manner, all that wrath, which was due to the innumerable multitude of ſinners, redeemed from every kindred, and tongue, and people, and nation; which, if executed on the offending creatures, had been prolonged to eternal ages; all that wrath was contracted into one inconceivably-dreadful blaze, and at once poured out upon the interpoſing SURETY, at once flamed forth on our heavenly VICTIM.—This will appear more than probable, if, among other particulars, we contemplate the unequalled magnanimity of our LORD, who is ſtyled the Lion of the tribe of Judah *; and compare it with his bloody ſweat in the garden, and his exceeding bitter cry on the croſs †.

The dignity of the SUFFERER.—Had our SAVIOUR's ſufferings been the ſufferings of a mere man, or of the moſt exalted angel, I acknowledge, they could have bore no proportion to our demerit. It were impoſſible for a finite being, to ſuſtain the wrath, or diſcharge the debt. But they were the ſufferings of the PRINCE of heaven, and the LORD of glory; before whom all men are as duſt, and all angels as worms.—Was an infinite MAJESTY offended? An infinite MEDIATOR atoned. Weigh the dignity, the immenſe dignity of the REDEEMER's perſon, againſt the everlaſting duration of our puniſhment, and it will not only counterbalance, but preponderate. Finite creatures can never make an infinite ſatisfaction; no, not through the moſt unlimited revolution of ages. Whereas, when our divine LORD undertook the work, being truly and properly infinite, he finiſhed it at once.——So that his ſufferings, though temporary, have an all-ſufficiency of merit and efficacy. They are, in this reſpect, parallel; nay, on account of the infinitude of his nature, they are more than parallel to an eternity of our puniſhment.

It was EMMANUEL, it was the incarnate GOD who purchaſed the church, and redeemed the ſinners, with his own blood ‡. The eſſential grandeur of our SAVIOUR communicated its ennobling influence to every tear he ſhed, to every ſigh he heaved, and, every pang he felt. This renders his ſufferings as perfect, as their vicarious nature renders them a proper ſatisfaction. And though the wood of Lebanon was not ſufficient to burn, nor all the beaſts thereof ſufficient for a burnt-offering ‖; this ſacrifice fully anſwers the exigence of the caſe.——This ſacrifice ſends up an ever-acceptable odour to the ſkies, and diffuſes its ſweet perfume through all generations; ſuch as appeaſes heaven, and revives the world.

Yes, Theron, you muſt give me leave to repeat the delightful truth; It was the great GOD, even our SAVIOUR JESUS CHRIST, who gave himſelf for us §. His ſacrifice therefore muſt be inconceivably meritorious. O! that ſinners, the vileſt of ſinners, knew its all-ſufficient efficacy! they would no longer be holden in the bonds of iniquity, by that deſtructive ſuggeſtion of the devil, There is no hope ¶.

Ther. What valuable end could ſuch vicarious ſufferings accompliſh? Suppoſe GOD abſolutely inexorable, and they cannot avail. Suppoſe him divinely merciful, and they are needleſs.

Aſp. The difficulty you propoſe, I think, has been obviated already. So that I have no occaſion to ſolve your dilemma, but only to anſwer your query. Theſe ſufferings,—as a puniſhment, gave ample ſatisfaction to the divine violated law;—as a ſacrifice, they perfectly reconciled us to our offended GOD;—as a price, they redeemed us from every evil, and purchaſed for us a title to all good.

This is a ſubject of the moſt diſtinguiſhed importance. Let not my Theron imagine, I would abuſe his patience, if I dwell a moment longer on the favourite topic.——I might enumerate many ends, all magnificent and gracious, accompliſhed by this wonderful expedient. I content myſelf with ſpecifying a few; but thoſe, ſuch as bring the higheſt glory to GOD,—adminiſter the moſt ſolid comfort to man,—and moſt effectually promote the intereſts of piety.

In this we have a manifeſtation of the moſt awful juſtice, and at the ſame time a diſplay of unbounded goodneſs.—Awful juſtice; in that the great and terrible GOD, though determined to exerciſe mercy, would exerciſe it only in ſuch a manner, as might vindicate the authority of his law; might teſtify the purity of his nature; and declare the inviolable faithfulneſs of his word.—Unbounded goodneſs; in that he withheld not his SON, his only SON, but freely gave him up for us all; gave up "the BRIGHTNESS of his glory," to be covered with infamy; gave up "the BELOVED of his ſoul," to expire in agonies; on purpoſe to obtain honour and immortality for apoſtate men.——The torments inflicted on all the damned in hell, are not ſo fearful a monument of GOD's juſtice, as thoſe dying agonies of the LORD JESUS CHRIST. Nor could a thouſand worlds, conferred on mankind, have been ſuch an act of ſuperabundant munificence, as that gift of his ever-bleſſed SON.

Look we for power and wiſdom?—To uphold the humanity of CHRIST, under all the ſtudied cruelties of men, under the inſatiate rage of devils, and the far more tremendous curſe of the divine law *: to conquer ſin, and death, and hell, by a perſon bound with fetters, nailed to a tree, and crucified in weakneſs: to expiate, by one offering, the innumerable millions of crimes, committed by all his people from the beginning to the end of time: was not this power? matchleſs power? aſtoniſhing power?—And as for wiſdom, how admirable was the contrivance, which could harmonize the ſeemingly oppoſite claims of mercy and of juſtice! and not only ſatisfy each, but magnify both!—Had puniſhment been executed, in all its rigour, on the ſinner's perſon, mercy had loſt her amiable honours. Had the ſinner been reſtored to favour, with any penalties ſuſtained either by himſelf or his SURETY, juſtice had been ſet aſide as an inſignificant attribute. Whereas, by our LORD's vicarious and expiatory ſufferings, both are manifeſted, and both are exalted. Therefore the ſcripture affirms, that GOD hath not only exerciſed, but abounded in wiſdom and prudence,—nay, hath abounded in all wiſdom and prudence †, by this combination of righteous vengeance and triumphant grace; which is, at once, ſo honourable to himſelf, and ſo advantageous to his people.

Ther. "Advantageous to his people."——I am glad, you are come to this point. This is what I want to

* Rev. vi. 5.

† I think the language of the Greek liturgy, is the language of ſtrict propriety, as well as of fervent devotion, Δι' ὑπερβαν ου καθεμαλον. The ſufferings of our LORD are, in their meaſure and weight, to us unknown; abſolutely beyond the reach of human imagination.

‡ Acts xx. 28. ‖ Iſ. xl. 16. § Tit. ii. 13. 14. ¶ Jer. ii. 25.

* Iſ. xliii. 6. I the LORD will hold thine hand, and will keep thee. This is ſpoken of the MESSIAH. It gives him aſſurance of effectual ſupport, when the vengeance of heaven, the fury of hell, and the ſins of the world, ſhould fall upon him with united violence. To ſupport the MEDIATOR under theſe circumſtances, is mentioned as a very diſtinguiſhed act of that omnipotent arm, which created the heavens, and ſpread forth the earth, and giveth ſpirit to them that walk therein, ver. v.

† Eph. i. 8.

have

have cleared up. I am for those doctrines, which glorify GOD, by doing good to man. Give me the religion, whose aspect is benign, and whose agency is beneficial. Not like a meteor, to dazzle us with a vain glitter; not like a comet, to terrify us with a formidable glare; but like yonder sun, whose beams shed light, and life, and joy all around.

Asp. If this be what you seek, and what you prize, the Christian religion, this doctrine in particular, will answer your warmest expectations, and challenge your highest esteem. For it is rich with benefits of the most needful, the most desirable, and most exalted kind.

The first and grand blessing is pardon of sins.——Pardon, not of small sins only, but of the most aggravated, the most horrid, the most enormous. Be they flaming as scarlet, be they foul as the dunghill, be they black as hell itself; yet they shall be as the spotless wool, or as the virgin snows *; they shall "be, as though they had "never been."——Pardon, not of a few, but of all sins. Be they numerous as the hairs of our head, numerous as the stars of heaven, numerous as the sands upon the sea-shore, the blood of JESUS CHRIST cleanseth from them ALL †.

Hereby we have victory over death, and admittance into eternal life. For thus saith the holy apostle, concerning the poor sojourners in clay, Seeing therefore the children were partakers of flesh and blood, HE also partook of the same; that, by undergoing death, he might destroy him who had the power of death, that is the devil; and deliver those, who, through fear of death, were all their life-time subject to bondage ‡.—And thus saith the venerable elder, concerning the glorified saints in light, These are they who came out of great tribulation; and they have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the LAMB; therefore are they before the throne ‖.

The Philistines rejoiced, when Samson, the destroyer of their country, was delivered into their hands. How much greater reason have we to rejoice, since the blessed JESUS has vanquished our last enemy! has made death the minister of endless life, and the grave a gate to eternal glory!—Joseph had cause to be glad, when he put off his prison-garments, and was clothed with change of raiment; when he was brought from the dungeon to the palace, and honoured with a seat at the right hand of the king. But is it not an incomparably-richer blessing, to have our robes washed in redeeming blood, and our souls cleansed from all guilt? Is it not an incomparably-higher advancement, to be admitted into the blissful presence, and to possess the everlasting kingdom of GOD?

To comprehend all in a word:—Hereby are procured, even for the most unworthy creatures, all the benefits of the new covenant. Therefore the blood of CHRIST is styled by a prophet, the blood of thy covenant §; by an apostle, the blood of the everlasting covenant ¶; and our LORD himself says, This is the new covenant in my blood †.—Is it a privilege, to know GOD, the infinitely-amiable centre and source of all perfection? Is it a most valuable endowment, to have his laws put into our minds, and written on our hearts? Is it a branch of real felicity, to have our numberless sins forgiven, and not one of our iniquities remembered any more? Is it the compendium of all happiness, to have GOD for our portion, and our exceeding great reward? to be his peculiar treasure, his loving and beloved people ++?—Of all these we may say, They are the purchase of EMMANUEL's blood: and whoever is truly interested in the one, is unquestionably entitled to the other.

Who then would refuse so comfortable—

Ther. Too comfortable, we might imagine, to be either true in itself, or safe in its consequences. Must it not tend to embolden the sinner in the prosecution of his vices? Who need scruple to transgress, or be very solicitous to repent, if an all-atoning SACRIFICE has been offered for every kind and every degree of wickedness?

Asp. Would you have sinners intimidated? Nothing speaks such terror to the children of disobedience, as the bitter passion and accursed death of CHRIST.——All the rhetorical aggravations of sin, with regard to its loathsome nature, and execrable vileness;—all the severity of vengeance, executed upon rebellious angels, or wicked men;—all, all are weak and inexpressive, compared with the dreadful emphasis of this great transaction. For, if the LORD almighty spared not his own SON, when guilt was not found in him, but only imputed to him; how much less shall he spare incorrigible offenders, who both habitually commit, and obstinately persist in, their daring impieties?

If, by repentance, you mean an ingenuous sorrow for our transgressions; nothing is so likely to break the stony, or melt the icy earth, as these doleful effects of sin.——Let us imagine ourselves present at Calvary, and standing by the cross. See! the innocent, the amiable, the illustrious SAVIOUR, hangs on a tree: a tree, torturous as the rack, and ignominious as the gibbet! See! his face is foul with spitting, and his sides are tore with the scourge. His veins stream with blood, and his heart is wounded with anguish.—There he hangs, abandoned by his friends; reviled by his enemies; and forsaken even by his GOD.—Can we reflect, that we, even we were the cause of this inconsolable misery; and not feel remorse in our consciences, or sorrow in our minds? Can we reflect, that for us, for us, he bore this amazing torment; and not smite our breasts, or be pained at our very souls?

If, by repentance, you mean a thorough renunciation of all iniquity, no motive is so effectual, to divorce the heart from every abominable idol, and divert the feet from every evil way, as an attentive consideration of our REDEEMER's death.——Whose indignation does not rise against the infamous wretch, that betrayed the blessed JESUS? Who is not ready to detest those envenomed tongues which accused him, and those barbarous hands which crucified him? How then can we cherish those horrid lusts, which were the principal actors in this deepest of tragedies? How can we caress, how can we entertain, how can we endure those execrable iniquities, which were the betrayers and murderers of the PRINCE of life? —He bore our sins in his own bleeding, agonizing body on the tree; not that we should be emboldened to repeat them, but incited to abhor them, and induced to forsake them; that, in our practice and our affections, we should not only be averse, but even dead to sin *.

If you would have benevolence, your favourite principle, take place and operate; it is impossible to urge so endearing a persuasive to universal good-will, as this kindness and love of GOD our SAVIOUR †. How can we indulge the sallies of resentment, or harbour the seeds of animosity, when the meek, the merciful, the infinitely-gracious REDEEMER, laid down his life for his bitterest enemies? How can we treat with contempt or indifference, even the meanest of mankind, since our divine MASTER gave his all-glorious person for vile wretches and miserable sinners?—Never was there so winning a call to disinterested charity, as the amiable example of CHRIST; never so binding a cement of brotherly love, as the blood of the crucified JESUS.

In short, would you have people possessed of every heavenly virtue, and animated to the practice of every good work? Nothing administers so powerful an incitement to them all, as a lively and appropriating sense of this wondrous grace. Set home by the

* If. i. 18. † 1 John i. 7. ‡ Heb. ii. 14. 15.
‖ Rev. vii. 14. § Zech. ix. 11. ¶ Heb. xiii. 20.
† Luke xxii. 20. The original word διαθηκη signifies either a testament, or a covenant.
++ Heb. viii. 10. 11. 12.

* 1 Pet. ii. 24. † Tit. iii. 4.

HOLY

HOLY GHOST *, it produces such a warm gratitude, and such a heart-felt joy, as are far more operative than the most awful threatenings, or the most cogent reasonings.—So that, quite contrary to your suspicions, the native tendency of this excellent doctrine is, to suppress ungodliness, and promote piety.

Observe, how the present calm evening, yonder mild declining sun, and these soft balmy breezes, have unlocked the flowery prisons, and detached a profusion of odours through the air; have inspirited the little songsters of the grove, and fetched lavish harmony from their throats. So sweetly will a true belief in JESUS CHRIST and him crucified, draw forth all the powers of the soul, in acts of ready and chearful obedience.—He is therefore said, not only to justify, but also to sanctify the people with his blood †.

Let us consider the death of CHRIST, in this its full grandeur and extensive efficacy; and we shall discern the admirable propriety of the apostle's remark; It became him, for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the CAPTAIN of their salvation perfect through sufferings ‡. IT BECAME; as an act of sovereignty in GOD, it comported with the dignity, and emblazoned (if I may so speak) the incomprehensible majesty of his perfections.—As an execution of impartial vengeance on our SURETY, it asserted the rights of divine government, and secured the utmost veneration to the divine law.——As an emanation of rich indulgence to us, it redressed all our misery, and retrieves our whole happiness.——In each, in every respect, it is worthy of the most grateful and adoring acceptance from sinful man, and such as will be had in everlasting honour by the choirs of saints, and the host of angels.

Ther. I thank you, Aspasio. Your arguments have not indeed converted me, but they have strengthened my faith. I never was so unhappily mistaken, as to disbelieve the satisfaction made by our LORD JESUS CHRIST; made to divine justice; made for the sins of the world. But I now see more clearly its reasonableness and importance; its chearing aspect on the guilty conscience, and its benign influence on the moral conduct.

Asp. I congratulate you, dear Theron, from my inmost soul, on your thorough conviction of this important truth. May you have still more extensive and generous views of the glorious article! and may every renewed view be more and more influential on your heart!

Reviving, ravishing thought! to have HIM for our bleeding victim! HIM for our great propitiation! at whose feet the armies of heaven bow, and the saints in light adore!—Reviving, ravishing thought! to have all our punishment sustained, and the whole curse of the law exhausted; so that justice itself can demand no more! ——Nay, to have so perfect a ransom paid for our redemption, that it is not barely an act of favourable indulgence, but of the highest righteousness ‖ also, to pardon, accept, and glorify the believer!—In SUCH a method of reconciliation, how fully does the judgment acquiesce, and how securely the conscience rest!

Excuse me, Theron. My affections are again upon the soar. But I clip their wings.——Only let me ask. Is not this doctrine the grand peculiarity of the gospel, by which it stands distinguished from every other religion professed in the world?——Is it not the central point, in which all the lines of duty unite, and from which all the rays of consolation proceed?——Strike this article from the creed, and you reduce the mystery of godliness to a system of ethics; you degrade the Christian church into a school of philosophy.——To deny the expiation made by our REDEEMER's sacrifice, is to obscure the brightest manifestation of divine benignity, and to undermine the principal pillar of practical religion; is to make a desperate shipwreck of our everlasting interests, and to dash (such, I fear, it will be found, in the final issue of things) ourselves to death, on the very rock of salvation.

Ther. Now, I believe, it is time to repair homewards. And I hope, it will be no disagreeable exchange, if we resign our seat on the mount, for a place in the dining-room.

Asp. Pray, let me inquire, as we walk along (for I was unwilling to interrupt our discourse, merely to gratify my curiosity), what may be the design of yonder edifice, which rises on a small eminence, near the public road? It is neither a tower, nor a dwelling-house; but looks like a stately column, erected on purpose to beautify the prospect.

Ther. It is a sort of monumental pile; erected, as the story goes, on a very memorable occasion.——Queen Eleanor accompanied King Edward the First to (what was called) the holy war: in which he gained signal advantages over the infidels, and acquired a large share of renown to himself. After many gallant exploits performed in the field, a treacherous and desperate Saracen, demanding admittance into his chamber, under pretence of private business, wounded him with an empoisoned dagger. The consequence of which, his physicians declared, must be inevitable and speedy death, unless the poison was sucked out by some human mouth. This might possibly preserve the royal patient, but would be extremely dangerous to the operator.

Dangerous as it was, his Queen claimed the office; insisted upon it, as the consort's right; and executed it so faithfully, that she saved the king's life; so happily, that she lost not her own.——After this, she returned to England, lived many years, and bore several children. But, sooner or later, royalty itself must pay the debt to nature. Dying on a journey to Scotland, she was brought back to the last and long home of our English monarchs *. ——Where-ever her corpse rested, in the way to its interment, a structure † (such as you now behold) was raised, in order to perpetuate the memory of her conjugal affection.

Asp. And should not our hearts be a monument of gratitude to the blessed JESUS? who drew the deadly venom, not from our veins, but from the immortal part of our nature; and not at the hazard, but at the loss, the certain and unavoidable loss of his precious life.——He opened his breast, opened his very soul, to the keenest arrows of vindictive justice; that, transfixing him, they might drop short of us; "the poison whereof drank up his spirits ‡," that the balm of peace might refresh ours.

* The reader will give me leave, on this occasion, to subjoin the noble doxology of our church; which, when thus applied, may be an excellent means, both of expressing our gratitude, and of quickening our devotion.—Glory be to the FATHER, for providing this all-sufficient atonement, and giving his SON to save a ruined world.—Glory be to the SON, for humbling himself to the death of the cross, and obtaining eternal redemption for sinners.—Glory be to the HOLY GHOST, for testifying of CHRIST in our hearts, and appropriating this great salvation to our souls.

† Heb. xiii. 12.

‡ Heb. ii. 10.

‖ Therefore the apostle says, GOD is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, 1 John i. 9. Faithful, because he had promised this blessing, by the unanimous voice of all his prophets.—Just! surely then he will punish! No; for this very reason he will pardon. —This may seem strange; but, upon the evangelical principles of atonement and redemption, it is apparently true: because, when the debt is paid, or the purchase made, it is the part of equity to cancel the bond, and consign over the purchased possession.

* Westminster Abbey.

† One of these structures stands on the high road, near Northampton. It is surrounded with a large flight of steps, at the bottom; and ornamented, towards the top, with four female statues, in full proportion. A Latin inscription informs the traveller, concerning its occasion and design;

In perpetuam Reginæ Eleonoræ
Conjugalis amoris memoriam.

‡ Job vi. 4.

O my Theron! let our memories be the tablet, to record this unexampled instance of compassion and goodness. Let our affections dwell upon the tragical, the delightfull history; till they melt into contrition, and are inflamed with love.—If we want an inscription, let us make use of those noble lines, which, in the finest climax imaginable, describe the magnificence and grace of this astonishing transaction:

——Survey the wondrous cure,
And at each step let higher wonder rise,
Pardon for infinite offence!—and pardon
Through means that speak its value infinite!
A pardon bought with blood!—with blood divine!
With blood divine of HIM I made my foe!—
Persisted to provoke! Though woo'd and aw'd, Bless'd and chastis'd, a flagrant rebel still!—
Nor I alone! A rebel universe!
My species up in arms!—Not one exempt!
Yet for the foulest of the foul, he dies!

Night-Thoughts, No. IV.

DIALOGUE V.

ASPASIO having some letters of importance to answer, as soon as the cloth was taken away, retired from table.—His epistolary engagements being dispatched, he enquired for Theron. The servants informed him, that their master walked into the garden.—A very little search found him, seated on an airy mount, and sheltered by an elegant arbour.

Strong and substantial plants of liburnum formed the shell; while the slender and flexile shoots of syringa filled up the interstices.—Was it to compliment, as well as to accommodate their worthy guests, that they interwove the luxuriant foliage? Was it to represent those tender but close attachments, which had united their affections, and blended their interests?—I will not too positively ascribe such a design to the disposition of the branches. They composed, however, by their twining embraces, no inexpressive emblem of the endearments and the advantages of friendship. They composed a canopy, of the freshest verdure, and of the thickest texture; so thick, that it entirely excluded the sultry ray; and shed both a cool refreshment, and an amusive gloom: while every unsheltered tract glared with light, or fainted with heat.

You enter by an easy ascent of steps, lined with turf, and fenced with a balustrade of sloping bay-trees.—The roof was a fine concave, peculiarly elevated and stately. Not embossed with sculpture; not mantled over with fret work; not incrusted with splendid fresco; but far more delicately adorned with the syringa's silver tufts, and the liburnum's flowering gold: whose large and lovely clusters, gracefully pendent from the leafy dome, disclosing their sweets to the delighted bee, and gently waving to the balmy breath of spring, gave the utmost enrichment to the charming bower.

Facing the entrance, lay a spacious grassy walk; terminated by an octangular bason, with a curious jet d'eau playing in the centre. The waters, spinning from the lower orifices, were attenuated into innumerable little threads; which dispersed themselves in an horizontal direction, and returned to the reservoir, in a drizzling shower. Those which issued from the higher tubes, and larger apertures, either sprung perpendicularly, or spouted obliquely; and formed, as they fell, several lofty arches of liquid crystal, all glittering on the eye, and cooling to the air.

Parallel to the walk ran a parterre; planted with an assemblage of flowers, which advanced, one above another, in regular gradations of height, of dignity, and of beauty.—First, a row of daisies, gay as the smile of youth, and fair as the virgin-snows.—Next, a range of crocuses, like a long stripe of yellow satin, quilted with threads, or diversified with sprigs of green.—A superior order of ranunculuses, each resembling the cap of an earl's coronet, replenished the third story with full-blown tufts of glossy scarlet.——Beyond this, a more elevated line of tulips *, raised their flourishing heads, and opened their enamelled cups; not bedecked with a single tint only, but glowing with an intermingled variety of almost every radiant hue.—Above all arose, that noble ornament of a royal escutcheon, the flower-de-luce; bright with ethereal blue, and grand with imperial purple: which formed, by its graceful projections, a cornish or a capital of more than Corinthian richness; and imparted the most consummate beauty to the blooming colonnade.

The whole, viewed from the arbour, looked like a rainbow, painted upon the ground; and wanted nothing to rival that resplendent arch, only the boldness of its sweep, and the advantage of its ornamental curve.

To this agreeable recess Theron had withdrawn himself. Here he sat musing and thoughtful, with his eye fixed upon a picture representing some magnificent ruins.——Wholly intent upon his speculation, he never perceived the approach of Aspasio, till he had reached the summit of the mount, and was ready to take a seat by his side.

Asp. Lost, Theron! quite lost in thought! and unaffected with all these amiable objects; insensible amidst this profusion of beauties, which, from every quarter, make their court to your senses!—Methinks, the snarling Cynic in his tub, could hardly put on a greater severity of aspect, than my polite philosopher in his blooming Eden.

Ther. Ah! my dear friend, these flowery toys which embellish the garden, are familiar to my eye, and therefore cheap in my esteem. I behold them frequently; and, for that reason, feel but little of the pleasing surprise,

* Here is, it must be confessed, some little deviation from the general laws of the season; some anachronism in the annals of the parterre. The flowers united in this representation, do not, according to the usual process of nature, make their appearance together. However, as, by the œconomy of a skilful gardener, they may be thus associated; I hope, the possibility of the thing will screen my flowery productions from the blasts of censure!—Or, may I not shelter my blooming assembly, under the remark of a masterly critic? which is as pertinent to the case, as if it had been written on purpose for our vindication; and in all respects so elegant, that it must adorn every work, which quotes it; and charm every person, who reads it.

"A painter of nature is not obliged to attend her in her slow "advances, which she makes from one season to another, or to ob- "serve her conduct in the successive production of plants and flow- "ers. He may draw into his description all the beauties of the "spring and autumn; and make the whole year contribute some- "thing to make it more agreeable. His rose-trees, woodbines, "and jessamines may flourish together; and his beds be covered "at the same time with lilies, violets, and amaranthuses. His "soil is not restrained to any particular set of plants, but is pro- "per either for oaks or myrtles, and adapts itself to the product "of every climate.——Oranges may grow wild in it; myrrh may "be met with in every hedge; and if he thinks it proper to have "a grove of spices, he can quickly command sun enough to raise "it. His concerts of birds may be as full and harmonious and "his woods as thick and gloomy, as he pleases. He is at no "more expence in a long vista, than a short one; and can as "easily throw his cascades from a precipice of half a mile high, "as from one of twenty yards. He has his choice of the winds, "and can turn the course of his rivers, in all the variety of mean- "ders, that are most delightful to the reader's imagination. In "a word, he has the modelling of nature in his own hands, and "may give her what charms he pleases, provided he does not re- "form her too much, and run into absurdities by endeavouring "to excel." Spect. vol. VI. No. 418.

ſurpriſe, which they may poſſibly awaken in a ſtranger.——Something like this we all experience, with regard to events infinitely more worthy our admiring notice. Elſe, why are we not ſtruck with a mixture of amazement, veneration, and delight, at the grand machinery and magnificent productions of nature?

That the hand of the ALMIGHTY ſhould wheel round the vaſt terreſtrial globe, with ſuch prodigious rapidity, and exact punctuality; on purpoſe to produce the regular viciſſitudes of day and night; on purpoſe to bring on the orderly ſucceſſion of ſeed-time and harveſt!——We wonder, when we read of the Iſraelites ſojourning forty years in the deſert, marching backward and forward over its burning ſands; and find neither their cloaths waxing old * by ſo long a uſe, nor their feet ſwelling † with ſuch painful journies. Yet are we neither impreſſed with wonder, nor affected with gratitude, when we enjoy the benefits of the air, which clothes the earth as it were with a garment; which has neither contracted any noxious taint, through the extenſive revolution of almoſt ſix thouſand years; nor ſuffered any diminution of its natural force, though exerciſed in a ſeries of unremitted activity, ever ſince the elementary operations began.

This draught in my hand, ſhews us the inſtability of the grandeſt, moſt laboured monuments of human art. They are ſoon ſwept away, among the other feeble attempts of mortality; or remain only, as you ſee here, in ſhattered ruins; memorials of the vain and powerleſs ambition of the builders.—How ſtrange then, that a ſtructure, incomparably more tender and delicate, ſhould be preſerved to old age, and hoary hairs! that the bodily machine, which is ſo exquiſite in its frame, ſo complicated in its parts, and performs ſo many thouſands ‡ of motions every moment, ſhould continue unimpaired, yet act without intermiſſion, ſo many days, and weeks, and months, and years.—How ſtrange all this! yet, becauſe common, how ſeldom does it excite our praiſe, or ſo much as engage our notice!

Aſp. Your remarks are as juſt, as the neglect of them is cuſtomary.——Unaccountable ſupineneſs! Though GOD doth great things, worthy of all obſervation; yea, and wonders without number: we yawn with indolence, inſtead of being animated with devotion, or tranſported with delight. Lo! he goeth before us, in evident manifeſtations of wiſdom and power, yet we ſee him not; he paſſeth on alſo, and ſcatters unnumbered bleſſings from his providential hand, but we perceive him not ‖.

This, though greatly culpable, is to be reckoned among the ſmalleſt inſtances of our ungrateful inſenſibility.—Are we not inattentive even to the work of redemption? That work, which, according to the emphatical declaration of ſcripture, exceeds in glory §; is by far the greateſt, the moſt marvellous of all ſublunary, perhaps of all divine tranſactions.—Are we not ſhamefully unaffected, even with the appearance of GOD in human fleſh? Though the KING of kings vouchſafes to exchange his throne, for the humiliation of a ſervant, and the death of a malefactor; though he is pleaſed, by the imputation of his active as well as paſſive obedience, to become the LORD our righteouſneſs; yet——

Ther. You are taking an effectual way, Aſpaſio, to rouſe me from my reverie, and make me indeed like the ſnarling philoſopher. "Imputed righteouſneſs is a "ſcheme groſsly frivolous and abſurd; utterly inſufficient "to anſwer the end propoſed; and, one would think, "could never be depended on, where there is the leaſt "degree of underſtanding, and capacity for reaſoning."

Aſp. Who is warm now, Theron? May I not remind my friend, that the reſentful is no more fitted to work conviction, than the rapturous?—Perhaps, you have not duly conſidered this ſubject; nor ſeen it in the proper point of view. I have ſometimes beheld a ſhip of war ſeveral leagues off at ſea. It ſeemed to be a dim cloudy ſomething, hovering on the ſkirts of the horizon; contemptibly mean, and not worthy of a moment's regard.—But, as the floating citadel approached, the maſts aroſe; the ſails ſwelled out; its ſtately form, and curious proportions, ſtruck the ſight. It was no longer a ſhapeleſs maſs, or a blot in the proſpect, but the maſterpiece of human contrivance, and the nobleſt ſpectacle in the world of art. The eye is never weary of viewing its ſtructure, nor the mind in contemplating its uſes.

Who knows, Theron, but this ſacred ſcheme likewiſe, which you now look upon as a confuſed heap of errors, may very much improve, when more cloſely examined; may at length appear a wiſe and benign plan, admirably fitted to the condition of our fallen nature, and perfectly worthy of all acceptation?

Ther. I know not what may happen, Aſpaſio. But there ſeems to be very little probability of ſuch a change. For, though my laſt oppoſition was a mock-fight; in my preſent objections I am very ſincere, and to this doctrine I am a determined enemy.——The notion of a ſubſtituted and vicarious righteouſneſs is abſurd even to common ſenſe, and to the moſt natural and eaſy reflections of men.

Aſp. It may not, my dear friend, agree with our natural apprehenſions; nor fall in with the method, which we might have deviſed, for the ſalvation of mankind. But this is the voice of ſcripture, and a maxim never to be forgotten: GOD's thoughts are not as our thoughts, nor his ways as our ways †.——His righteouſneſs is like the ſtrong mountains, and his judgments are like the great deep ‡; the former immoveable, the latter unſearchable.

Ther. The mention of mountains puts me in mind of what I was reading yeſterday;—the keen irony,

* Deut. viii. 4 † Neh. ix. 21.

‡ Thouſands—not to mention the ſpontaneous, if we conſider only the mechanical motions, which are continually performed in the animal ſyſtem—the digeſtive action of the ſtomach—the vermicular agitation of the bowels—the progreſs of the chyle through the lacteal veſſels—the many, many operations of the ſecreting glands—the compreſſion of the lungs, and all their little cellular lodgments, by every act of reſpiration—above all, that grand impetus, the ſyſtole of the heart; which, by every conſtriction, darts the crimſon current through an innumerable multitude of arteries, and drives, at the ſame inſtant of time, the reſluent blood through an innumerable multitude of correſponding veins—Such a view will oblige us to acknowledge, that Theron's account is far from being extravagant; that it rather diminiſhes, than exaggerates the real fact.

‖ Job ix. 10. 11. § 2 Cor. iii. 9.

* The reader will probably be diſguſted, at this heat of temper, this aſperity of diction, and both ſo abruptly introduced.——I have no apology to make for my Theron. The reader has reaſon to be diſguſted; has reaſon to be chagrined. Only let me deſire him to remember, that this is the very ſpirit, nay theſe are the very words, of a celebrated oppoſer of our doctrine; not added, when he has fully proved the abſurdity of the ſcheme; but aſſumed, even upon the entrance to his diſcourſe.

I have often wondered, that diſputants, eſpecially on religious ſubjects, ſhould chuſe to deal in ſuch acrimonious and reproachful language. Does the wrath of man work the righteouſneſs of GOD? Or is a paſſionate invective the proper means, either to conciliate our affections, or convince our judgment?—Why ſhould we not write in the ſame genteel and obliging ſtrain, in which we converſe? Were we to meet our antagoniſt in a friend's parlour, and have a perſonal conference on the ſubject, our ſpeech would be kind, and our remonſtrances calm;—"I am ſorry, Sir, that you have "eſpouſed ſuch notions. They ſeem to me extremely wrong and "equally dangerous. I am apt to think, you have not duly conſi"dered, either the little ground they have to ſupport them, or the "pernicious conſequences that may attend them."

Why ſhould not our controverſies from the preſs be carried on with ſuch a candid and amicable ſtrife? This would certainly render them more pleaſing to the reader, more profitable to the public, and much more likely to have their deſired effect upon our opponent.——For my part, I admire the humanity and tenderneſs of the poet's reſolution, even more than the boldneſs of his figures, or the beauty of his expreſſion:

Tu lapides loqueris, ego byſſina verba reponam.

† Iſ. lv. 8. ‡ Pſal. xxxvi. 6.

with

with which Abimelech's principal officer chaſtiſed the bluſtering Gaal: Thou ſeeſt the ſhadow of the mountains, as if they were men *. He, it is ſarcaſtically intimated, was afraid, and my Aſpaſio ſeems to be fond, of ſhadows.

Aſp. Happy for your Aſpaſio, that irony is no argument. If a jury was impannelled to try me and my doctrine, I ſhould certainly except againſt irony. Generally ſpeaking, he is neither a good man, nor a true. And, if I remember right, you yourſelf conſented to ſet him aſide in this debate. I ſhall therefore adapt my reply, rather to what is ſolid, than what is ſmart.

"This notion," you ſay, "is abſurd even to common ſenſe."——A ſaying, upon which I muſt beg leave to put a query. It was, I own, abſolutely beyond the power of common ſenſe, unaſſiſted by divine revelation, to diſcover this truth.——I will grant farther, that this bleſſing infinitely tranſcends whatever common ſenſe has obſerved in all her converſe with finite things.—— But, if I have any the leaſt acquaintance with common ſenſe, I am very ſure, ſhe will not, ſhe cannot pronounce it an abſurdity. To this judge I refer the cauſe.

And to open the cauſe a little, let me juſt obſerve, that GOD imputed our ſins to his SON. How elſe could the immaculate JESUS be puniſhed, as the moſt inexcuſable tranſgreſſor? Awake, O ſword, againſt the Man that is my Fellow, ſaith the LORD of hoſts †.——Is not this the voice of a judge, pronouncing the ſentence, and authoriſing the execution? Or rather, does it not deſcribe the action of juſtice, turning the ſword from us, and ſheathing it in CHRIST?—who, if he was our ſubſtitute with regard to penal ſuffering, why may he not ſtand in the ſame relation with regard to juſtifying obedience? There is the ſame reaſon for the one, as for the other. Every argument in favour of the former, is equally concluſive in behalf of the latter.

Ther. I very freely grant, that CHRIST JESUS was puniſhed in our ſtead; that his death is the expiation of our ſin, and the cauſe of our ſecurity from penal ſuffering. But this——

Aſp. will undeniably prove, that ſin was imputed to him; otherwiſe he could not truly ſuffer in our ſtead, nor be juſtly puniſhed at all. "And imputation is as reaſonable and juſtifiable in one caſe, as in the other; for they both ſtand upon one and the ſame foot; and, for that reaſon, he who throws down one, throws down both."——I ſhould not have interrupted my Theron, only to introduce this anſwer from an eminent divine: who adds, what ſhould be very ſeriouſly conſidered; "And therefore whoever rejects the doctrine of the imputation of our SAVIOUR's righteouſneſs to man, does, by ſo doing, reject the imputation of man's ſin to our SAVIOUR, and all the conſequences of it. Or, in other words, he who rejects the doctrine of the imputation, does, by ſo doing, reject the doctrine of the expiation likewiſe ‡."

Ther. I know nothing of this divine; and, eminent as he is, can hardly take his Ipſe dixit for a deciſion.

Aſp. I was in hopes, you would pay the greater regard to his opinion, becauſe he is not in the number of the whimſical fanatics.

Give me leave to obſerve farther, that the imputation of CHRIST's righteouſneſs, bears an evident analogy to another great truth of Chriſtianity. We did not perſonally commit Adam's ſin, yet are we chargeable with guilt, and liable to condemnation, on that——

Ther. How! We chargeable with guilt, and liable to condemnation, on account of Adam's tranſgreſſion! This poſition I muſt deny; I had almoſt ſaid, I muſt abhor. None other could, in the eye of juſtice and equity, be blameable for any offence of our firſt parents, but they only.

Aſp. So ſays Theron; but what ſays St Paul? This may be the voice of natural reaſon, but what is the language of divine revelation? In whom, that is, in Adam, all have ſinned.

Ther. The words, if I remember right, are——For that all have ſinned.

Aſp. In the margin, they are tranſlated, as I have repeated them. For this interpretation I might contend, as not in the leaſt incompatible with the original phraſe *, and as the moſt preciſely ſuitable to the ſacred argument. But I wave this advantage; let the words run into your mould, and the tranſlation take your form. They are equally deciſive of the point in debate.—They aſſign the reaſon, why death came upon all men; infants themſelves not excepted: For that, or inaſmuch as, all have ſinned. How? Not in their own perſon; this was utterly impoſſible; but in that firſt grand tranſgreſſion of their federal head; which, as it could not be actually committed by them, muſt, according to the tenor of the apoſtle's arguing, be imputed to them.

Ther. Pray, what do you mean by that ſtiff, and to me unintelligible phraſe, federal head?

Aſp. I mean what Milton celebrates, when he repreſents the almighty FATHER thus addreſſing his eternal SON.

——Be thou in Adam's room
The head of all mankind, though Adam's ſon.
As in him periſh all men, ſo in thee,
As from a ſecond root, ſhall be reſtor'd
As many as are reſtor'd, without thee none †.

I mean what the apoſtle teaches, when he calls CHRIST the ſecond man ‡, and the laſt Adam ‖.——The ſecond! the laſt! How? Not in a numerical ſenſe; not in order of time; but in this reſpect,—That, as Adam was a public perſon, and acted in the ſtead of all mankind; ſo CHRIST was a public perſon, and acted in behalf of all his people.——That, as Adam was the firſt general repreſentative of this kind, CHRIST was the ſecond and the laſt; there never was, and there never will be, any other:—That what they ſeverally did, in this capacity, was not intended to terminate in themſelves, but to affect as many as they reſpectively repreſented.——This is St Paul's meaning, and this is the foundation of the doctrine of imputation.

Ther. If you build it on no other foundation, than your own particular ſenſe of the apoſtle's words, perhaps your ground may prove ſandy, and treacherous to its truſt.

Aſp. I build it upon mine, and I deduce it from yours, Theron.——But I am far from reſting the whole weight of the cauſe upon a ſingle text. It is eſtabliſhed, again and again, in this ſame chapter.——Neither do I wonder at the prejudices which you and others may entertain againſt the doctrine. It lies quite out of the road of reaſon's reſearches: it is among the wonderful things of GOD's law. This the inſpired penman foreſaw, and modelled his diſcourſe accordingly. Like ſome ſkilful engineer, who, though he makes the whole compaſs of his fortification ſtrong, yet beſtows peculiar and additional ſtrength on thoſe parts, which he apprehends will be expoſed to the fierceſt attack: ſo the wiſe, the divinely-wiſe apoſtle, has inculcated, and re-inculcated, this momentous point; has enforced it with all the aſſiduity of zeal, and confirmed it by all

* Judg. ix. 36. † Zech. xiii. 7.

‡ STAYNOE upon ſalvation by JESUS CHRIST alone, vol. I. p. 334.—Where the reader may find ſeveral weighty conſiderations, clearly propoſed and ſtrongly urged, for the explanation and eſtabliſhment of this capital doctrine.

* Εφ' ω παντες ημαρτον. Rom. v. 12. Not to mention the famous diſtinction of Epictetus, τα εφ' ημιν, nor the well-known adagy of Heſiod, μιλπει δ' επι πασιν αριστον. See chap. iv. 18. v. 2. of this very epiſtle; where the prepoſition επι is uſed in Aſpaſio's ſenſe.

† Book III. 285. ‡ 1 Cor. xv. 47. ‖ 1 Cor. xv. 45.

the

the energy of expreſſion.——If through the offence of one many be dead—The judgment was by one to condemnation—By one man's offence death reigned by one—By the offence of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation *.——That there may remain no poſſibility of miſtaking his meaning, or of eluding his argument, he adds, By ONE man's diſobedience, MANY were made ſinners †.

Ther. Sin, I am told by a celebrated expoſitor, ſometimes ſignifies puniſhment. He farther informs me, that we may be ſaid to ſin in Adam, not by the imputation of his diſobedience to us, but by becoming obnoxious to thoſe ſufferings which were due to his ſin.

Aſp. Then the apoſtle's reaſoning will ſtand in this form: Death came upon all men, for that all have ſinned; that is, Death came upon all men, becauſe all have been puniſhed; or, an obnoxiouſneſs to puniſhment came upon men, becauſe all are become obnoxious to puniſhment. A goodly ſtrain of argumentation for an inſpired writer to uſe!—But ſurely Gamaliel's pupil would diſclaim, much more would CHRIST's ambaſſador ſcorn, ſuch weak and unmeaning chicanery. He mentions ſin and its puniſhment; but never hints, that they are intended to ſignify one and the ſame thing. He all along maintains a diſtinction between them; repreſents the former as the cauſe of the latter. Judgment, condemnation, death, are owing to ſin, offence, diſobedience. It is by the imputation of theſe, that we become obnoxious to thoſe.

This account is clear, is natural, and wants no ſtrained criticiſms to ſupport it. This account demonſtrates the equity of that providential government, which executes the ſentence of death, even on thoſe deſcendents of Adam, who have not ſinned in their own perſons. It alſo illuſtrates the procedure of that ſovereign grace, which treats as righteous, and entitles to life, even thoſe believers in JESUS, who have not obeyed in their own perſons.——What ſays our church? You have a great veneration for the church of England, Theron.

Ther. I have. But I fear, my Aſpaſio has neither ſo honourable an opinion of her worthip, nor ſo ſteady an adherence to her conſtitution: otherwiſe he would not ſo highly extol thoſe ambitious and canting hypocrites the Puritans; who were the moſt inveterate enemies of our excellent eſtabliſhment, and would have rejoiced in its utter ſubverſion.

Aſp. As to the Puritans, you will do me the juſtice to acknowledge, that I ſpeak only of their evangelical tenets, abſtracted from all political principles.——As to myſelf, your fears are friendly, but I truſt they are groundleſs. I would only aſk, Who are to be deemed the moſt affectionate and faithful ſons of their ſacred mother?—Thoſe, I preſume, who moſt cordially embrace her doctrines, and moſt dutifully ſubmit to her precepts. By this touchſtone let my fidelity be tried. And for an immediate trial, be pleaſed to repeat her ninth article.

Ther. I cannot ſay, that I remember the particular words of any, though I have often read, and very much approve them all.

Aſp. I wiſh, you would commit to your memory, four or five of the moſt diſtinguiſhed ‡. They are a valuable treaſure, and contain the quinteſſence of the goſpel.

Ther. Theſe are the words of the ninth article. "Original ſin is the fault and corruption of every man, that naturally is ingendered of the offſpring of Adam." It is the fault, ſays the pious Biſhop Beveridge, and therefore we are guilty of it; it is the corruption alſo, and therefore we are defiled with it.—Our homilies have recourſe to no ſuch palliatives, and qualifying interpretations, as my Theron's expoſitor uſes. One of them affirms point-blank, that "in Adam all men ſinned univerſally." This ſeems to be a paraphraſe on the text, whoſe tranſlation you lately controverted.——In what ſenſe our great poetical divine underſtood the ſacred writer, is apparent from the following words; which are ſuppoſed to have been ſpoken by JEHOVAH himſelf:

——Adam's crime
Makes guilty all his ſons *.

And from another paſſage, where our rebellious progenitor, bewailing his aggravated miſery, and the extenſive malignity of his ſin, declares,

——In me all
Poſterity ſtands curs'd †.

For my own part, I muſt confeſs, that, if the tranſmiſſion of original depravity be granted, I know not how the imputation of Adam's deſtructive apoſtaſy can be denied. If we had no concern in the one, how could we be juſtly puniſhed with the other? I ſay puniſhed. For, to loſe the primitive integrity of our nature, and inherit a depraved diſpoſition, is at once a moſt deplorable calamity, and a moſt terrible puniſhment.—Corruption tranſmitted, and guilt imputed, ſeem to be doctrines indiſſolubly connected. To allow the former, and reject the latter, is, in my apprehenſion, to acknowledge the effect without admitting the cauſe.

Ther. To make us parties in a covenant, which we did not agree to, can this be equitable? To ruin us for a crime, which we never committed, can this be merciful? Surely, this is a flagrant injuſtice, never to be aſcribed to the all-gracious GOD. A diabolical barbarity, add ſome, never to be mentioned without the utmoſt deteſtation.

Aſp. I ſee no cauſe for ſuch a tragical outcry of barbarity, nor indeed for any complaint of injuſtice. Not to inſiſt upon the ſovereignty of an all-creating GOD, and his unqueſtionable right to do what he will with his own, I would only aſk,—Did he not condeſcend to tranſact with man, not on the foot of abſolute uncontrollable authority, but in the honourable and delightful way of a covenant?—Were not the terms of this covenant perfectly eaſy, and wonderfully gracious? Wonderfully gracious: for they propoſed a ſtate of inconceivable and everlaſting felicity ‖ to creatures, who were entitled to no happineſs; had not the leaſt claim to any good; no, not ſo much as to the privilege of exiſtence. Perfectly eaſy: for what was the condition on man's part? Not any rigorous act of duty, nor ſevere courſe of ſelf-denial, but the free enjoyment of millions of bleſſings and pleaſures, with only the prohibition of one pernicious indulgence. Here then is made, on one hand, a promiſe of the moſt glorious reward that GOD himſelf could give: and nothing required, on the other, but the ſmalleſt expreſſion of allegiance that man himſelf could wiſh. And is this juſtice? is this barbarity?

Ther. All this was equitable enough with regard to Adam: but why ſhould we be condemned for his violation of the covenant? Or how was ſuch a conſtitution of things gracious, with reſpect to us?

Aſp. "Why condemned?" Becauſe we ſhould have been partakers of the benefit and the glory, if he had perſevered in his duty. To this, I preſume, none would object. And if they would not to the one, they ought not to the other.

You aſk farther, "How was ſuch a conſtitution "of things gracious with reſpect to us?"——I anſwer, Becauſe it was the moſt likely means to ſecure the happineſs of us and all mankind. Was not Adam, of all perſons, by far the beſt qualified to act as a general head?

---

* Rom. v. 15, 16, 17, 18. † Rom. v. 19.

‡ Eſpecially, articles IX. X. XI. XII. XIII.

* MILTON, book III. 290. † Book X. 817.

‡ Math. xx. 15. ‖ Luke x. 28.

head? He had a perfection of knowledge to discern his true interest, a perfection of holiness to capacitate him for obedience, and a perfection of happiness disposing him to perseverance. As none could have more eminent qualifications, none could have so many obligations. His own welfare, both bodily and spiritual, was at stake; the eternal interests of his rising family, and of his remotest posterity, were depending; the lives, the souls, the everlasting all of the whole human race, were embarked on the single bottom of his fidelity. Therefore the felicity of every individual that should spring from his loins, was a fresh motive to vigilance, an additional engagement to duty *.—As his love to his offspring was more refined, more exalted, more godlike than ours, all these considerations and inducements must operate upon him, in their fullest scope, and with the strongest energy. What an entrenchment was here to keep out disobedience, and ward off ruin! An intrenchment deep as hell, high as heaven, wide as the whole extent of the human species.

Here then I may venture to throw the gauntlet, and challenge the whole world. Let the most penetrating mind devise a scheme, so wisely and graciously calculated to ascertain the success of a probationary state. If this be impracticable, then must every mouth be stopped: no tongue can have the least reason to complain: I, for my part, shall think myself obliged to admire the benignity of my CREATOR's conduct; and GOD may justly demand of all intelligent creatures, What could have been done more for the preservation and felicity of mankind, that I have not done †?

Especially, when to all this we add, that the same almighty BEING, who appointed Adam to be our representative in the first covenant, without asking our actual consent; appointed also CHRIST to be our representative in the second covenant, without staying for our actual solicitation. When we take this into the account, there remains not the least shadow of injustice; but goodness, transcendent goodness, shines forth with the brightest lustre.

Ther. Goodness, Aspasio! This is surprising indeed. Why, if Adam's transgression be laid to our charge, we are damnable creatures, the very moment we exist; and are liable to the torments of hell, even on account of his disobedience. To term this goodness, is the greatest of paradoxes! to affirm it of the DEITY, is little less than blasphemy!

Asp. Let us be calm, my dear friend, and consider the case impartially. If it is not a real truth, I shall be as willing to relinquish it, as yourself.

Is not death, eternal death, the wages of every sin? And if of every sin, then doubtless of original; which is the fountain, from whence all the streams of actual iniquity flow; or rather the abyss, from whence all the torrents pour.—That which could not be pardoned, but by the humiliation and agonies of GOD's adorable SON, may reasonably be supposed to deserve the most dreadful vengeance. And it is affirmed, by an authority which you will not dispute, that, "for original as well "as actual sin, the offering of CHRIST is a propitiation "and satisfaction ‡."

Does not St Paul deliver it as a maxim in divinity, That, by the offence of one, Adam he undoubtedly means, judgment came upon all men to condemnation ‖? The import of the words, together with the connection of the passage, lead us to understand this of a condemnation to eternal misery.——The import of the words; for they are doubled *, to make them peculiarly strong in their signification; and each word, within the compass of this very epistle, is used in that awful latitude of meaning †. The connection of the passage: because it stands opposed to that justification which is unto life. This, we are sure, includes the idea of an everlasting duration. And why should its tremendous counterpart be less extensive?

This sense is evidently patronized, and this doctrine most peremptorily asserted, by our established church. What says the book of Homilies, when treating of the miseries consequent upon the fall? "This so great and "miserable a plague, if it had only rested on Adam, who "first offended, it had been much easier, and might the "better have been borne. But it fell not only on him, "but also on his posterity and children for ever; so that "the whole brood of Adam's race should sustain the self-"same fall and punishment, which their forefather by "his offence most justly had deserved ‡."—Lest any should misapprehend the design of our reformers, and suppose the punishment to consist only of some bodily suffering, or the loss of immortality, it is added in the same alarming discourse: "Neither Adam, nor any of "his, had any right or interest at all in the kingdom of "heaven; but were become plain reprobates and cast-"aways, being perpetually damned to the everlasting "pains of hell."

Lest you should imagine, this might be written under a sally of hasty zeal, or that it is to be reckoned among the doting opinions of a credulous antiquity; let me remind my friend, that it is ingrafted into the articles; those articles, which were approved by the archbishops and bishops of both provinces; were ratified by the general consent of the clergy; and are, to this day, the national standard of our belief. The ninth article, beginning with a description of our depraved nature, subjoins an account of its proper desert: "In "every person born into the world, it deserveth GOD's "wrath and damnation ‖."

Ther. How miserable then is man!

Asp. In himself he is miserable beyond expression. But a conviction of this misery is the beginning of all happiness. The valley of Achor is a door of hope §.

Ther. Explain yourself, Aspasio. You seem to deal very much in the incomprehensibles.

Asp. Such a conviction would demonstrate the absolute insufficiency of all human attainments, and all human endeavours, to procure life and salvation.—For, in case we could perform every jot and tittle of the divine law, offend in no instance, fall short in no degree, persevere to the very end; yet this would be no more than our present bounden duty. Not the least pittance of merit could arise from all this. Much less could this be sufficient to expiate original guilt, or remove the dreadful entail of the primitive all-destroying sin.

This, therefore, would most effectually preclude every false confidence, and sweep away, at one stroke, every refuge of lies ¶. It would lay us under an immediate, indispensable,

* Should any person imagine himself more capable of standing than Adam, who was endowed with all the perfections of an innocent, holy, godlike nature; I think, by this very imagination, he begins to fall; fall into pride.—Should any person suppose, from a view to his own particular salvation, he would continue faithful; when Adam was not engaged to fidelity, from a regard to his own and the final happiness of all his posterity; he seems to be just as wise as the mariner, who persuades himself, that, though a thousand anchors could not secure the ship in a storm, yet one might have done it effectually.

† Is. v. 4. ‡ Article XXXI. ‖ Rom. v. 18.

* Κριμα εις κατακριμα. † Rom. ii. 3. iii. 8. viii. 1.

‡ Homily on the nativity of CHRIST.

‖ I am surprised to see a learned author attempting to sheath the sting of this awful denunciation; attempting to prove, that the words "do not signify GOD's eternal wrath, and the damnation "of hell."—I shall take no pains to confute what he is pleased to advance. I leave the question in the reader's own breast. Let him discover, if he can, a different meaning in the sentence. Unless he has a pretty shrewd knack at sophistry, I am persuaded, he will find it a difficult matter to give any other tolerable rush to the passage.—Surely it must be a reproach to our venerable mother, if she delivers her doctrine in language so fallacious, as must necessarily mislead the general of her sons; or in terms so abstruse, as even a good understanding cannot develope, without some proficiency in critical legerdemain.

§ Hos. ii. 16. Achor signifies trouble.

¶ Is. xxviii. 17.

dispensable, and happy necessity, of betaking ourselves to CHRIST.—I say happy necessity; because then we should know, by experience, what each part of our LORD's awful yet tender declaration meaneth: O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself; but in ME is thy help *.—We should then find, that as sin and misery have abounded through the first Adam, mercy and grace have much more abounded through the second. For, if we were ruined by a crime which we committed not, we are recovered by a righteousness which we performed not; a righteousness infinitely surpassing whatever we could have acquired; even though our nature had been transmitted to us, free from any depravity, and exempt from all guilt.

Ther. In your opinion then, and according to your scheme, salve and a regimen are better than a sound constitution.

Asp. No, Theron. My opinion is, that none can think himself aggrieved, or have any reason to complain, at that grand and beneficent regulation, which suffers the glimmering taper to be obscured or extinguished, but spreads abroad the boundless and majestic beams of day. And if any comparison be made between the most perfect human obedience, and the everlasting divine righteousness of CHRIST, it should be taken from the glimmering taper and the meridian sun.

Ther. I cannot persuade myself to admire such mysterious and unaccountable notions. They must puzzle some, will offend others; but cannot edify any.

Asp. This point, That we all died in Adam; were undone by his apostasy; cannot puzzle the simplest, if unprejudiced, mind.—Nor will it offend any but the proud philosopher, or the self-righteous moralist. And I assure you, I should not mention it, much less insist upon it, did it not subserve, and in a very singular manner, the purposes of edification. The doctrine of a REDEEMER obeying and dying in our stead, is the very hinge and centre of all evangelical revelations; is the very life and soul of all evangelical blessings. This doctrine is not a little illustrated, and comes greatly recommended, by the imputation of Adam's sin.

Contraries, you know, cast light upon, and set off each other. Winter and its severe cold, make spring and its cheering warmth more sensibly perceived, and more highly pleasing. Such an influence has the present subject, with respect to the vicarious obedience of our MEDIATOR. The more clearly we see the reality of the first, the more thoroughly we shall discern the expediency, the excellency, the glory of the last. The more we are humbled under a conviction of the former, the more we shall covet, or the more we shall triumph in, the enjoyment of the latter.—The apostle draws a long parallel, or rather forms a strong contrast between them, in the fifth chapter to the Romans. He speaks copiously of Adam's guilt, imputed to all mankind for condemnation and death, that he may speak the more acceptably, the more charmingly of CHRIST's righteousness, imputed to all believers for justification and life. In that dark ground, he well knew, this fairest loveliest flower of Christianity appears with peculiar beauty; indeed with all the beauty of consummate wisdom, and adorable benignity.

Ther. It really seems to me a thing impossible, that one man's righteousness should be made another's. Can one man live by the soul of another? or be learned by the learning of another?—Good Aspasio, never attempt to maintain such palpable absurdities. They will expose Christianity to the scorn of infidels.

Asp. If infidels scoff at this comfortable truth, their scoffing will be, like all their other cavils, not the voice of reason, but the clamour of prejudice.

My friend's objection insinuates, what we never assert, that the essence of this righteousness is transfused into believers: which would doubtless be in fact impossible, as it is in theory absurd.—But this we disavow, as strenuously as you can oppose. The REDEEMER's righteousness is made ours, not by infusion, but by imputation. The very terms we use, may acquit us from such a ridiculous charge; as imputation signifies "a placing to "the account of one, what was done by another." Accordingly we believe, that the essence of this righteousness abides in CHRIST, but is placed to our account; that CHRIST, and CHRIST alone, actually performed it; that CHRIST, and CHRIST alone, personally possesses it; but that performing it in our stead, and possessing it as our covenant-head, GOD imputes it to us,—GOD accepts us for it,—accepts us as much, as if we had, on our own behalf and in our own persons, severally fulfilled it.

Though one man cannot live, be actuated with a principle of life, by the soul of another; yet you must allow, that one man, nay, that many men may live, be continued in the possession of life, for the righteousness of another. Or else you must do, what I am sure you abhor;—you must charge with absurdity and impossibility, even the declaration of the DEITY; If I find in Sodom fifty righteous within the city, then will I spare all the place FOR THEIR SAKES *.

Ther. Not all your refinements can reconcile me to this uncouth notion.——The practice is unexampled, and absolutely inconsistent with the rules of distributive justice.

Asp. Ah! my Theron, if we seek an example of GOD's unbounded goodness amongst the puny proceedings of men, we shall be led into the most egregious misapprehensions. To measure one of the sparks on your ring, and fancy we have taken the dimension of the Alps or the Andes, would be, in comparison of this error, a small mistake. Since between a brilliant speck, and a range of mountains, there is some proportion; but between human beneficence, and this heavenly bounty, there cannot possibly be any.——However, the all-condescending CREATOR has been pleased, so to dispense his infinitely rich grace, that we may find, though nothing parallel, nothing correspondent, yet some faint shadow of its manner, among the affairs of mankind; something that may perhaps give us such an idea of the stupendous subject, as a glow-worm would give of the sun's splendor, in case a person had never beheld that magnificent luminary.—This remark I must entreat you to recollect, whenever I attempt to elucidate the mysteries of the gospel, by the occurrences of common life.

When your worthy minister was disabled, by a rheumatic disorder, from attending on the business of his function, several of the neighbouring clergy gave him their assistance. Was he not, by this vicarious performance of his office, entitled to all the profits of his living?—It seems therefore not so unexampled a thing, for one person to act in another's stead. And when a service is thus discharged by the proxy, the benefit may, according to the received maxims of mankind, accrue to the principal.——Did not Jehu's descendents, even to the fourth generation †, reap the advantage of their great grandfather's zeal? Does not the Duke of * * * * enjoy the honours and rewards, won by the sword of a victorious ancestor?—And may not the whole world of believers, with equal, with far greater justice, receive life and salvation, on account of their all-deserving SAVIOUR? Especially since he and they are one mystical body; represented as such in scripture, and considered as such by GOD.

No, say you: this is contrary to the rules of distributive justice. What is your idea of a SURETY? How was the affair stated, and how were matters negotiated, with relation to your generous acquaintance Philander? He, you know, was bound for an unfortunate brother, who lately stepped aside.

* Hos. xiii. 9.

* Gen. xviii. 26. † 2 Kings x. 30.

Ther.

Ther. The debt, by his brother's abſconding, devolved upon Philander.

Aſp. He was reſponſible for all, and obliged to pay the whole ſum.

Aſp. Was not his payment as ſatisfactory to the creditor, as if it had been paid in the debtor's own perſon, by the debtor's own hand?

Ther. Certainly.

Aſp. Was not the debtor, by this vicarious payment, cleared from all fear of proſecution, and acquitted from any future demand on this ſcore?

Ther. He was.

Aſp. Apply this inſtance to the redemption of ſinners by JESUS CHRIST: who is, in the ſacred writings, expreſsly ſtyled a SURETY *.——If Philander's act was deemed, in the eſtimation of law, the act of his brother; if the deed of the former was imputed, in point of advantage, entirely to the latter; why ſhould not the ſame effects take place, with regard to the divine bondſman, and poor inſolvent ſinners? Why ſhould that be exploded in our ſyſtems of divinity, which is univerſally admitted in our courts of juſtice?

Ther. Obedience and righteouſneſs are, in the nature of the things themſelves, perſonal qualities, and only ſo. Every man is that only (and can be nothing elſe) which he is in himſelf.

Aſp. Righteouſneſs, as dwelling in us, is undoubtedly a perſonal quality; and obedience, as performed by us, comes under the ſame denomination. But does this ſuperſede the neceſſity, or deſtroy the exiſtence of imputed righteouſneſs?—Your firſt propoſition is ambiguous. Let it ſpeak diſtinctly; add inherent to your righteouſneſs; and the ſenſe becomes determinate, but the argument falls to the ground.

"Every man is that only (and can be nothing elſe) "which he is in himſelf."——If I had never ſeen the Bible, I ſhould have yielded my ready aſſent to this propoſition. But, when I open the Old Teſtament, and find it written by the prophet, In the LORD ſhall all the houſe of Iſrael be juſtified †; when I turn to the New Teſtament, and hear the apoſtle ſaying, Ye are complete in HIM, who is the head of all principalities and powers ‡; I cannot concur with Theron, without contradicting revelation.——Iſrael, or the true believer, is ſaid to be juſtified; and the foundation of this bleſſing is declared to be, not in himſelf, but in the LORD. The Coloſſians are ſaid to be complete; which, we are very certain, they were not in themſelves; and are expreſsly aſſured, they were ſo in CHRIST.——Hence it appears quite contrary to my friend's aſſertion, that ſinners both have and are that in CHRIST, which they neither have nor are in themſelves. They have, by imputation, a righteouſneſs in CHRIST; they are, by this imputed righteouſneſs, complete before GOD.

I believe, your miſtake proceeds from neglecting to diſtinguiſh between INHERENT and IMPUTED.—We never ſuppoſe, that a profane perſon is devout, or an intemperate perſon ſober. This is inherent righteouſneſs.—But we maintain, that the profane and intemperate, being convinced of their iniquity, and betaking themſelves to the all-ſufficient SAVIOUR for redemption, are intereſted in the merit both of his life and of his death. This is imputed righteouſneſs.——We farther affirm, that though really abominable in themſelves, they are fully accepted by GOD, for his beloved SON's ſake. This is juſtification through imputed righteouſneſs.

However ſtrange this may ſeem, it is no precarious or unwarrantable opinion, but the clear and poſitive declaration of ſcripture. He juſtifieth, he abſolves from guilt, he treats as righteous—Whom? Upright, obedient, ſinleſs creatures? This were nothing extraordinary—No; but he juſtifieth the ungodly *, that believe in the LORD JESUS; imputing as the ground of this juſtification, their treſpaſſes to him, and his righteouſneſs to them.

Ther. I ſee no occaſion for ſuch nice diſtinctions, and metaphyſical ſubtilties, in plain popular divinity. Hard terms and abſtruſe notions may perplex the head, but ſeldom improve the heart.

Aſp. Why then do you oblige us to make uſe of them? If ſome people twiſt and entangle the reins, it behoves others to clear them of the embarraſſment, and replace them in their due order.——Many writers, either from an artful deſign, or through a ſtrange inadvertence, have jumbled and confounded theſe two very different ideas. Hence they have ſtarted objections to our doctrine, which, the moment you introduce this obvious diſtinction, vaniſh into air. They fall into a miſtake of their own, and then charge the abſurdity upon others.

I am no more fond of hard terms, and abſtruſe notions, than my Theron. Neither can I think the inſtance before us ſo abſtruſe a notion. I am very certain, you are capable of comprehending much higher and nicer refinements. Therefore I muſt once again entreat you to remember the very material difference between inherent and imputed righteouſneſs. The former is the eſſence of ſanctification; the latter is the ground of juſtification. By this, we are reſtored to the favour of GOD; by that, we are made meet for his heavenly kingdom.——Let this diſtinction, which is eaſy, which is ſcriptural, which is important, take place; and we may for the future diſmiſs what you call the metaphyſical ſubtilties. Our diſagreement will ceaſe, and our opinions tally.

Ther. I queſtion that, Aſpaſio. There are other difficulties to be got over, before I can digeſt ſo crude an opinion.——If we are juſtified by the righteouſneſs of CHRIST, then the righteouſneſs which juſtifies mankind is already wrought out.

Aſp. And this you take to be a moſt enormous falſehood. Whereas, I look upon it as a moſt delightful truth.—The righteouſneſs which juſtifies ſinful man, was ſet on foot, when GOD ſent forth his SON from the habitation of his holineſs and glory, to be born of a woman, and made ſubject to the law.——It was carried on, through the whole courſe of our SAVIOUR's life; in which he always did ſuch things, as were pleaſing to his heavenly FATHER.——It was completed at that ever-memorable, that grand period of time, when the bleſſed EMMANUEL bowed his dying head; and cried, with a ſtrong triumphant voice, IT IS FINISHED.

If the juſtifying righteouſneſs was to be wrought by ourſelves, we could never be truly and fully juſtified till death; till our warfare is accompliſhed, and our laſt act of obedience exerted.——But how uncomfortable is ſuch a notion! How miſerable would it render our lives! And how directly does it run counter to the determination of the apoſtle, Ye ARE juſtified ‡!

Ther. Soothed then with this pleaſing ſurmiſe, may not the libertine ſay to his ſoul?—"Soul, take thine eaſe "in the moſt idolent ſecurity! All my carnal appetites, "indulge yourſelves without reſtraint. Conſcience, be "under no ſolicitude to live ſoberly, righteouſly, and "godlily. For the work is done; all done to my hands. "I am like ſome fortunate heir, whoſe parents have "been ſucceſsfully induſtrious; and have left nothing "to exerciſe the diligence of their ſurviving ſon, but only to poſſeſs the inheritance, and live on labours not "his own."

Aſp. The libertine, who only ſpeculates or diſputes, may indeed abuſe the doctrine of grace. But the believer, who feels the power of grace, will improve it to better purpoſes. Where the former only fluctuates in the underſtanding, ſuch deteſtable conſequences may enſue.

* Heb. vi. 22.

† Iſ. xlv. 25.

‡ Col. ii. 10.

* Rom. iv. 5.

† 1 Cor. vi. 11.

cuſue. Where the latter operates on the heart, it will always produce very different effects. Such a perſon, from ſuch a faith, will be no more inclined to inactivity or licentiouſneſs, than our buſy humming companions are inclined, by this bright ſunſhine and all thoſe expanded bloſſoms, to ſleep away their hours in the hive. And you may as ſoon expect to ſee theſe colonies of the ſpring, ſwarming in December, clinging to an icicle, or diſperſing themſelves to gather honey on the ſnow; as to ſee a truly-gracious man, who is dead to ſin, living any longer therein *. Whoever, therefore, ſo ſhamefully perverts ſo ſweet and glorious a doctrine, is a witneſs againſt himſelf, that he has neither lot nor portion in the ineſtimable privilege. If an animal ſuck poiſon from the moſt wholeſome herbs, we are ſure, from that infallible indication, it is the vile ſpider, or ſome envenomed inſect, not the valuable and induſtrious bee.

Ther. Truly, Aſpaſio, I know not how to call that doctrine ſweet, much leſs can I recommend it as wholeſome, which renders repentance, perſonal reformation, and inherent rectitude, needleſs. And if your tenet is once received, all theſe duties may fairly be diſmiſſed. So that if the thing was poſſible, yet it would be pernicious.

Aſp. The prophet was of another mind: They ſhall look on him whom they have pierced, and mourn †. Sinners ſhall look, by faith, to their crucified LORD; ſhall ſee him faſtened with nails to the curſed tree; ſee him ſtabbed to the heart by the bloody ſpear. And remembering, that this was the puniſhment due to their provocations; believing, that, by this puniſhment, they are freed from all penal ſufferings, and entitled to all ſpiritual bleſſings; they ſhall not be tempted to tranſgreſs, but incited to mourn; not play the profligate, but act the penitent.—The apoſtle exactly agrees with the prophet; and both are diametrically oppoſite to my friend; The goodneſs, the tranſcendent and amazing goodneſs of GOD our SAVIOUR, inſtead of diverting from, leadeth to repentance ‡.

Far from obſtructing, it powerfully promotes, perſonal reformation. For thus ſaith that all-wiſe BEING, who intimately knows our frame, and diſcerns what is moſt effectual to work upon our minds; The grace of GOD, which bringeth ſalvation, hath appeared; teaching us, that, denying all ungodlineſs and worldly luſts, we ſhould live ſoberly, righteouſly, and godlily in this preſent evil world ‖. Grace, you obſerve, even that gloriouſly free grace, which bringeth ſalvation to unworthy creatures, is a diſſuaſive of all vice, and an encouragement to every virtue.

As to inherent rectitude, how can that be rendered needleſs by imputed righteouſneſs? Is health rendered inſignificant, by the abundance of our riches? Does eaſe become ſuperfluous, through the beauty of our apparel?—Holineſs is the health of our ſouls, and the eaſe of our minds. Whereas, ungovernable paſſions create keener anguiſh, than a brood of vipers gnawing our boſoms. Inordinate deſires are a more intolerable nuiſance, than ſwarms of locuſts infeſting our abodes. To regulate theſe, and to reſtrain theſe, can never be needleſs, till comfort and ſorrow change their properties; till the diabolical nature becomes equally deſirable with the divine.

Ther. The believer, indeed, out of mere generoſity, may, if he pleaſe, add works of righteouſneſs of his own. But his main intereſt is ſecure without them.

Aſp. Rather, Theron, he muſt out of duty, he will out of gratitude, and from the new diſpoſition of his nature he cannot but, add to his faith works of righteouſneſs.

How runs the heavenly edict, in this caſe made and provided? I will, that they who have believed in GOD, be careful to maintain good works §.——How beats the pulſe of a believing ſoul? You may feel it, in that truly generous demand, made by the Pſalmiſt: What ſhall I render unto the LORD for all the benefits that he hath done unto me? *? A grateful heart wants not the goad, but is a ſpur to itſelf.——How leans the bias of his nature? He is new-born; created in CHRIST JESUS unto good works †; his delight is in the law of the LORD ‡. And whatever is our ſupreme delight, we are ſure to proſecute, and proſecute with ardour. We cannot but ſpeak the things which we have ſeen and heard ‖, was the profeſſion of the apoſtles; and, if applied to practical godlineſs, is the experience of the Chriſtian.

Nor can his main intereſt be ſecure without a holy obedience. Becauſe the Judge of the world, at the day of eternal retribution, will declare to the workers of iniquity; I never knew you; depart from me §: Becauſe holineſs, though not the cauſe of our admittance to the beatific viſion, is ſo neceſſary a qualification, that without it no man ſhall ſee the LORD ¶. Without it, there is no acceſs to heaven, neither could there be any enjoyment in heaven.

Ther. Pray, recollect yourſelf, Aſpaſio. According to the tenor of your own illuſtration, the neceſſity of perſonal obedience is evidently vacated. For how can the law demand a debt of the principal, which has been fully diſcharged by the ſurety?

Aſp. The debt of penal ſuffering, and the debt of perfect obedience, are fully diſcharged by our divine SURETY: ſo that we are no longer under a neceſſity of obeying, in order to obtain an exemption from puniſhment, or to lay the foundation for our final acceptance. We are nevertheleſs engaged, by many other obligations, to walk in all dutiful and conſcientious regard to the law. Becauſe—this is the moſt authentic proof of our love to the gracious REDEEMER; If ye love me, keep my commandments ‡:—This is a comfortable evidence of our union with that exalted head; He that abideth in me, and I in him, the ſame bringeth forth much fruit †:—This is alſo the moſt effectual method of adorning our profeſſion, of magnifying its Author, and of winning our neighbours to embrace the goſpel; Let your light, the light of your exemplary converſation, not only appear, but ſhine before men; that they, ſeeing your good works, may think honourably of your religion ††; may glorify your FATHER which is in heaven; and ſay, with thoſe proſelytes mentioned by the prophet, We will go with you.

Do we then make void the law, through the imputed righteouſneſs of our LORD? No, verily: but—if gratitude to our dying SAVIOUR have any conſtraining influence; if a concern for our own comfort have any perſuaſive energy; if there be any thing inviting, any thing deſirable in the proſpect of honouring GOD, and edifying man,—we eſtabliſh the law. By all theſe generous, manly, endearing motives, we enforce its precepts, and provide for its obſervance.

* Rom. vi. 2. † Zech. xi. 10.

‡ Rom. ii. 4. ‖ Tit. ii. 11, 12.

§ Tit. iii. 8. The original word προϊσταϑαι has a beauty and an energy, which, I believe, it is impoſſible for our language to preſerve, by any literal tranſlation. It implies, that a believer ſhould not only be exerciſed in, but eminent for, all good works; ſhould ſhew others the way, and outſtrip them in the honourable race; be both a pattern, and a patron of univerſal godlineſs.

* Pſal. cxvi. 12. † Eph. ii. 10. ‡ Pſal. i. 2.

‖ Cannot but—This is an expreſſion uſed by the apoſtles, Acts iv. 20. It deſcribes the genuine and habitual propenſity of their new nature. As the compaſſionate bowels cannot but yearn at ſpectacles of miſery; as the benevolent heart cannot but dilate with pleaſure, at the ſight of a brother's happineſs; ſo the new creature in CHRIST cannot but deſire to glorify, and delight to obey the ever-bleſſed GOD.

§ Matt. vii. 23. ¶ Heb. xii. 14.

‡ John xiv. 15. † John xv. 5.

†† Matth. v. 16. Therefore, by our LORD in this place, and by St Paul in his Epiſtle to Titus, good works are called καλα εργα, graceful, beauteous, ornamental.

Ther.

Ther. Should we admit this doctrine, mankind could no longer be conſidered as in themſelves, and ſolely in themſelves accountable creatures. Nor would the future judgment be an equitable diſtribution of rewards and puniſhments; but only GOD's awful and uncontrollable execution of his own arbitrary and irreverſible decrees.

Aſp. I have never been accuſtomed to conſider mankind, under the goſpel-diſpenſation, as accountable ſolely in themſelves: becauſe, in this comfortable and benign ſcheme, a MEDIATOR intervenes; undertakes to anſwer for his people; and bears the chaſtiſement of their peace. Were we accountable ſolely in ourſelves, CHRIST, our great HIGH PRIEST, would be ſet aſide; and his ſacrifice, as a propitiation for ſin, be of none effect.

Why may not the future judgment be an equitable diſtribution of rewards and puniſhments? If thoſe who reject the atonement of the dying JESUS, and refuſe to depend on his conſummate righteouſneſs, are left to ſtand or fall according to the iſſue of their own obedience; if believers, on the other hand, are accepted through their moſt meritorious REDEEMER; but rewarded with higher or inferior degrees of felicity, in proportion to the ſanctity of their nature, and uſefulneſs of their lives:—I ſee nothing arbitrary in this procedure; but an admirable mixture of juſt ſeverity, and free goodneſs;—on thoſe who reject the atonement, juſt ſeverity;—to thoſe who rely on their SAVIOUR, free goodneſs.

Ther. The obedience of CHRIST was wholly due for himſelf; and therefore could not merit for another.

Aſp. A bold aſſertion this! Whoever can make it good, would infallibly overthrow my opinion; and, at the ſame time, deſtroy all my hopes. But ſurely, Theron, it is not your real ſentiment.

Could it then be matter of duty in the eternal SON, to be born of a woman; and in the LORD of lords, to become the ſervant of all? Could it be matter of duty in the KING of glory, to embrace the infamy of the croſs; and in the PRINCE of life, to pour out his ſoul unto death?—If all this was matter of duty, the ever-bleſſed JESUS (how ſhall I ſpeak it? who can believe it?) was no better than an unprofitable ſervant. For ſuch is the acknowledged character of every one who does no more than is his duty to do *.

Ther. Not ſo faſt, not quite ſo vehement, my friend. Remember what the ſcripture affirms. CHRIST is ſaid to receive a commandment, and be ſubject to the law: both which expreſſions evidently imply duty.

Aſp. In order to accompliſh our redemption, the SON of GOD ſubmitted himſelf to the authority of the law, and became obedient to its precepts. But this was his own ſpontaneous act; the matter of his free choice; to which he lay under no manner of obligation, till he engaged to be our Surety.

Being in the form of GOD, he was Lord of the law; and no more ſubject to its commands, than obnoxious to its curſe. Nevertheleſs he took upon him the form of a ſervant; and was made under the law. Wherefore? That he might obtain everlaſting life and glory for himſelf? No; but that he might redeem thoſe who were under the law †. From which it appears, that both his engagement and his obedience were, not for himſelf, but for his people. Therefore the prophet cries out, with holy exultation, To us a Child is born; to us a Son is given ‡! His incarnate ſtate and human nature, together with all that he did and ſuffered in both, were for us; thoſe aſſumed on our account, theſe referred to our advantage.

Let us conſider this, and be amazed, and be charmed. The great univerſal LORD vouchſafes to pay univerſal obedience! What condeſcenſion was here!—He vouchſafes to pay it, for us men, and for our redemption! What goodneſs was this!

Ther. Before we indulge the devotional ſtrain, we ſhould take care that our devotion is founded on rational principles; otherwiſe it may prove, like the flaſh of a ſky-rocket, tranſient and momentary.

Aſp. For this, I think, there is a ſolid foundation in reaſon, as well as ſcripture. As ſoon as the man CHRIST JESUS was united to the ſecond perſon of the TRINITY, he muſt have, by virtue of that union, an unqueſtionable right to everlaſting life and glory. Therefore he could be under no neceſſity of obeying, in order to procure either honour or happineſs for himſelf. But all that he performed in conformity to the preceptive part of the law, he performed under the character of a public perſon; in the place, and for the benefit of his ſpiritual ſeed; that they might be intereſted in it, and juſtified by it.

Ther. Be it ſo: the believer is intereſted in CHRIST's righteouſneſs.——Pray, is he intereſted in all, or only in part?—If in all, then every believer is equally righteous, and equally to be rewarded. Which is contrary to an allowed maxim, That there will be different allotments of happineſs in the heavenly world.—If in part only, how will you aſcertain the degree? what proportion belongs to this perſon, and what to the other?—— Either way, your ſcheme is inextricably embarraſſed.

Aſp. The reply to my Theron's inquiry is eaſy; and the embarraſſment he mentions, is but imaginary.—— Every true believer is intereſted in all CHRIST's righteouſneſs; in the whole merit of his ſpotleſs nature, of his perfect obedience, and expiatory death.

Leſs than the whole would be unavailable. Whereas the whole renders us completely juſtified.

You are a great admirer of anatomy, Theron, and muſt undoubtedly remember the very peculiar ſtructure of the ear. Other parts of the body are progreſſive in their growth. Their bulk is proportioned to the infantile, or manly age. But the organs of hearing, I have been informed, are preciſely of the ſame ſize, in the feeble infant, and the confirmed adult.——Juſtification likewiſe, being abſolutely neceſſary to a ſtate of acceptance with GOD, is, in every ſtage of the Chriſtian courſe, and even in the firſt dawn of ſincere faith, complete. With regard to the exiſtence of the privilege, there is no difference * in the babes, the young men, the fathers in CHRIST. The perception, the aſſurance, the comfortable enjoyment of the mercy, may increaſe; but the mercy itſelf is incapable of augmentation.

The various advances in ſanctification account for the various degrees of future glory; and not account for them only, but render them entirely reaſonable, and, according to our apprehenſion of things, unavoidable.—As to ſettling the proportion, we may ſafely leave that to the ſupreme ARBITRATOR. He, who meteth out the heavens with a ſpan, and ſetteth a compaſs upon the face of the deep, cannot be at a loſs to adjuſt this particular.

Ther. The organs of hearing, though not preciſely, are very nearly, of the ſame bulk, in the babe and the man. They acquire, from advancing years, ſcarce any thing more than an increaſe of ſolidity. So that I make no objection to your illuſtration, but to your doctrine.

* Luke xvii. 10.

† Gal. iv. 5.

‡ Iſ. ix. 6. Eſt præterea emphaſis ſingularis in voce nobis. Significat id, quod omnes ſentiunt, noſtro bono et commodo natum eſſe hunc Puerum Imperatorem. VITRING. in loc.

* To the ſame purpoſe ſpeaks one of our moſt celebrated divines; as great an adept in ſacred literature, as ages have produced.——"All are juſtified alike: the truth of faith juſtifying, not "the meaſure. Juſtification therefore is the ſame in all that believe; though their belief be in different degrees. So, once in "the wilderneſs, all gathered not manna in the ſame meaſure; "yet, when all came to meaſure, they had all alike; none above "an omer, none under."

LIGHTFOOT, vol. II. p. 1052.

If CHRIST has done all, and we are entitled to his whole merits only by believing; to be saved, must be the easiest thing in the world. Whereas the Bible represents Christianity, as a race and a warfare, a state of conflict and a course of striving.—In good truth, Aspasio, you prophesy pleasing things. Divinity is not your profession; or else, I should number you among "the "smooth, emollient, downy doctors." For, according to the articles of your creed, there is no more difficulty in securing heaven, than in rising from our seat.

Asp. A speculative assent to all the principles of religion is, I acknowledge, a very easy matter. It may, it must exist, where-ever there is a tolerable capacity for reasoning, and a due attention to evidence.——This notional faith forced its way into the breast of Simon the sorcerer*; and extorted a confession from the dying lips of Julian † the apostate. Irresistible as the stroke of lightning, terrible also as its fiery glare, it flashes conviction into the very devils. Even those execrable spirits believe and tremble ‡.

But the faith, which, far from resting in speculation, exalts the desires, regulates the passions, and refines the whole conversation;—the faith which, according to the expressive language of scripture, purifies the heart, overcomes the world, and sets the affections on things above;—this truly noble and triumphant faith is no such easy acquisition. This is the gift of an infinite BENEFACTOR; the work of a divine AGENT: called, therefore, by way of super-eminent distinction, faith of the operation of GOD *; because GOD himself, by the effectual working of his mighty power, produces it in the human soul.

The exercise of this faith, I would not compare to an active gentleman, rising from his seat; but rather to a shipwrecked mariner, labouring to gain some place of safety.—He espies a large rock, which rears its head above the boisterous flood. To this he bears away, and to this he approaches; but whirling winds, and dashing waves, drive him back to an unhappy distance.—Exerting all his strength, he advances nearer still; and attempts to climb the desirable eminence. When a sweeping surge interposes, and drenches him again in the rolling deep.—By determined efforts, he recovers the space he had lost. Now he fastens on the cliff, and has almost escaped the danger. But there is such a numbness in his limbs, that he cannot maintain his hold; and such an impetuous swell in the ocean, that he is once more dislodged, and plunged afresh into the raging billows.—What can he do? His life, his precious life, is at stake. He must renew, still renew, and never intermit his endeavours.—Neither let him abandon himself to despair. The MASTER sees him, amidst all his fruitless toil. Let him cry earnestly, LORD, save me, I perish! and HE, who commandeth the winds and the waves, will be sure to put forth his beneficent hand, and rescue him from the devouring sea.

Such, my friend, so painful, so assiduous are the struggles of faith, before it can rest, in peaceful security, on the Rock of Ages, CHRIST JESUS. Of this you may, some time or other, be assured, not only from my lips, but from your own experience.

Ther. What may happen in some future period of time, is beyond my power to foresee. At present, I am apt to think, we must put a stop to the theological lecture. Don't you remember our engagement with Altinous? and you will own, that punctuality in performing our promises, is at least a moral virtue, if it be not a Christian grace.

* Acts viii. 13.

† It is related in ecclesiastical history, that when the Emperor Julian was setting out upon his Parthian expedition, he threatened to persecute the Christians with the utmost severity, as soon as he returned victorious. Upon this occasion, Libanius the rhetorician asked one of them with an insulting air; What the carpenter's son was doing, while such a storm hung over his followers? The carpenter's son, replied the Christian, is making a coffin for your Emperor.—The event proved the answer to be prophetic. For in an engagement with the enemy, that royal but wretched apostate was mortally wounded; and cried, with his expiring breath, Vicisti, O Galilæe! I am vanquished, O Galilean! thy right hand hath the pre-eminence!

‡ Jam. ii. 19.

* Col. ii. 12.

DIALOGUE VI.

ASPASIO's affairs called him to London. He staid in town a few days: but as soon as business was finished, he quitted the city, and hastened to his friend's country-seat.—Upon his arrival, he found some agreeable company, that came on purpose to spend the evening with the family. This incident prevented the immediate prosecution of their subject.——As the next morning proved misty, and unfit for walking abroad, Theron invited Aspasio to pass an hour in his study.

It was situate at the extremity of a large gallery: which, while it conducted the feet to a repository of learning, interposed between the ear, and all the disturbance of domestic affairs: so that you are accommodated with every thing that may regale a studious mind; and incommoded with nothing that may interrupt a sedate attention.—Aspasio readily consented to the proposal; but desired, first, to take a turn in this beautiful oblong, and divert himself with the decorations of the place.

Asp. A very short survey, Theron, is sufficient to discover the correctness of your judgment, and the true delicacy of your taste.—Here are no impertinent and frivolous exhibitions of romantic tales, or poetic stories. Here are no indecent pieces of imagery, that tend to corrupt a chaste, or inflame a wanton fancy.—On the contrary, I am presented with a collection of maps, accurately drawn by the most able hands; and with several remarkable transactions of antiquity, most eloquently told in the language of the pencil.—You have happily hit that grand point, which the gentleman of refinement, as well as the author of genius, should ever keep in view,—the union of the beneficial with the delightful *.

Ther. Indeed, my Aspasio, I have often been disappointed, sometimes even shocked, in the gardens, the porticoes, and the walks of some modern virtuosi. Their portraits and statues are little else, but an assemblage of elaborate trifles. Ixion stretched upon the wheel, or Phaeton precipitated from the chariot. Apollo stringing his lyre, Jupiter (I beg his supreme highness's pardon, for not giving him the precedence in my catalogue) bestriding his eagle, and balancing his bolts.—Pray, where is the advantage of being introduced to this fabulous tribe of gentry? What noble idea can they awaken, or what valuable impression leave upon the mind? The best we can say of such performances, is, that they are limning and sculpture expensively thrown away.

This celebrated trumpery one can bear with, however. But, when the painting and sculpture, instead of cultivating virtue, and improving our morals, are calculated to be the very bane of both,—will you call this an elegant entertainment? No: 'tis a nuisance; 'tis a pest.——In the statues, I grant, every dimple sinks, and every muscle swells, with the exactest propriety.—The countenance is animated with life, and the limbs are ready to start into motion.—The picture, I am sensible, is as highly finished as the effigy; the distributions of light and shade most arfully adjusted; the di-

* Omne tulit punctum, qui miscuit utile dulci. Hor.

minutions

minutions of the perſpective true to a nicety; nor can any thing exceed the eaſy flow of the robe, unleſs it be the graceful attitude, and almoſt-ſpeaking aſpect, of the principal figure.——But is this maſterly execution an equivalent for the moſt malignant effects; for ſullying the purity of my fancy, and poiſoning the powers of my imagination?

Is it an indication of the owner's judicious taſte, to prefer regularity of features in the hammered block, before orderly and harmonious affections in his own breaſt? Does it beſpeak a refined diſpoſition, or a benevolent temper, to be ſo extravagantly enamoured with the touches of a laſcivious pencil, as to expoſe them in the moſt frequented paſſages, and obtrude them on every unwary gueſt?—Surely, this can create no very advantageous opinion of a gentleman's intellectual diſcernment. Much leſs can it raiſe an amiable idea of his moral character *. On ſuch occaſions, I am ſtrongly tempted to ſuſpect, that real honour is a ſtranger, where common decency † is wanting.

As for the artiſt, one can hardly forbear execrating his hateful folly, who could proſtitute ſuch fine talents to ſuch infamous purpoſes.——Deteſted be the chiſel! that teaches, though with inimitable dexterity, the cold obdurate marble to enkindle diſſolute affections.——Abhorred be the pencil! that makes no other uſe of the moſt lovely colours, than to pollute the canvaſs, and inſnare the ſpectator.

It is argued, I know, that many of thoſe pieces are the completeſt models extant.——An everlaſting reproach this to the art; but no apology for the performances. Since the more nicely they are executed, the more miſchievous ‡ is their influence. It ſtrikes the ſurer, and ſinks the deeper. It dreſſes deſtruction gay, and paves with beauty the way to ruin.

It is my chief ambition, Aſpaſio, to have all my decorations ſo circumſtanced, that the beholder may learn ſome valuable leſſon in morality, or be reminded of ſome important event in hiſtory; may find, even in the ſcenes of his amuſement, ſomething to eſtabliſh his virtue, or enlarge his knowledge.

I frequently entertain my eldeſt ſon, who is reading the Greek and Latin hiſtorians, with an explanation of my principal drawings; that he may behold in colouring, what he has peruſed in narrative.——At this inſtant, the youth happened to make his appearance; paying his reſpects to Aſpaſio, and dutifully ſaluting his father.——It juſt recurs to my memory, ſaid Theron, that ſome neceſſary affairs of the family require my attendance for a few minutes. Will you excuſe my abſence, good Aſpaſio; and permit my ſon to ſupply my place?

You will very much oblige me, by leaving me ſuch a companion.—And come, my dear Sir, addreſſing himſelf to Eugenio, as I know you are a lover of learning, what think you of diverting ourſelves with theſe agreeable books? which give us their inſtructive leſſons, not in puzzling languages, but in pleaſing colours.——Eugenio ſpoke his conſent, and expreſſed his modeſty, by a becoming bluſh, while Aſpaſio, proceeded——

Aſp. This is a ſtriking picture indeed! Hills piled on hills form a moſt aſtoniſhing proſpect. What horrible magnificence reigns amidſt thoſe wild and ſhaggy rocks! Nature ſeems to have deſigned them for the boundaries of the world. Yet thoſe daring troops are attempting to paſs the prodigious barrier. Who are they, Eugenio, and whom ſhall we call their leader?

Eug. This, Sir, is the famous Hannibal, heading and encouraging his army in the paſſage of the Alps. The ſons of Africa ſeem to ſhiver with cold, as they traverſe thoſe frozen regions, and march among the clouds.

Aſp. 'Tis the very ſame. Some, you obſerve, climb, with exceſſive toil, the ſteep and craggy cliffs. Others, with far greater difficulty, deſcend through dreadful declivities of ice; expoſed, all the while, to the arrows of the mountaineers——Some, endeavouring to avoid the ſhowers of ſteel, ſlip with their feet, and tumble headlong down the vaſt projecting promontories. See! from what a height they are falling! carriages and their drivers, the horſe and his rider! and at what a diſtance ſtill, from the ſtony abyſs below!—Some lie, with cloſed eyelids, and ghaſtly features, daſhed to death at the very bottom. Others, writhing with the torture of mangled limbs, and broken bones, lift up an agonizing look to their comrades.——Their comrades, inſenſible of a brother's miſery, and wholly intent upon their own preſervation, hang frightfully ſuſpended on the edges of the precipice. The precipice ſeems to totter as they cling; and the alarmed ſpectator expects, every moment, a hideous downfal.——Are you not ſtartled at the view, Eugenio, and in pain for the hardy adventurers?

Eug. I am, Sir. And I wonder, how they will extricate themſelves from theſe perilous circumſtances. I have read in Livy, that they cut their way through the rocks, after they had ſoftened them with vinegar. But is this probable? how could they procure a ſufficient quantity, amidſt thoſe deſolate mountains?

Aſp. I believe, their reſolution and their perſeverance were the vinegar. Theſe open a road through rocks. Theſe, under the conduct of prudence, and the favour of heaven *, ſurmount all obſtacles,. Influenced by

* 'Tis pity, but the advice of Cicero, that great maſter of elegant taſte, and polite manners, was received as a ſtandard of regulation by all our connoiſſeurs in the fine arts. In primis providebit ne ornamenta ædium atque hortorum vitium aliquod indicent ineſſe moribus. De Offic.

† A gentleman, obſerving ſome groſs indelicacies of this kind, at the ſeat of a perſon of diſtinction, very acutely (and, I believe too juſtly) ſaid,

His paintings are the gibbet of his name.

‡ I hope it will not be thought improper, I wiſh it was entirely needleſs, to animadvert upon a practice which is not only a reproach to our Chriſtian profeſſion, but an inſult upon national decorum; the practice of expoſing to public view, and offering to public ſale, ſuch ſhameful prints as are fitted only to awaken licentious deſires, and cheriſh the moſt profligate diſpoſitions.

Such ſpectacles are a ſpecies of the rankeſt poiſon. And can the poiſon be leſs pernicious, becauſe it is received at the eye, inſtead of paſſing through the lips? becauſe it tends more immediately to debauch the morals, and but remotely to deſtroy the conſtitution?—No wonder, ſo many of our youths are corrupted, and ſo many robberies committed, while ſuch ſcenes of pictured lewdneſs are ſuffered to inflame them with luſt, and habituate them to impudence.

Another very indecent cuſtom has unaccountably ſtole its way into ſeveral performances of genius and elegance. The cuſtom, I mean, of repreſenting the muſes, the graces, and other romantic perſonages, in the form of beautiful ladies, partly, if not entirely, naked.—'Tis true, here are no looſe adventures, no immodeſt geſtures; nay more, the artiſt expreſſes his own, and conſults your modeſty, by preſenting you with a poſition in profile, by the intervention of a foliage, or the lappet of a robe.—But let me aſk the ingenious operator, If he would chuſe to introduce his wife or his daughter in ſuch a manner, to public company?—Is he ſtartled at the queſtion? is he ſhocked at the thought? Then let him reflect, and let others conſider, whether that can be graceful or allowable in a picture, which would be brutal and unſufferable in common life?

Socrates (who, before his application to philoſophy, practiſed as a ſtatuary) could not but bluſh at this abuſe of his art; and being to form a repreſentation of the graces, he repreſented them properly habited.

* Under the favour of heaven.—I cannot but wiſh, that the relator of Lord Anſon's voyage round the world, had anticipated Aſpaſio's remark; had made ſome grateful acknowledgements to an interpoſing PROVIDENCE, in that maſculine, nervous, noble narrative:—A narative of ſuch ſignal deliverances, ſo critically timed, and ſo ſurpriſingly circumſtanced, as, in the courſe of one expedition, are ſcarcely to be paralleled.

I am perſuaded, it would have been no diſparagement of the great commander, and his gallant officers, to have it thankfully these, the survivors press boldly on; and are determined to vanquish the horrors of nature, as a prelude to their victory over the forces of Rome. Let these, resolution and perseverance I mean, be the companions of my Eugenio's youthful studies, and they will enable him also to conquer difficulties,—even all the difficulties which lie in his way.

What is our next draught? At each end we have a group of living figures. All the intermediate space is an extensive tract of land, diversified only by rapid rivers, horrid deserts, and mountainous ridges; with here and there a few savage natives, in uncouth dresses, and formidable arms.—It is more like a map, than a picture.—And the most remarkable beauty is the aereal perspective; which puts a very agreeable cheat upon our eyes; causing us to behold, on an ell of canvas, the space of many hundreds of miles.

Eug. This represents the retreat of the ten thousand Greeks. First we behold them, in the plains of Media; at an immense distance from their native country, without guides, without provision; and, what is the most desperate calamity of all, deprived of their ablest officers by treachery and murder.—Well may they look dejected. How have I pitied them, as I read their story! abhorred the perfidy of their enemies, and wished them all success in their hazardous enterprise!

Asp. Don't you perceive, their drooping spirits begin to revive, and some gleam of hope diffuses itself through their countenances, while they listen to the eloquent Xenophon? who stands conspicuous in the midst, haranguing his soldiers, and rousing their courage. But, ah! what a vast extent of unknown climes must they traverse, with a numerous and victorious army, harassing them in flank, or hanging upon their rear? What fatigues must they sustain, what hardships endure, before they arrive at their wished-for home?—Home! Fired by the enchanting name, and animated by their brave philosophic leader, they resolve to push their way through all the extremes of peril and of pain. To scatter, with their little band, the encircling millions of barbarians, is the smallest of their achievements. They cross rivers, they scale rocks, whose slippery banks, and craggy summits, are lined with opposing nations. They wade through deserts of snow, and pass over inhospitable mountains, the far more dreaded abodes of desolation, drought, and famine. They encounter the keenness of the northern storm, and all the rigour of the most malignant seasons.—As some of these articles are incapable of being expressed by the pencil, the artist remits us to the historian, and has contented himself with marking out the most distinguished stages of this memorable expedition. Only we view the courageous itinerants, once again, on a pretty lofty eminence. There they appear, not with their former dejection, but in all the transports of joy.

Eug. This, Sir, is the mountain Teigne. From whence they had the first view of the sea, and the first dawn of safety. There they embrace one another, and extol their commanders, especially the noble Xenophon; whose history gives me great delight, and his manly yet benign aspect, strangely attracts my esteem. Methinks, under such a general I could have been willing to take my share in all the toil, and all the hazards of the expedition.

Asp. Would my Eugenio? Then I will list him under a Captain unspeakably more accomplished and benificent. Young as you are, you shall, from this hour, commence a soldier and a traveller. A soldier, to fight against sin, and every temptation. A traveller, to pass through the wilderness of this world, unto the land of everlasting rest.——Though your enemies may be numerous, and your journey tedious, yet faint not, neither be discouraged. The LORD of heaven is your guide, and heaven itself shall be your exceeding great reward. When you arrive at those happy abodes, your delight will infinitely surpass all that the Grecians felt on Teigne, when their ravished eyes beheld, and their tongues with ecstasy, shouted, The sea! the sea!

The scene of yonder picture, I would venture to affirm, lies among the ancient Jews.

Eug. How can you tell this, Sir, at such a distance?

Asp. By the fringes in the borders of their garments, and on each fringe a riband of blue.——GOD almighty commanded all the Jews, to observe all this peculiarity in their habit *; that, their very cloaths, being different from the apparel of their Heathen neighbours, might admonish them not to be conformed to their idolatrous worship and licentious manners.—This, as well as every other divine command, our LORD JESUS CHRIST most exactly obeyed. Therefore we are told by the evangelical historian, that the diseased woman, who touched but the hem of his garment, was restored to health.—Hem it is in our English Bibles. But, if you consult that most excellent of all books, the Greek Testament, you will find, that the original word might more properly be rendered fringe †.—However, let us pass from the drapery to the design.

Eug. Here we see David in one of the most threatening exigencies of his whole life. Saul, more like a bloodhound than a king, pursues the best of sons, and the most valuable of subjects. He has extended the wings of his very superior army, in order to surround ‡ the injured hero, and his handful of associates.

fully recognized, on some very unexpected, yet most advantageous turn of affairs, THIS HATH GOD DONE!—Neither could it have detracted from the merit of the brave sailors, to have confessed, on many hazardous emergencies, that all their resolution, all their address, and the exertion of their utmost abilities, had been only lost labour, without the remarkable co-operation of divine goodness.—And I am apprehensive, that it must considerably diminish the delight of many readers, to observe the blessed AUTHOR of all these mercies passed by unnoticed, unacknowledged, and without any share of the praise.

The sarcasm on Pope Adrian and his exploits, I fear, would be too proper on this occasion, Hic DEUS nihil fecit.

* One would wonder how the Jews can so tenaciously adhere to their law, and yet so apparently neglect its precepts. Where are the sons of Abraham, who observe this express and positive command of JEHOVAH? Though this indeed might be obeyed, yet many of the Mosaical injunctions are rendered, and by nothing less than the dispensations of providence, absolutely impracticable. Is not this therefore a most incontestable proof,—a proof, not invented by the arts of sophistry, but written by the finger of the ALMIGHTY himself,—that the legal ordinances are abolished, in order to make way for a better dispensation?—When the avenues are become inaccessible, the house untenantable, and the principal apartments irreparably decayed, is not this the most cogent admonition to the inhabitants, that they betake themselves to some new and more commodious residence?—See Numb. xv. 38.

† Mat. xi. 20. Κρασπεδοις.

‡ To this, or some such incident, may be applied a passage of the Psalms, which, in our translation, is very obscure; has scarce any sense, or, if any, a very unjustifiable one. Wherefore should I fear in the days of evil, when the wickedness of my heels compasseth me round about? Psal. xlix. 5.—Wherefore? The reason is very apparent. When wickedness cleaves to a person's heels, or habitually attends his goings, it raises an army of terrors. It unsheaths the sword of divine vengeance, and levels at his guilty head every threatening in the book of GOD.

Surely then another translation should be given to the words, and a different turn to the sense! And another translation the words will bear; a different sense the connection demands.—Wherefore should I fear, when wickedness compasseth me about at my heels? This is a fine spirited interrogation. This implies a great and edifying truth. From this also the verse appears, not only with propriety, but with beauty.—When wickedness, or the malicious attempts of wicked men—compass me about, surround me, threaten me on every side,—nay when they are at my very heels, just upon the point to seize, overwhelm, and crush me; so that the danger seems both inevitable and imminent:—yet even then, having GOD's almighty power and inviolable faithfulness for my protection, wherefore should I be alarmed?

Asp. This is the most animated, and, I think, the most terrible performance, that has hitherto come under our view.—Consternation and doubt agitate their looks. Shall they surrender themselves, as so many tame victims, to the tyrant's fury; or shall they cut their way to safety, through the hearts of countrymen, friends, and brothers? What a fearful dilemma!—While they are debating, the pursuers are closing upon them. A few, a few minutes more, must decide their fate.—But who is the person that intervenes, just at this critical juncture?

Eug. It is a messenger from the principal inhabitants of Sychar. He comes breathless and trembling, amazement in his face, and dust upon his head. "An invasion!" he cries,—"An invasion! The Philistines have poured themselves upon our frontiers!—The Philistines are over-running the land *!"

Asp. Upon the receipt of this news, see! what vexation reddens in the disappointed monarch's aspect! What anger lightens in his eye! At the same time, what black reflections on his country's danger, mingle themselves with the fiery passions, and almost quench the flame enkindling in his cheeks. Shall the vulture relinquish his prey, even when it lies fluttering under his talons? Galling thought! But his kingdom is at stake. If he does not immediately advance to repel the enemy, all, all his all is lost. Burning therefore with indignation, yet chilled with fear, he turns, hasty though reluctant, away †.——Are you not charmed, Eugenio, with the description of tumultuous and contrary passions, which afford the finest subject for historic painting, and are so happily expressed in this piece?

Eug. Indeed, Sir, I am shocked, rather than charmed. The very looks of that revengeful monarch fill me with horror. What must he suffer in his mind, who discovers such rage and anguish in his features! I would not have his furious temper, for all his royal power.

Asp. Then, my dear Eugenio, you must endeavour to suppress every emotion of envy and malevolence. You must cherish a cordial good-will to all men; and learn to rejoice in their excellencies and happiness, as well as your own. Envy is the worm that gnaws, envy is the fury that embroils, his wretched heart. And an author, with whom you will ere long be acquainted, has assured us,

Invidia Siculi non invenere tyranni Tormentum majus. HOR.

The next is a kind of night-piece. Stars are in the sky, and the new moon rides on the skirts of the hemisphere; which affords just light enough to distinguish objects.—This is a perfect contrast to the foregoing. We see no conflict of jarring passions. But the principal person appears sedate and composed, as the night that surrounds him. He stands on the bank of a river, thoughtful and attentive; as though he was pondering, or executing, some important project.

Eug. This is Cyrus the Great. He stands upon the banks of the Euphrates; not far from Babylon. He points with his sceptre, and is giving directions to his army. The directions are, to pass through the channel of the river, (which is drained of its water) in order to surprise the city.

Asp. This is a prince of very superior dignity; the honoured instrument of executing JEHOVAH's counsels. He was foretold by the prophet Isaiah, and even mentioned by name ‡, more than two hundred years before his birth. Let us wish him prosperity. For he goes to humble the pride of Babylon, and release the captivity of Israel.——See! with what regular movements, and what calm alacrity, his troops advance! Silence seems to escort them: while, under covert of the shades, and with providence at their head, they march along a road, never before trodden by the foot of man.——The soldiers of the garrison have abandoned their station on the wall, to join in the dissolute indulgence of this fatal night. The inhabitants, like many a heedless sinner, are lulled in indolence, and dreaming of pleasures, even on the very brink of ruin.

Eug. Why are those brazen gates which lead to the river, placed in such a distinguished point of view? They strike my eye more, I think, than all the monuments of art and grandeur, which adorn that superb city.—And let me farther ask, whether the painter has not offended against probability, in suffering them to stand wide open? On the approach of so formidable an adversary, I should expect to have found them shut with all possible security.

Asp. In this particular, the painter has shewed his judgment, and not forgotten his piety. GOD had devoted that haughty and oppressive metropolis to destruction. And you will perceive, from this circumstance, how wonderfully he over-rules all events, for the accomplishment of his sacred purpose. Had those ponderous gates been shut *, the city had continued impregnable, and the whole enterprise been defeated. But, through some accidental forgetfulness, occasioned by the disorders of this riotous solemnity, or rather by a very signal interposition of divine vengeance, they are left open, and afford an easy entrance to slaughter and death; which rush upon the unhappy creatures, all sunk in sleep, or overcharged with wine, as a concealed snare, in some dreadful unexpected moment springs up, and inextricably entangles the unwary bird.—Was I to inscribe this picture with a motto, I would chuse the apostle's admonition, BE SOBER: BE VIGILANT.

Who is this, with his length of hair † flowing up-armed! Alarmed! No; confiding in such a safeguard, I will bid defiance to my enemies, and bid adieu to my fears.

---

* This event is related, 1 Sam. xxiii. 25. &c. And it is one of the most extraordinary instances of a divine interposal, at the very crisis of need, that any history has recorded.

† ——————Εκαν αχνυσθε θυμω.

Thus Homer expresses the contrariety of passions, that frequently operate, at the same time, in the same breast.

‡ Is. xliv. 28. xlv. 1.

* See this very momentous, though seemingly-inconsiderable circumstance, finely illustrated by Mr Rollin, and compared with a remarkable prophecy in Isaiah. Ancient Hist. vol. II. p. 144. 153.—A work, in which the most entertaining and instructive events of antiquity are regularly digested, elegantly related, and stripped of those minuter incidents, which make the story move slow, and are apt to fatigue the attention.—Concise, but judicious observations are interspersed; which may teach young minds, to form a right judgment of things, and not be misled, by the plausibility of popular notions, or the partiality of prejudiced historians.—Many very distinguished predictions of scripture, are explained and confirmed by correspondent facts, from the most authentic memoirs of classical literature. Indeed, a perpetual regard to the elucidation and honour of the sacred oracles, runs through and ennobles the whole performance.—Which method, if not strictly conformable to the rules of historical composition, is a transgression of them greatly to their advantage. It may be said to resemble the golden branch, celebrated by Virgil, and plucked by his hero; whose growth, though a departure from the usual laws of vegetation, was far from depreciating the value of the tree.

Though I admire the whole, I am charmed with the conclusion. It is, I think, peculiarly pertinent, and inimitably grand; has a dignity, an elevation, a majesty, which, somewhat like the kingdom it describes, is quite unequalled, and little less than stupendous;

Πεπληθυν αριστος, χρυσειη δ' επιθηκε κορυνη.

† I believe it was not customary with the Romans, especially their warriors, to have long flowing hair. This therefore might seem an offence against what the Italians call il costume, if the painter was not supported by the authority of Livy; who, in his descriptive picture of Scipio, gives us the following touches: Species corporis ampla ac magnifica. Præterquam quod simplici naturæ multa majestas inerat, adornabat promissa cæsaries, habitusque corporis, non cultui mundities, sed virilis vere ac militaris.

Lib. XXVIII. c. 35.

T t on

on his ſhoulders; with ſuch amplitude of perſonage, ſuch magnificence of mien, and noble plainneſs of habit?

Eug. This is my favourite piece.——My father ſometimes ſhews me the heads of the philoſophers; but there is ſomething ſo uninviting and ſevere in Socrates and Diogenes, that I could never much admire them.—But this, Sir, is Scipio; the thunderbolt of war, as Virgil calls him. Here is ſomething ſo lovely and engaging, as well as grand and majeſtic, that I am never weary of looking on him.

Aſp. He appears with a lady of diſtinguiſhed beauty in his hand.

Eug. This is the captive princeſs, who had been taken in war, who was ſet apart for the general's prize, but whom he is now reſtoring to her eſpouſed huſband.

Aſp. You are right, Eugenio.—He has juſt led in his lovely captive, attended by her huſband and parents, amidſt a full aſſembly of Romans and Celtiberians, the victors and the vanquiſhed. His modeſt eyes, you obſerve, are rather turned from, than gazing upon, the blooming virgin.—Cannot you ſuppoſe, how the ſpectators muſt be affected, upon the opening of this very extraordinary ſcene? Every one beholds the hero with admiration, the lady with delight. Every boſom is big with expectation, or in pain for the event. After a ſhort pauſe, he addreſſes himſelf to the lover, in words to this effect:—"I am no ſtranger to your intereſt in "this fine woman. The fortune of war has put her en"tirely into my power. The circumſtances of my "youth cannot render me inſenſible to ſo engaging a "perſon. But with us Romans, honour and generoſity "have a more prevailing influence than tranſitory gra"tifications. Take your bride; be happy in each other; "and when you look upon this gift, admire the Romans, "be a friend to Rome."—Upon this he delivers her (as you beheld the action here repreſented) to the enamoured prince.

See! how the crouds, that cluſter and hang around, are ſtruck with the beneficent deed!—In the Celtiberians, we behold a mixture of veneration and ſurpriſe. Their looks are full of meaning. Methinks they are going to cry out, Excellent man!—In the Romans, we diſcern a conſcious ſuperiority, and exultation of mind. Triumph is in their features; as though they would ſay, This wondrous man is ours! In the lady, we admire the accompliſhed and modeſt fair, uniting all the dignity of her birth with all the delicacy of her ſex. What ſoft confuſion and what tender joy appear in her countenance! She is loſt in wonder, and at a loſs for words; ſhe ſpeaks the acknowledgments of her heart, by the ſilent eloquence of a tear; which ſteals down her glowing cheek, to bedew the kind hand, that has protected her innocence, and is delivering her to her lord.—Her lord is under an apparent and a graceful ſtruggle of love and gratitude. He dotes upon his charming princeſs, and he almoſt adores his generous benefactor. We can hardly tell, whether he is going to claſp the former in his arms, or throw himſelf at the feet of the latter. The aged parents expreſs their tranſport in a different manner. Their knees are bent to the earth; their eyes are lifted up to heaven; they implore, for their noble guardian, every bleſſing that the gods can beſtow.—Scipio himſelf diſplays all the magnanimity of the conqueror, tempered with the ſedateneſs of the philoſopher, and ſoftened with the gentleneſs of the friend. He gives happineſs, but he enjoys a greater. His eyes ſparkle with a ſublime delight; and he ſeems to anticipate the applauſe, which this truly-heroic act will gain, in all countries and in all ages.

Eug. Is not this a greater victory than any that he had won in the field of battle; and a nobler triumph than any that could be voted him by the applauding ſenate? Amiable Scipio! Might I be a Roman, I would be no other than Scipio.

Aſp. I wiſh you, my dear Sir, the temperance and generoſity of Scipio; but from a better motive than h*e*. He, I fear, was too much ſwayed by a ſpirit of ambiti*on* which you muſt endeavour to ſuppreſs, rather than c*h*riſh.——A ſpirit of ambition, which pants after diſtin*c*tion, and thirſts for applauſe, is diametrically oppoſ*ite* to the genius of the goſpel*.——It is a leſſon wh*ich* muſt infallibly be unlearned, if ever we become poſſ*eſ*ſors of faith, or partakers of CHRIST †.——It is a r*o*ot of bitterneſs, which naturally produces envy‡; th*e* moſt odious, and (as you have juſt now ſeen) moſt ſ*e*tormenting of all tempers.——It is a habit of mi*nd* which generally renders men incendiaries in the chur*ch* and diſturbers of its tranquillity ‖.——It is therefo*re* more like an inchanted potion which inebriates, than genuine cordial which animates.

Eug. From what motive then would you encour*age* me, to be diligent in the purſuit of learning, and in t*he* cultivation of every virtue?

Aſp. Not, that you may acquire the poor, contem*pt*ible, periſhing honour, which cometh from men;—but that you may pleaſe GOD, your almighty CR*E*ATOR;—that you may glorify CHRIST, your in*fi*nitely condeſcending REDEEMER;—that you m*ay* yourſelf attain what is the true dignity and only felic*i*ty of your nature; and may be ſerviceable to the *beſt in*tereſts of your fellow-creatures,—even their preſent ho*li*neſs, and their eternal happineſs.

Theſe are the grand and endearing encouragemen*ts* which our holy religion propoſes. Theſe will operat*e*, I am bold to aver, with a much ſweeter and a far mo*re* ſovereign efficacy, than all the glittering enticemen*ts* which ambition can deviſe. And, what is above a*ll* other conſiderations weighty, theſe will be more likel*y*, or rather theſe will be very certain, to receive the *divi*ne bleſſing.

You told me you was never weary of contemplatin*g* Scipio. For which reaſon, I promiſe myſelf, you w*ill* not be fatigued or diſpleaſed, though I have ſo long co*n*fined your attention to this portrait.—But have we n*o* hero of Britain, fit to join this illuſtrious triumvirate fro*m* Rome, Perſia, and Judea?

Eug. The very next we meet, is one of our *Engli*ſh kings. But I cannot ſay, that I remember either h*is* name, or his ſtory.

Aſp. How, my young gentleman! Do you read th*e* annals of other nations, and not acquaint yourſelf wit*h* the affairs of your own country?—If I was in your place I would apply myſelf to the claſſical writers by way o*f* ſtudy, and to ſome valuable Engliſh hiſtorian by way o*f* amuſement. Such an amuſement is infinitely preferab*le* to novels or romances; and will not only relax your at*t*ention, but enrich your mind.

Eug. I thank you, good Sir, for your admonition. And, if you pleaſe, I will now begin the ſtudy you re*c*ommend. Your explanation of theſe drawings ſha*ll* be the rudiments of my knowledge; and I ſhall think i*t* a happineſs, to receive my firſt inſtructions from ſo abl*e* a maſter.

Aſp. It is honour enough for me, Eugenio, to have given you the hint. I only point out your game, o*r* ſpring the covey; you ſhall be taught by a more ex*p*ert proficient, to make it your own. Yet, though others may direct you with greater ſkill, none will re*j*oice in your ſucceſsful purſuit, more ſincerely than myſelf.

This is our renowned Henry the Fifth, as he appeared after the victory of Agincourt. You ſee the gallant conqueror clad in ſteel, and recent from the ſlaughter of the inſulting foe. He ſeems to breathe an heroic ardour, which is irradiated and exalted by a lively devotion. If courage can be expreſſed by the pencil, that is its genuine likeneſs; keen, yet compoſed; graſping the ſword, yet looking up to heaven.—He

* Gal. v. 26. † John v. 44. ‡ Gal. v. 26
‖ 3 John 9. 10.

that,

that, a little while ago, drove the battle, like a whirlwind, on the legions of France, now bends a ſuppliant knee, and offers the euchariſtic hymn, to the LORD GOD of hoſts. No turbulent or diſorderly joy riots among the ſoldiery. They expreſs not the triumph of their hearts, in frantic exultations, or drunken revels, but in acts of thankſgiving to JEHOVAH; in an attitude, which ſpeaks the devout acknowledgment of the prophet, Thou art our battle-axe and weapons of war *; or the grateful declaration of the pſalmiſt, Not unto us, O LORD, not unto us, but unto THY name be the glory †.

This laſt inſtance informs my Eugenio, that prayer is an honourable employ,—has been practiſed by perſons of the moſt admired endowments,—is the ſureſt method of obtaining ſucceſs, in whatever buſineſs we undertake; and of enjoying proſperity, in whatever circumſtances we are placed.

The next piece is different from all the preceding. In thoſe, armies with their banners diſplayed, ſhips of war riding at anchor, battering engines and inſtruments of death, form the perſpective. In this, we have, all around, a lovely and rural landſcape; expreſſive of peace, and enriched with plenty. Corn and cattle in the valleys; fruitful vineyards on the hills; and beautiful gardens ſurrounding the houſes.—But who is that graceful and auguſt perſonage, ſeated on a ſtately throne of ivory and gold?

Eug. This is Solomon, having an interview with the Queen of Sheba. A large train of her attendants throng the avenues of the palace: ſome leading foreign animals; ſome bearing vaſes and caſkets; all arrayed in ſtrange apparel. The Iſraelites ſtare upon their outlandiſh viſitants, their coſtly preſents, and peculiar habits. Their viſitants are as much ſurpriſed at the walls, the towers, and eſpecially the temple of Jeruſalem. But you, Sir, I apprehend, are moſt pleaſed with the venerable perſon who fills the throne.

Aſp. Indeed I am; and ſo is his royal gueſt. You obſerve, in her robe, or retinue, or deportment, an unpoliſhed kind of grandeur. But all in Solomon is ſo ſplendid, and at the ſame time ſo elegant; diſplays ſuch a delicacy of taſte, and ſuch a magnificence of ſpirit, that the Sabæan princeſs is perfectly in raptures. See! how ſhe ſtands fixed and gazing with ſpeechleſs admiration ‡; like one loſt in aſtoniſhment, and tranſported with delight! Her looks ſpeak, what, when ſhe recovers the power of utterance, her tongue expreſſes; It was a true report, that I heard in my own land, of thy acts, and of thy wiſdom. Howbeit, I believed not the words, until I came, and mine eyes had ſeen: and behold! the half was not told me: thy wiſdom and proſperity exceed the fame which I heard.

Eug. This is a great compliment. Is it right, Sir, to praiſe a man, in ſuch plain terms and ſuch high ſtrains, to his very face? I think, I have heard Philenor blame ſuch a practice, as inconſiſtent with refined manners; and I have heard my father ſay, No one is a better judge of fine breeding than Philenor. And if the moſt agreeable behaviour, added to the moſt winning converſation, are what you call fine breeding, I am ſure, Philenor is maſter of it to a very great degree. I love to be in his company, and am never better pleaſed, than to hear him talk.

Aſp. The compliment is high, but it is juſt. It is ſtrictly conformable to truth, and proceeds from the moſt unaffected ſincerity. If we take what follows into conſideration, we ſhall have a pattern of true politeneſs; a propriety and a refinement of addreſs, far ſurpaſſing her Majeſty's external ſtate.——Happy are thy men; happy are theſe thy ſervants; which ſtand continually before thee, and that hear thy wiſdom. Inſtead of envying, ſhe congratulates the domeſtics of Solomon, and rejoices in their ſuperior felicity. This is benevolence.——Bleſſed be the LORD thy GOD, which delighted in thee, to ſet thee on the throne of Iſrael. Becauſe the LORD loved Iſrael for ever, therefore made he thee king, to do judgment and juſtice. Here ſhe aſcribes all his royal virtues, and matchleſs accompliſhments to the bounty of heaven. Though they are applauded in the perſon of Solomon, they are recognized as the free gift of GOD. This is piety.——When the endowments we celebrate, lead us to magnify, not their poſſeſſor, but their author; then the poiſon is corrected and turned into medicine. Praiſe thus circumſtanced, loſes its malignity, and is rendered ſalubrious.

It pleaſes me to perceive, that you take ſo much notice of the converſation, which paſſes between your worthy father, and his ingenious friends. I promiſe myſelf, you will alſo remember the maxim, which we have now learned from a queen: A queen, whom not only the ſacred hiſtorian, but our LORD JESUS CHRIST himſelf vouchſafes to mention, and with marks of approbation. Whoſe name therefore will be had in honour, when Semiramis and Cleopatra, the heroines, and the beauties, are conſigned over to oblivion. The maxim which I mean, is this:——There muſt be an union of ſincerity, of benevolence, and of piety, in order to conſtitute true politeneſs. Whoever pretends to fine breeding, and is deſtitute of theſe qualities, is nothing more than a pretender. He bears juſt the ſame proportion to this ornamental character, as the ape and the monkey bear to the man.

But we have not ſufficiently examined our picture. The dome is of cedar; ſupported by pillars of marble; to which are annexed curtains of ſilk and embroidery. ——The pillars ſhine with the moſt gloſſy poliſh, and ſwell upon the eye with the boldeſt projections. The curtains, pendent in large and eaſy folds, ſeem not adheſive to the canvaſs, but waving in the air.——The throne is exquiſitely contrived, richly ornamented, and highly finiſhed. It is evident, the painter had in his eye that remarkable obſervation of ſcripture, There was not the like made in any kingdom; and he has really done all which art could deviſe, or colours execute, in order to exemplify the great encomium.

If the monarch was abſent, we ſhould deſire no better entertainment, than to view the beauties of the apartment; but can hardly allow any attention to the edifice, when ſo graceful and ſo grand a preſence beſpeaks our regard. For I muſt own, there appears to me ſomething peculiarly excellent in this figure; a ſerenity and dignity, without any of that martial air, which adds a tincture of ferocity to the warrior; a ſagacity and penetration, not to be equalled by the wrinkles of age, yet tranſparent through all the bloom of youth. Piety and wiſdom, the love of GOD and the grace of his SPIRIT, give an elevation to the mind, a ſecret charm to the countenance, and ſomething more than mortal to the whole man.——I am apt to ſuſpect, Eugenio, that you yourſelf are ready to adopt a new favourite; that you now prefer Solomon even to Scipio; and had rather be like the "beloved of the LORD," than the darling of Rome.

Eug. Every thing in Solomon is ſo venerable and heavenly, that I am filled with awe, rather than fired with emulation. It is not for a boy to think of imitating ſuch high perfection!

Aſp. Why not, my dear Sir? It was GOD who gave Solomon his ſuperior wiſdom, and exalted accompliſhments. And GOD is the ſame yeſterday, to-day, and for ever: as willing to hear, and as able to help you, as he was to hear and bleſs his ſervant Solomon.—Neither let your youth be a diſcouragement. Out of the mouth of very babes and ſucklings, HE ordaineth ſtrength,

* Jer. li. 20. † Pſal. cxv. 1.

‡ This, I apprehend, is the meaning of that remarkably ſtrong expreſſion, uſed by the ſacred hiſtorian; There was no more ſpirit in her, 1 Kings x. 5.

strength, and perfects praise *. Samuel ministered in the temple, when he was but a child †. Josiah, while he was yet young, began to seek after the GOD of his fathers ‡. Timothy was acquainted with the holy scriptures from his earliest years ‖. And Solomon himself was none of the oldest, when he was favoured with that extraordinary vision, and made that admirable choice at Gibeon §: A passage of scripture which, I dare say, you have read; which I would recommend to your attentive consideration; and which I hope, you will take for the model of your conduct.——And if you, like that illustrious young prince, desire a wise and understanding heart, more than the affluence of wealth, or the distinctions of honour; if you seek wisdom as silver, and search for her as for hid treasure; then shall you also understand the fear of the LORD, and find the knowledge of GOD ¶.

The next that occurs, presents us with a view of the sea; and a most tremendous view it is.

Eug. This is the voyage related by the evangelist, when our LORD sailed with his disciples, and bid the storm be still, and made the ocean calm.

Asp. Then we may truly say, A greater than Solomon is here!—Give me leave to hint, upon this occasion, that every picture of CHRIST must necessarily, depretiate his glorious person. Therefore you will never think, that a few rays beaming round his sacred head, can properly distinguish the SON of GOD, or express the grace of his offices, and the divinity of his nature. It is not to display the perfections of the LORD JESUS himself, but only to give us an idea of one of his works, that the pencil has been employed on this grand subject.

You will also remember, that it was not the main ocean, but the lake of Tiberias, on which they sailed. However, the painter is at liberty to make his sea as large as he pleases, and his storm as terrible as he can. Accordingly he has collected all the horrors of a tempest. ——Lightnings fire the arch above; and thunders, could thunders have been painted, would have rocked the ground below. Those flaming bolts have smitten a huge promontory, and tore its rugged brow. See! how the rocky fragment is tumbling, with impetuous bound, from cliff to cliff.——The waters, lashed by furious winds, heave and toss their tumultuous billows. Here they rise in rolling ridges; there they rage in devouring whirls.——Amidst these horrible commotions, you behold a vessel in all the extremity of distress. Straining under the blast, battered and half-overwhelmed by the surge, she can no longer maintain the unequal conflict; she yields to the resistless flood; and begins, evidently begins to sink.——Perplexed, amazed, and at their wit's end, the disciples run to and fro. They shift the tackling; lighten the stowage; try every expedient; and find, to their inexpressible affliction, every expedient ineffectual.

We cast our eye forward, and their divine MASTER appears, sedately rising from a gentle slumber.—He sees the perplexity and horror of his companions, without the least emotion of alarm. He sees destruction approaching, heaven and earth mingled, and, instead of being dismayed, enjoys the elemental war.—— What composure in his mien! what dignity in his attitude! what majesty, sweetened with compassion, in his aspect! such as could arise from no other cause, but a conscious and undoubted certainty, that not one of the company should perish; not a hair of their head be injured; and that all this mighty uproar of nature should end in a demonstration of his mightier power, and a confirmation of his disciples faith.——He looks abroad into the mutinous sky, and the turbulent deep. He waves, with an authoritative air, his sacred hand; and adds the great commanding word, PEACE: BE STILL, ——Do you inquire after the effect? Let Milton declare it:

Confusion heard his voice, and wild uproar Stood ruled.

This is expressed in another draught; where all is hushed; the tremendous agitations cease, and the most profound tranquillity takes place. The water is smooth as glass; we have the picture of a perfect calm; and view those very persons, who, a little while ago, were in the wildest distraction, and in the jaws of ruin, surrounding their LORD as men alive from the dead *. Their consternation is turned into wonder, and their pangs of fear into ecstasies of joy. They acknowledge the omnipotence, and adore the goodness of JESUS.

Eug. Well may they acknowledge his omnipotence; since winds and waves obey him. Great reason have they to adore his goodness, since he rescued them from the very jaws of death; that worst of deaths, perishing in the stormy deep.

Asp. If JESUS CHRIST had vouchsafed such a deliverance to my Eugenio; what would he have thought, or how would he have been affected?

Eug. I should have thought myself inexpressibly obliged; and that I could never shew sufficient gratitude to so great a Benefactor.

Asp. Assure yourself then, my dear Sir, that he has done infinitely more for you:—That he has delivered you, not indeed from being swallowed up by the raging billows, but from sinking into the pit of everlasting perdition:—That he has not only rescued you from endless destruction, but obtained eternal life and heavenly happiness for you.——This he has done, not by speaking a word, or issuing a command; but by bearing your guilt, suffering your punishment, and dying the death, the most ignominious and tormenting death, in your stead.—— Should you not then unfeignedly love HIM? study to please HIM? and make it the reigning endeavour of your life to glorify HIM?

Here Theron returned, and the young student withdrew, after receiving some affectionate and encouraging compliments from Aspasio; who was going to enlarge upon the excellent taste of his friend, the instructive style of his pictures, the good sense and great proficiency of his son. But Theron, far from coveting the praise, and fully satisfied with the consciousness, of acting the becoming part, prevented his discourse, by stepping to a pair of glass folding-doors, which, thrown open, admitted them into the study.

* Psal. viii. 2. † 1 Sam. ii. 18. ‡ 2 Chron. xxxiv. 3.
‖ 2 Tim. iii. 15. § 1 Kings iii. 5. 6. &c.
¶ Prov. ii. 4. 5.

* The circumstances of this miracle, as related by the evangelists, are truly wonderful, and to the last degree picturesque.

Master! Master! we perish! How concise, how abrupt, and how ardent is this exclamation! Therefore how strongly significant of imminent danger, and of the utmost distress! They have not time to be explicit. A moment's delay may be fatal. What they utter is conciseness itself, and all rapidity, Luke viii. 24.—This is nature; this is the genuine language of the heart; this is true historic painting. Every impartial reader must admire this exquisitely just and fine stroke, far beyond the diffuse and (I had almost said impertinently) florid speech, which Virgil puts into the mouth of his hero on a like occasion. Æn. I. 93.

Σιωπα, πεφιμωσο. What a majesty in this command! 'Tis admirable; 'tis inimitable; 'tis worthy of GOD.—I think, we may observe a peculiarly-proper word, addressed and adapted to each element, the first enjoining a cessation of the winds, the second a quiescence of the waves: silence in all that roared, composure in all that raged. As though (to give a short paraphrase on the grand injunction) it had been said, Winds, be hush'd; Waves, be calm, Mark iv. 39.

The effect on the disciples is described, with all the force of imagination, and all the energy of diction. To represent in colours, what the evangelical historian has left upon record, would be a subject fit for the immortal Raphael; and perhaps not to be equalled even by his masterly pencil. Λιαν τε περισσου εν εαυτοις εξισαντο και εθαυμαζον—εθαυμαζον, they were amazed—εξισαντο, they were transported with amazement—nay, to the very greatest degree—εκ περισσου, exceeding all that language can express. Mark vi. 51.

A chimney-piece of grey marble, with plain, but bold and protuberant mouldings, formed a very handſome appearance.—In various little niches, were fixed elegant buſts; and on the ſeveral interſtices, hung beautiful prints; repreſenting many of the moſt eminently-learned men, who were the ornaments and bleſſings, both of ancient and modern times. The ſhelves, all around, were accommodated, not encumbered, with books. Aſpaſio, running over the lettered backs, obſerved a collection of the moſt valuable authors, in hiſtory and natural philoſophy, in poetry and divinity.

You will eaſily perceive, ſaid Theron, that I am ſomewhat ſingular in furniſhing my ſtudy, as well as in ornamenting the avenue. My books are not for ſhew, but uſe; and claim a regard, rather on account of their worth, than their number.—An immenſe multitude of volumes, I have always thought, is more likely to embarraſs the attention, than to improve the underſtanding. A huge library ſeems to reſemble a perplexing labyrinth; and often bewilders the mind, inſtead of leading it expeditiouſly to the acquiſition of truth.

When people are eager to peruſe a multiplicity of writings, it frequently happens, that in reading all, they digeſt none *. They taſte ſome empty and tranſient amuſement, but collect no ſolid or laſting advantage. Their minds are ſomewhat like thoſe capacious looking-glaſſes, which we have ſeen expoſed in the moſt frequented and populous ſtreets of London. They receive all manner of ſhadowy images, but no ſubſtantial impreſſion. A thouſand figures paſs through them, not one abides in them.

Our books, replied Aſpaſio, as well as our friends, ſhould rather be ſelect, than numerous. For my part, I would deſire no more than two or three of the moſt correct and maſterly writers in any ſcience. Theſe a perſon of moderate capacity may be able to comprehend; and not comprehend only, but enrich his memory with the choiceſt ſentiments, and make the ſubſtance of their works his own.—He will, by repetition and familiar converſe, enter into their ſpirit, and acquire their manner. While a rambler in reading does little more than gratify his fancy, without refining his taſte, or amending his heart.

Upon this Aſpaſio turned himſelf; and eſpied, in one corner of the apartment, the celeſtial and terreſtrial globes; in another a large reflecting teleſcope; and on the top of a bureau, one or two of the beſt microſcopes.

Theſe inſtruments, reſumed Theron, have opened an inexhauſtible fund of the fineſt entertainments †. They have furniſhed us with new eyes; and brought up, I may venture to ſay, a new world into our view. They give us a ſight of wonders, which may ſeem incredible to the incurious vulgar, and were utterly unknown to the moſt inquiſitive ſages of antiquity. They charm the eye with a diſplay of inimitable beauties, where nothing worthy of notice was expected. They throw the mind into a pleaſing tranſport of admiration; and from the meaneſt loweſt objects, raiſe the moſt amiable and exalted ideas of the all-glorious CREATOR.

I have often regretted, that ſuch rational and manly gratifications ſhould be almoſt univerſally ſupplanted by the fantaſtical and childiſh amuſements in vogue. Why ſhould not the contemplation of nature's ſurpriſing novelties, be as acceptable an entertainment, as the ſtale diverſion of quadrille; be as refined an employ for a leiſure-hour, as to count the ſpots on a pack of cards?—The ladies, I am very ſure, might find brighter colours, and more delicate ornaments, in the robes and headdreſs of a common fly, than ever they found amidſt the trinkets of a toy-ſhop. And was the fair circle of females once acquainted with the radiant varniſh and rich ſtuds, which enamel the cover of a beetle's wing, I am apt to think, they would view with leſs rapture, with more indifference, perhaps, with a becoming diſdain, all the pretty fancies of a beau's wardrobe.

A few days ago, when the accompliſhed Manilia favoured us with a viſit, I ſhewed her, through a magnifying glaſs, the ſting of a bee, the ſcale of a ſoal, the wing of a gnat, and ſome other beautiful minims of nature, together with the powder which adheres to our finger, when we touch the body of a moth.—"Amaz"ing!" cried the young lady. "What elegant figures!
"What inchanting finery!

——Smalleſt lineaments exact,
In all the liveries deck'd of ſummer's pride,
With ſpots of gold and purple, azure and green *.

"How perfect the poliſh, and how high the finiſh-
"ing, of that little weapon!—This piece of defenſive ar"mour, how ſkilfully contrived, and how curiouſly
"wrought! Here riſing into little ridges, like the boſſes
"of a buckler, fitted to repel injuries. There ſcooped
"into little cavities, deſigned, I ſuppoſe, to diminiſh
"its weight; that the coat of mail may not encumber, "even while it defends, the puny wearer.——What I "took to be a whitiſh deſpicable rag, is the neateſt fan I "ever beheld; mounted on ſticks † inimitably tapering
"and ſlender, tinged with all the ſoft and lovely colours
"of the moſt glofſy mother of pearl.—But what aſto-
"niſhes me more than all, is the view of that coloured
"duſt, which your inſtrument has turned into a cluſter
"of feathers. Every one wrought off with a regularity
"and a delicacy, that are beyond the power of deſcrip-
"tion. The fineſt ſtroke drawn by the Italian pen, com"pared with the extreme minuteneſs of the ſhaft, is "broad and bulky as an admiral's maſt. A ſpeck of "leaf-gold, could it be weighed againſt the exquiſite at-
"tenuations of the vane ‡, would ſeem more ſubſtan-
"tial and ponderous than yonder marble ſlab.

"How nice, even to a prodigy, muſt be the me-
"chaniſm of the animalcule race! I ſee globules, I ſee
"tides of blood, rolling through mæanders inexpreſ-
"ſibly finer than the fineſt hair.—Stranger ſtill! I ſee "whole ſholes of active creatures expatiating in a "ſingle drop of water ‖; taking their paſtime amidſt

* The author of Night-Thoughts has touched this ſubject, with great judgment, and equal ſprightlineſs.

Voracious learning, often over-fed,
Digeſts not into ſenſe the motley meal.
Thus forager on other's wiſdom, leaves
Her native farm, her reaſon quite untill'd.
With mix'd manure ſhe ſurfeits the rank ſoil,
Dung'd, but not dreſs'd; and rich to beggary.

† Gentlemen of taſte and ſerioufneſs cannot, I think, have a nobler piece of furniture for their ſtudies, than the microſcope and the teleſcope; the orrery and the air-pump. This apparatus would afford them a moſt delightful and improving amuſement in a ſolitary hour.—It would alſo give them an opportunity of entertaining their company, in a truly-elegant and very inſtructive manner. It would open a fine and ample field, for diſplaying the glories of GOD the CREATOR, and of GOD the REDEEMER.—As the diſcoveries made by theſe inſtruments, are ſo ſurpriſing in themſelves, and new to the generality of mankind, every edifying hint deduced from ſuch obſervations, would come with a peculiar recommendation.—This, I am ſure, would be a method of reducing to practice, what the polite hiſtorian has recorded of the politer Scipio; Elegantiſſimo intervalla negotiorum otio diſpunxit. VELL. PATERC.——And, I believe, it might be a happy means of turning the ſoul, to bear a part in that immortal hymn; Worthy art thou, O LORD, to receive glory, and honour, and power; for thou haſt created all things; and for thy pleaſure they now exiſt, and were at firſt created, Rev. iv. 11.

* MILTON, book VII.

† Theſe ſticks are the little ribs, which ſupport, at proper intervals, the fine tranſparent membrane of the wing.

‡ Vane is the feathery part of a quill.

‖ In a ſingle drop of water, Dr Hook is ſaid to have diſ-

"such a ſcanty canal, as unſtraitened and as much at "large, as leviathan in the abyſſes of the ocean. A whole "kingdom of theſe creatures, though collected into a "body, are quite undiſcernable by the naked eye. What "then muſt be the ſize of every individual? Yet in "every individual there is a complete ſyſtem of limbs; "each endowed with ſpontaneous motion; all aſſem-"bled, though not crouded, in a living atom.—To re-"flect upon the texture of veſſels, and the operation of "organs, ſo complex, ſo numerous, yet ſo inconceiv-"ably minute; how it awakens admiration! fills me "with reverence of the almighty MAKER! and yields "a pleaſure, infinitely ſuperior to all the modiſh amuſe-"ments of our ſex!—Your diſcoveries of life in miniature, "have given me a diſguſt of what is called high life, and "its ſolemn fopperies. You have ſpoiled me, Theron, "for a faſhionable trifler. I ſhall no longer reliſh the "dull œconomy of the fan, or the poor parade of the "ſnuff-box."

Aſp. Have you nothing to ſay of the teleſcope?—I believe, it muſt be my province to celebrate this admirable invention; and I wiſh I could do it, with Manilia's brilliant imagination.—If the microſcope leads us downward, to the curious ſecrets of the animalcule creation; the teleſcope bears us upward, to the grand peculiarities of the ſtarry regions. The eye, conducted by this wonderful guide, viſits a variety of majeſtic orbs, which would otherwiſe be loſt in unmeaſurable tracts of æther.—This, far more ſurpriſing than the diſcoveries of Columbus, has found out new colonies of worlds, in every quarter of the nocturnal ſkies. This has placed a glittering creſcent on the brow of one * of the planets; and has given others a moſt ſtately train of attendants †.

Tell me, Theron, could you diſcern the full choir of the conſtellations, or diſtinguiſh the variegated face of the moon, without the aid of your teleſcopic tube? Could you, with your unaſſiſted eye, get a ſight of Jupiter's ſatellites, or procure a glimpſe of Saturn's ring?—Without that ſupplementary aid to our ſight, they are quite imperceptible; though the ſatellites of the former are incomparably more magnificent, than the retinue of all the monarchs in the world; and compared with the ring of the latter, all the bridges on ten thouſand rivers, are leſs than the ferule of your cane.

As the teleſcope to the eye, ſo is revelation to the underſtanding. It diſcovers truths, which, excluſive of ſuch a diſcovery, had been for ever hid from the moſt ſagacious minds.—'Tis ſtrange to the unlearned obſerver, that this ponderous globe of earth and ſeas ſhould wheel its rapid circuit round the ſun. But the teleſcope has rendered this fact clear to a demonſtration.—'Tis ſtrange likewiſe to our natural apprehenſions, that we ſhould die in Adam, and be undone by our firſt parent's diſobedience. Nor leſs ſo, that we ſhould be made alive in CHRIST, and derive our recovery from his imputed righteouſneſs. But revelation makes this doctrine as certain, as it is comfortable.

Ther. Does revelation make it certain?—This is a point not yet eſtabliſhed, but taken for granted. I rather apprehend, that revelation in no place maintains it, in many places diſavows it.—Since your abſence, Aſpaſio, I have ſpent ſome time in ſearching the ſcriptures, with a particular view to this tenet. And I can find no ſuch expreſſion in the whole Bible, as the imputation of CHRIST's righteouſneſs. If it was ſo leading an article, as you repreſent, ſurely it could not have been entirely forgotten by the inſpired writers, nor utterly excluded from their body of divinity.

Aſp. The very identical expreſſion may not occur, and yet the doctrine be abundantly taught. I believe you never met with the word reſurrection in any part of the Pentateuch, nor ever read the phraſe ſatisfaction in all the New Teſtament. Yet our LORD fully proved the truth of the former from the writings of Moſes; and you yourſelf have acknowledged the latter to be the unanimous ſenſe of the apoſtles and evangeliſts.

In the epiſtle to the Romans, we have expreſs and repeated mention of a righteouſneſs imputed. What or whoſe righteouſneſs, can be the ſubject of this aſſertion?—Not the righteouſneſs of angels. They are a ſuperior claſs of beings, and have no ſuch intimate connection with our nature.——Not the righteouſneſs of eminent ſaints. This is the exploded error of Popery; and furniſhes the Romiſh zealots with that chimera of arrogance and folly, works of ſupererogation.——Not any righteouſneſs of our own: for it is poſitively declared to be without works *; in which no works of our own have any concurrence, or the leaſt ſhare.—What other righteouſneſs then can be meant, but the righteouſneſs of our great SUBSTITUTE, SURETY, and SAVIOUR? who took our nature; diſcharged our debt; and is therefore ſtyled, JEHOVAH our righteouſneſs †.

Ther. This ſeems contrary to the whole tenor of the ſacred inſtructions. What ſays the prophet? When the wicked man turneth away from his wickedneſs that he hath committed, and doeth that which is lawful and right, he ſhall ſave his ſoul alive ‡. Here that greateſt of bleſſings, the ſalvation of the ſoul, is aſcribed to a departure from evil, and a perſeverance in good, to a real alteration in a man's own temper and conduct, not to any fanciful application of ſome tranſmiſſive righteouſneſs from another.

Aſp. Let me aſk my Theron, Is there no wickedneſs but riot and debauchery, profaneneſs and injuſtice?—Unbelief, though it may paſs without cenſure or notice in a ſyſtem of morality, is, in the volume of revelation, declared a capital crime. Our LORD, ſpeaking of the HOLY SPIRIT, mentions it as a ſignal part of his office, that he ſhall convince the world of ſin.——Of what ſin? Scandalous violations of moral rectitude? This were a needleſs employ. The light of reaſon is ſufficient to evince ſuch a charge, and the court of conſcience is erected to paſs the deſerved ſentence.—Of ſin, adds the heavenly TEACHER, becauſe they believe not on me ||; on my death, as the cauſe of their forgiveneſs; on my righteouſneſs, as the ground of their acceptance; on my SPIRIT, as the powerful principle of their holineſs.

Unbelief treats GOD as a liar §; becauſe it rejects the teſtimony, which he has borne concerning his beloved SON.——Unbelief tramples on the blood of CHRIST, and is a moſt contemptuous affront to all his ſaving-offices.—Unbelief would counteract the operations of the HOLY GHOST; whoſe peculiar work it is, to teſtify of CHRIST, and make manifeſt his righteouſneſs.—Unbelief inſtigates (could we have thought it poſſible?) a child of duſt, a ſlave of ſin, to ſcorn himſelf and his own performances.——To ſay all in a word, unbelief is that great, that comprehenſive iniquity which ſcornfully rejects, or impiouſly renounces, the moſt glorious method of ſalvation, which Omniſcience itſelf could deviſe.

covered, with his microſcope, eight millions two hundred and eighty thouſand animalcules.—This is mentioned, becauſe it is the prevailing philoſophy of the age. Though I muſt confeſs, that Mr Gautier ſeems to have gone a conſiderable way towards giving it another turn. As he has proved, before a learned aſſembly at Paris, that the vermiculares of Leuvenhoeck, and the living moleculæ of Mr de Buffon, were only balls of air agitated by the fermenting of the ſeed. If ſo, it is not impoſſible, but Dr Hook's animalcula may be nothing more than balls of air, agitated by the fermenting of the pepper.

Be this as it will, the young lady's remarks on the wonders of mechaniſm in the animalcule creation, I believe, will never be controverted.

* The planet Venus.

† The ſatellites of Jupiter and Saturn.

* Rom. iv. 6. † Jer. xxiii. 6.

‡ Ezek. xviii. 27. || John xvi. 9. § 1 John v. 10.

The

The wicked man, therefore, never turns from his wickedneſs, till he turns, by a true faith, to JESUS CHRIST. Till then, he is a rebel againſt the goſpel, however he may pay ſome ſpecious and partial regard to the law. So flagrant a rebel, that he ſtands particularly excepted, in the act of evangelical indemnity. For as he that believeth on the SON, hath everlaſting life; ſo he that believeth not, is condemned already, and the wrath of GOD abideth on him *.

Ther. What are the pſalmiſt's ſentiments on this ſubject? Does not he repreſent the matter in a very different light? Thou, LORD, art merciful; for thou rewardeſt every man according to his, not another's works †.

Aſp. Weighty ſaying! May it impreſs our very hearts! —GOD is merciful, and therefore rewardeth. From whence it appears, that what we call a reward, is really an act of mercy, rather than of juſtice. The wages of ſin is death; but the gift, (ſays the apoſtle, altering his ſtyle, and making a moſt important diſtinction), the gift of GOD is eternal life ‡.——The inſpired penman ſubjoins, not for, but according to, every man's works. His works are the meaſure, not the meritorious cauſe. To merit, is the ſole prerogative of the SAVIOUR. To him it is owing, that our imperfect ſervices are honoured with any acceptance; much more that they are recompenſed with any reward.

Ther. Does not this expoſition of yours, claſh with that truly-generous acknowledgment of St Peter? In every nation, he that feareth GOD, and worketh righteouſneſs, is accepted with him ‖. Here, it is undeniably evident, that acceptance with our CREATOR is founded on a man's own piety, and perſonal integrity.

Aſp. Rightly to underſtand this text, we ſhould inquire into the circumſtances of the hiſtory.——The apoſtle had been ſtrongly and moſt unreaſonably prejudiced in favour of the Jews; imagining, that the ſalvation of CHRIST, like the diſpenſation of Moſes, muſt be confined to his countrymen.——But now, having conſidered the purport of his late heavenly viſion; having compared it with the angelic meſſage delivered to Cornelius; and being made acquainted with the character of that valuable man; he breaks out into this truly-catholic declaration.——"My prejudices are vaniſhed. My ſenti-"ments are enlarged. From the inſtance before me, it "is demonſtrably certain, that GOD does not appropriate "the bleſſings of his covenant to any particular perſon, "family, or people. But, in every nation, he that feareth "him, and, from a principle of religion in the heart, "worketh righteouſneſs in the life, is accepted; ſo accept-"ed, as to be an object of the divine favour, and an in-"heritor of eternal happineſs."

This, I think, is the exact meaning of the place. And let it be recollected, that no one truly fears, or can poſſibly pleaſe GOD, without faith §. For which reaſon, it is neceſſary to ſuppoſe, that Cornelius, though a Heathen by birth, had believed through grace.——Nay, it is evident from the context, that he had heard of JESUS CHRIST: had ſome acquaintance with the deſign of his coming, and the execution of his office ¶; enough to be the ground of a real, though perhaps an infantile faith. The buſineſs of the apoſtle was, to lead this convert into the clear light, and full privileges of the goſpel; to ratify and confirm his title to them, by the ſacred ſeal of baptiſm; and introduce him, as the firſt-fruits of the Gentiles, into the Chriſtian church.

So that nothing can be concluded from this paſſage, but that the glad tidings of Chriſtianity are for Jews, for Gentiles, for all people;—that faith, even when weak, is productive of good works;—and when ſincerely improved, will certainly be increaſed; "will go from "ſtrength to ſtrength."

Ther. Does not our SAVIOUR, in deſcribing the proceſs, and foretelling the iſſue of the laſt deciſive trial, aſſign a kingdom to the righteous? aſſign it in this preciſe view, as a proper remuneration of their own good works; ſaying in the moſt expreſs terms, Come, ye bleſſed of my FATHER, inherit the kingdom prepared for you, from the foundation of the world: FOR I was an hungred, and ye gave me meat; FOR, &c. FOR, &c. *

Aſp. Be pleaſed to take notice of the expreſſion. They are bidden to inherit; and what is freer than an inheritance?—Obſerve alſo the reaſon alledged, and compare it with the rule of judicature. He that believeth, ſaith the ſupreme JUDGE, ſhall be ſaved. This is the avowed, the invariable ſtandard, by which he proceeds in adminiſtering everlaſting judgment. Accordingly, he confers eternal life on the righteous, as perſons entitled to this great felicity, on the foot of his own gracious appointment.

FOR denotes, not the foundation, but the evidence of their right. "I acquit ſuch a perſon," ſays the arbitrator in a judicial claim; "for the witneſſes depoſe, that "the debt is paid." The depoſition, which anſwers to theſe righteous acts, is the proof; payment of the debt, which correſponds with CHRIST's perfect obedience, is the cauſe † of the diſcharge.——For ye have given; Ye have abounded in all inſtances of duty to ME, and love to your brethren; and thereby have manifeſted yourſelves true believers.

It may be farther obſerved, that our LORD ſays not, Ye have done it to your fellow-creatures, but to theſe my brethren ‡. He commends not every random act of good nature or generoſity, but ſuch kinds of beneficence only, as carry the Chriſtian ſtamp; were exerciſed to a diſciple, "in the name of a diſciple." And theſe moſt evidently ſpring from faith; theſe undeniably atteſt its ſincerity.

Ther. Are not theſe diſtinctions more ſubtile, than ſolid?

Aſp. To me they appear in no ſuch light. If you think otherwiſe, let us appeal to thoſe excellent perſons themſelves. The turn, the very remarkable turn of their ſentiments, will fully decide your queſtion.—— Do they lay any ſtreſs upon their own religious duties, and beneficent deeds? Far from relying on them, farther ſtill from pleading them, they beſtow not a ſingle thought upon them. Having fixed their hopes on the ROCK of Ages, they forget theſe tranſient bubbles ‖. Nay, they wonder, that their exalted MASTER

* John iii. 18. 36. The words are exceedingly emphatical, and no leſs awful.—Not barely he ſhall come into condemnation, but he (that believeth not) is condemned already. Though ever ſo civilized or refined in his outward converſation, he lies under a ſentence of death, and is the object of divine wrath.—Which not only will viſit him, but abideth on him. So that, where-ever he may be, whatever he may do, the diſpleaſure of the tremendous JEHOVAH hangs over him, like a dreadful deſtructive ſword; which, if he dies in ſuch a condition, will inevitably fall upon him, and cut him in pieces eternally.

† Pſal. lxii. 12. ‡ Rom. vi. 23.

‖ Acts x. 35. § Heb. xi. 6.

¶ See ver. 36, 37. Indeed it could hardly be otherwiſe, ſince Cornelius was ſettled at Cæſarea, the reſidence of the Lord-Lieutenant, and ſeat of the civil, as Jeruſalem was of the eccleſiaſtical government. In a place of ſuch general reſort, ſo very remarkable an event could not be unknown; eſpecially, as Philip the evangeliſt had fixed his abode in that city. See Acts viii. 40.

* Matth. xxv. 30.

† The ſpring is come, ſays the countryman; for the orchard blooms, and the black-bird ſings. The blooming of the trees, and the melody of the birds, were never ſuppoſed to create, only to characterize, the delightful ſeaſon. They are, not its cauſe, but the proof of its taking place. ‡ Matth. xxv. 40.

‖ Bubbles they are, compared with the all-glorious obedience of CHRIST, or conſidered in reference to the grand affair of juſtification before GOD.—But as bubbles, or watery veſicles inflated with air, are the means of exhibiting the beautiful

ſhould condeſcend to make any honourable mention of ſuch imperfect ſervices.—O! that we may be enabled, through the whole courſe of our lives, to follow the example of their piety; and, when we ſtand before the tremendous tribunal, to imitate their humility and wiſdom! Their humility, in renouncing themſelves, and diſclaiming all deſert of their own. Their wiſdom, in repoſing their whole confidence on the merits and righteouſneſs of their REDEEMER.

Ther. Our LORD makes no mention of this doctrine, in his ſermon on the mount. Whereas, if it had been ſo very material, he would at leaſt have touched upon it, in that comprehenſive ſummary of true religion.

Aſp. Our LORD ſays not a word concerning the ſacrifice of his death. Neither is there a ſyllable relating to his interceſſion for tranſgreſſors. But are theſe articles of our faith to be deemed fictitious or ſuperfluous, becauſe they are not expreſsly inculcated, in that admirable treatiſe of practical divinity?

However, upon a more attentive examination, perhaps, we ſhall find the point moſt ſtrongly implied, though not diſtinctly ſpecified; its neceſſity demonſtrated, though its nature be not explained.——The illuſtrious TEACHER opened his mouth, and with a peculiar ſolemnity ſaid, Bleſſed are the poor in ſpirit *,——But who are they? Not the perſons who ſooth themſelves with the flattering conceit of the Laodicean church; I am rich in obedience, and increaſed in ſpiritual goods †. Thoſe rather, who ſee their indigence, bewail their guilt, and hunger and thirſt after the juſtifying merit of a REDEEMER; who, from the very bottom of an humbled heart, confeſs, "LORD, I am no more able to "conform all my conduct to thy moſt holy law, than I "am capable of atoning for my innumerable ſins. "CHRIST muſt be my righteouſneſs, as well as my "propitiation, or elſe I am irrecoverably undone."

The inimitable PREACHER farther aſſures his hearers, that, unleſs their righteouſneſs exceed the righteouſneſs of the Scribes and Phariſees, they ſhall in no wiſe enter into the kingdom of heaven ‡.—How muſt Chriſtians exceed the Phariſees? Not only in being ſincere, in having reſpect unto all GOD's commandments, but alſo in poſſeſſing a complete righteouſneſs; ſuch as the divine holineſs can, with complacency, accept; and in which the divine juſtice may, with honour, acquieſce. Nor can this be anything leſs, than the perfect obedience of the great MEDIATOR.—St Paul's memorable teſtimony, concerning his attainments in the Phariſaical, and his hopes in the Chriſtian ſtate ‖, afford the very beſt comment upon this important declaration of our LORD.

Ther. The ORACLE of heaven, you know, was once conſulted upon that moſt momentous of all queſtions, How a perſon may aſcertain his title to life and immortality? And what is the tenor of the ſacred reſcript?—We are referred to the ten commandments; and, in the moſt explicit terms, with the moſt peremptory air, told, This DO, and thou ſhalt live §.

Aſp. That particular perſon, if you pleaſe, was referred to the ten commandments; not we, and mankind in general.—Our LORD, in the preceding verſes, had been informing his diſciples, that they muſt receive the kingdom of GOD, or the grace of the goſpel, and the bleſſings it propoſes, as a little child. And this can hardly ſignify, in conſequence of their own doings.

Ther. "That particular perſon referred to! Not we, "and mankind in general!"——I don't underſtand your meaning, Aſpaſio.

Aſp. You will obſerve then, that our LORD's reply was not an univerſal direction, but an anſwer ad hominem; peculiarly adapted * to the young gentleman's application; which, however it may be admired, was none of the wiſeſt.—Inſtead of aſking, "How ſhall a "poor guilty mortal, who is every day offending, obtain "forgiveneſs from the righteous GOD!" inſtead of ſaying, "How ſhall I, who am not able to think a good "thought, make ſure my title to an eternal weight of "glory!" our queriſt demands, What good thing ſhall I DO, that I may inherit eternal life? The reply proceeds upon the inquirer's own principles.—"If you expect "ſalvation upon ſuch legal terms, know, that your "obedience muſt be nothing leſs, than a perfect conformity to the divine law. Perform all its precepts in "their utmoſt extent, and with an unremitted perſeverance, then"—But alas! ſuch perfection is too high for fallen creatures; they cannot attain unto it. Neceſſarily, therefore, muſt they drop all ſuch pretenſions, and have recourſe to ſome other method of juſtification.

Ther. Why did that "wonderful COUNSELLOR," if ſuch was the purport of his anſwer, expreſs himſelf ſo obſcurely? Why did he not divert his promiſing ſcholar from this fruitleſs attempt, and put him in the right, the practicable way of obtaining ſalvation?

Aſp. This he did, with the fineſt addreſs, and in the moſt ſkilful manner.—Had our LORD affirmed, "You "are worldly; you are covetous; your riches are your "GOD;" ſuch a charge would, in all probability, have been as confidently denied, as it was plainly urged.—Therefore he brings this ſpecious hypocrite to a teſt, which could not be evaded, and which was ſure to diſcover the truth; a teſt, which laid open the palpable and enormous defects of his ſo much boaſted obedience; which made it appear, that, inſtead of keeping all the commandments, this vain ſelf-juſticiary had not obeyed the very firſt: but amidſt all his towering imaginations of himſelf, had been, and at that very inſtant was, a ſordid grovelling idolater; who preferred his tranſitory poſſeſſions on earth, to an everlaſting inheritance in the kingdom of heaven.—Could any expedient be more ſuitable to the caſe? or better calculated to reduce him, intoxicated as he was with pride, to a ſober humble mind? to beat him off from his falſe foundation, the righteouſneſs which is of the law; and lead him to a reliance on the promiſed, the expected, the preſent MESSIAH?

It puts me in mind of my friend Sagacio's conduct, which ſeems to have ſome conformity with our LORD's procedure, and may, poſſibly, tend to illuſtrate its propriety.——Viſiting one of his unlearned neighbours, he found him in company with a certain talkative ſtranger; who was haranguing, at an extravagant rate, on the wonders of aſtronomy.——Sagacio ſoon perceived, that the chief furniture of this extraordinary adept,

* It is delightful to obſerve the πολυποικιλος σοφια, the curious variety, yet the conſummate propriety of our LORD's conduct; how exactly this divine caſuiſt ſuits his counſel to the different ſtates and characters of mankind.—The ſecure and preſumptuous he ſends to the law, that they may be humbled. To the contrite and penitent he preaches the goſpel, that they may be comforted.—When the Phariſee, full of ſelf-conceit, ſtands up, and ſays, What ſhall I do! the anſwer is, Do all that is commanded. When the ſinful woman falls at his feet, and ſpeaks in tears the guilt of her life; Thy ſins are forgiven, is the gracious reply.

† Matth. xix. 21. If thou wilt be perfect, ſell all that thou haſt and give to the poor. This direction ſeems to be much of the ſame nature, with that other part of our LORD's reply, If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments. Both were perſonal, both occaſional, both adapted to particular circumſtances. The latter is no more the ſtated evangelical way to heaven, than the former is indiſpenſably obligatory on all Chriſtians.

lay

ful colours of the rainbow; ſo theſe ſervices, though poor and defective, bear teſtimony to the exiſtence of that precious grace—faith.

* Matth. v. 3. † Rev. iii. 17.

‡ Matth. v. 20. ‖ Phil. iii. 7, 8, 9.

§ Matth. xix. 17. Luke x. 28.

ay in a little acquaintance with the technical terms, and somewhat more than a little ſhare of aſſurance. How ſhould he bring the ſelf-plumed ſciolift to a little modeſty of ſentiment, and decorum of converſation? He took leave to aſk, "What the word aſtronomy might ſignify?" The orator was ſtruck dumb in a moment. He had never informed himſelf, it ſeems, that aſtronomy related to the order and regulation of the ſtars. This ſingle queſtion taught our minute philoſopher, more effectually than twenty lectures on the ſubject. It taught him his own ignorance, and that he had the very rudiments of his ſo much admired ſcience ſtill to learn.

Ther. What will you ſay to thoſe famous paſſages in the epiſtle of St James: By works a man is juſtifyed. Was not Abraham our father juſtified by works *? Can any words be plainer in their meaning? or can any meaning be more directly oppoſite to the whole ſcope of your argumentation?

Aſp. This I would ſay, Theron.—The paſſages you quote, when detached from the context, may ſeem inconſiſtent with the declarations of another apoſtle; as a limb, when wrenched from its natural ſituation, appears with an air of diſproportion. Whereas, reduce the diſlocated part, and it will recover the ſymmetry of its ſhape; it will harmonize exactly with the animal ſyſtem.—Replace likewiſe theſe aſſertions; conſider them in connection with the whole paragraph; and they will be found, if not uniſons, yet perfect concords, with the ſtrain of St Paul's teaching.

What is the point which St James undertakes to illuſtrate?—To diſtinguiſh a genuine from an inſincere faith. If a man ſay, he hath faith †; this is mentioned, as the boaſt of ſome hypocritical profeſſor. So that the apoſtle is evidently dealing with a pretender to the precious gift; and therefore replies, Shew me thy faith: Prove the reality of thy claim; prove it to me and to the church, to thy fellow-creatures and fellow-Chriſtians. If unproductive of righteous and godly works, we muſt pronounce it ſpurious, worthleſs, dead.

Having detected the counterfeit, he proceeds to deſcribe the ſterling. The grand characteriſtic of which is, a frame of mind and a courſe of action, correſponding with the doctrine believed. By this touchſtone the faith of our renowned progenitor was tried; and, being tried, was "found unto praiſe, and honour, and "glory." Was not Abraham our father juſtified by works?—Juſtified! how? as to acceptance with the ſupreme JUDGE? No: this was effected, long before the patriarch offered up Iſaac. But when he exerciſed that heroic act of ſelf-denial, reſignation, and obedience, then his juſtification was evidenced, to all his contemporaries, and to all generations. His faith was made perfect ‡; anſwered its proper end; and appeared to be of the true, the triumphant, the ſcriptural kind; ſince it overcame the world, overcame ſelf, and regarded GOD all in all.

Upon the whole, St Paul ſpeaks concerning the juſtification of our perſons; St James concerning the juſtification of our faith ‖.—St Paul deſcribes the manner of being juſtified before the all-ſeeing God; St James points out the proof § of a juſtified ſtate, as it is viſible to men.—The former proceeds from the immaculate righteouſneſs of CHRIST, placed to our account; the latter conſiſts in the fruits of righteouſneſs, adorning our life.—Rightly underſtood, therefore, theſe paſſages are not in the leaſt contradictory to the epiſtles of St Paul, or to the ſcope of my argumentation; but are a ſeaſonable caveat and a proper preſervative, againſt miſunderſtanding thoſe, or perverting this.

Ther. I wiſh you would read that conciſe, but judicious abridgment of true religion, compriſed in the fifteenth Pſalm. The ſacred penman, for his own, and for the information of all mankind, aſks, LORD, who ſhall dwell in thy tabernacle, or who ſhall reſt upon thy holy hill? To this moſt intereſting inquiry, the following verſes are a full and ſatisfactory anſwer: the whole of which turns upon the diſcharge of moral duties; walking uprightly, and working righteouſneſs; without a ſyllable or a ſingle hint, concerning the very ſuperior excellence of faith, or the extreme neceſſity of a vicarious obedience.

Aſp. I have often read, and I well remember, that beautiful, that inſtructive Pſalm. And I beg leave to obſerve, once for all, with relation to ſuch paſſages of the Old Teſtament, that they ſuppoſe the perſons whom they deſcribe, to be convinced of their natural corruption, to be humbled under a ſenſe of their actual guilt, and to live in a conſcientious obſervance of the expiatory ſacrifices; all which had an invariable reference to CHRIST, and derived their whole virtue from his mediation.

Would any of the Jewiſh ſaints, think you, have dared to advance a plea for eternal bleſſedneſs, upon the foot of their own conformity to ſuch moral directions? neglecting, at the ſame time, the ſacrifices of the three great feſtivals, or a believing improvement of the daily oblation.—By no means. They were, and they would acknowledge themſelves, deplorably defective. They would plead the promiſe of free grace, and fly to the blood, which GOD himſelf had appointed to make an atonement for their ſouls.—By ſuch ſentiments and ſuch a conduct, they reduced to practice the very eſſence of our doctrine; diſavowing their own deeds, however virtuous or religious; and truſting in the ſtrength of Iſrael, the LORD our righteouſneſs; who alone fulfilled all the precepts contained in this excellent formulary of duty; who was alſo the ſubſtance of every purifying and of every propitiatory rite.

Ther. Has not the ſacred writer expreſsly ſaid, at the cloſe of the Pſalm, Whoſo DOTH theſe things, ſhall never fall?

Aſp. He has: and this, I apprehend, is his meaning.—"Perſons of ſuch a temper, and ſuch a practice, bear "the marks of GOD's children, and are meet for his "glory. Accordingly, they ſhall never fall, either into "total apoſtaſy HERE, or final condemnation HEREAFTER. They are now heirs, and in due time ſhall "be poſſeſſors, of his eternal kingdom."

But you will take notice, that all theſe duties and qualifications, only characterize, not conſtitute the inheritor of heaven.——You will likewiſe advert to another very remarkable circumſtance in the deſcription: He ſetteth not by himſelf, but is lowly in his own eyes *.

---

* Jam. ii. 21. 24. † Jam. ii. 14.

‡ Ετελειωθη. In this ſenſe, I ſuppoſe we are to underſtand St John's aphoriſm: He that doth righteouſneſs, is righteous; manifeſts the truth of his converſion, and juſtifies his profeſſion from the charge, and from the ſuſpicion of inſincerity, 1 John iii. 7.

‖ That the expreſſion uſed by St James, ſignifies this declarative juſtification, is plain from 1 Tim. iii. 16. where the apoſtle, ſpeaking of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, ſays, εδικαιωθη, He was juſtified in or by the SPIRIT; declared to be the true SON of GOD; manifeſted on earth, and recognized from heaven, as the undoubted SAVIOUR of the world.

§ A very little reflection, I ſhould imagine, muſt convince every unprejudiced reader, that St James cannot poſſibly be ſtating the method of juſtification before the infinitely-righteous GOD: Becauſe he never ſo much as mentions the death of CHRIST—who made his ſoul an offering for ſin—to whom gave all the prophets witneſs, that whoſoever believeth in him, ſhall receive remiſſion of ſins—and beſides whom, there is no other name given under heaven, whereby we can be ſaved—Could an apoſtle ſo abſolutely forget his LORD; and in a caſe, where every other inſpired writer acknowledges him; nay, acknowledges him to be ALL IN ALL?

* Pſal. xv. 4. נבזה עיניו נמאס I cannot ſay, that I admire

Or, as the more expressive original speaks, he is despicable and vile in his own sight. So far from aspiring to self-justification, that he even condemns and abhors himself, and falls down, as a most unworthy wretch, at the foot of infinitely free grace.

Ther. I cannot but think, it is the current doctrine of scripture, and I am sure, it is one of the first principles which the light of nature teaches,—That the most high GOD must necessarily love righteousness, and take pleasure in the righteous.

Asp. If the light of nature was to publish a gospel, I believe, it would be formed upon your plan. It would bestow favour only on the innocent, the virtuous, and the holy.—But the gospel of CHRIST runs in a very different strain. This brings pardon for the condemned, and blessings for the accursed. This is health to the sick, and recovery to the ruined. The LORD hath anointed me, saith its divine AUTHOR, to preach good tidings to the meek, who are humbled under a sense of their sinfulness.—He hath sent me to bind up the broken-hearted, who are wounded with a conviction of their undone state; to proclaim liberty to the captives, the wretched captives of Satan; and the opening of the prison to them that are bound, bound in the chains of ignorance, impotence, and misery.

As I am myself a most unworthy sinner, you must not be displeased, if I espouse the cause of those unhappy creatures. Yet, though a friend of sinners, I am no enemy to the righteous. I entirely agree with my Theron in allowing, that the most high GOD necessarily loves righteousness. Only I want to be informed, where this admirable and lovely quality is to be found?—Not among the Gentiles. They have swerved from the dictates of natural conscience.—Not among the Jews. They have broke the holy commandment delivered on mount Sinai.—Not among Christians. For, if GOD should enter into judgment with us, we could not answer him one of a thousand.—In the kingdom of Abyssinia, or in the country of the Moors, where will you find the native whites?

The SON of GOD found none among the race of Adam, that were entitled to the character of righteous. He who gave himself a ransom for all, makes no application to such persons *.—Why? Because he fully discerned personal goodness, or was unable to distinguish the excellency of inherent virtue?—No; but because he knew, that, amiable as these qualifications are, they have no existence in the human heart, till the sinner, reconciled by his death, be sanctified also by his SPIRIT.

You remember, perhaps, that remarkable answer, which the Spartans once returned to a threatening embassy from some of the neighbouring states. Nothing could be more concise; and, I think, nothing was ever more spirited and significant.

Ther. Those neighbours gave them to understand, by their ambassadors, "That, if they entered their territories, they would burn their towns; make the inhabitants prisoners; and spread destruction wherever they "advanced."—To which insolent menace, the brave Lacedemonians made no other reply, than—IF.

Is this the story to which you refer?

Asp. The very same.—And when you are speaking of human righteousness, as the cause of our acceptance with the eternal GOD, I would borrow the language of a Spartan. IF, shall be my reply.—If, exclusive of the obedience, and independent on the SPIRIT of CHRIST, you can furnish yourself with this endowment; or if you can carry your righteousness to that perfection, which may equal the purity of the law, and comport with the majesty of the LAWGIVER, then trust in it; let it be the ground of your confidence; and seek no better foundation.

But whoever shall, in this manner, seek for his recommendation to the favour of GOD, will act like the mistaken countryman in Horace;—who, being unable to ford the river, took up a resolution to wait, till the stream was all run by:

—At ille
Labitur, et labetur in omne volubilis ævum †.

Ther. Here, I fancy, we must take leave of your countryman. If he adheres to his resolution, we shall find him in the very same situation, when breakfast is over; and may resume our subject, just where it is discontinued.

* Matth. ix. 13. I came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance.

† Vain man, desist: such flatt'ring hopes forego;
It flows, and flows, and will for ever flow.

DIALOGUE VII.

Ther. TO me, who have spent the greatest part of the winter in town, these scenes of the country are inexpressibly pleasing. Take who will the gilded saloon, and the silken settee; so long as I can shelter myself under the canopy of such a spreading beech, and use one of its coarse, mis-shapen roots for my seat.

'Tis true, we see no longer those splendid brocades, and elegant toupees, which distinguish the Park and the Mall.—But we have, full in our view, a multitude of honest rustics, pursuing their chearful labours in yonder meadow; some mowing the luxuriant herbage; some raising it into regular cocks; others loading their waggons with the hay, or clearing the ground with their rakes. The ground, cleared of its late incumbrance, appears fresh and green, like another spring. While the exhalations of the recided grass, floating in the air, give a rural perfume to the gale.—And which, my Aspasio, which are the most valuable objects? The little labourers of the hive, that enrich the Bible translation of this clause: In whose eyes the vile person is contemptible. Methinks, it does not savour of the tender and benign spirit of our religion, which teaches us to honour all men; to despise no one's person, but only to detest the wickedness of the wicked.

Should the sense I have quoted, have its weight; the sense I have preferred, is incomparably weightier. If to despise the vile, is a religious act; to think meanly of ourselves, is a much more advanced, and a far more difficult instance of true religion. This is to copy the highest PATTERN of human excellence, who, notwithstanding his very superior attainments, accounted himself less than the least of all saints; nay, the very chiefest of sinners.

Upon this passage of Isaiah I would beg leave to observe, that the word meek seems not to answer or convey the prophet's idea. By the meek, we are inclined to think of persons, endued with that placid and quiet spirit, which is in the sight of GOD of great price. This might discourage many people, who know themselves to be destitute of such a gracious habit. This might lead others to suspect, that some amiable disposition is previously necessary in order to receive the benefits of redeeming grace. Which is a very mistaken, and will prove a most uncomfortable forbidding notion.

The original ענוים signifies, in this place, the afflicted; not so much those who are beautified with meekness, as those who are oppressed with misery, spiritual misery especially: not excepting even those who are slaves to their own unruly passions. The LORD JESUS never finds, but makes people meek. Meekness is one of the fruits of his SPIRIT; one of the blessings which he bestows on the unworthy.

The whole paragraph is a description of extreme wretchedness. What can be more distressed than the man, whose outward circumstances are impoverished and ruined; whose spirit is broken under the weight of his calamities; who is taken captive by the enemy, is thrown into a dungeon, and loaded with irons?—This is the proper representation; this is the picture of unconverted sinners; and to these, in these CHRIST JESUS is a ransom, a deliverer, a portion.

enrich themſelves, and regale their maſters? or the gay flutterers of the garden, whoſe whole life is nothing but ſport; and their higheſt character is, to be inſignificantly pretty?

Aſp. In this retirement, we hear none of the wanton and corrupting airs of the opera; no, nor the majeſtic and ennobling melody of the oratorio *.——But we have a band of muſic, ſtationed in the grove; and a concert of native harmony, warbling from the boughs. We are entertained with the muſic, which charmed the human ear, long before † Jubal found out his inſtruments; and thouſands of years before Handel compoſed his notes.——The bull-finch, and a multitude of little tuneful throats, ſtrike the key. The thruſh below, and the ſky-lark reſponſive from above, diverſify and exalt the ſtrain. The blackbird, ſomewhat like the ſolemn organ, with notes perfectly mellow, and gracefully ſonorous, crowns the choir. While the turtle's melancholy voice, and the murmuring water's plaintive tone, deepen and complete the univerſal ſymphony.

This is the muſic, which conſtituted the firſt ſong of thankſgiving, and formed the firſt vocal praiſe, that the all-gracious CREATOR received from his new-made world. This is neither the parent of effeminacy, nor a pander for vice; but refines the affections, even while it amuſes the imagination.

Ther. All the entertainments of nature, are calculated to ſecure our innocence, as well as to gratify our fancy. And what is another very agreeable circumſtance, thoſe gratifications which afford the ſublimeſt pleaſure, are exhibited gratis. While thoſe which enervate the mind, and debauch the affections, muſt be dearly purchaſed.—Every one cannot gain admittance into the boxes or the pit, when ſome celebrated tragedy is brought upon the ſtage. But every one may behold the beauteous exhibitions of ſpring, and the finiſhed productions of autumn. All may contemplate the machinery of nature, and the wonders of creation; thereby enjoying a far more exquiſite amuſement, without any of the guilt, or any of the danger.

The inhabitants of yonder villages have never beheld the ſplendid proceſſion, which ſolemnizes the coronation of a monarch; nor the gaudy illuminations, which diſtinguiſh the anniverſary of his birth. But they ſee, almoſt every morning, a much nobler ſpectacle diſplayed in the eaſt. They ſee the great ruler of the day, or rather the envoy from day's eternal SOVEREIGN, making his entry amidſt the ſpaces of the ſky.——The heavens are ſtrewed with colours, which outvie the pinks and carnations. The graſs is decked with dew-drops, and every plant is ſtrung, as it were, with pearls. All around the darkneſs retires, and ſweet refreſhing gales ariſe.—At length the magnificent luminary appears.—And what is all the oſtentatious pomp of kings? what is all the glitter of the moſt brilliant court? compared with his tranſcendent luſtre?—This ſpectacle we may behold, without loſs of time, or prejudice to health. Nay, we cannot behold it, without improving one, and redeeming the other. So beneficial are even the pleaſures which nature yields; ſo ſerviceable the very diverſions, to which ſhe invites!

Aſp. Thus gracious is the almighty MAKER, in the conſtitution of material things. The ſubſtantial and the valuable, are open to every one; are acceſſible by all. Only the tinſel and the trappings, are the property of a few; the poor prerogative of wealth.

No leſs gracious is GOD, in the diſpoſal of ſpiritual favours. Theſe are infinitely more excellent; and yet are equally free. We are invited to buy them without money, and without price ‡.—What do you give for the benefits of the riſing ſun, or the delights of this rural melody? The caſe is much the ſame, with regard to the righteouſneſs, by which we are juſtified, and all the bleſſings of ſalvation.

Ther. This brings to our remembrance the countryman, whom we left on the banks of the river. And, for aught I can ſee, Theron and the ruſtic are pretty much upon a footing. The firſt as far from acceding to your notions, as the laſt is from gaining his point.

Aſp. Have you any objection, Theron, to theſe gifts of nature, becauſe they are neither purchaſed by your money, nor produced by your own toil?

Ther. But who can ever expect to obtain pardon, and acceptance, and eternal ſalvation, at ſo cheap a rate? It ſeems to be all deluſion, Aſpaſio.

Aſp. So cheap! Then you would pay ſomewhat, I perceive, by way of price.—But give me leave to aſk, What price did you pay to GOD your MAKER, for faſhioning you in your mother's womb? what price have you paid to GOD your PRESERVER, for upholding you ever ſince you was born? Or what price do you think of paying to GOD the ſupreme PROPRIETOR, for the ground on which you tread, for the air in which you breathe, for the light by which you ſee? Juſt the ſame price muſt you advance to GOD your SAVIOUR, for all his juſtifying merits.

Both theſe and thoſe proceed from the ſame BENEFACTOR. They are all abſolutely neceſſary, either for the welfare of the body, or the happineſs of the ſoul. And they are all vouchſafed on the ſame free terms. For thus ſaith the prophet, His going forth, in the diſpenſation of the goſpel, is prepared as the morning. CHRIST, with all his precious privileges, ſhall come unto us as the rain; as the latter and former rain unto the earth †.——However, if you are acquainted with a different, or a better way, be ſo good as to communicate your knowledge.

Ther. Some, you may obſerve, depend upon their inoffenſive behaviour. They live peaceably. They do no harm to their neighbours. They are guilty of no groſs offence againſt GOD. And why ſhould they not hope to obtain his favour?—They apprehend, the prophet Samuel eſtabliſhes their hope, when he makes this ſolemn appeal; Whoſe aſs have I taken? whoſe ox have I taken? or whom have I defrauded ‡?—Nay, they imagine, that our LORD himſelf has authoriſed their expectation, by giving this character of Nathanael; An Iſraelite indeed, in whom is no guile ‖.—A freedom from outward injuſtice and inward hypocriſy, is all the qualification, applauded in the one caſe, avowed in the other.

Aſp. This negative goodneſs (if it deſerves to be called goodneſs) was a plea for the empty Phariſee. But none, I preſume, would chuſe to be aſſociated with ſuch a companion, either in character here, or in condition hereafter.

Samuel, in the place you mention, is vindicating himſelf only to his fellow-creatures, and only in the capacity of a magiſtrate. He ſpeaks not of his juſtification before the JUDGE of quick and dead. This, he well knew, muſt be derived from another ſource, and muſt reſt upon a firmer bottom.

The Iſraelite without guile, was a perſon, who not only abſtained from every ſin, but performed every duty; and without any wilful neglect of the one, or any allowed indulgence of the other. This inſtance, therefore, will by no means prove the ſufficiency of your negative righteouſneſs. Which ſeems to have juſt the ſame degree of excellency, as a fountain that never iſſues in water, or as a cloud that never deſcends in rain §.

* Majeſtic and enobling.—This, I think, is the true character, and expreſſes the real tendency, of the oratorio. Nevertheleſs, it may not be improper to obſerve, that if we carry a trifling or irreligious ſpirit to the entertainment; if we attend to the muſical airs, but diſregard thoſe ſacred truths, which enter into the compoſition; ſuch a behaviour will be little better than a profanation of holy things. I fear, it will be a ſpecies of taking GOD's adorable and glorious name in vain.

† Gen. iv. 21.

‡ Iſ. lv. 1. † Hoſ. vi. 3. ‡ 1 Sam. xii. 3. ‖ John i. 47.

§ Vultus quæ tetricæ, ſit qui non ſtudium arcum. CLAUDIAN.

Ther.

Ther. In this particular, Aſpaſio, your ſentiments are mine.——But I would add morality to civility; the virtuous to the inoffenſive converſation. And if we not only ceaſe to do evil, but learn to do well; if we uſe temperance, exerciſe charity, and keep all the commandments to the beſt of our power, is not this a ſufficient foundation for our hope?

Aſp. Yes, Theron; if, as you add morality to your civility, you add perfection to both. Otherwiſe you muſt be ranked, not among the claimants, but among the delinquents. You have no title to a reward, but ſtand in need of pardon.

It is a principle of juſtice, founded on the unalterable conſtitution of things, That the debtor be acquitted, when he has paid the debt. But ſuppoſing him, inſtead of gold to bring iron, inſtead of talents to return pence, inſtead of defraying, to increaſe the ſcore daily; can he then reaſonably expect, or legally claim a diſcharge?

With reſpect to ſuch an obedience, we may paſs our verdict in the figurative, but very expreſs language of Iſaiah: The bed is ſhorter, than that a man can ſtretch himſelf on it; and the covering narrower, than that he can wrap himſelf in it *. It can neither give reſt to the alarmed conſcience, nor afford protection to the guilty ſoul. If we have nothing better to plead, we ſhall not be able to lift up our heads, in the laſt deciſive judgment; but muſt enter into the rock, and hide ourſelves in the duſt, for fear of the LORD, and for the glory of his majeſty †.

Ther. We will go a ſtep farther, and take in the exerciſe of devotion. We will read GOD's word; pray to his divine MAJESTY; and regularly attend on his public worſhip.——Here now are ſocial accompliſhments and moral virtues, completed by the performance of religious duties.

Aſp. Completed!—I fear that expreſſion will ſcarcely abide the teſt of a ſingle query. Have you then performed all your duties, with that ardent love of GOD, and undivided view to his glory; with that adoring gratitude to the bleſſed JESUS, and that child-like dependence on his SPIRIT; which the nature of things requires, and the ſcriptures of truth enjoin?—If not, your duties, be they moral, or religious, or both, are far from being complete. Nay, they are utterly defective; and, for that reaſon, abſolutely inſufficient for your juſtification. They are clipped or ſophiſticated coin. And will that be current in the world of glory?

Ther. Allowing them to be defective, they are at leaſt ſincere. And though not free from all alloy, yet if they bear the image and ſuperſcription of integrity, why ſhould they be rejected, as "reprobate ſilver ‡? Why ſhould they not obtain the currency you mention?

Aſp. "Alas!"——ſays a judicious and admired writer,—"the imperfections of our beſt ſervices daily forfeit "the bleſſings of time. How impoſſible then is it, that "the ſincerity of them, amidſt ſo many frailties and de-"fects, ſhould purchaſe the glories of eternity!"

Ther. Be your writer ever ſo judicious, I can confront him with others, equally capable of judging, and diametrically oppoſite in opinion.——What ſays that wiſe and brave man, the ſucceſſor of Moſes, and generaliſſimo of the armies of Iſrael? Joſhua, I am ſure, declares himſelf on my ſide: Fear the LORD, and ſerve him in ſincerity ‖, is his laſt ſolemn charge to the people.——Even the great apoſtle, on a review of his miniſtry, makes it matter of ſelf-gratulation, that he had his converſation in godly ſincerity §.

Aſp. You have quoted the charge delivered by the ſervant, be pleaſed to recollect the proteſtation, made by the maſter: Not for thy righteouſneſs, ſays Moſes, or for the uprightneſs of thy heart, doſt thou go to poſſeſs their land ¶. Even an earthly Canaan was not given to the Iſraelites, as the reward of their own, either outward obedience, or inward ſincerity. Much leſs can we expect the kingdom of immortality, on account of any uprightneſs of our intentions, or piety of our actions.

However, as the doctrine of ſincerity is the favourite and the faſhionable tenet, I will conform a little to the taſte in vogue. You ſhall have no reaſon to complain, that I am either a Cynic or a Stoic *.—Let it ſuffice us to be ſincere. Only let us refer ourſelves to the apoſtle, for a deſcription of this darling qualification. That ye may be ſincere, being filled with the fruits of righteouſneſs, which are by JESUS CHRIST unto the praiſe and glory of GOD †.

Here are three properties of acceptable ſincerity.—It muſt bear fruits, the fruits of righteouſneſs; and bear them abundantly, ſo that we may be filled with them.—The branch and the fruits muſt derive, that its vigour, theſe their flavour, and both of them their very being, from the all-ſupporting, all-ſupplying root CHRIST JESUS.——Then, inſtead of terminating in ſelf-juſtification, they muſt redound to the honour of GOD. It is not ſaid, theſe ſhall juſtify you, but theſe ſhall glorify your FATHER which is in heaven.

This kind of ſincerity can never be too highly eſteemed, nor too zealouſly encouraged. But this, you will obſerve, flows from the grace of CHRIST, and iſſues in the glory of GOD; therefore does but very poorly aſſert either the ſufficiency of human ability to perform good works, or the ſufficiency of human works to win the prize of our high calling.

Ther. Do you then exclude all works? Will you make a mere nothing, both of our moral endowments, and of your evangelical obedience?

Aſp. They are excluded, both the one and the other, from all ſhare in juſtifying us; yet not by me, but by an authority, to which there can be no objection, and from which there lies no appeal. Speaking of ſalvation, thus ſaith the wiſdom of GOD, Not of works.——

Ther. Works of the ceremonial law, I ſuppoſe. Theſe, we all acknowledge, are, under the Chriſtian diſpenſation as a bond cancelled, or an act repealed. But ſure you will allow a better office, and a nobler character, to that courſe of obedience, which is regulated by the commands of CHRIST.

Aſp. St Paul will allow it no ſuch office, as that for which my Theron is pleading. Ye are ſaved, ſays the apoſtle. Ye are delivered from wrath, reconciled to GOD, and made heirs of his kingdom.—How? By grace, through faith ‡. Grace, like a magnificent ſovereign, from the riches of his own bounty, and without any reſpect to human worthineſs, confers the glorious gift. Faith, like an indigent petitioner, with an empty hand, and without any pretence to perſonal deſert, receives the heavenly bleſſing.

Both grace and faith ſtand in direct oppoſition to works; all works whatever. Whether they be works of the law, or works of the goſpel; exerciſes of the heart, or actions of the life; done in a ſtate of nature, or done under the influences of grace; they are, all and every of them, equally ſet aſide in this great affair.

That the bill of excluſion is thus extenſive, or rather quite unlimited, appears from the reaſon aſſigned: Leſt any man ſhould boaſt ‖: that all pretence of glorying may be cut off from fallen creatures; that the whole honour of obtaining ſalvation, may be appropriated to HIM, who hid not his face from ſhame and ſpitting.——And is he not worthy, unſpeakably and infinitely worthy, to receive this unrivalled honour, as a recompence for his unparallelled humiliation?

Ther. All our good works, we allow, are recom-

* If. xxviii. 20. † If. ii. 10. ‡ Jer. vi. 30.
‖ Joſh. xxiv. 14. § 2 Cor. i. 12. ¶ Deut. ix. 5.

* The Cynic had not complaiſance, the Stoic was quite inflexible.

† Phil. i. 10, 11. ‡ Eph. ii. 8. ‖ Eph. ii. 9.

mended

mended by CHRIST. They prevail for our justification, only through his merits. So that we still depend upon the REDEEMER; and, by this means, pay him the highest honour.

Asp. Depend upon the REDEEMER! No, my dear friend. You rely upon your own pious acts, and moral qualifications. They, they are your grand recommendation. The office consigned over to the divine JESUS, is nothing more than to be (as it were) master of the ceremonies. He may have the credit of introducing your fine accomplishments, with a kind of graceful air.—But is this an office suited to his incomparable dignity? Was it for this that he bowed the heavens, and partook of our nature? Was it for this that he became subject to the law, and obedient unto death? Only for this, that he might usher in our own endowments, with a plume and a leaf?—Surely, Theron, you can never entertain such low thoughts of the incarnate GOD, and of CHRIST's mediatorial undertaking.

Ther. Neither can I entertain such low and vilifying thoughts of our own virtuous attainments. They distinguish persons of eminence and worth, from the sordid wretch and execrable villain; just as the noble faculty of reason distinguishes the man from the brute.

Asp. To deny good works the merit of justifying us, is very different from vilifying them.——You are going to build a new house, Theron. Pray, do you intend to hew your timber from the flimsy tendrils of the vine?

Ther. No, certainly *.

Asp. Because you don't think its feeble shoots proper, to form the beams, and support the roof, of your intended edifice; do you, therefore, affront them, depreciate them, or disallow their usefulness?—By no means. They may beautify your walls with their ornamental spread, and enrich the desert with their delicious fruit. This is an office suitable to the nature of the plant; and from this it receives sufficient estimation, without pretending to the honours of the oak.

Virtuous attainments, I own, are a considerable distinction, in the present state of things. And, what is a higher encomium, (I shall now outshoot you in your own bow) they will distinguish the true believer from the hypocritical professor, even at the great tribunal.—— But let them be content with their province, and not intrude upon the SAVIOUR's prerogative. To effect justification, be his; to discriminate the justified, theirs. —Neither let them elate their possessors with a vain conceit of themselves; who, though they were meek as Moses, holy as Samuel, and wise as Daniel, must confide in nothing, but the boundless mercies of the LORD; must plead nothing, but the infinite merits of his CHRIST.

This is the theology, both of the Psalmist, and of St Paul. They derive the blessedness promised in scripture, not from the shallow stream of human accomplishments, but from the inexhaustible ocean of divine grace. Blessed is he, whose unrighteousnesses are forgiven, and whose sins are covered †.

Ther. Will Aspasio then, like many of our modern disputants, mutilate the holy word? industriously display what seems to strengthen his argument, but artfully secrete what tends to overthrow his scheme? How could you forget, or why should you suppress, the following clause? and in whose spirit there is no guile.—Was you afraid it would demolish your opinion; and point out an upright, honest mind, as the cause of this blessedness?

Asp. Far was I, my dear Theron, from any such groundless apprehensions; and equally far from all such delusory designs. Shall I talk deceitfully for GOD *‡? His sacred cause does not need it, and his excellent Majesty would disdain it. No; I would condemn my tongue to eternal silence, rather than speak a syllable, either to conceal, or disguise the truth.

Most readily we will admit the sentence you mention: In whose spirit there is no guile. It is evident from the context, that these words are not descriptive of a person, in whose heart and conversation there is no iniquity; but of a penitent sinner, whose mouth freely confesses the iniquity of them both; confesses without any reserve, or the least attempt to palliate.——Which, instead of invalidating, corroborates my argument: since, according to your own allegation, the highest merit consists in a free acknowledgement of sin, or a total renunciation of all worthiness.

Ther. When, therefore, we join repentance to all our other works; lament our deficiencies, and implore forgiveness; surely this must be available with a merciful GOD, and cannot but entitle us to the happiness of heaven.

Asp. How strange does it sound, at least in my ears, for poor, miserable, guilty creatures, to talk of entitling themselves to the happiness of heaven, by any deeds of their own! when it is owing wholly to GOD's rich forbearing mercy, that they are transmitted to hell; owing wholly to GOD's free preventing grace, that they are enabled to think a good thought.

But not to enlarge upon this consideration;—I would ask, whether those penetential exercises were attended with a hearty detestation of sin, and an utter abhorrence of the sinner †?—If they were, you would then renounce yourself universally. You would never think of placing the least dependance on any thing of your own; nay, you would even loath yourself.—If they were not, then your very repentance falls short, and is to be repented of. It is as if one came to the press-fat for to draw out fifty vessels, and there were but twenty ‖. It is, if I may continue the prophet's metaphor and the prophet's language, the scant measure; which, in this your spiritual traffic, as well as in the affairs of secular commerce, is abominable §.

Or, should your repentance be without a failure, and without a flaw; I must still say to my friend, as our LORD replied to the young ruler, One thing thou lackest. In all these acts of humiliation, you have only taken shame to yourself; whereas a righteousness is wanting, which may magnify the law, and make it honourable. —Should GOD, without insisting upon this, pardon and reward, he would not act according to his glorious character; nor be, at once, a just GOD, and a SAVIOUR ¶. —And if you can find this righteousness, either in the depth, or in the height above; in any person or any object, save only in the imputed obedience of our LORD JESUS CHRIST; I retract whatever I have advanced.

Ther. A preacher and an author has lately assured us, that we are to be "accepted of GOD, and saved by our "own obedience." If so, I need not scruple to repeat my assertion, that our own duties, especially when accompanied with repentance, are a real and proper foundation for life eternal.

Asp. Then the apostle was under a great mistake, when, treating of CHRIST and his merits, he ventured to assert, Other foundation can no man lay, save that which is laid, even JESUS CHRIST ‡.

Ther. If you will not credit a modern preacher, I can produce a decision, made by one of the most ancient and authoritative synods; Then hath GOD also to the Gentiles granted repentance unto life ‡.——Repentance unto life, is their unanimous voice, and my unexceptionable voucher.

* No, certainly.—Perhaps it may be worth our while to observe, that this is the meaning of a very obsolete expression, which occurs in our translation of (ουκ οιδα), Luke xvii. 9. I trow not.

† Psal. xxxii. 1. Rom. iv. 7.

* Job xiii. 7. † Ezek. xxxvi. 31.

‡ Hag. ii. 16. ‖ Mic. vi. 10. § Is. xlv. 21.

¶ 1 Cor. iii. 11. ‡ Acts xi. 18.

Asp. I can eaſily gueſs the aſſembly, to which you refer. But I can hardly grant it the venerable name of a ſynod. It conſiſted of ſome Judaizing converts; who adhered, with a tenacious and bigotted zeal, to the Moſaic rites.—However, though I might ſcruple my Theron's appellation, I readily acquieſce in their determination.

It is not ſaid, thoſe Gentiles were penitent, and therefore GOD granted them life. This ſhould have been the language of the aſſembly, in order to eſtabliſh my friend's way of thinking.—On the contrary, they were dead in ſin. GOD, of his free goodneſs, granted them repentance: which is both the beginning and a ſubſtantial part of true life; even of that life, which is founded on juſtification, is carried on by ſanctification, and completed in glory.

I would farther obſerve, that repentance is a turning of the heart. And when it is repentance unto life, it is a turning of the heart from every other object, to the great and ſole fountain of good, CHRIST JESUS *.—Were men ſlaves to ſenſuality? When they repent, they are turned to CHRIST, for refined and heavenly affections. Were they wont to confide in themſelves, and their own works? As ſoon as they truly repent, they turn to CHRIST for a better righteouſneſs; and, thereby, for everlaſting acceptance with GOD.——In ſhort, they turn from every falſe ſtay, and fly only to CHRIST; depend only on CHRIST; looking, not to their own tears or humiliation, not to their own duties or graces; but looking for the mercy of our LORD JESUS CHRIST unto eternal life †.

Ther. Suppoſe it ſhould be wrong, to expect ſuch a vaſt reward, as the inconceivable glories of heaven, on account of our own duties; yet to ſet them wholly aſide, to allow them no influence at all, not ſo much as the leaſt co-operation, in turning the ſcale; this is an exceſs on the other hand. If the former is preſumption, the latter is fanaticiſm.

Aſp. I muſt confeſs, I do not thoroughly underſtand what you mean by fanaticiſm. Neither is it of much ſignificancy, to enter upon the diſquiſition of an obnoxious term. I would only maintain, that on us unworthy ſinners whatever is beſtowed by the righteous GOD, is beſtowed, not as a debt ‡ to our works, but as the donation of pure grace.

Ther. I think, it is ſufficiently of grace, if we acknowledge good works to be wrought by the aſſiſtance of the divine SPIRIT, and then admitted, together with our SAVIOUR's merits, as a recommendation to the divine favour.

Aſp. The Phariſee could make his acknowledgments for the aſſiſtance of grace: GOD, I thank thee, was his language. Yet this did not exempt him from the charge of pride, nor ſecure him from the ſin of boaſting. Beſides, if good works are wrought by the operation of the divine SPIRIT, they draw a bill upon our gratitude, not upon the bank of heaven; they render us the obliged, not the deſerving party. To think or teach otherwiſe, is errant Popery ‖, however it may lurk under a veil of Proteſtantiſm.

You bring to my mind a memorable ſtory.——Two perſons were travelling through the deſerts of Arabia. The one utterly unarmed; the other wore a ſword, and carried a muſket. As the place was exceedingly dangerous, the latter, ſolicitous for the ſafety of his companion, makes him a preſent of his fire-arms.—Which was no ſooner done, than a lion eſpies them, and advances fiercely towards them. The foremoſt diſcharges his piece, and wounds their horrid aggreſſor. The wound, neither killing, nor diſabling, only enrages the monſter. He ſeizes the unfortunate markſman, and is upon the point to tear him limb from limb. His fellow-traveller flies to his ſuccour; ſnatches up the carbine, which dropt from the other's hand; and fells the ravenous beaſt to the ground. Then, drawing his ſword, ſtabs him to the heart, and reſcues his friend.

The lion thus ſlain, they take off the ſkin: which, he who flew the lordly ſavage, claims as his own. "No," ſays his grateful friend, "as you did part of the execution "with my weapon, I inſiſt upon half of the ſhaggy ſpoil. "I expect ſatisfaction likewiſe for the loſs of my piece, which you broke in the encounter."—To obtain both, he commences a law-ſuit againſt that generous aſſociate, who not only gave him the weapon, but ſaved the proſecutor from the very jaws of deſtruction.

Ther. If I had been judge, I ſhould without much heſitation, have determined ſuch a cauſe. Inſtead of coſts and damages for my plaintiff, I ſhould have tranſmitted the wretch to the pillory.

Aſp. I believe, all the world would applaud your ſentence.——Only be pleaſed to remember, that the proceedure, on which you ſo juſtly animadvert, is the very picture of our exceſſive unreaſonableneſs, if we preſume to write ourſelves creditors, and the divine BEING debtor; becauſe he has delivered us from the bondage of corruption, and enabled us to perform the duties of godlineſs.

Theron pauſed, as ſomewhat ſtruck by the repreſentation. After a ſhort interval, Aſpaſio reſumed the diſcourſe.

Believe me, my dear friend, ſalvation, both in the root, and all its branches, is entirely of grace. Or elſe believe me, for the many cogent teſtimonies of ſcripture, which moſt circumſtantially aſcertain this great truth. Election is of grace: Having predeſtinated us unto the adoption of children, not on account of human worthineſs, but according to the good pleaſure of his will *.——Equally gratuitous is our effectual vocation: GOD hath called us with an holy calling, not according to our works, but according to his purpoſe and grace †.——Faith, with all its precious fruits, is owing to the ſame cauſe: By grace ye are ſaved through faith ‡.——From hence ſprings juſtification, together with all its attendant privileges: Being juſtified freely by his grace ‖.——This is the origin of regeneration, and every living principle of godlineſs: Of his own will begat he us by the word of truth §.——The conſummation of bliſs flows from the ſame all-ſupplying ſource: The gift of GOD is eternal life ¶: It is, in every reſpect, a gift; not only without, but contrary to, all deſert of ours.——So that the foundation is laid in the riches of grace; the ſuperſtructure is reared by the hand of grace; and when the top-ſtone is brought forth, when our felicity is

* Acts xix. 4. † Jude 21.

‡ Beſtowed as a debt, is, I muſt allow, ſomewhat like jargon. But, perhaps, jargon and inconſiſtency may not be without their propriety in this place; as they tend to ſhew the genius of that doctrine, which would connect ſuch contradictory ideas.

‖ Good works, ſays a champion for the church of Rome, are mercatura regni cœleſtis, the price we pay or the commodity we barter, for the kingdom of heaven.—Another zealot of that communion declares, Cœlum gratis non accipiam, It ſhall never be ſaid, that I receive heaven merely as a matter of alms.—So ſpeaks he! but, bleſſed be GOD, we have not ſo learned CHRIST.

* Eph. i. 5. † 2 Tim. i. 9. ‡ Eph. ii. 8.

‖ Rom. iii. 24. Δωρεαν τη αυτε χαριτι. One of theſe words might have ſerved to convey the apoſtle's meaning. But he doubles his aſſertion, in order to give us the fulleſt conviction of the truth, and to impreſs us with a ſenſe of its peculiar importance: FREELY BY HIS GRACE.—Is it poſſible to find out a form of ſpeech, that ſhould more abſolutely exclude all conſideration of our own works and obedience? or that ſhould more emphatically aſcribe the whole of our juſtification to free, uninfluenced ſovereign goodneſs?—To find an expreſſion more forcible for the purpoſe, will puzzle invention itſelf. But this expreſſion we find uſed, again and again, by the ſacred writer; Η δωρεα εν χαριτι, Rom. v. 15. Της χαριτος και της δωρεας, Rom. v. 17.

§ Jam. i. 18.

¶ Rom. vi. 23. Χαρισμα, which is a more expreſſive word than δωρημα, and conveys the idea of freeſt favour.

completed

completed in the kingdom of heaven, the everlasting acclamation will be, Grace, grace unto it!

Ther. This is that glorious gospel, which human learning could never have discovered; which carnal reason cannot understand; which the wisdom of this world accounteth foolishness; which the envy of the devil and the pride of man, will always oppose.

Eleer. What say you to the opinion, which Ouranius so strenuously maintains, That we are justified, not by the merits of CHRIST imputed to us, but by CHRIST himself formed in our hearts? And Ouranius is none of your proud or carnal people. His writings are remarkable for their strict piety, and his life is as exemplary as his principles.

Asp. You know, Theron, I have nothing to do with the persons of men, but with the truths of the gospel. Ouranius, though eminently devout, may be mistaken. And, if this is his way of thinking, he quite misapprehends the doctrine of grace.

What is written in the oracles of scripture? The LORD justifieth the ungodly †. What is implied in the maxim of Ouranius? HE justifieth the holy, the heavenly, the Christ-like.——A man is justified by faith ‡, says the secretary of heaven. He is justified by works, says the pen of Ouranius: only let them be works of a superior order; such as are internal, spiritual, and wrought by the operation of CHRIST on the soul.——According to this notion, every one is justified by his own love, his own purity, his own zeal. Whereas, an unerring writer has most solemnly declared, that by ONE man's obedience many, many myriads of sinners, even all the redeemed worlds, shall be made righteous ||.

This notion, I think, is legalism in its greatest subtilty, or highest refinement. It disannuls the merit of CHRIST; it vacates all imputation; and makes our salvation to consist wholly in the work of sanctification. Against which, if you remember, I entered my protest, in one of our first § conferences. And now having ventured to animadvert on the tenets of others, it may reasonably be expected, that I should give an account of my own faith.——"I am justified; my soul is accepted; "not because CHRIST has put his laws in my mind, "but shed his blood for my sins; not because I myself am "enabled to walk in all godly conversation, but because "the LORD JESUS has fulfilled all righteousness as my "Surety."

Ther. I am for neither of the extremes. The middle way is most eligible. This is what sound sense approves, and the sacred system authorises. Whoso believeth on me, says our LORD, shall not perish, but shall have everlasting life ¶. Blessed, adds the beloved disciple, are they who do his commandments; that they may have a right to the tree of life; and may enter in, through the gates, into the city ‡.

Conformably to these texts of scripture, I would neither reject our REDEEMER's merits, nor repudiate good works. As this shady tree, and these cooling breezes, unite their properties, to render our situation agreeable; so those two causes, acting in conjunction, exalt us to the favour of GOD, and constitute us heirs of heaven.—GOD himself has joined them. And I must urge my remonstrance in our LORD's own words, What GOD hath joined together, let not man put asunder.

Asp. Would you then make impotence itself a coadjutor with omnipotence?—Does this humble the sinner? does this exalt the SAVIOUR?—No: it is a most injurious infringement of his mediatorial dignity. Instead of excluding, it evidently introduces boasting. In consequence of such a scheme, it would be said by the inhabitants of the heavenly world, "Thanks to our "blessed REDEEMER for this happiness! yet not to "him only, but to our own righteousness also."

Can you imagine, that the obedience of CHRIST is insufficient to accomplish our justification? Must its efficacy be reinforced by the accession of our works?——And what are these works of ours, that they should inhance the value, the immense value, of our REDEEMER's!——Maimed, tarnished, worm-eaten things; eaten by the worms of self-seeking, self-admiring, self-love; tarnished by a thousand vanities; maimed by ten thousand negligencies.——To join these in commission with our divine MASTER's righteousness, would be infinitely more disgraceful, than to tack the beggar's rag on the monarch's robe; would be altogether as needless, as to dream of augmenting the sea, by the drops of our bucket.

Ther. Worm-eaten! What reason have you to represent our acts of obedience under this sordid and shameful image?

Asp. I thought, you could hardly brook this disparaging expression. It is somewhat like petty treason against the dignity of man. My reasons I would postpone to some other opportunity; when, if you please, we will give the cause a full hearing.

At present, to make amends for this vile slander, I will suppose your works to have no defect; nay, to have all the perfection which you yourself could wish.——Will you glory on this account?—You are too modest, I am sure, to avow or patronize such a practice. Yet, if we say or think, concerning any attainments of our own, "This is the ground on which I expect to escape con-"demnation, and inherit life;" we do, in the most offensive, though not in the most explicit manner, glory *.

Or, will you reckon, that these services, because faultless, are, in any degree, meritorious? Let us hear our LORD's decision in the case. When ye have done not only some, but all those things which are commanded you.——And where is the man, or what is his name, who, in any nation or in any age, has done all that is commanded?

Where shall I find him? Angels, tell me where?
Shall I see glories beaming from his brow?
Or trace his footsteps by the rising flow'rs?

Yet even in such a case, if all this were performed, what shall we say? We are no better than unprofitable servants: we have done nothing more, than what was our indispensable duty to do †; and have, on this footing, just the same claim to honours and rewards, as the negro slave, after the dispatch of his daily business, has upon the estate or the wealth of an American planter.

Ther. But what say you to those passages of scripture which I have quoted? You have given them a hearing, but no answer. They, I do insist upon it, expressly assert, therefore incontestably prove, an union of CHRIST's merit and our own works, in the business of salvation.

Asp. It is written in the book of Revelation, Blessed are they that do his commandments. And wherefore? Because the obedience of faith is attended with a real blessedness on earth, and demonstrates our title to eternal blessedness in heaven. It is, though not the purchase, yet the evidence of our right to the tree of life,

* Zech. iv. 7. † Rom. iv. 5.

‡ Rom. v. 1. || Rom. v. 19.

§ See Dialogue II, pag. 67.

¶ John iii. 15. ‡ Rev. xxii. 14.

* Omnis causa justitiæ et salutis est materia et objectum καυχήσεως. Unde apostolus: Nam si Abraham ex operibus justificatus est, ἔχει καύχημα, i. e. Whatever is the cause of righteousness and salvation, is a real and proper foundation for glorying. Therefore the apostle acknowledges, If Abraham were justified by works, he hath whereof to glory, Rom. iv. 2.

VITRINGA.

† Luke xvii. 10.

All

All this I acknowledge. But where, I beſeech you, does the ſcripture join the obedience of CHRIST and the obedience of man, as mutually conducive to the juſtification of a ſinner?—The ſcripture utterly diſavows ſuch a copartnerſhip, and aſſerts what our homily expreſſes; "Surely, there can be no work of any mortal "man (be he never ſo holy) that ſhall be coupled in me-"rit with CHRIST's moſt holy act *."—The ſcripture ſteadily declares, that, in this greateſt of tranſactions, CHRIST is not an acceſſary, but the principal; nay, that he is ALL. Be it known unto you, men and brethren, that, through this illuſtrious and exalted PERSON †, is preached unto you the forgiveneſs of ſins; and by him all that believe are juſtified from all things.—Through this PERSON, without any partner or coadjutor. By him; not by him and our works jointly, but by him ſolely; without the concurrence of any other action, or any other agent. This was typified by the high prieſt, when, on the ſolemn day of expiation, he went into the tabernacle alone, and made the figurative atonement without any aſſociate ‡.——From all things; by HIM they are wholly, as well as ſolely juſtified: freed from every charge, whether of omiſſion or commiſſion; and rendered, not in part only, but completely acceptable.

I hope, therefore, you will no longer conſider the ſupremely-excellent JESUS, as a partial cauſe of our juſtification.—What would be the conſequence, if a perſon ſhould fix one foot on the bank of yonder river, and reſt another on the fluid ſtream?

Ther. He muſt unavoidably fall.

Aſp. And what ſays our divine INSTRUCTOR to thoſe double-minded Galatians, who could not believe themſelves ſafe and complete in the merits of CHRIST alone; but muſt be ſeeking ſome other foundation, on which to repoſe a ſhare at leaſt of their confidence? He ſays; and they are awful words; they call for my Theron's moſt ſerious regard; Ye are fallen from grace ‖.

Let me entreat my friend to beware of this error. I think, it is the prevailing error of our times; and ſo much the more dangerous, becauſe it is ſomewhat ſpecious.—To pour contempt upon the bleſſed JESUS, with the Libertines and Deiſts, would be ſhocking to a mind that retains the leaſt reverence for ſacred things. Entirely to ſet aſide the meritorious efficacy of his undertaking, with the Arians and Socinians, would be afflictive to a conſcience that is impreſſed with the leaſt ſenſe of ſin. Whereas to erect our merits on the foundation of CHRIST's; to be found in his, yet not renounce our own righteouſneſs; this is both plauſible to our reaſon, and pleaſing to our vanity. This ſeems to honour the divine SAVIOUR, even while it gratifies human pride.—But this is an egregious falſehood, and cannot ſtand. This is an abominable idol, and muſt be laid in the duſt. CHRIST, like the real mother of the child, will have the whole, or none §; the whole—unſhared—unrivalled—undiminiſhed glory of our ſalvation.

Let me once again entreat my dear Theron, to beware of this error. It is the main pillar in the Roman hereſy, and the maſter-policy of the Popiſh Machiavilians. "CHRIST hath merited, that we may merit," is their grand maxim, and their grand deluſion. Hence come their penances and their pilgrimages; hence the hypocritical mortifications of ſome, and the extravagant auſterities of others: this enriches their ſhrines, and fills their cloyſters. And to thoſe ſeminaries of ſuperſtition, let it be baniſhed, let it be confined.——There let them raiſe their ſcaffolding, and try to enlarge the dimenſions of the ſky. There let them kindle their flambeaus, and attempt to increaſe the luſtre of the ſun. And when they have effected this eaſier taſk, then will we Proteſtants follow their example, and adopt their ſyſtem. Then will we alſo think of adding our own righteouſneſs, by way of ſupplement to the dignity and efficacy of our LORD's.

Ther. If we are juſtified wholly by our LORD's righteouſneſs; if nothing need be added, if nothing can be added to its all-comprehending fulneſs; what becomes of the generally-received opinion, That CHRIST obtained for us only a poſſibility of being ſaved; or put us into a capacity of acquiring ſalvation?

Aſp. It will be diſcountenanced and overthrown, as extremely diſhonourable to the REDEEMER, and no leſs uncomfortable to the redeemed. When CHRIST procured our pardon, and recovered our title to life, it was all his own doing. Of the people there was none with him *. In both caſes his work was perfect.——Hear his own teſtimony: I have finiſhed the work which thou gaveſt me to do †. Should you want an explication of theſe words, I refer you to the comment of an apoſtle: He, that is, JESUS CHRIST, has obtained eternal redemption for us ‡. This was his work, and it is fully executed. He has, HE HAS, obtained eternal redemption; and left nothing for his people, but to accept the glorious purchaſe, and live as becomes the redeemed of the LORD.

This truth is written, as with a ſun-beam, in the pages of the goſpel; and ſounds, as with a voice of thunder, in the ſongs of heaven. Salvation to our GOD, they cry, that ſitteth upon the throne, and to the LAMB ‖. Thoſe ſaints in glory aſcribe the whole,—the whole of their ſalvation they aſcribe, to the grace of GOD, and to the blood of the LAMB.

Ther. Have not many of our ableſt divines repreſented faith, obedience, and repentance, as the terms of acceptance? CHRIST, according to this account, procured not the bleſſing itſelf, but only the grant of eaſier conditions, on which it may be enjoyed.

Aſp. What ſays that ſublime BEING, who gives the ableſt divines all their wiſdom? My righteous ſervant ſhall juſtify many §; not pave the way, or adjuſt the preliminaries, but diſpatch the very buſineſs;—ſhall juſtify.—The terms of acceptance, for fallen and rebellious man, were, a full ſatisfaction to the divine juſtice, and a complete conformity to the divine law. Theſe, impracticable by us, were conſigned over to CHRIST. By him they were thoroughly accompliſhed; and by his accompliſhment of them, he purchaſed for us all bleſſings.—Among others, he purchaſed the gift of faith, the grace of repentance, and ability to yield thankful, dutiful, evangelical obedience. Theſe therefore are very improperly called the terms, which are really conſtituent parts of our ſalvation.

To ſum up all in a word—the whole tenor of revelation ſhews, that there are but two methods, whereby any of the human race can be juſtified.—Either by a perfect obedience to the law, in their own perſons; and then the reward is of debt ¶:—Or elſe, becauſe the Surety of a better covenant has ſatisfied all demands in their ſtead; and then the reward is of grace.—There is no trimming or reconciling expedient.—You may chuſe either of the two; but no third is propoſed or allowed.

Ther. Was there not a different method for the ancient people of GOD?

Aſp. None, Theron. In the ſtate of primitive innocency, a perfect and perſevering obſervance of the divine command, was the condition of life and immortality.——When, by the firſt grand apoſtaſy, this became

* Homily on Good-Friday.

† Acts xiii. 38. Δια τουτου, the word man is not in the original. So that I think, this illuſtrious and exalted PERSON, is the fulleſt and moſt exact tranſlation.

‡ Lev. xvi. 17.

‖ Gal. v. 4. § 1 Kings iii. 26.

* Iſ. lxiii. 6. † John xvii. 4. ‡ Heb. ix. 12.

‖ Rev. vii. 10. § Iſ. liii. 11.

¶ Rom. iv. 4. Poſitional debt; founded on the promiſe of the covenant, not ſpringing from any worth in the obedience, came impoſſible; a free pardon, and gracious acceptance, through the bleſſed JESUS, were ſubſtituted in its ſtead. Which œconomy, like a fountain of life, was opened, when GOD promiſed the ſeed of the woman, to bruiſe the ſerpent's head *.——It ran, like a ſalutary rivulet, thro' the antediluvian world;—continued its progreſs along the patriarchal age;—flowed, in broader ſtreams, under the Moſaic diſpenſation;—is derived down to us, abundantly enlarged by the coming of CHRIST, and the miniſtry of his apoſtles;—will be tranſmitted, with an increaſing ſpread to the lateſt poſterity;—nor ever ceaſe to amplify and extend its influence, till, as the fountain is become a river, the river is augmented into an ocean; and the knowledge of the LORD our righteouſneſs fill the earth, as the waters cover the abyſſes of the ſea †.

There was, I confeſs, a diverſity in the adminiſtration, but no difference in the nature, of the bleſſing. JESUS CHRIST, however variouſly manifeſted, was the ſame yeſterday, is the ſame to-day, will be the ſame for ever ‡. As it is the very ſame ſun, which gleams at early dawn, which ſhines in the advancing day, and glows at height of noon.

My ſimile reminds us of the time, and leaves a moſt important doctrine upon our memories. Suppoſe we take the admonition, and begin to move homeward.

Ther. We need be in no hurry, Aſpaſio. My watch tells me, that we have half an hour good. Beſides, I have ſomething farther to allege, and from a very great authority, which ſeems directly contrary to your notion.

Aſp. Juſt as you pleaſe, Theron. If you chuſe to ſtay, I am all compliance with your inclination; and, would truth permit, I ſhould be all conformity to your opinion.

Ther. You know, who it is that aſks, What doth the LORD require of thee? And neither of us need be informed, what it is that the prophet replies; Do juſtice, love mercy, and walk humbly with thy GOD ‖. But I want to know, what you think of this paſſage?

Aſp. I think, it is abſolutely inconſiſtent with your ſcheme. This paſſage inculcates humility. But your ſcheme is the very reverſe of that amiable virtue. A ſelf-juſticiary walking humbly with GOD, is little better than a contradiction in terms.

The LORD has ſaid, "ye ſhall be ſaved by grace §." Your ſyſtem replies, "No, but by our own works."—It is declared in ſcripture, "that the gift of GOD is eter-"nal life." It is implied in my friend's doctrine, that his happineſs is the wages of our own deeds.——"My "SON ſhall have all the glory of a ſinner's ſalvation," is the unalterable decree of the MOST HIGH. "We "will have a ſhare in the honour," is the language of your opinion.——Look, how wide therefore the eaſt is from the weſt! ſo remote is ſuch a ſtrain of teaching from the practice of walking humbly with our GOD.

Ther. But conſider, good Aſpaſio; have I not the prophet's authority for my opinion? Are not his words expreſsly on my ſide? Does he not mention thoſe duties of morality and piety, as the appointed method of obtaining the divine favour?

Aſp. He mentions, I apprehend, a ſolicitous inquiry, to which he gives a ſatisfactory anſwer; then ſubjoins a practical improvement of the whole.——The inquiry is expreſſed in theſe words; Wherewithal ſhall I come before the LORD, and bow myſelf before the high GOD? Shall I come before him with burnt-offerings, with calves of a year old? Will the LORD be pleaſed with thouſands of rams; with ten thouſands of rivers of oil? Shall I give my firſt-born for my tranſgreſſion, the fruit of my body for the ſin of my ſoul *?—To which it is replied, He hath ſhewed thee, O man, what is good for this important purpoſe; namely, the MESSIAH; pointed out by all thy ſacrifices, and deſcribed in the preceding chapter. Atonement for ſin, and peace with GOD, are to be made by a better hand, and in a better way, than thou propoſeſt. HE, whoſe outgoings have been from of old, from everlaſting †; HE, who is the SON of the HIGHEST, and yet the ſeed of her that travaileth ‡; HE has undertaken, and will fully execute, this great office.

And what doth the LORD thy GOD require of thee? What temper, what conduct, what expreſſions of gratitude, from his people? who are reconciled through the blood of CHRIST, and admitted to the bleſſings of the new covenant ‖.——They are to teſtify their thankfulneſs, by the alacrity, uniformity, and conſtancy of their obedience; or by the conſcientious diſcharge of every moral, ſocial, and religious duty.

If this be a true interpretation of the text, inſtead of eſtabliſhing, it overturns your cauſe.—But I have another objection to your method, perhaps, more weighty than the foregoing.

Ther. Pray, let me hear it.—I am not ſo enamoured with my notions, but I can bear to have them cenſured; nor ſo attached to my ſcheme, but I can relinquiſh it for a better.

Aſp. I would illuſtrate my meaning, by a common experiment in optics. When objects are viewed in a concave ſpeculum, or in the hollow of a poliſhed ſpoon, how do they appear?

Ther. Inverted.

Aſp. Such is my friend's ſyſtem of religion. He inverts the order of the goſpel. He turns the beautiful building upſide down; and lays that for the foundation, which ſhould only be part of the ſuperſtructure.——Not ſo the apoſtle Paul. He, like a wiſe maſter-builder, places CHRIST as the foundation ſtone; and rears his edifice of practical godlineſs on that all-ſupporting baſis.—Examine his epiſtle to the Romans; which is unqueſtionably the completeſt model of doctrine, and the nobleſt body of divinity, extant in the world.

He firſt diſcovers the depravity of our nature, and the miſery of our condition.——He, then, diſplays the method of our recovery by CHRIST, and the bleſſings freely vouchſafed in his goſpel.——After which, he deſineates the offices of morality, and enforces them by the moſt engaging motives; motives, drawn from the free unbounded loving-kindneſs of GOD our SAVIOUR, and from the rich invaluable benefits of his grace §.——Privilege he plants as the root; from which, duty blooms, as the flower; godlineſs grows, as the fruit.

* Gen. iii. 15. † Iſ. xi. 9. ‡ Heb. xiii. 8. ‖ Mic. vi. 8.

§ Eph. ii. 5. This text lays the axe to the very root of ſpiritual pride, and all ſelf-glorying whatever. Therefore the inſpired writer, foreſeeing the backwardneſs of mankind to receive it, yet knowing the abſolute neceſſity of its reception, again aſſerts (ver. 8.) the very ſame truth, in the very ſame words.

† Mic. v. 2. ‡ Mic. v. 3.

‖ Thy GOD, is the phraſe. Which denotes an intereſt; implies an appropriation; and is the peculiar language of the covenant.—Thy GOD; not made ſo by thy humbly walking, but by an act of his own grace, previous to any obedience of thine.—— According to Theron's principles, the prophet ſhould rather have ſaid, Walk humbly (not with thy GOD, but, that he may be thy GOD.

§ This, I think, is the beſt platform for an evangelical catechiſm. The ruin of man, occaſioned by ſin—his recovery, effected by CHRIST—his gratitude, to be expreſſed by way of obedience.—This plan is carried into execution by the Palatinate divines; who have formed upon it, a ſummary of catechetical inſtruction, than which I have met with nothing of the kind, more clear and ſatisfactory; more edifying and animating; more exactly conſonant to the benign ſpirit of the goſpel, or better calculated to make mankind both holy and happy.—This piece the reader may ſee, together with a judicious, and very valuable expoſition of it, in the Latin works of Henricus Altingius, 1 vol. Quarto. Which, I believe, may be bought for a trifle, yet are more precious than gold.

The ſame order is obſerved by St. Peter, in his very conciſe, but very accurate map, of the way to heaven: Elect according to the foreknowledge of GOD the FATHER, through ſanctification of the SPIRIT, unto obedience, and ſprinkling of the blood of CHRIST *. —Firſt, the everlaſting and electing love of the FATHER.—Then, the enlightening and renewing agency of the SPIRIT; who teſtifies of CHRIST, and applies his death to the ſoul, purifying the heart by faith.—From whence, as from a fountain of living water, flows true ſanctification, and every act of filial obedience, every ſpecies of real holineſs. —All which, being partly defective, and partly polluted, muſt be ſprinkled with the blood of JESUS, and made acceptable by his dying oblation.

Ther. Is this the conſtant method, in which the ſacred writers repreſent the goſpel-ſalvation? Do they always obſerve this particular order, in arranging its doctrines and its duties? Or, is it not an inſignificant circumſtance, which goes firſt, provided we take in both?

Aſp. To obſerve this order, I am perſuaded, is no inſignificant circumſtance. It is of great conſequence, both to our eſtabliſhment and to our growth in grace. Is it a matter of indifference to the archer, whether he ſend the point, or the feather of his arrow foremoſt? Can he, in either caſe, hit the mark with equal eaſe, and equal certainty?

I believe, you will find, that the ſacred writers, in all their evangelical diſcourſes, invariably adhere to this order. Nay, it took place even under the legal diſpenſation.—When the LORD GOD publiſhed his law from mount Sinai; when he wrote it, with his own finger, on tables of ſtone; how did he introduce the precepts? how enforce their obſervance?—Let us attend to the preamble; which is the language of love, and the very ſpirit of the goſpel: I am the LORD thy GOD, who brought thee out of the land of Egypt, out of the houſe of bondage †. "I have already delivered thee with a mighty "hand, from the moſt ſordid and inſupportable ſlavery. "I have promiſed thee, for thy poſſeſſion, the delightful country of Canaan; a goodly heritage of the hoſts of "nations ‡. Nay, I myſelf am thy portion; a GOD in "covenant with thee; engaged, by an inviolable contract, and with the exertion of all my attributes, to do "thee good. Therefore keep the ſtatutes, the judgments, "and ordinances, which I am now going to eſtabliſh." —Could there be a more winning inducement, or a more endearing obligation, to obedience?

I might point out the ſame ſtrain, running through the exhortations of Moſes, and the ſongs of David; the ſermons of the prophets, and the writings of the apoſtles. But this I wave, not through an apprehenſion of its difficulty, only from a fear of prolixity.—However, you will not think me tedious, if I produce one more inſtance, from the great maſter of our ſchools. For we ourſelves were ſome time fooliſh, diſobedient, deceived, ſerving divers luſts and pleaſures, living in malice and envy, hateful and hating one another ‖. Here he ſets before us a diſmal, but exact picture, of our depraved and undone condition.——Then he preſents us with a delightful view of our redemption, both in its gracious cauſe, and precious effects. But after that the kindneſs and love of GOD our SAVIOUR toward man appeared; not by works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but according to his mercy, he ſaved us, by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the HOLY GHOST; which he hath ſhed on us abundantly, through JESUS CHRIST our SAVIOUR; that, being juſtified by his grace, we ſhould be made heirs according to the hope of eternal life.——Having thus provided for our happineſs, he then promotes our holineſs. This is a faithful ſaying, and theſe things I will that thou affirm conſtantly, that they who have believed in GOD, might be careful to maintain good works: theſe things are good and profitable unto men.

I make no comment * upon the paſſage; becauſe, I hope, you will commit it, as a noble depoſitum, to your memory. Your own diligent meditation, accompanied with humble prayer, will furniſh out the beſt expoſition. Only I would juſt remark, that the apoſtle, always conſiſtent, always uniform, marſhals his thoughts with his uſual exactneſs. Good works are not diſbanded; nor yet ſuffered to lead the van; but made to bring up the rear †. When he mentions theſe fruits of the SPIRIT, he mentions them, not ſlightly, as matters of ſmall moment; but earneſtly, as affairs of great importance. It is his deſire, and his charge, that all believers ſhould be careful ‡; have their hearts upon the buſineſs; ſhould uſe their beſt contrivance, and exert their utmoſt endeavours,—not barely to practice, but to maintain ‖; to be exemplary, diſtinguiſhed, and pre-eminent in the exerciſe of every virtue.——Becauſe this virtue, and thoſe works, though not the ground of a reconciliation with GOD, are amiable in the eyes of all, and honourable § to the Chriſtian profeſſion. They are alſo a neceſſary ingredient in perſonal happineſs, and the apparent means of ſocial uſefulneſs ¶.

Ther. This view of the evangelical plan is, I muſt confeſs, new to me; and particularly your ordonnance of the epiſtle to the Romans.

Aſp. If this be new, perhaps, what I am going to advance, may be ſtrange.—We have been talking about acceptance with GOD; and debating, whether our own good works are the cauſe of this ineſtimable bleſſing. What will you ſay, if we can perform no good work, till we are intereſted in CHRIST, and accepted by GOD.

Ther. Say!—That this is razing foundations.

Aſp. It is razing the wrong, the foundation falſely

* Perhaps, the reader will give me leave, though Aſpaſio has declined his office, to add a ſhort expoſitory ſtricture, upon the moſt diſtinguiſhed parts of this very important paragraph.—I. We have the cauſe of our redemption; not works of righteouſneſs, which we have done, but the kindneſs, the love, the mercy of GOD our SAVIOUR.—II. The effects: which are,—1. Juſtification; being juſtified, having our ſins forgiven, and CHRIST's righteouſneſs imputed: all this, without any the leaſt deſerving quality in us; ſolely by his grace, and moſt unmerited goodneſs—2. Sanctification; expreſſed by the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the HOLY GHOST: whoſe influences purify the ſoul, as the waſhing of water cleanſes the body; and introduce an improvement into all the faculties of the mind, ſomewhat like that annual renovation and general ſmile of nature, which the return of ſpring diffuſes over the face of the earth.—III. The end and conſummation of all; that we ſhould be made heirs of the heavenly kingdom; and live now in the aſſured hope, hereafter in the full enjoyment, of eternal life.

† The ſame order is obſerved by St John. Rev. xiv. 13. Bleſſed are the dead which die in the LORD; for they reſt from their labours, and their works do follow them. Not go before to open the everlaſting doors, and give them admittance into the manſions of joy. But they follow them, when admitted. As the robe, which on a king's coronation day, flows from his ſhoulders, cannot but accompany him, whereſoever he goes.—It may be pertinent, on the mention of this illuſtration, juſt to hint, that as it is not the robe of ſtate which makes the king; ſo neither is it the external practice of holineſs which makes the Chriſtian. An union with CHRIST, an intereſt in his merits, and the indwelling preſence of his SPIRIT; theſe, and nothing ſhort of theſe, conſtitute the true Chriſtian. Yet, as the royal robe is an attendant on majeſty, and diſtinguiſhes the monarch; ſo practical godlineſs is inſeparable from faith, and adorns the believer.

‡ Φροντιζωσι. This is ſomewhat like that emphatical expreſſion which ſo often occurs in the Old Teſtament, לעשות לשמר Ye ſhall obſerve to do: ye ſhall be very diligent to fulfil; ye ſhall be very exact in performing.

‖ Προισασθαι. The reader may ſee this word more critically explained, pag. 190. in the note.

§ Καλα. ¶ Ωφιλιμα.

* 1 Pet. i. 2. † Exod. xx. 2. ‡ Jer. iii. 19.

‖ Tit. iii. 3. 4. 5. 6. 7. 8.

so called; which will certainly deceive as many as make it their truſt.——And is it not prudent, when we are building for eternity, carefully to examine the ground? Is it not friendly, to divert a man from the treacherous ſand, and lead him to the unſhaken rock?—For this cauſe I ſaid it once, and for this cauſe I ſay it again, That we can perform no good work till we are intereſted in CHRIST, and accepted of GOD.

Ther. Produce your reaſons, Aſpaſio. And ſtrong reaſons they muſt be, which are forcible enough to ſupport ſuch an opinion.

Aſp. The caſe ſeems to ſpeak for itſelf. How can a man that is evil, do works that are good? Would you expect to gather grapes of thorns, or figs of thiſtles?—But let us hear what our unerring TEACHER ſays: As the branch cannot bear fruit of itſelf, except it abide in the vine; no more can ye, except ye abide in me *. Nothing can be more expreſs and full to our purpoſe. But that which follows, is far more awful and alarming to our conſciences. If a man abide not in me, he is caſt forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and caſt them into the fire and they are burned †.——From which it appears, that the human heart is never actuated by good tempers, that the human life can never be productive of good works, until a man is ingrafted into CHRIST. No more than a branch can bear valuable fruit, while it continues in a ſtate of ſeparation from the tree ‡.——It appears alſo, that perſons alienated from CHRIST, are, and all their performances too, like broken, withered, rotten boughs; fit for nothing, but to be committed to the flames, and conſumed from the earth. Both they and their ſervices, far from being meritorious, are in the eſtimate of heaven, worthleſs and deſpicably mean.

Ther. What! Are all the noble deeds, performed by the advocates for morality, and lovers of virtue, worthleſs, in themſelves, and deſpicable before the SUPREME BEING? Worthleſs and deſpicable (grating words!) only becauſe they are not attended with the peculiarities of your faith? Can the want of this little circumſtance change their nature, and turn their gold into droſs?

Aſp. My dear Theron, call not the circumſtance little. It is ſufficient, were your works more precious than gold, to debaſe them into tin, into lead, into droſs.——When the poor ſhepherd brought you, yeſterday morning, a preſent of ſome wood-ſtrawberries; bringing them, as an humble expreſſion of his gratitude, they were kindly received. But if he had offered them, as a price for your houſe, or as the purchaſe of your eſtate; how ſhould you have regarded them in ſuch a connection? No words can expreſs the diſdain you would have conceived.——When Barnabas preſented a ſum of money to the apoſtles, for the ſupply of their neceſſities, and the relief of indigent believers ‖; it was welcome to them, and pleaſing to their GOD. But, when Simon the ſorcerer offered his gold to Peter and John; offering it, not from a principle of faith, but as an equivalent for the HOLY SPIRIT; not in order to teſtify his thankfulneſs, but rather to play the huckſter with heaven; it was rejected with the utmoſt indignation §.

I leave my friend to apply the preceding inſtances.—Only let me beg of him to believe, that if my words are grating, they are extorted by the force of truth.——If I am obliged to blame what he calls good works: it is, as a great critic blames eloquence, "with the tender-"neſs of a lover."——But my cenſure falls only on their faulty origin, and unbecoming aim. Let them ſpring from the grace of CHRIST, as their ſource; let them propoſe the glory of CHRIST, as their end; then, inſtead of putting a ſlight upon them, or giving them a bill of divorce, I would court, careſs, and wed them.—Whereas, if neither this end be kept in the view, nor that principle operate in the heart; I muſt perſiſt, in queſtioning the genuineneſs of their character; nay, in denying the very poſſibility of their exiſtence. There may be a mimickry of holy actions. But it is mimickry only: as empty, as the combs * made by thoſe waſps; and no better than a flame that is painted.

I have an authority for this doctrine, which I think you will not offer to controvert.

Ther. What authority?

Aſp. That of our church; who declares, in her XIIIth article; "Works done before the grace of CHRIST, "and inſpiration of his SPIRIT, are not pleaſing to "GOD; foraſmuch as they ſpring not out of faith in "CHRIST."——Faith in JESUS CHRIST purifies the heart. Till this be done, we have neither diſpoſition nor capacity for holy obedience. Nay, without faith in CHRIST, our perſons are abominable †; our ſtate is damnable; and how can any of our works be acceptable?

Such a one, you ſay, is honeſt in his dealings, temperate in his enjoyments, charitable to the poor. I allow it all. But, unleſs theſe ſeeming virtues are preferred to the glory of the ſupreme JEHOVAH; unleſs they flow from faith in the crucified JESUS; they may be acts of worldly policy, of ſelfiſh prudence, or Phariſaical pride. They are by no means a pleaſing oblation to the LORD almighty ‡.——Nay, inſtead of being acts of duty, and objects of approbation, they ſtand condemned in the ſcripture, and are breaches of the commandment. They ſtand condemned in that ſcripture, which declares, Without faith it is impoſſible to pleaſe GOD ‖. They are breaches of that commandment, which requires, Whether ye eat, or drink, or whatſoever ye do, do all to the glory of GOD §.

Upon the whole; if we will ſubmit to the determination of our eſtabliſhed church, or acquieſce in the deciſion of our divine MASTER; we muſt acknowledge, that there is no ſuch thing as a good work, till we are reconciled to GOD, and our perſons accepted in his ſight.—Therefore to repreſent our own works as the means of reconciliation and acceptance, is both chimerical and abſurd. Chimerical, becauſe it builds upon a phantom, and takes for a reality, what has no exiſtence. Abſurd, becauſe it inverts the natural order of things, and would make the effect antecedent to the cauſe.

* John xv. 4. † John xv. 6.

‡ This diſcovers an error, which is often committed, in our attempts to inſtruct little children. What is more common, than to tell them! "If they will be good, GOD almighty will love and "bleſs them."—Whereas they ſhould rather be informed, "that "they are ſinners; but that GOD almighty has given his SON to "die for ſinners; and, if they pray to him, he will forgive their "ſins, will make them holy, make them happy, and bleſs them "with all ſpiritual bleſſings in CHRIST."

‖ Acts iv. 37. § Acts viii. 20.

* Faciunt et veſpa favos.

† To the defiled and unbelieving is nothing clean. Tit. i. 15. The apoſtle joins defiled and unbelieving, to intimate, that without a true belief nothing is clean. The underſtanding and the conſcience are polluted. Both the man and his doings are impure.

‡ Might not this obſervation be made, with great propriety, in our infirmary and other charitable ſermons? Should not the audience be exhorted to abound in acts of benevolence, from a grateful regard to the infinitely-merciful and condeſcending JESUS? 2 Cor. viii. 9.—Should they not, before all things, be directed to make ſure their intereſt in the REDEEMER's merits? that their perſons may find favour, and their alms acceptance, Eph. i. 6.—Should they not be admoniſhed, that without this believing application to CHRIST, whatever they do, whatever they give, is worthleſs in the eye of their MAKER, and will be fruitleſs to their own ſouls. Heb. xi. 6.—In this reſpect our SAVIOUR was eminently typified by the Jewiſh altar: on which every ſacrifice, by whomſoever brought, was to be offered, and ſeparate from which no ſacrifice, however coſtly, could be accepted, Exod. xx. 24. Levit. xvii 3. 4.

‖ Heb. xi. 6. § 1 Cor. x. 31.

Ther.

Ther. Before we quit this agreeable retreat, let me aſk my Aſpaſio, What he propoſes, by running down all thoſe works, which are the produce of inward religion, and eſſential to true holineſs; whoſe excellency is diſplayed in the cleareſt, and whoſe neceſſity is urged in the ſtrongeſt terms, throughout the whole Bible?

Aſp. I am far from running down works, which are the produce of inward religion; and therefore may be juſtly ſtyled, works of faith and labours of love *.—But I would caution my Theron and myſelf to take care, that our works be accompanied with thoſe circumſtances, which alone can render them truly good. Let them ariſe from faith, and bear witneſs to love; or elſe we ſhall have thiſtles, inſtead of wheat, and cockle inſtead of barley †.

I would alſo perſuade my friend, and I would habituate myſelf, not to repoſe our confidence in any works whatſoever; leſt they prove a bruiſed reed, that breaks under our weight; or a pointed ſpear, that pierces us to the heart.——We ſhall never be like the church, who comes up out of the wilderneſs, leaning upon her Beloved ‡, ſo long as we bolſter up ourſelves with a conceit of perſonal righteouſneſs. This was the error, the fatal error of the Phariſees; this the film which blinded the eyes of their mind, and ſealed them up under the darkneſs of final unbelief.

Beſides, my dear Theron, if you expect to be ſaved by your own duties, you will be loath to ſee the worſt of your condition. To ſee the worſt of your condition, will be a dagger to your hopes, and as death to your ſoul. You will therefore be inclined to daub with untempered mortar *. Inſtead of acknowledging the deep depravity of your nature, and the numberleſs iniquities of your life, you will invent a thouſand excuſes to palliate your guilt; and, by this means, erect a wall of partition between your ſoul and the merits of your REDEEMER; which will be a greater inconvenience, a more deſtructive evil, than to cut off all ſupply of proviſion from an army, or even to intercept the ſun-beams from viſiting the earth.

Ther. Now you talk of armies, I muſt obſerve, that, though I have ſcarce been able to keep my ground, in this argumentative action, I cannot allow you the honour of a victory; as a retreat is very different from a rout.

Aſp. I would alſo remark, that my friend has changed the intended plan of our operations; has almoſt continually acted upon the offenſive. While my part has been only to ſuſtain the ſhock. At our next encounter, you may expect to have the order of battle reverſed. I ſhall direct my forces to begin the charge. Put yourſelf therefore in readineſs for a briſk attack.

Ther. You act the fair enemy, Aſpaſio, I muſt confeſs, in thus giving the alarm, before you make the aſſault.

Aſp. This hoſtility may appear fairer ſtill, when I aſſure you, that my weapons aim not at the deſtruction of your comfort, or the demolition of any valuable intereſt. Only they would be mighty through GOD to pull down the ſtrong-holds of unbelief; and bring every ſelf-exalting, every rebellious thought, captive unto CHRIST †; captive, in a profeſſed ſubmiſſion to his righteouſneſs, as well as a dutiful ſubjection to his commands.——And, when ſuch is the tendency of the campaign, it will be your greateſt advantage, to loſe the victory. It will be better than a triumph, to acknowledge yourſelf vanquiſhed.

* Works of faith, and labours of love, 1 Theſſ. i. 3. How finely are good works characterized in this place! though it be only en paſſant, tranſiently, or by the bye. And how judiciouſly are the true diſtinguiſhed from the counterfeit! Works which are done in faith, works which proceed from love; theſe, and theſe only, the apoſtle ſignifies, are really good.—As ſome noble river, though preſſing forward to the ocean, nouriſhes many a fair plant; and ſuckles many a ſweet flower by the way; ſo the ſacred writers, though principally intent (as here) upon ſome different point, yet drop incidentally ſuch valuable truths, as chear the believer's heart, and make glad the city of our GOD.

† Job xxxi. 40. ‡ Cant. viii. 5.

* Ezek. xiii. 10. † 2 Cor. x. 4, 5.

DIALOGUE VIII.

Ther. OUR laſt converſation ended with a challenge. To decline or delay the acceptance of it, would look like cowardice in me, and be a piece of injuſtice to you, Aſpaſio. Therefore I am now ready to give you all the ſatisfaction, which a gentleman can demand.——Only, as the weather continues hazy, I believe, my ſtudy muſt be the place of action.

Aſp. A challenge! Theron—

Ther. What, Sir! do you boggle? would you eat your words, and play the poltroon?

Aſp. Perhaps, I may have an inclination to follow the example of a brother-hero, who ran away from the field of battle, juſt as his comrades were advancing to charge the enemy; and when called to an account for his behaviour, right worthily alleged, that his retreat proceeded, not from any timidity of mind; no, but from a concern for the public good. "For," quoth he, "if I had been "knocked on the head to-day, how ſhould I have been "able to fight for my country to-morrow?

You ſmile, Theron, at my doughty warrior, and his ſage maxim.——But, ſince you have glanced at a certain modiſh cuſtom, give me leave very ſeriouſly to aſſure you, that, if the affair was to be determined by ſword and piſtol, I ſhould reckon ſuch a conduct, a reſolute refuſal at leaſt, not at all unmanly, but the truly wiſe and gallant behaviour.——For ſurely it can never be an inſtance of wiſdom, to hazard my life, at the mere caprice of a turbulent ruffian, who is a ſtranger to all the principles of humanity and generoſity, but a ſlave, an abandoned ſlave, to his own ungovernable paſſions. Surely it can never be an act of real bravery, to expoſe my perſon; becauſe ſome fool-hardy practitioner in the fencing-ſchool, is deſperate enough to riſk his.——The gentleman, the true gentleman, ſhould exert a becoming dignity of ſpirit; and ſcorn to ſet his welfare on a level, with that of an inconſiderate and barbarous bully *.

Ther. But honour, my Aſpaſio, honour is at ſtake.—Better to loſe our life, than forfeit our reputation. Better to be in a grave than to be the jeſt of every coffee-houſe; and perhaps pointed at, as we paſs the ſtreets, for mean-ſpirited, ſneaking, or, as the gentlemen of the ſword ſo elegantly ſpeak, white-livered animals.

Aſp. Forfeit our reputation! Amongſt whom, I beſeech you?—A few raſh and precipitate creatures; the pupils of La Mancha's knight; the ſons of Chimera † and cruelty: whoſe applauſe is infamy; and their de-

* Aſpaſio calls the perſon who gives the challenge, a bully. And ſuch, notwithſtanding all the maxims of fantaſtical and falſe honour, he will certainly be found, when tried at the bar of reaſon or juſtice. For, if the moſt impetuous, irrational, and brutal barbarity is allowed to conſtitute a bully, he has an indiſputable title to the character, who, on account of a mere punctilio, or ſome ſlight affront, would deſtroy a life, that might be of ſervice to ſociety,—might be a bleſſing to various relatives,—and is intimately connected with a bliſsful or miſerable immortality.

† This kind of gentry are ſtyled—in a BOOK, with which they have little or no acquaintance; but whoſe maxims will be had in reverence, when their names are loſt in oblivion—בני שאון the ſons of bluſter, or the children of noiſe, Jer. xlviii. 45.

traction

traction the higheſt praiſe they can beſtow. From every judicious and worthy perſon, your conduct will be ſure to gain approbation, and your character eſteem. When Ceſar received a challenge from Anthony, to engage him in ſingle combat, he very calmly anſwered the bearer of the meſſage; If Anthony is weary of life, tell him, there are other ways to death, beſides the point of my ſword.—Who ever deemed this an inſtance of cowardice! All ages have admired it, as the act of a diſcreet and gallant man; who was ſenſible of his own importance, and knew how to treat the petulant and revengeful humour of a diſcontented adverſary with its deſerved contempt.

Barely to loſe our life, is the ſmalleſt of thoſe evils which attend this miſchievous practice.—It is pregnant with a long, an almoſt endleſs train of diſaſtrous conſequences to parents, wives, children, friends, aſſociates, and the community.——It is an infallible expedient, to be deprived of the favour of the infinite GOD, and to be excluded from the joys of his eternal kingdom.——It is the ſure way, to become an object of abhorrence to the angels of light; and be made the laughing-ſtock of devils, in their dungeons of darkneſs *. Shame, everlaſting ſhame, ſhall be the reward of ſuch gallantry, the promotion of ſuch fools †.

Ther. With regard to this point, I am entirely of your opinion, Aſpaſio, however I may differ in other particulars.

Aſp. Say you ſo, Theron! Would you then tamely ſubmit to affronts, inſults, and injuries?

Ther. As to the trifling affronts of a peeviſh incontinent tongue, I would treat them with a ſuperior ſcorn. And when thus treated, they are ſure to recoil, with the keeneſt edge, and ſevereſt weight, upon the impotent malice which offers them. The wretch ſhould ſee, that I could pity his miſery, and ſmile at his folly.—But as to injuries, the caſe is otherwiſe. Should any one aſſault my perſon, 'tis at his peril. He would find, and perhaps to his ſmart,

Et nos tela manu, ferrumque haud debile dextra
Spargimus, et noſtro ſequitur de vulnere ſanguis ‡.

Here, the fundamental and everlaſting law of ſelf-preſervation calls upon us to play the man. And I am ſure, Chriſtianity does not require us, to yield our throats to the knife, or open our breaſts to the dagger.

But to retire,—to deliberate,—to ſit down,—and indite a formal challenge,—ſeems to me altogether as ſavage and iniquitous, as to aſſault on the highway.——He that demands my money on the road, or extorts it by an incendiary letter, or decoys me into the ſnare by a forged and counterfeit note, is ſtigmatized for a villain; is abhorred by every perſon of integrity; and, when detected, is rewarded with a halter. Why ſhould we reckon the headſtrong bravo leſs injurious? who makes his attempt upon my life; and thirſts, with inſatiable fury, for my blood?

Aſp. He allows you a fair chance, it is ſaid.

Ther. A chance! Of what?—Either of falling a ſacrifice to his rage, or of embruing my hands in his blood. Which is neither more nor leſs, than reducing me to a neceſſity of launching into damnation myſelf, or of tranſmitting a fellow-creature to eternal vengeance.—And is this an extenuation? this a mitigating circumſtance? It really proves the practice ſo inexcuſeably wicked, that nothing can be pleaded in its defence. The very argument, uſed to juſtify the horrid deed, inflames its guilt, and aggravates its malignity.

'Tis pity, but the legiſlative authority would interpoſe, for the ſuppreſſion of ſuch a flagrant wrong to ſociety, and ſuch a notorious violation of our benign religion. Why ſhould not the laws declare it felony, to make the firſt overture for a duel? Since it is always more heinous, and frequently more pernicious; is always murder in the intention, and frequently iſſues in double deſtruction; the one inflicted by the ſtab of violence, the other executed by the ſword of juſtice.

Might it not, at leaſt, be branded with ſome mark of public infamy, or ſubjected to a ſevere pecuniary mulct? ſo that a gentleman of ſpirit and temper might have it in his power, to return the compliment of a challenging letter with ſome ſuch anſwer;

SIR,

"However meanly you may think of your life, I ſet "too high a value upon mine to expoſe it as a mark for "undiſciplined and outrageous paſſions.---Neither have I ſo "totally renounced all that is humane, benevolent, or "amiable, as to draw my ſword for your deſtruction, "becauſe you have firſt been overcome by precipitate and "unreaſonable reſentment.---You have given me an op-"portunity of acting the gentleman and the Chriſtian. "And this challenge I accept, as a note under your "hand for five hundred pounds *; which will very ſoon "be demanded, according to law, by,

SIR,

Yours, &c."

Aſp. But to reſume the proper ſubject—the nature of our engagement: which I now recollect, and which was explained, when I ventured to give, what you call the challenge.---As it is not my Theron, but the obſtacles of his faith, and the enemies of his felicity, that I am to encounter, perhaps I ſhall have courage to ſtand my ground. And, inſtead of violating all the obligations of equity, honour and conſcience, I ſhall certainly evidence my love to my friend; may poſſibly promote his trueſt good.

Ther. I don't ſee, how this can be effected by your late attempt. You undertook to run down all works of righteouſneſs, as abſolutely unable to find acceptance with GOD, and equally inſufficient to recommend us to his favour. It is for the credit of theſe, which Aſpaſio has depretiated, that I enter the-liſts.

Aſp. Pray, what is the ſtandard, to which theſe works of righteouſneſs muſt be conformed, and by which their ſufficiency may be determined?

Ther. The moral law, doubtleſs: I know no other ſtandard of righteouſneſs, nor any other way of becoming righteous.

Aſp. You will, I hope, ere long be acquainted with another way.——At preſent, I agree to your propoſal. We will join iſſue on this footing; and try the merits of our cauſe, before this tribunal. Yourſelf ſhall be

* "Let me tell you with confidence," (ſays an excellent perſon, addreſſing himſelf to one of theſe unhappy deſperadoes), "that all "duels, or ſingle combats, are murderous; blanch them over "(how you liſt) with names of honour, and honeſt pretences, "their uſe is ſinful, and their nature deviliſh." See the ſelect works of Biſhop Hall, in one volume fol. pag. 526. Where the reader will find a happy mixture of true oratory, and ſound divinity; a rich vein of fancy, and a ſweet ſpirit of piety; contemplations upon the hiſtories of ſcripture (which, I think, are our prelate's maſterpiece) almoſt as entertaining and inſtructive, as the ſubjects illuſtrated are important and wonderful.—Notwithſtanding a few ſtiff or antique phraſes, I cannot but eſteem the works of this author, among the moſt valuable compoſitions extant in our language.

† Prov. iii. 35.

‡ VIRG.

* Might not the refuſer of a challenge be dignified with ſome honorary diſtinction, reſembling the civic crown amongſt the ancient Romans? Since, by his cool and temperate bravery, he ſaves one life from the ſword, another from the halter.——Was ſome honorary diſtinction, on the one hand, united to a pecuniary forfeiture on the other, I cannot but think, they would prove an effectual method to check the progreſs of this deſtructive evil. It would break the teeth of malice with her own weapons, and turn the artillery of revenge upon herſelf. Thoſe deteſtable paſſions would be loath to indulge themſelves in this horrid manner, if it was made the ſure way to ennoble and enrich the object of their rage.——N. B. The civic crown was an ornament aſſigned to thoſe ſoldiers, who had in battle reſcued a fellow-citizen from impending death.

the judge. I will only ask your opinion, and refer myself to your decision.——You see, I am soon weary of the military style. I had obtruded myself on a part which I was not qualified to act; and now resume a more becoming character.

Ther. If you place me on the bench, I shall allow of no such digressions; but shall keep you close to the subject.

Asp. Has your Lordship then considered the nature of the divine law, and the extent of its obligations?

Ther. It obliges all persons, and comprises the whole duty of man. It forbids all immorality, and injoins every virtue.—Are not these your sentiments?

Asp. They are, when somewhat enlarged.—The empire of the law, as prohibitory of evil, extends both to the outward and inward man. It takes cognizance of the actions. It judges every word. All the operations, and all the dispositions of the soul, come under its sacred jurisdiction.—It is indeed a discerner, not only of the working thoughts, but also of the dawning intentions; and arraigns them both at its awful bar. It pierces even to the dividing asunder of the soul and spirit *. Not the inmost recesses of the breast are too deep for its penetration; nor all the artifices of the deceitful heart too subtile for its detection.——Other laws forbid the unclean act; this condemns the wanton eye, and irregular desire. Other laws punish the injurious deed; this passes sentence on the unguarded sallies of passion, and the most secret emotions of resentment. So eminently true is that remark of the psalmist, Thy commandments are exceeding broad †!—Tell me now, Theron, has your obedience been commensurate to this extensive platform of duty?

Ther. If the law be so very extensive—

Asp. Nay, my friend, you cannot suspect, that I have stretched, to an undue extent, the obligations of the divine law. Since this interpretation is established by an authority too great to be controverted; too clear to be misunderstood; even by the authority of CHRIST himself: whose sermon upon the mount is a professed exposition of the commandments, and maintains, in the most explicit manner, all that I have advanced.——So that, if our LORD's exposition is just, I think, it will be neither rash, nor uncharitable to say, There is not a man upon earth, but has broke them all.

Ther. Are we all idolators then? all adulterers? all murderers? Shocking to imagine!

Asp. It is shocking, I confess.—But how much more so, if such delinquents expect justification by their own deeds?

Ther. This is no proof of your assertion, my good friend.

Asp. To be fond of gold; to be enamoured with the world; to love any creature more than the ever-blessed CREATOR; are instances of idolatry ‡, not quite so gross, but altogether as real, as to set up idols in your temples, or pay acts of adoration to senseless images. Have you always been free from this apostasy of the affections?

Our infallible TEACHER has informed us, that unreasonable anger, contemptuous language, and malevolent wishes ‖, are each a species of murder, and not many removes from the assassin's deadly stab. Have you been always meek, always benevolent, and never chargeable with this mental homicide?

We are farther assured, that the indulgence of inordinate desire is, in the impartial estimate of heaven, as the commission of the impure deed §. And evil concupiscence of every kind violates that sacred precept, Thou shalt not covet ¶. Has your will been invariably upright, and warped with no irregular inclination? Are you wholly unpolluted with this adultery of the heart?

I wait not for a reply. I have often heard you plead guilty to all,—yes, to all and every of these charges respectively.

Ther. Where, and when, Aspasio?

Asp. In the most sacred place, and on the most solemn occasion. And not you only, but a whole multitude of self-condemned criminals.—Our church, you know, has ingrafted the decalogue into her public service; and taught all her members to answer, after the repetition of each commandment; LORD, have mercy upon us, and incline our hearts to keep this law. Is there any sense in these words? or have we any meaning, when we utter them? If we have, surely they must imply an acknowledgment of disobedience in every particular.—The criminal arraigned at the bar, never falls on his knees and craves forgiveness, till he either confesses or is convicted. This then must be the purport of our response. "We "are verily guilty concerning this thing. And we "humbly implore, both pardoning mercy for the past, "and strengthening grace for the future."

Give me leave to urge my question a little farther.—Is there a single day, in which you have not transgressed, some way or other, this sacred rule?

Ther. If the law of GOD will dispense with no deviation, not even in the first starts of thought, or the least wanderings of desire—But surely to affirm this, is to extend the law beyond all reasonable bounds. The motions of evil desire, if indulged, are undoubtedly criminal. But are they also, when restrained, breaches of duty? I should rather imagine, that such temptations are thrown in our way, for the trial of our obedience: which, had they no power over our affections, would not be trials; and when they are resolutely withstood, cannot be faults.

Asp. What was the judgment of our reformers? and what is the voice of our church? We may find both in the ninth article. "Although there is no con-"demnation for them that believe and are baptized, "yet the apostle doth confess, that concupiscence and "lust hath of itself the nature of sin." It is not said, concupiscence hath then only the nature of sin, when it is ripened into action; but of itself, and before it breaks out into the commission of iniquity. Of itself

* Heb. iv. 12. † Psal. cxix. 96.

‡ Col. iii. 5. Phil. iii. 19. ‖ Matth. v. 22. § Matth. v. 28.

¶ Rom. vii. 7. Aspasio's observation brings to my remembrance a remarkable incident; which, as it is quite pertinent to our purpose, the reader will allow me to relate. It passed between a friend of mine, and a certain ingenious stranger, into whose company he happened to fall.—The gentleman was extolling, at an extravagant rate, the virtue of honesty: what a dignity it imparted to our nature! how it recommended us to the Supreme BEING! he confirmed all by a celebrated line from Mr Pope,

An honest man's the noblest work of GOD.

Sir, replied my friend, however excellent the virtue of honesty may be, I fear, there are very few men in the world, that really possess it.—You surprise me! said the stranger.—Ignorant as I am of your character, Sir, I fancy, it would be no difficult matter, to prove even you a dishonest man.—I defy you.—Will you give me leave, then, to ask you a question or two; and promise not to be offended?—Ask your questions, and welcome.—Have you never met with an opportunity of getting gain by some unfair means?—The gentleman paused.—I don't ask, whether you made use of, but whether you have met with, such opportunity? I, for my part, have, and, I believe, every body else has.—Very probably I may.—How did you feel your mind affected, on such an occasion? Had you no secret desire, not the least inclination, to seize the advantage which offered? Tell me, without any evasion, and consistently with the character you admire?—I must acknowledge, I have not always been absolutely free from every irregular inclination, but—Hold, Sir; none of your salvos. You have confessed enough. If you had the desire, though you never proceeded to the action, this shews you was dishonest in heart. This is what the scripture calls concupiscence. It defiles the soul. It is a breach of that law, which requireth truth in the inner parts; and unless you are pardoned through the blood of CHRIST, will be a just ground of your condemnation, when GOD shall judge the secrets of men.

it is contrary to the pure nature, and therefore cannot but be condemned by the perfect law of GOD.

Ther. This I can truly plead in my own behalf, that it has not been cuſtomary with me to offend; at leaſt, not preſumptuouſly, or of deliberate wickedneſs.

Aſp. My dear Theron, do not offer to palliate your guilt. Such an opiate may ſtupefy, but will not cure; or rather, like opiates ill prepared, it will intoxicate the mind, and counteract the operation of every healing medicine.——Beſides, it is not only pernicious, but falſe and unreaſonable. You know the uſe of that ſolar microſcope, and are able to inform me of its effects.

Ther. I ought to be pretty well acquainted with theſe experiments; ſince it has long been my favourite diverſion, to employ a few ſpare hours in ſuch agreeable ſpeculations.

Aſp. You have ſeen the body of an inſect, accommodated to the ſurpriſing inſtrument. When, in this ſituation, the animal was pricked by a very fine needle; your eye, your naked eye, juſt perceived the puncture; and diſcovered, perhaps, a ſpeck of moiſture oozing from the orifice. But in what manner were they repreſented by the magnifying inſtrument?

Ther. The puncture was widened into a frightful gaſh. The ſpeck of moiſture ſwelled into a copious ſtream; and flowed, like a torrent, from the gaping wound. An ox, under the ſacrificing knife, ſcarce looks more bulky, or bleeds more largely.

Aſp. Don't you apprehend my deſign?—If we, ſhort-ſighted mortals, and almoſt blinded with ſelf-love; if we cannot but be ſenſible of our faults; how flagrant muſt they appear, in what enormous magnitudes, and with what aggravating circumſtances, to an eye perfectly pure, and infinitely penetrating?

Inſtead of attempting to extenuate our offences, let us make ſome ſuch improving reflections.—— "If this "holy law, which prohibits the minuteſt failure, from "the indictment; if this all-diſcerning GOD, who ſifts "our conduct even to the ſmalleſt defect, be the judge; "if our perſonal goodneſs, which abounds with imper-"fections, be our plea; what can we expect at that de-"ciſive hour, when the LORD ſhall lay judgment to the "line, and righteouſneſs to the plummet *?—Surely, this "conſideration ſhould incline us to adopt the wiſe and "ardent wiſh of the apoſtle; That we may now, in this "our day, win CHRIST, and, at the laſt tremendous au-"dit, be found in him; not having our own righteouſneſs "which is of the law, for the foundation of our hopes, "but the righteouſneſs which is of GOD by faith in JESUS "CHRIST †."

Conſider the law in its nobler capacity, as injoining whatever is excellent.——Can you hope, Theron, to be juſtified by it, if you fall ſhort of its demands, not barely in a few inſtances, but in every action of your life, and every temper of your heart?

Ther. Such a hope, cheriſhed amidſt ſuch circumſtances, would be fallacious and abſurd.——But I truſt, I am not ſo very faulty, or rather ſo entirely abandoned, as your interrogatory ſuppoſes.

Aſp. Have you duly weighed the perfection and ſpirituality of the divine law?—It is a tranſcript of the unſpotted purity, and abſolute rectitude of the divine nature. It acquires an unreſerved obedience to all GOD's commands, and a moſt unfeigned ſubmiſſion to all his diſpenſations; without regretting the former, as a grievous yoke; or repining at the latter, as rigorous treatment.——It calls not only for external duty, but alſo for the moſt upright imaginations, and devout affections.—Nay, it inſiſts upon the exerciſe of every virtue, and that in the higheſt degree: love to GOD, without the leaſt lukewarmneſs; and love to all our neighbours without any unkindneſs; a ſanctity of deſire, that knows no ſtain; and an humility of mind, that is free from all elatement.—In a word, it requires us to be perfect even as our FATHER which is in heaven is perfect *.

Do any of your actions come up to this exalted ſtandard? Are any of your graces thus refined?

Ther. Am I then abſolutely an inſolvent before the great LORD of the univerſe? Have I no lamb in my fold without a blemiſh? nothing in my life, nothing in my heart, but what is defective and defiled?

Aſp. Indeed, my friend, this is not your condition alone, but the condition of the moſt irreproachable perſon on earth. There is none perfect, in any character, or in any work, no not one. None that obeys the divine law, uniformly, invariably, and completely.

Caſt your eye upon the names which are ſubjoined to thoſe beautiful prints. How elegant is the engraving! How accurate are the letters! The ſtrokes moſt delicately fine! Their ſhape moſt exactly true!—Let me aſk you to tranſcribe them with your pen; and make the copy equal to the original. Preſerve all the noble boldneſs of the Roman ſtamp, and all the graceful ſoftneſs of the Italian touch.——What? could you not execute this taſk, even in your preſent unimpaired health, and with the exertion of all your ſkill? How ſhamefully then muſt you fall ſhort, if your eyes were dim with age; if your hands ſhook with a paralytic diſorder; and your underſtanding was oppreſſed with a lethargic dulneſs?—Such is really the caſe with regard to all the children of men. Our nature is depraved; our moral abilities are enervated; and our intellectual faculties clouded. And can we, in ſuch a ſtate of impotence, tranſcribe that ſacred ſyſtem, which is the very image of GOD,—tranſcribe it into our tempers, and render it legible in our lives, without diminiſhing one jot or tittle of its perfect purity?

Ther. Though I fall ſhort, there are Chriſtians of a much higher claſs: Chriſtians, I don't doubt, who have theſe laws written on their hearts; all whoſe tempers are caſt into this heavenly mould. Nor am I myſelf without hopes of making more conſiderable advances in holineſs.

Aſp. May your hopes be quickened into vigorous endeavours! and your endeavours be crowned with abundant ſucceſs! What you ſuppoſe concerning very eminent Chriſtians, I cannot wholly admit, neither do I wholly deny. They may have all their tempers caſt into the heavenly mould: but then they are conformed to the ſacred pattern, only in part. There is a reſemblance; yet not ſuch as that clear and ſteady mirror (pointing to a fine glaſs over the chimney-piece) exhibits; but ſuch as ſome turbulent and muddy ſtream reflects.—If the breaſts of theſe eminent Chriſtians were formed on the model of Druſus's † houſe, I verily think, you would have a lower opinion of their acquiſitions in virtue.

David, whom GOD himſelf dignifies with the moſt exalted of all characters, and ſtyles a man after his own heart;

* Iſ. xxviii. 17.

† Phil. iii. 8, 9.

* Matth. v. 48. Our LORD, having explained ſeveral commandments of the law, ſums up the whole, and gives us the ſpirit of them all, in this moſt refined precept; Be ye perfect, even, &c. If the reader pleaſes to take this paſſage into conſideration, he will have a more ſatisfactory anſwer to Theron's objection, concerning the firſt motions of evil deſire; more ſatisfactory, I mean, than was ſuggeſted in the preceding pages. There the reply turned upon human teſtimony; here it reſts upon divine authority.

I hope, the candid reader will, on other occaſions, remember this obſervation. And if, at any time, the ſtrongeſt reaſons are not aſſigned, let him ſuppoſe it probable, that they are omitted in one place, only to be introduced and urged, perhaps with greater advantage, in another.

† When Druſus, a noble Roman, was deliberating upon a model for his new houſe, the architect offered to build it in ſuch taſte, that no eye ſhould overlook any of his rooms.—"You quite "miſtake my inclination," ſaid Druſus. "I am for the very re-"verſe of your plan. I would have my houſe ſo contrived, that "every paſſenger may ſee whatever is tranſacted within."

heart *; who, to a moſt inflamed love, added a moſt accurate knowledge, of the divine teſtimonies; was deeply ſenſible of the truth I would inculcate. After an attentive contemplation of the ſublimity, the extent, the ſanctity of thoſe heavenly inſtitutes, he breaks out into this humbling exclamation; Who can tell how oft he offendeth †? "Was the moſt vigilant conduct, or the moſt "purified ſoul, examined by this conſummate rule; in"numerable would be found the ſlips of the former, and "glaring would the failures of the latter appear."

Ther. I cannot ſee the reaſon for degrading human nature to ſuch an extravagant degree, and ranking human works among the refuſe of things.

Aſp. Do you aſk the reaſon of this remonſtrance?—It is to preſerve us from the miſchievous error of the Phariſee; who, meaſuring himſelf, not by the true, ſublime, and extenſive ſenſe of the law, but by a falſe, debaſed, and mutilated interpretation, became haughty in his own conceit, and abominable in the ſight of GOD.——Hear him trumpeting his own praiſe; I am no extortioner, no adulterer ‡. This, the poor vain creature fancied, was a ſufficient obedience paid to the ſecond table. See him ſtill ſtrutting in his own imaginary plumes ‖; I faſt twice in the week; I give tythes of all that I poſſeſs §. This, he fooliſhly dreamed, was a due compliance with the demands of the firſt table.——The young ruler ſeems to have been under the ſame deluſion, when he had the aſſurance to declare, All theſe things, which are preſcribed by the divine law, have I kept from my youth up ¶.

A more peſtilent opinion, it is ſcarce poſſible for the mind of man to entertain. And nothing can appear more egregiouſly miſtaken, if we conſider the vaſt comprehenſive ſcope of the ſacred precepts; and are convinced, that they require a moſt exact conformity, in every particular, and every punctilio.

Ther. Is there nothing valuable, then, in regularity of conduct, and integrity of heart? nothing valuable in our acts of charity, and habits of virtue? nothing whatſoever that may recommend us to our Maker?

Aſp. From our fellow-creatures they ſtand entitled to reſpect, imitation, and gratitude. But before infinite perfection, they muſt drop their claim, and lie proſtrate in the duſt; imploring forgiveneſs, not challenging a reward. We all diſcern a beauty and a twinkling luſtre in the ſtars, when viewed under the ſhades of night. But, when the magnificent ſource of day ariſes, their beauty vaniſhes, their luſtre is darkneſs. Such are human accompliſhments, when compared with the perfect law, or beheld by the piercing eye, of the ſupremely-glorious GOD.

Ther. Methinks, this notion confounds the difference of good and evil; and, by rendering our actions blameable, would render them all alike. This is levelling with a witneſs!

Aſp. It only ſhews, that there are blemiſhes in all.—Whereas ſome are flaw and blemiſh all over. Is there no difference between the leopard's ſpots, and the raven's foot? If I maintain, that neither of thoſe animals are perfectly white, does this imply, that both are equally black?

All we perform, however ſpecious it may ſeem, is very far ſhort of our elevated rule; therefore cannot procure the divine favour, or entitle us to the kingdom of heaven.—— Nay, if GOD ſhould enter into judgment with us, on the foot of our own performances; he would diſcover ſuch defects, even in the choiceſt inſtances of our obedience, as muſt render them matter of condemnation, not meritorious of applauſe.

Be pleaſed to obſerve this penknife—What can be more exquiſitely keen than the edge, or more nicely poliſhed than the blade? but how do they appear, when beheld through one of thoſe microſcopes?

Ther. The edge leſs ſharp than the woodman's axe, or rather more blunt than his iron wedge. The poliſh reſembles a maſs of coarſe metal, rudely hammered on the anvil.

Aſp. How very delicate is the cambric, which forms your ruffles; and gives ſuch an ornamental air to your whole dreſs! Nothing can be finer than the threads, or more exact than the texture. But what is their appearance in a microſcopic view?

Ther. You would take the fine threads for hempen cords; and would almoſt be poſitive, that they had been wattled together by the clumſy hands of the hurdle-maker, rather than curiouſly wove in the artiſt's loom.

Aſp. That lovely piece of enamel, which makes a part of your lady's penſile equipage, quite charms the ſpectator, with the juſtneſs of its figure, and the radiancy of its colours. But—

Ther. Under the ſcrutiny of this ſearching inſtrument, it loſes all its elegance; and inſtead of winning our admiration, provokes our contempt. It looks like a heap of mortar, plaiſtered on by the maſon's trowel.

Aſp. You ſee then, Theron, what groſs indelicacies, what bungling inequalities, this ſupplementary aid to our ſight diſcovers, even in the moſt finiſhed works of human art. So, and abundantly more, does the immaculate purity of GOD diſcern imperfections in our moſt upright deeds, and moſt guarded hours.

I ſaid immaculate; and I ought to have ſaid more.—— For GOD is not only unerringly wiſe to detect, but infinitely pure to abhor, all contamination. Angels, and the ſpirits of juſt men made perfect, are endowed with immaculate, but the LORD is poſſeſſed of infinite purity. ——Have you conſidered this attribute of the GODHEAD, Theron?

Ther. I have; and not without amazement at the charming, the awful deſcriptions of it, which occur in the ſacred writings.——GOD is not only holy, but, as the lawgiver of the Jews very ſublimely expreſſes himſelf, glorious in holineſs †. The ſacred penmen, treating of this illuſtrious perfection, ſeem to labour the important point. They indulge the loftieſt flights of imagination; they employ the boldeſt figures of ſpeech; and add the moſt glowing colours of eloquence; not without frequent acknowledgments, that all the force of language is abundantly too feeble for the unutterable ſubject.

* For the propriety of this character, and its correſpondence with the perſon, let me refer the reader to a Note in Dialogue I. p. 42.

† Pſal. xix. 12. ‡ Luke xviii. 11.

‖ This ſeems to give the genuine ſignification of το υψηλον εν ανθρωποις, Luke xvii 15. Not that which is highly eſteemed, τιμιον, ενδοξον. The propoſition, taken in this ſenſe, is neither neceſſarily nor univerſally true. The meekneſs of Moſes, the fortitude of Joſhua, the wiſdom of Solomon, were highly eſteemed among thoſe very men, to whom our LORD addreſſed his diſcourſe. Yet none can ſuppoſe, that the endowments of thoſe illuſtrious perſonages were an abomination in the ſight of GOD.

Whereas, whatever is high and lifted up, haughty and conceited; every ſentiment of ſelf-admiration, and all the fruits which ſpring from that bitter root; theſe are certainly and invariably objects of the divine abhorrence.—This interpretation, I think, is moſt ſuitable, not only to fact in general, but to the import of this word in particular. See Rom. xi. 20. where it occurs in a ſimilar acceptation, μη υψηλοφρονει. Be not high-minded.—It ſeems alſo beſt to quadrate with the tenor of our SAVIOUR's reproof; Ye are they that juſtify yourſelves before men; but all ſuch arrogant attempts, and every ſuch elated air, the moſt holy GOD beholds with deteſtation.

§ Luke xviii. 12. ¶ Matth. xix. 20.

* To this aſſertion St Cyril, in concert with ſeveral other fathers, bears a very expreſs teſtimony; Αυτο ημων το ορθως πραττεσθαι δοκουν, μομφης και αιτιας αμοιρησειν αν ει τις αυτα περιεργαζομενος τα και βασανιζοιτο θεος. Even thoſe of our actions, which ſeem to be performed in a right manner, could not eſcape cenſure and blame, if GOD ſhould examine, and bring them to the teſt.

† Exod. xv. 11.

One

One of the prophets, addreſſing the KING eternal, immortal, inviſible, breaks out into this ecſtatic exclamation; O LORD, my GOD, my HOLY ONE, thou art of purer eyes, than (to allow, ſhall I ſay? This is an aſcription of praiſe, unſpeakably too mean for thy ſurpaſſing excellency. Thou art of purer eyes, than) to look upon evil, and canſt not behold iniquity *.——Another, wrapt into a prophetic viſion, ſees the ſeraphim veiling their faces, in token of profound humiliation; hears thoſe ſons of ardour and love, crying in loud reſponſive ſtrains, Holy, holy, holy is the LORD GOD of ſabaoth †.—Nay, ſo tranſcendently holy, ſays another devout worſhipper, that all created glory is totally eclipſed in his preſence: He looketh to the moon, and it ſhineth not; yea, the ſtars are not pure in his ſight ‡. And his very angels, thoſe refined and exalted intelligencies, he chargeth with folly ‖.

Aſp. Very majeſtic deſcriptions!—And pray let us obſerve the impreſſions which ſuch beamings of the divine effulgence made upon the ſaints of old.——Moſes, drawing near the cloudy pavilion, the preſence-chamber of the HOLY ONE of Iſrael, ſays, with emotions of uncommon dread, I exceedingly fear and quake §!—— When Job is favoured with ſome peculiar manifeſtations of the omnipotent GOD, ſee his poſture! hear his words! I abhor myſelf, and repent in duſt and aſhes *. How ſtrong is the language! how deep the abaſement!—— When Iſaiah ſaw the incomprehenſible JEHOVAH ſitting upon his throne, and the princes of heaven adoring at his footſtool, ſeized with a pang of reverential fear, he cried out, Woe is me! I am undone! for I am a man of unclean lips †!—When Ezekiel beheld an emblematical repreſentation of HIM, who dwelleth in light inacceſſible; when the ANCIENT of days, veiled under a human ſhape, appeared to Daniel; though one was a devout prieſt, and each was an eminent prophet; yet, overwhelmed with a mixture of veneration and terrror, they both fell down at his feet as dead ‡: and this, not before a full diſplay, but only before a glimpſe of the GODHEAD; which, though partial and tranſient, was too dazzlingly bright, for an eye of fleſh to bear.

O my friend! my Theron! what figure muſt our mean performances, our low attainments, make before this immenſely-glorious GOD?—Let us examine the behaviour and ſpirit of Job, a little more particularly. He is one of your favourite examples; and indeed very deſervedly; for in piety he had no ſuperior, and no equal; there was none like him in the earth: yet, when he has to do with the MAKER of all things, and the JUDGE of all men, he pours out his abaſhed ſoul in theſe very remarkable profeſſions: If I juſtify myſelf, my own mouth ſhould condemn me: If I ſay, I am perfect, it ſhall alſo prove me perverſe ‖.—He declares yet farther, If I waſh myſelf in ſnow-water, and make my hands never ſo clean, yet ſhalt thou, O righteous and eternal GOD, plunge me in the ditch; manifeſt me, notwithſtanding all this care and circumſpection, to be a guilty and a filthy creature; yea, ſo very guilty and filthy, that my own cloaths, were they ſenſible of the pollution, could not but abhor me.

This he confeſſes, not becauſe he was an habitual ſinner, or chargeable with any ſcandalous immorality; but becauſe his mind was filled with the moſt affecting ſenſe of GOD's inconceivable holineſs, and infinite glory. For, adds the venerable SUFFERER, he is not a man as I am; but a BEING of ſuch extenſive knowledge, that nothing can eſcape his diſcernment; of ſuch exalted purity, that every ſpot of defilement is loathſome in his ſight. For which reaſon, it is abſolutely impoſſible, that I ſhould anſwer him, with reference to my own perſonal righteouſneſs; or that we ſhould come together in judgment, on any ſuch footing, without confuſion to myſelf, and ruin to my cauſe.

To all this, he ſubjoins, what is ſtill more memorable and exemplary: Though I were perfect, yet would I not know my ſoul, I would deſpiſe my life.—He ſuppoſes himſelf in a higher ſtate than your moſt advanced Chriſtian; though I were perfect. Yet even in ſuch a ſtate, were it attainable and attained, I would not know my ſoul; not dwell upon, not plead, no, nor ſo much as cheriſh a thought of, my own accompliſhments and acquirements. In the important buſineſs of juſtification, they ſhould ſtand for cyphers; they ſhould be thrown into ſhades; they ſhould entirely diſappear.—Nay more, I would deſpiſe my life; my life, with all its moſt ſhining actions and moſt diſtinguiſhed virtues, ſhould be reckoned inſignificant and deſpicable: juſt as inſignificant and deſpicable, with reſpect to this great tranſaction, as a wandering ſpark would be, if appointed to diffuſe day amidſt the darkneſs of night, or produce ſpring amidſt the depths of winter.

Ther. Theſe are alarming hints, Aſpaſio, I muſt confeſs.—A law, which requires an exact and univerſal obedience, both in heart and life!——A GOD of ſuch majeſty, purity, and glory, that men of the moſt approved integrity are overwhelmed with confuſion, in his preſence!——I ſhall conſider them, at my leiſure, with the attention they deſerve.——At preſent, I believe, opportunity is giving us the ſlip. Yonder coach

* Hab. i. 13.

† If. vi. 3. The poets, and writers of a bold imagination, are particularly fond of machinery; of introducing celeſtial beings, in order to give ſome peculiar dignity to their plan, or ſome additional ſtrength to their ſentiments. With inimitable propriety, and ſurpriſing emphaſis, is this ſpecies of fine writing uſed in ſcripture; eſpecially in the paſſage quoted above.

Let us only conſider—The perſonages. Theſe are the ſeraphim, pure and active ſpirits. Likened, by the pſalmiſt, to flames of fire; ſtyled, by the apoſtle, dominions and principalities of heaven. Who excel in ſtrength and wiſdom, in every high and bright accompliſhment.—Their attitude. They wait around the KING immortal, ſeated on his exalted throne. They ſtand; are in a poſture of ſervice; with their wings outſtretched, ready to fly at the firſt ſignal. They ſtand, not with their eyes reverently caſt down; but with their faces covered, to denote the deepeſt ſelf-abaſement: as creatures, that are conſcious and aſhamed of their own meanneſs; or as overcome with the inſupportable glories which beam from uncreated majeſty.—Their action. They celebrate, not in cold converſation, but with rapturous ſongs, not with ſingle voices, but in a grand choir, (יענו זה אל זה, ſee Pſal. lxxxvii. 5. 6.) the amiable yet tremendous ſanctity of the LORD almighty.—Their manner of expreſſion. Though filled and penetrated with the prodigious theme, they attempt not to deſcribe it. Impracticable that even by the tongues of angels! They expreſs themſelves, therefore, in the language of profound admiration; in repeated, in reiterated acclamations to the wonderful attribute; Holy! holy! holy!—The effects of this auguſt appearance. The poſts of the door ſhake at the voice: the ponderous and magnificent pillars of braſs (ſee 2 Chron. iii. 17.) tremble like a leaf. The ſpacious and beautiful houſe is filled with tokens of the divine indignation; is involved in clouds of ſmoke; and joins with the trembling columns, and adoring ſeraphs, to tell the thoughtleſs world, What a fearful thing it is to fall into the hands of the living GOD! The prophet himſelf is ſtruck with aſtoniſhment; is overwhelmed with awe; and cries out, "as a woman in her pangs."—Can any thing be more enlivened, impreſſive, and alarming?

If I ſhall not treſpaſs upon the reader's patience, I would beg leave to add a remark concerning the word ſabaoth: which, though a Hebrew expreſſion, is retained in that excellent hymn, entitled Te Deum; and which ſome people I am inclined to believe, inadvertently confound with ſabbath.—The latter ſignifies the reſt of the ſeventh day; and, in this connection, yields a ſenſe not very appoſite, and comparatively mean. Whereas the former denotes armies or hoſts; and furniſhes us with an image truly grand and majeſtic, worthy to be admitted into the ſongs of ſeraphs.—It glorifies GOD, as the great, univerſal, uncontrollable SOVEREIGN; who exerciſes a ſupreme dominion over all the orders of being, from the loftieſt archangel that ſhines in heaven, to the loweſt reptile that crawls in duſt: who ſays to a legion of cherubs, Go; and they go;—to a ſwarm of inſects, Come; and they come;—to any, to every creature, Do this; and they do it. See Matth. viii. 9.

‡ Job xxv. v. ‖ Job iv. 18. § Heb. xii. 21.

* Job xlii. 6. † If. vi. 5.

‡ Ezek. i. 28. Dan. x. 8. 9. ‖ See Job. ix. 20. 21.—30. 31. 32.

ſeems to be moving this way, and the livery looks like Philander's.

Aſpaſio, deſirous to fix thoſe convictions—which are of the laſt conſequence to our faith and ſalvation—very deſirous to fix them on his friend's mind, replied.

Aſp. As your viſitants are at a diſtance, give me leave to obſerve, That the wiſeſt of men, attending to the firſt of theſe particulars, has poured contempt upon all human excellency; There is not a juſt man upon earth, that doth good and ſinneth not *. The apoſtle of CHRIST takes ſhame to himſelf, on the ſame account; and teaches all mankind to ſtrike the ſail of ſelf-conceit; In many things we offend all †.——David, conſidering the latter of theſe points, prays with the utmoſt earneſtneſs; Enter not into judgment with thy ſervant, O LORD! and aſſigns this humbling reaſon for his petition; for, in thy ſight, ſhall no man living be juſtified ‡. This induced Nehemiah, who had been ſo nobly zealous for the honour of his GOD, not to confide in his own valuable ſervices, but make application to forgiving goodneſs: Spare me, O LORD, according to thy great mercy ‖.

Had I ſet before you the example of the poor publican, who ſmote upon his breaſt; durſt not lift up his eyes to heaven; but cried from the bottom of a polluted heart, GOD be merciful to me a ſinner §! Self-love, might poſſibly have whiſpered; "Surely, I am not to be ranked with "that abominable wretch. I ſtand upon ſome better "footing than ſuch an infamous offender."——With reſpect to the enjoyment of eternal life, we ſtand upon no better, upon no other. And when law as that obnoxious deſpiſed creature, we are upon the very ſame ground with the moſt exalted ſaints. They all appear before the MAJESTY of HEAVEN, in the ſame attitude of unfeigned humiliation, and with the ſame acknowledments of utter unworthineſs.——For it is a certain truth, and admits of no exception, that to juſtify ſinners, is not the privilege of human obedience, but the ſole prerogative of the LORD our righteouſneſs.

Ther. Is not the practice of Hezekiah an exception to your rule? Theſe, if I recollect aright, are the words of that holy king; I beſeech thee, O LORD, remember how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy ſight ¶. You ſee, he puts the iſſue of his trial before the everlaſting GOD, upon his own integrity and his own obedience.

Aſp. Theſe are his words, but they are not uſed with this view. He humbly repreſents before the great SOVEREIGN of the world, how beneficial his former life had been, and how ſerviceable his prolonged life might be, to the beſt intereſts of the Jewiſh nation. He recurs to his obedience, not that he may eſtabliſh his hope of eternal happineſs in heaven; but that he may obtain a reprieve from the grave, and a lengthening of his tranquillity on earth.——Neither is this obedience gloried in by way of merit; but only pleaded by way of argument: As though he had ſaid; "Remember, gracious "GOD, how I have exerted my royal authority, to "ſuppreſs idolatry, to extirpate vice, and to promote "thy true religion. Conſider how greatly thy people "ſtand in need of ſuch a vigilant and zealous governor; "and to what a miſerable condition both church and "ſtate may be reduced, if thou takeſt away thy ſervant "by this threatened but untimely ſtroke. And, for the "welfare of Judah, for the honour of thy name, for the "ſupport of thy own worſhip, O ſpare me a little!"

Aſpaſio pauſed, expecting a reply.——As Theron continued ſilent and muſing, Aſpaſio, with a ſmile of benevolence, proceeded.——Come, my Theron; why ſo deep in thought? Have you any objection to the evidences I have produced?—They are ſome of the moſt dignified characters, and illuſtrious perſonages, that could be ſelected from all ages: kings, princes, and patriots; prieſts, ſaints, and martyrs. Should theſe be deemed inſufficient, I can exhibit a larger and nobler cloud of witneſſes;—larger, for they are a great multitude, which no man can number, of all nations, and kindreds, and people, and tongues;—nobler, for they ſtand before the throne, and before the LAMB, clothed with white robes, and palms in their hands.——Aſk thoſe ſhining armies, Who they are, and whence they came? Their anſwer is comprized in one of my favourite portions of ſcripture; one of thoſe delightful texts, from which I hope to derive conſolation even in my laſt moments. For which reaſon, you will allow me to repeat it, tho' it may perhaps be mentioned in a former converſation. We are they who came out of great tribulation; and have waſhed our robes, and made them white in the blood of the LAMB: therefore are we before the throne *.

Some of them laid down their lives for the ſake of CHRIST; many of them were eminent for works of righteouſneſs; all of them were endued with real holineſs. Yet none of theſe qualifications conſtituted their paſſport into the regions of endleſs felicity. They had waſhed their robes; had fled to the atonement, and pleaded the merits of JESUS their SAVIOUR: Hereby they had made them white; this was the cauſe of their acquittance from guilt, and their complete juſtification:—And therefore, on this account, their perſons were accepted; they were preſented without ſpot before the throne; and admitted to that fulneſs of joy, which is at GOD's right hand for evermore.

Ther. I have no objection to your witneſſes. But methinks, your doctrine is ſtrangely debaſing to human nature.

Aſp. A ſign, Theron, that it is agreeable to the genius of the goſpel: which is calculated, as the eloquent Iſaiah foretold, to humble the ſinner, and exalt the SAVIOUR †: The loftineſs of man ſhall be bowed down, and the haughtineſs of men ſhall be made low, and the LORD alone ſhall be exalted in that day ‡: "Man, though natu"rally vain, ſhall be made ſenſible of his numberleſs "offences; ſhall ſee the defects which attend his higheſt "attainments; ſhall confeſs the impoſſibility of being "juſtified by the deeds of the law; and place all his "hope upon the propitiatory death, and meritorious "obedience of the LORD JESUS CHRIST."

* Eccl. vii. 20. † Jam. iii. 2. ‡ Pſal. cxliii. 2.
‖ Neh. xiii. 22. § Luke xviii. 13. ¶ 2 Kings xx. 3.

* Rev. vii. 14. 15.

† This correſponds with a very valuable maxim, which an eminent divine once recommended to his people, as a touch-ſtone to diſtinguiſh evangelical truth.—That doctrine, he ſaid, which tends

To humble the ſinner;
To exalt the SAVIOUR;
To promote holineſs;

That doctrine which tends to accompliſh all theſe deſigns, you may embrace as ſound. That which is defective in its influence on any one of them, you ſhould reject as corrupt.

‡ Iſ. ii. 11.

DIALOGUE IX.

THERON, impreſſed with the laſt converſation, was very deſirous to reſume the ſubject, and renew the important debate. With this view, he conducted his friend into a retirement, commodious for the purpoſe.

They enter a ſpacious lawn; which lay oppoſite to the the houſe, and ſtretched itſelf in the form of an expanded fan. The mounds, on either ſide, were dreſſed in verdure, and ran out in a ſlanting direction. The whole, to an eye placed at a diſtance, bore the reſemblance of a magnificent viſta; contracting, by ſlow degrees, its dimenſions; and leſſening, at laſt, into a point: which the regular and graceful ſeat, with all imaginable dignity, ſupplied.

Nature had ſunk the lawn into a gentle decline: on whoſe ample ſides, were oxen browzing, and lambs friſking. The luſty droves lowed, as they paſſed; and the thriving flocks bleated welcome muſic in their maſter's ear.——Along the midſt of this verdant ſlope, ran a ſpacious and extenſive walk: which, coated with gravel, and fenced with paliſadoes, looked like a plain ſtripe of brown, interſecting a carpet of the brighteſt green.—At the bottom, two handſome canals, copiouſly ſtocked with fiſh, floated to the breeze: whoſe waters, beheld from every front-room in the houſe, had a fine effect upon the ſight, not without a refreſhing influence on the imagination.—At the extremity of one, ſtood a ſtately colonnade. The roof was elevated on pillars of the Ionic order; and the area flabbed with ſtones, neatly ranged in the diamond-faſhion. Several foreſt-chairs accommodated the anglers with a ſeat, while the bending dome ſupplied them with a ſhade.

Correſponding, and on the margin of the other canal, was erected a ſummer-houſe, of a very ſingular kind.—The lower part had an opening towards the north. It was cool; it was gloomy; and had never ſeen the ſun. It carried the romantic air of a grotto, or rather the penſive appearance of a hermit's cell. The outſide was coarſe and rugged with protuberant ſtones. Partly overſpread with ivy, partly covered with moſs, it ſeemed to be the work of ancient years.—You deſcend, by ſteps of turf, through a low and narrow door. A ſcanty iron grate, inſtead of a large ſweeping ſaſh, tranſmits a glimmering light; juſt ſufficient to diſcover the inner ſtructure: which appeared like one continued piece of rock-work; a cavern cut, you would imagine, from the ſurrounding quarry.—Above, hung an irregular arch, with an aſpect rather threatening, than inviting. Below, lay a paving of homely pebbles; in ſome places, a little furrowed, as though it had been worn by the frequent tread of ſolitary feet. All around, were ruſticity and ſolemnity; ſolemnity never more viſibly ſeen than through a gloom.—The furniture of the ſame groteſque faſhion with the apartment. A bench hewed, you would ſuſpect, by nature's chiſel, out of the ſolid ſtone: a ſort of couch, compoſed of ſwelling moſs, and ſmall fibrous roots.—From one corner, trickled a pure ſpring, which crept with a bubbling moan, along the channelled floor, till its healthy current was collected into a baſon, rudely ſcooped from the ground. On the edge of this little receptacle, lay chained a ruſty bowl, and over it ſtood an antique worm-eaten table.——On the leaſt obſcure part of the wall, you diſcern, dimly diſcern, a parchment ſcroll, inſcribed with that ſage, but mortifying admonition, VANITY OF VANITIES! ALL IS VANITY!

Over this receſs, ſo pleaſingly horrid, and adapted to ſolemn muſings, aroſe an open and airy Belvidere. You aſcend by winding ſtairs; and coming from the uncouth abode below, are ſweetly ſurpriſed with an elegant hexagon.—The ceiling lofty, and decorated with the ſofteſt, richeſt, almoſt-flowing fret-work. The wainſcot, in large pannels of oak, retained its native auburn: ſo beautifully plain, that, like an amiable countenance, it would have been diſfigured, rather than improved, by the moſt coſtly paint. On this were diſpoſed, in gilded frames, and to great advantage, a variety of entertaining landſcapes. But none ſurpaſſed, none equalled all were a foil to, the noble, lovely views which the windows commanded.——The chimney-piece, of white ſhining marble, ſtreaked with veins of vivid red. Over it was carved a fine feſtoon of artificial, in it was ranged a choice collection of natural flowers.——On a table of gloſſy walnut, lay a portable teleſcope, attended with Thomſon's Seaſons, and Vanierii Prædium Ruſticum *.

The whole was fitted up in the higheſt taſte, and furniſhed with every pleaſurable ornament: on purpoſe to harmonize with that laviſh gaiety, which ſeemed to ſmile over all the face of nature; on purpoſe to correſpond with that vernal delight, which came breathing on the wings of every fragrant gale. I may add, on purpoſe to remind the beholder of thoſe immortal manſions, which are decorated with images infinitely more ſplendid, with objects unſpeakably more glorious: where holy beings will ſpend, not a few vacant hours in refined amuſement, but a boundleſs eternity in the conſummation of joy.——For, to a well-turned mind, nature is a preceptor; and theſe are her inſtructive leſſons. To the pure in heart, even ſenſe is edifying; and theſe are its delicate moralities.

The redundant waters of the canal rolled off in a ſpreading caſcade; which tumbling from many a little precipice, ſoothed the air with a ſymphony of ſoft and gurgling ſounds; nor ever intermitted the obliging office,

From morn to noon, from noon to dewy eve.

But when the fanning breezes dropt their wings, when the feathered choir were huſhed in ſleep, when not ſo much as a chirping graſhopper was heard throughout the meads, this liquid inſtrument ſtill played its ſolo; ſtill purſued its buſy way, and warbled, as it flowed, melodious murmurs.

Aſp. Such Theron; ſo uniform, uninterrupted, and invariable, ſhould be our conformity to the divine law.——But alas! thoſe ſacred precepts are ſo exceeding broad, that the moſt enlarged human obedience is far from being commenſurate to their extent; ſo abſolutely holy, that our higheſt attainments fall vaſtly ſhort of their exalted perfection.——How then can we expect juſtification from ſuch a conſummate rule? How dare we place our dependence upon ſuch imperfect duties? eſpecially before a GOD of unerring diſcernment, and immaculate purity.

Ther. Becauſe mankind are incapable of pleaſing their MAKER, by yielding an abſolute and invariable obedience to the moral law; does it follow from thence, that they cannot render themſelves acceptable to him, by an univerſal courſe of ſincere obedience?

Aſp. I think, it follows from what has been already obſerved. If you deſire new arguments, they are at hand.

The law, ſays the teacher of the Gentiles, is the miniſtration of condemnation †. How can this be true, if it requires no more than a ſincere obedience; ſuch as is proportioned to our infirm ſtate? If this be ſufficient to juſtify, and entitle us to our CREATOR's favour, the law ceaſes to be the miniſtration of condemnation. It becomes (which is flatly contradictory to the apoſtle's doctrine) the miniſtration of righteouſneſs.

The law is ſtyled, by the ſame inſpired teacher, a ſchoolmaſter to bring us to CHRIST ‡. How can it,

* Vanierii prædium ruſticum—A moſt elegant Latin poem; which treats of every remarkable peculiarity relating to the buſineſs of a country-life, or the furniture of a country-ſeat.—It entertains us with a deſcription of the moſt agreeable objects, in an eaſy flow of the pureſt language, and moſt muſical numbers.

It is, I think, one continued beauty; ſuperior to every thing of the kind I have met with among the moderns; and ſcarcely, if at all, unworthy the firſt genius of the Auguſtan age. Uni Virgilio ſecundus, et pene par.

† 2 Cor. iii. 7. In this place, I apprehend, the apoſtle means the moral law, and that principally; as that alone was written and engraven on ſtones. Elſewhere, I believe, he uſes the word in a larger ſenſe; and intends to exclude all law whatever, from bearing any ſhare in our juſtification.

‡ Gal. iii. 24. Παιδαγωγος, a ſchoolmaſter; who pretends not to finiſh upon your ſuppoſition, be qualified for ſuch an office? If a ſincere obedience be the whole of its demands, it can no longer direct us to CHRIST; it will no longer deliver us over to a REDEEMER's merit; but muſt draw and attach us to itſelf; teaching us to look upon its precepts, and our own conſcientious obſervance of them, as the tenure of eternal life.

Do you inſiſt upon a third proof? A third preſents itſelf; not ſo much founded on argumentation, as deduced from example.——How was Abraham *, the friend of GOD, and father of the faithful, juſtified? By a courſe of ſincere obedience? No; but by faith in the promiſed MESSIAH. Abraham worked not, with a view, to obtain juſtification; but believed on him, who juſtifieth the ungodly.——How was David *, the man after GOD's own heart, juſtified? By his zeal for the LORD, and by his eminent ſervices? No; but by a righteouſneſs imputed; even that righteouſneſs of the bleſſed REDEEMER, through which iniquity is forgiven, and ſin pardoned.—And can we be ſaid to walk humbly, or can we be thought to walk ſurely, if refuſing to tread in the ſteps of theſe exemplary ſaints, we divert into a path of our own deviſing?

Ther. "Of our own deviſing!"—No, my friend: there is a milder law introduced by the goſpel, condeſcending and merciful to our infirmities, which accepts of ſincerity inſtead of perfect obedience.

Aſp. When was this milder law introduced, and the ſtricter abrogated? Not upon the entrance of ſin, I preſume. At this rate, the original law muſt be the creature of a few days, perhaps of a few hours only. But can we imagine, that the all-wiſe and unchangeable GOD would ordain a ſyſtem of precepts to be diſannulled as ſoon as enacted?—Not in our LORD's time, I am very certain. That holy commandment, which requires ſupreme love to GOD, and perfect charity to men, he aſſures us, was ſtill in force †. Nay, it is evident, from the nature of the DEITY, and from our relation to one another, that it always will be in force; that it never can ceaſe; but is neceſſary and everlaſting.

"A milder law, condeſcending to our infirmities."—What can we be the purport of ſuch an inſtitution? It muſt be ſuppoſed to ſpeak the following language: "Be it known unto you, O children of Adam, that "you are no longer injoined to love the LORD "with all your ſtrength, nor to love your neighbour "as yourſelves.——Once, indeed, I inſiſted upon abſolute purity of heart; now I can diſpenſe with ſome "degree of evil concupiſcence.——Since CHRIST is "come, and his goſpel preached, you need not always "be clothed with humility; but may feel ſome little "emotions of pride.——In ſhort becauſe you are weak, "I will connive, or even accommodate any demands to "your enfeebled and depraved condition."

Not to urge, (what muſt be ſhocking to every ear) that ſuch a doctrine would make the HOLY ONE of GOD a miniſter of ſin; and the goſpel of our ſalvation a patent for licentiouſneſs. Let me only aſk,—Does this agree with our LORD's declaration? One jot or tittle ſhall in no wiſe paſs from the law, till all be fulfilled ‖.——Is this ſuitable to the perfections of the divine LEGISLATOR, with whom is no variableneſs nor ſhadow of turning §?—Will this conſiſt with the avowed reſolution of the mighty JEHOVAH? He will magnify the law, and make it honourable ‡.

Ther. However you may decry what I call the milder law, St Paul aſſerts it to be the Chriſtian ſcheme, he ſtrenuouſly argues for, as the only ſcheme by which any man can be juſtified in the ſight of GOD.

Aſp. Does he, Theron? In what epiſtle? what chapter? what verſe?—He ſays, addreſſing himſelf to the Galatian converts, I do not fruſtrate the grace of GOD; for if righteouſneſs come by the law, CHRIST is dead in vain ‖. From which paſſage, we learn two very momentous truths: That were we to derive a juſtifying righteouſneſs from the law, this would not only be derogatory to the honour of grace, but ſubverſive of its very being.—That, by ſeeking juſtification through our own conſcientious behaviour, we make, as far as in us lies the death of CHRIST a vain thing; for which there was no occaſion, and of which there is no uſe.

To the ſame purpoſe it is written in that invaluable epiſtle to the Romans §, If they which are of the law be heirs; if they who truſt to their own performance of the law, are thereby entitled to the heavenly inheritance; faith is made void, and the promiſe made of none effect.—See now, my friend, the tendency of your opinion! It is not a mere ſpeculative miſtake; an error of inconſiderable conſequence; but ſuch as ſtrikes at the fundamentals of the goſpel. Inſtead of being the only Chriſtian ſcheme, it totally overthrows ¶ Chriſtianity itſelf. For it would render the promiſe abortive, and ſuperſede the neceſſity of faith. It would deſtroy the very exiſtence of grace, and make even the death of CHRIST, a ſuperfluous tranſaction.

Ther. This I ſee, Aſpaſio, that the method of obtaining acceptance on account of our own ſincerity, is a benign expedient; ſuch as correſponds with the compaſſionate nature of the DEITY; and is, what the apoſtle ſtyles, being juſtified by faith, without the deeds of the law.

Aſp. How! To be juſtified by faith, and juſtified by ſincerity, the ſame thing!—Is it poſſible that theſe ſhould be equivalent terms?—Let me illuſtrate my query by a ſimilitude, which our preſent ſituation ſuggeſts. Sometimes, an eaſy compariſon is more convincing, than a laboured argument.

From this pleaſing eminence, we command an extenſive view of the country. Our eye connects the artleſs grandeur of nature, with the elegant embelliſhfiniſh the education of youth; but directs them to, and prepares them for, higher ſtudies, or nobler employs. The law, in like manner, aims not at furniſhing us with a title to happineſs; but fits, diſpoſes, and diſciplines us, for the all-ſufficient REDEEMER.

---

Some have thought, that εἰς Χριστον ſignifies, until the coming of CHRIST. But this will hardly conſiſt with the genius of the language, or with the import of the following clauſe, That we might be juſtified by faith.—Beſides, this would confine the efficacy of the law to that period of time which preceded our LORD's incarnation. Whereas, it ſtill does, and always will act, (until this corruptible ſhall put on incorruption) in a way of ſubſerviency to his merits.

* Theſe two examples are, with the trueſt judgment, ſelected, and with the utmoſt propriety applied, Rom. iv. 1. &c. Rom. iv. 6. &c.—Abraham was the moſt illuſtrious pattern of piety, among the Jewiſh patriarchs: In glory there was none like him, Eccluſ xliv. 19. David was the moſt zealous and ſeraphic of their kings; a man after GOD's own heart, 1 Sam. xiii. 14. If neither of theſe was juſtified by his own obedience, but each by an imputed righteouſneſs; if they both obtained acceptance with GOD, not as upright beings, who might claim it; but as ſinful creatures, who muſt implore it; the conſequence is glaring. It is ſuch, as muſt ſtrike every attentive underſtanding, and muſt affect every individual perſon.

† Matth. xxii. 37, 38, 39.

* Matth. v. 18. † Jam. i. 17. ‡ Iſ. xlii. 21.

‖ Gal. ii. 21. § Rom. iv. 14.

¶ St Paul ſays of thoſe preachers, who taught juſtification by the works of the law, They would pervert, or (as the original word μεταστρεψαι may be tranſlated) ſubvert and overthrow the goſpel of CHRIST.—To pervert, give a wrong turn, or a falſe colour, ſeems not to expreſs fully the apoſtle's idea, nor to preſerve the native energy of his argument. The Greek word is equivalent to the Hebrew הפך, which we generally render evertere. Gal. i. 7.

It may be worth our while to tranſcribe Beza's deſcant upon the paſſage: which is no leſs pertinent, than it is important. Quid enim magis contrarium eſt fidei, ſive gratuitæ juſtificationi, quam juſtificatio ex lege, ſine meritis, non CHRISTI ſed noſtris? Itaque qui volunt iſta duo conciliare, magis etiam ſunt inepti, quam ſi quis conetur lucem cum tenebris, mortem cum vita conjungere.

ments

nts of the ſummer-houſe. Not is the public road the t entertaining part of the ſcene: becauſe it preſents with a moving picture; with a perpetual ſucceſſion of w objects.——How many travellers have paſſed in ſince we took our ſeat in this agreeable eleva- ; but at this inſtant, a ſtage-coach bolts out of the e; filled, I preſume, with paſſengers, that reſide in neighbourhood, or are to lodge in the next market- n. We will ſuppoſe them ſet down at their journey's d. An acquaintance viſits them; congratulates them their arrival; and aſks that cuſtomary queſtion, how they came?"—"We came," ſay they, "without walking a ſtep ourſelves; yet by walking, as well, and as far, as we were able."—Is this anſwer intelligible? e theſe methods of travelling conſiſtent? So intelligible my friend's doctrine. So conſiſtent is juſtification uchſafed without the deeds of the law; and juſtifica- on obtained, by performing the deeds of the law, as ell as we are able.

Ther. Without the law, ſignifies, without the neceſ- y of an exact and unerring conformity to it.

Aſp. This is not without, but by the law, qualified in e rigour of its demands, and departing ſomewhat from e perfection of its precepts. Could you affirm, with- y propriety, that this part of the hemiſphere is with- t the ſun, becauſe an intervening cloud has moderated fervour, and abated its glare?

What ſays the apoſtle? His words in another place, ill determine his meaning in this. If a ſtate of accep- nce with GOD be of works; be referable to our own bedience, whether ſincere or perfect; it is no more of race *. Works and grace, in point of juſtification, are reconcileable oppoſites †. On this pinnacle they can- ot ſtand together. One muſt ſupplant and overthrow he other.

But why do I ſpeak of grace? If my friend's opinion prevail, grace is at an end. What we took to be the oſpel, turns out a covenant of works. Salvation ceaſes o be a free gift, and becomes a neceſſary payment. For to him that worketh, that performeth what the law requires, is the reward not reckoned of grace; but he may claim it, as his due; it muſt be paid him, as matter of debt ‡.

Ther. You take no notice of what I urged concerning he benignity of this ſcheme, and how much it magnifies he clemency of the great LEGISLATOR.

Aſp. But why ſhould clemency erect its throne, on the ruins of almoſt every other attribute?—This method would diſhonour the veracity of GOD, which has de- nounced a curſe upon every deviation from his revealed will——It would depretiate the adminiſtration of his juſ- tice, which cannot but puniſh whatever violates his ſa- cred precepts.——It would greatly derogate from the dignity of his law, and make it a mere thing of wax; to bend, and truckle, and take its form from the ſin and weakneſs of human nature.

Ther. Will the divine law then make no favourable allowances for human infirmities, for conſtitutional faults, and ſtrength of paſſion?

Aſp. Far be it from me to repreſent the law of the MOST HIGH, either more ſtrict, or more yielding, than it really is. To avoid all poſſibility of ſuch a miſtake, let us hear the declaration of the law itſelf: Curſed is every one that continueth not in all things, that are written in the book of the law to do them ‖.

Every one: without any exception of perſons; with- out any regard to pleas, either of human weakneſs, or violent temptation.——That continueth not; it is not enough to obſerve theſe holy commandments, in the general tenor of our converſation. Our courſe of obe- dience muſt be without any intermiſſion; from the ear- lieſt dawn of reaſon, to the lateſt period of life.——In all things; we muſt refrain from all the ſins that are forbid- den, and from every approach towards them. We muſt practiſe all the virtues that are injoined, and in their full extent of perfection.

In a word, the law inſiſts upon obedience, perfect in its principle; perfect in all its parts; perfect in every degree; and in each of theſe reſpects perpetual.——The leaſt deficiency in any one particular, renders us liable to vengeance; and, notwithſtanding any repentance for tranſgreſſions, notwithſtanding all pretenſions to ſince- rity of heart, ſubjects us to the curſe.

Theron pauſed.——He ſeemed to be ſtruck with ſur- priſe.——But rallying his thoughts, replied, If this be the ſenſe of the paſſage, who of all fleſh can be ſaved?

Aſp. Say rather, If the extent of the divine law be ſo enlarged, if its demands be ſo high, and its ſanction ſo awfully rigorous, then muſt every mouth be ſtopped;—then is all the world become guilty before GOD;—and by the works of the law ſhall no man living be juſtified.

Ther. Will not ſuch exceſſively-ſevere doctrine drive people into deſpondency, or even drown them in deſpair?

Aſp. No, Theron, unleſs it be ſuch a deſpair, as is the parent of heavenly hope; and productive of thoſe a- miable twins, peace and joy: A deſpair, I mean, of being reconciled to our offended GOD, and of obtain- ing eternal happineſs, by any ſatisfaction or any duties of our own.

Ther. Surely, you forget the gracious manifeſto, pub- liſhed by the condeſcending KING of heaven; If there be firſt a willing mind, it is accepted, according to what a man hath, not according to what he hath not †. Is it not plain from this text, that infinite goodneſs will admit our honeſt, though imperfect endeavours; and, ſince we are not able to pay an unſinning, will mercifully accept our beſt obedience?

Aſp. I do not forget, but poſſibly my friend may mi- apply the gracious manifeſto.—To whom was the word of this conſolation ſent? To true believers who had given their own ſelves to the LORD ‡; who were eſtabliſh- ed in CHRIST ‖; and abounded in faith §.—If you like- wiſe, my dear Theron, acknowledge yourſelf a vile ſin- ner in your worſt, and an unprofitable ſervant in your beſt eſtate: if, in conſequence of this acknowledgment, you fly for refuge to the wounds of a crucified SA- VIOUR; and rely, for ſalvation, only on his obedience unto death; then you imitate thoſe Corinthian converts; then you may apply that indulgent declaration to your- ſelf; and then would I venture to addreſs you, in the elegant and chearing language of the royal PREACHER: Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for GOD now accepteth ¶ both thy perſon, and thy performances.

* Rom. xi. 6. The paſſage produced by Aſpaſio, refers imme- diately to the doctrine of election, and but remotely to the privilege of juſtification. However, as the former includes the latter, if that be perfectly free, this cannot be the conſequence of works. The argument, therefore, I apprehend, is concluſive, though the proof is not ſo direct.

† E diametro inter ſe opponuntur, Moſes et JESUS CHRISTUS, lex et promiſſio; facere et credere; opera et fides; merces et donum. BENGEL.

‡ Rom. iv. 4. ‖ Gal. iii. 10.

* That the law inſiſts upon an obedience abſolutely perfect, will be farther evident to the attentive reader, if he conſiders the tenor of St Paul's argumentation, in his epiſtle to the Romans, and to the Galatians; particularly Rom. iii. 23. iv. 15. Gal. iii. 21.

† 2 Cor. viii. 12. ‡ 2 Cor. viii. 5. ‖ 2 Cor. i. 21.

§ 2 Cor. viii. 7.

¶ Eccl. ix. 7.—Aſpaſio's remark diſcovers an ambiguity in the word accepted.——If people mean, that ſincere obedience ſhall be accepted, as their juſtifying righteouſneſs, as that which conſtitutes their title to everlaſting felicity; the propoſition is ex- tremely falſe.——If they mean, that the ſincere obedience of believers, though very imperfect in itſelf, ſhall be graciouſly regarded in CHRIST, and find favour through his all-re- commending merit; the ſentiment is unqueſtionably true.——In

But, if you overlook the righteouſneſs of the bleſſed JESUS, if you depend upon yourſelf and your own attainments; you are (how ſhall I ſpeak it!) not accepted, but accurſed. In ſuch a caſe, you have already heard your doom denounced by the leader of the Jews, and may hear it ratified by the apoſtle of the Gentiles; As many as are of the works of the law, who ſeek juſtification by their own obſervance of its commands, are under the curſe *.

Ther. Under the curſe! Becauſe our attempts to obey, though faithfully exerted, are attended with defects! Is not this unreaſonable and ſhocking? Unreaſonable, that the GOD of juſtice ſhould eſtabliſh a law of ſuch conſummate perfection, as no child of Adam can, even with his utmoſt aſſiduity and care, fulfil? Shocking, that the GOD of mercy ſhould thunder out ſo ſevere a denunciation on the leaſt inadvertent breach, on every unavoidable failure?—This exceeds the relentleſs rigour of Draco, or the tyrannical impoſitions of the Ægyptian taſk-maſters. Draco is ſaid to have written his laws in blood. Yet he never enacted ſuch inſtitutions, as were abſolutely too ſtrict and difficult to be obſerved. And, though the Ægyptian taſk-maſters inſiſted upon the full tale of bricks, without allowing the neceſſary proportion of ſtraw, yet the puniſhment they inflicted, was incomparably leſs than everlaſting deſtruction.

Aſp. If GOD almighty, in delivering his law to fallen mankind, intended to propoſe the means of their juſtification; your argument would be valid, and your inference undeniable. But the SUPREME LEGISLATOR had a very different, a far more myſterious deſign.—However, before I proceed to touch upon this point, let me deſire to know your opinion.

For what reaſons, think you, was the law ordained?

Ther. For what reaſons?—To deter men from the commiſſion of vice, and excite them to the practice of virtue.—To ſet before them a rule for their conduct; which if they diligently obſerve, they ſhall be rewarded with eternal happineſs; which if they preſumptuouſly tranſgreſs, they ſhall be puniſhed with eternal miſery.

Aſp. If man had never fallen, this doctrine had been ſound divinity, and this method a practicable ſcheme. But, ever ſince the fall, ſuch a way of ſalvation is ſomewhat like the north-eaſt paſſage. As mountains of ice, and the ſevereſt rigours of winter, block up this; ſo extreme impotence in man, and the utmoſt perfection in the law, bar up that.—The law, ſaith the apoſtle, is weak; is incapable of furniſhing us with a title to the heavenly felicity †: not through any defect in its precepts, but through the fleſh; through the inability of our degenerate nature.

Yet I muſt confeſs, you are not alone in your opinion. Multitudes have unwarily entertained the ſame notion: not apprehenſive, that they fruſtrate hereby the grace of GOD, and render it of none effect with regard to themſelves.—If you examine the ſcriptural account, you will find it quite of another ſtrain.

Ther. Pray let me hear the ſcriptural account. For, whenever thoſe DIVINE ORACLES ſpeak, I am all attention. Where-ever they interpoſe their authority, I am all ſubmiſſion.

Aſp. By the law is the knowledge of ſin *. For inſtead of being our juſtifier, it is our accuſer. It arraigns and approves us guilty. It demonſtrates, beyond all poſſibility of contradiction, that the very beſt among us have failed and come ſhort of our duty; nay, that the very beſt among us have done amiſs, and dealt wickedly.

I was alive without the law once, ſays the apoſtle †: I thought myſelf upright and holy; and entitled by virtue of theſe qualifications, to life eternal. But when the commandment came, ſhining in its purity, and operating with power, ſin revived; a clear and lively ſenſe of guilt ſhot, like a piercing ray, through all my ſoul. I ſaw myſelf chargeable with many vaſt provocations. I felt myſelf ſubject to much remaining corruption. In conſequence of which, I died; my vain conceits were blaſted; my preſumptuous hopes expired; I could not but acknowledge myſelf juſtly liable to condemnation and death.

Ther. It had this effect on Saul, when he was a malignant and barbarous perſecutor. But, when people are virtuous and benevolent, what purpoſe does it then ſerve?

Aſp. A very important one; yet ſuch as may, probably, at the firſt hearing, affect you with a little ſurpriſe. The law entered, ſays the apoſtle, that the offence might—

Ther. Be reſtrained, no doubt.

Aſp. That the offence might abound ‡, is the aſſertion.

Ther. Surpriſing indeed! Is it poſſible that GOD's law ſhould give countenance to ſin? nay, add ſpurs to the ſinner?

Aſp. Let us beware of miſtaking our ſacred cauſe. The law entered, not that the commiſſion of ſin might be authoriſed, but that the abundance of our ſins might be manifeſted: that all mankind, even your virtuous perſons, may perceive the great multitude of their iniquities; the greater impurity of their hearts ‖; together with the utter imperfection of their attainments, and beſt ſervices.

This end could not be anſwered by a law, relaxed in its demands, or warping to our weakneſs; only by a ſyſtem of precepts, every way exact, and in all degrees perfect. Whoever would repreſent to his neighbour, the ſpots that ſully, or the ſcars that diſfigure his countenance, muſt effect the deſign, not by a ſtained, but by a pure mirror.

Ther. The knowledge of ſin, and a conviction of our exceeding ſinfulneſs!—Theſe are intentions, which I ſhould not have ſuſpected.

Aſp. Theſe are not all. There is another intention of the law, equally neceſſary, and no leſs awful. It reveals the wrath of GOD, againſt all ungodlineſs and unrighteouſneſs of men §.—Having ſet before the ſinner, his innumerable offences, and enormous guilt; it denounces the doom, which he deſerves. It unſheaths the ſword of juſtice, and threatens the offender with everlaſting deſtruction from the preſence of the LORD.

Ther. A modern writer ſuppoſes, that GOD may ſet aſide the law, in favour of frail men. I might far more reaſonably ſuppoſe, that he would mitigate the law, on the ſame conſideration. But what you urge, makes me afraid to lean on ſo precarious a prop.

Aſp. To look for comfort and ſalvation from this quarter, would be to lean, as the Arabian proverb ſpeaks, on a wave of the ſea: which will not only fail to ſupport, but will certainly ſwallow up, the unadviſed and raſh depender.

No, Theron; rather than the divine law ſhould loſe its honours, Sodom and Gomorrah were laid in aſhes; ſincerity the effect of faith? Then we may rejoice in it, with the happy apoſtle, 2 Cor. i. 12. Would ſincerity be the condition of our juſtification? Then we muſt renounce it, with holy Job, chap. ix. 15.

* Gal. iii. 10.

† Rom. viii. 3. Therefore he ſays in another place, IF there had been a law given, which could have given life, Gal. iii. 21. It is the ſame way of ſpeaking, and intended to denote the very ſame impoſſibility, which is implied in that ſpeech of JEHOVAH to Abraham; IF a man can number the duſt of the earth, Gen. xiii. 16.

* Rom. iii. 20. † Rom. vii. 9. ‡ Rom. v. 20.

‖ And therefore was law giv'n them, to evince Their natural pravity. MILT. b. XII. 287.

§ Rom. i. 18.

the

the ancient world was deſtroyed with a deluge; the preſent frame of nature is deſtined to the flames, and all its unholy inhabitants will be condemned to hell.——Nay, rather than the leaſt tittle ſhould paſs unaccompliſhed, its curſe has been executed on GOD's own SON, and all its injunctions have been fulfilled in the perſon of JESUS CHRIST.

Ther. As I dare not confide in the modern proviſionary ſalvo, ſo neither can I accede to your ſevere and terrifying notions.——The laws of a wiſe and beneficent governor, are calculated for the good of his ſubjects. What good, what advantage can accrue to us, from receiving ſuch a ſentence, and poſſeſſing ſuch convictions?

Aſp. Though I might mention many advantages, I ſhall content myſelf with ſelecting one; which is not only valuable in itſelf, but the introduction to every ſpiritual bleſſing.——When, by the inſtrumentality of the law and the illumination of the SPIRIT, we are brought under ſuch convictions; then we are taught to ſee our danger: then we are made to feel our miſery; and then we ſhall no longer ſleep in ſecurity, but ſolicitouſly look out for deliverance, and gladly accept the ſovereign remedy.

Ther. The law, according to your repreſentation, is intended to accuſe me,—to convict me,—to condemn me. So it becomes, inſtead of a ſalutary, a killing ſyſtem.

Aſp. The letter killeth, but the ſpirit giveth life *. If we adhere to the literal ſenſe, without attending to the ſpiritual deſign: if we regard only the precept and the ſanction, as they ſtand in themſelves; and neither conſider, nor improve them, as acting in ſubſerviency to the MEDIATOR's righteouſneſs; they are doubtleſs a killing ordinance, and bind us down under a ſentence of death.——But rightly improved,—Hold! let me proceed no farther with the argument.

You are a ſportſman, Theron, and delight in the manly recreations of the field. You muſt therefore have read that fine poem, which ſo elegantly deſcribes your favourite diverſion.

Ther. The CHACE, I ſuppoſe, you mean.

Aſp. The ſame.—Do you remember the large deſcription of the royal ſtag-chace?

Ther. Perfectly well. It is not a week ſince I peruſed the whole paſſage; and with as much pleaſure, as if it had been entirely new.

Aſp. Then you can give me a ſummary of the agreeable narrative.

Ther. I can. But will not this chace lead us away very far from our ſubject?

Aſp. Perhaps, not ſo far as you imagine. I have a reaſon for my requeſt.

Ther. What reaſon I beſeech you?

Aſp. You ſhall ſoon know. Only favour me with the account.

Ther. I proteſt, I cannot diſcern the leaſt connection between theſe rural ſports, and the grand topic of our converſation. However, ſince you command, I will implicitly obey.

The ſtag, rouſed from his lair, ſhakes his dappled ſides; tolles his beamy head; and conſcious of ſuperior agility, ſeems to defy the gathering ſtorm.—You ſee, ſpeaking of poetry, I have catched ſomething of the poetical ſtrain.

Aſp. This enlivened manner excites my eagerneſs, and makes me more deſirous to hear the ſequel.

Ther. Firſt, he has recourſe to ſtratagem, and evaſive ſhifts. He plunges into the copſe; darts acroſs the glade; and wheels about in doubling mazes; as though he would purſue, even the foe he avoids. The full-mouthed pack unravel all his windings, and drive him from his wily arts.

Now he betakes himſelf to flight, and confides in his ſpeed. He burſts through the woods; bounds over the lawns; and leaves the lagging beagles far behind. The beagles ſlow, but ſure, trace his ſteps, through woods, through lawns, through half the extended foreſt. Unwearied, ſtill unwearied they urge their ardent way, and gain upon the alarmed object of their purſuit.

Again he flies; flies with redoubled ſwiftneſs, ſhoots down the ſteep; ſtrains up the hill; and takes ſhelter in the inmoſt receſs of ſome ſequeſtered grove. The ſagacious hounds hang, with greedy noſtrils, on the ſcent. They recover, by indefatigable aſſiduity, the ground they had loſt. Up they come a third time; and, joining in a general peal of vengeance, hurry the affrighted animal from his ſhort concealment.

Perplexed, and in the utmoſt diſtreſs, he ſeeks the numerous herd. He would loſe himſelf, and elude his purſuers, amidſt the multitude of his fellows. But they, unconcerned for a brother's wo, ſhun the miſerable creature, or expel him from the ſelfiſh circle.——Abandoned by his aſſociates, and haunted with apprehenſions of approaching ruin, he trembles at every leaf that ſhakes. He ſtarts; he ſprings; and wild and ſwift as the wind, flies he knows not where, yet pours all his ſoul in flight.——Vain, vain are his efforts. The horrid cry, lately leſſened, thickens upon the gale, and thunders in his ear.——Now the poor breathleſs victim is full in view. His ſprightlineſs forſakes him. His agility is ſpent. See! how he toils in yonder valley, with faltering limbs, and a hobbling gait. The ſight of their game, quickens the pace, and whets the ardour of the impetuous hounds. With tumultuous violence they ruſh in, and with clamorous joy demand their prey.

What can he do, ſurrounded as he is, with inſulting tongues, and ravenous jaws? Deſpair is capable of inſpiriting even the timorous breaſt. Having nothing to hope, he forgets to fear. He faces about, and makes a reſolute ſtand. The trunk of a ſturdy tree covers his rear; and his own branching horns, defend him in front. He ruſhes upon his adverſaries; goars ſome; lays other grovelling on the turf; and makes the whole coward pack give way.

Encouraged by this unexpected ſucceſs, his hopes revive. He rallies once again his drooping ſpirits; exerts the little remainder of his ſtrength; and ſprings through the midſt of the retiring rout.—It is his laſt, laſt chance. He ſtretches every nerve; once more loſes ſight of the rabble from the kennel; and, finding no ſecurity on the land, takes to the water. He throws his burning ſides into the river; ſails down the cooling ſtream; and ſlinks away to the verge of ſome little ſhelving iſland. There, finding a reſting-place for his feet, he ſculks cloſe to the ſhady margin. All immerſed in the wave, excepting only his noſtrils, he baffles, for a while, the prying eye of man, and the keener ſmell of brute.

Diſcovered, at length, and forced to quit this unavailing refuge, he climbs the ſlippery bank. Unable to fly any longer, he ſtands at bay againſt an aged willow; ſtands, all faint with toil, and ſobbing with anguiſh. The crouds that gather round him, with mercileſs and outrageous tranſport, triumph in his miſery. A multitude of blood-thirſty throats, joined with the ſonorous horn, ring his funeral knell.——The tears, till this fatal inſtant unknown, guſh from his languiſhing eyes, and roll down his reeking cheeks. He caſts one more look on the woods, the lawns, the pleaſing ſcenes of his former delights; and, determined to die, prepares to ſell his life as dear as poſſible.

At this moſt critical juncture, the royal ſportſman comes up. He ſees the diſtreſſed creature; and, as ſoon as he ſees, he pities. The clemency, which attends the throne, accompanies even the diverſions of majeſty. He iſſues the high command. The prohibitory ſignal is given. The pack, though raving for blood, are checked in a moment; and not checked only, but called off from the prey. Diſappointed and grumbling, grumbling, they retire, and leave the intended victim of their fury, to enjoy his liberty, his safety, and his ease again.

* 2 Cor. iii. 6.

I have now followed the stag, till I have tired your patience. Why did you suffer me to run on at this extravagant rate? You know, I am, on these favourite topics, an everlasting talker.

Asp. Why this apology, Theron? I am sure you did not see my mouth, nay even my head, while you was pursuing your subject. Besides, I intend to make reprizals, and put your attention to the same trial.

Thus the strictness of the law pursues the soul; dislodges it from every refuge of lies, and never remits its terrifying menaces, till the poor delinquent ceases from self-confidence, and fixes on CHRIST for his whole salvation *.

The man, perhaps, is awakened into a serious concern for his eternal state. In consequence of which, he relinquishes his profane and iniquitous practices; breaks the Sabbath; and defrauds his neighbour no more.——But the law quickly remonstrates, and in a glaring light, that a negative obedience is by no means sufficient.

Upon this, he betakes himself to a course of positive holiness; gets acquainted with religious people, and performs religious duties; prays in secret, and attends public ordinances; conscientiously observes the LORD's day, and regulates his behaviour by the rule of GOD's commandments. Now he is ready to congratulate himself on his remarkable and hopeful reformation.

Soon he perceives, that all his proficiency is but skin-deep; a mere outside varnish, which has not penetrated the inner man. He begins, therefore, to watch over the motions, and bewail the evils of his heart. He labours to subdue pride, and curb passion; to purge our filthy lusts, and to banish spiritual wickedness. Notwithstanding all his vigilance, conscience flies in his face, either for the neglect of some virtue, or the commission of some sin. The law rings in his ear that dreadful denunciation; "Cursed is he that performeth not all things."

Struck by this conviction, his wounds bleed afresh. He is obliged to seek some new balm for his sore. In order to appease an offended GOD, and atone for his sinful relapses, he makes many sorrowful confessions; possibly, submits to voluntary sufferings. He denies himself, and bestows liberally on the poor. He sighs deeply, and mourns bitterly.——But can waters that are muddy, cleanse the garment that is filthy? Wilt thou satisfy, O vain man, wilt thou satisfy for one sin, by committing another? In these penitential exercises, were thy thoughts steadily devout? In those acts of beneficence, was thy heart warmly affectionate? If not, such fancied reparations of past faults, only aggravate the heavy score.

What shall he do? He cannot pay. To beg he is ashamed. Fain would he enter into life, yet not be too much indebted to grace. He attempts therefore to compound with heaven. He binds himself by solemn, perhaps by sacramental engagements, to use greater circumspection for the future: then turns his eye to the divine MEDIATOR; not with a view of relying wholly on his righteousness; but only to obtain such a supply, as may make up the deficiencies of his own.——Somewhat like this was the mistake of the Galatian converts; against which St Paul, in his epistle to that people, so solidly disputes, and so sharply inveighs †.

For a while, he holds fast his purposed integrity. At length, falling monstrously short in executing his part, a stumbling voice sounds in his ear that dreadful alarm, "Cursed is he that continueth not." His heart sinks with discouragement, and his resolutions hang their enfeebled heads. He has tried every method that he can devise, and has found every method ineffectual. All his expedients are a spider's web, and his hope is as the giving up of the ghost.

His soul, pursued by the law, and hunted by terror, is brought to the gates of death, or the very brink of despair. And now the KING of kings, now the LORD our righteousness, appears for his rescue. Now is accomplished that gracious declaration, O Israel, thou hast destroyed thyself, but in me is thy help *.——Driven from every false refuge, and drawn by the blessed SPIRIT, he becomes weary and heavy laden to CHRIST. Convinced of the sin of his nature, the sin of his life, and the sin of his best duties, he renounces himself in every view. This is all his salvation, and all his desire, that he may win CHRIST, and be found in him. Did that poor afflicted woman say, If I may but touch his garment, I shall be whole? With equal ardour does this enlightened sinner cry, "If I may but have fellowship with the glorious "EMMANUEL, in his merits and in his benefits, I am "alive from the dead; I am happy for ever."

Having seen a glimpse of the transcendent excellency of the REDEEMER's person; having received a taste from the inexhaustible fulness of his grace; O! how he longs for brighter manifestations! how he thirsts after more plentiful draughts!—None that come to CHRIST, are cast out. He that awakens these ardent desires, in his due time gives the desired blessings. After various conflicts, a comfortable and established faith is wrought in the penitent's soul. He believes, that the SON of the MOST HIGH died in his stead, and was obedient for his justification; believes, that all the unsearchable riches of the adored MEDIATOR's life and death are his portion †.

By this faith, his heart is purified; his heart is quickened; he is fitted for every good work.——Though temptations assault him, he drives strength from his SAVIOUR; resists the devil; and is faithful unto death.——Though corruptions defile him, he flies to the fountain opened for uncleanness ‡; makes daily, hourly application of the blood of sprinkling; and goes on his way, rejoicing in GOD his SAVIOUR.

Ther. Your discourse puts me in mind of Absalom's procedure, when Joab refused to make him a visit. The prince ordered his servant to set on fire the general's standing corn ‖. This stratagem had its intended effect. The apprehension of danger drove him, when the respectful invitation would not lead him, to a personal interview. You seem to suppose, that the law was delivered with such a design; to lay us under a necessity of flying to the atonement of CHRIST.

* Lex pœnitem urget, donec is ad CHRISTUM confugit. Tum ipsa dicit, Assum et noctus, desino te persequi; sapis, salvus es. That is; The law urges and pursues the sinner, till he flies for refuge to JESUS CHRIST. Then the law speaks to this effect; "You are entered into the strong-hold: my demands are satisfied; my curses are silenced; I remit the pursuit. You are wise; you are safe; you are happy."

BENGEL.

† Strongly indeed! for, instead of saluting them, under the honourable title of saints, and faithful in CHRIST JESUS, he stigmatizes them with that severe appellation, O foolish Galatians!—And as to their practice, which was a departure from justification by CHRIST alone, he styles it, not merely an error, but an error of the most mischievous and horrid kind,—an infatuation,—a bewitchery, Τις εβασκανε. Gal. iii. 1.

* Hos. xiii. 9.

† See this work of grace, and procedure of conversion, more copiously displayed, in a valuable little piece, entitled, Human nature in its fourfold state, by Mr Thomas Boston, page 227.—Which in my opinion, is one of our best books for common readers. The sentences are short, and the comparisons striking. The language is easy, and the doctrine evangelical. The method proper, the plan comprehensive, the manner searching, yet consolatory.—If another celebrated treatise is styled, The whole duty of man, I would call this The WHOLE of man; as it comprises—what he was originally—what he is by transgression—what he should be through grace—and then what he will be in glory.

‡ Zech. xiii. 1.

‖ 2 Sam. xiv. 30.

Asp.

Ther. I do, Theron. And for this opinion I have a far better authority than my own ſuppoſition. We are told, that the morning wiſdom, that CHRIST is the end of the law. It points invariably to him. It terminates wholly in him; and then obtains its firſt, its principal purpoſe, when ſinners are brought to their divine REDEEMER, for righteouſneſs and ſtrength: for that righteouſneſs, which entitles to heaven; that ſtrength, which capacitates for obedience.

The law hath concluded all mankind under ſin †; yet not with an intention, that any ſhould be diſcouraged now or perith for ever; but that every one may ſee his inexpreſſible need of a SAVIOUR's death, and a SAVIOUR's obedience ‡: that, being thus prepared, both to value and receive ſo precious a bleſſing, the promiſe of juſtification by faith in JESUS CHRIST, may be given to them that believe.

Let us advert to this grand aim of the law. Then we ſhall ſee goodneſs, unqueſtionable and ſovereign goodneſs, in forming its conſtitution ſo ſublimely perfect, and making its threatenings ſo inflexibly ſevere. Excluſive of this wholeſome ſeverity, we ſhould ſupinely diſeſteem, perhaps wantonly reject, the grace of the goſpel.—The prodigal ſon would never have returned to his father in that humble, ſubmiſſive, ſupplicating poſture, if he had not found his circumſtances utterly ruined, and felt himſelf periſhing with hunger. No more would the conceited ſons of Adam, diſclaiming all pretence to any merit of their own, and with nothing but the halter * of ſelf-condemnation about their necks, fall down at the feet of a merciful REDEEMER, if they were not inſtigated by the ſharp goad, or rather driven by the flaming ſword of the law.

Ther. Has the law then nothing to do with our temper and converſation? Is it no longer to be conſidered as a ſyſtem of duties? no longer to be regarded as a rule of life?

Aſp. When it has forced the lines of ſelf-righteouſneſs, and driven us to JESUS CHRIST, that only citadel of ſafety, for acceptance and ſalvation; then it ſerves us a rule for our conduct. Then it ſhews us, like a friend and a guide, how to order our converſation, and adorn our profeſſion; how to glorify GOD, and expreſs our gratitude to CHRIST. But, till it has accompliſhed the forementioned end, it thunders vengeance; it flaſhes terror; it is, as Moſes ſpeaks, a fiery law †.

And is it, my dear Theron, a fiery law? Then let it conſtrain us to take ſhelter in that meritorious obedience, which will be to our guilty ſouls as the cold of ſnow in the time of harveſt ‡.—Is it a law which worketh wrath? Let it endear to our affections that ineſtimably-precious goſpel, which preacheth peace by JESUS CHRIST ‖.—Is it the miniſtration of condemnation §? O! let it quicken our flight to that all-gracious SURETY, who was condemned at Pilate's bar, that we may be acquitted at GOD's tribunal.

To all this agrees our celebrated Milton; whoſe divinity is as faultleſs, as his poetry is matchleſs. You will give me leave to quote a few of his beautiful lines; which recapitulate, as it were, the whole preceding converſation; and, while they recapitulate the converſation, confirm the doctrine. This will make you ſome amends, for my late tedious harangue. This will tip the lead with gold.

So law appears imperfect; and but giv'n
With purpoſe to reſign them, in full time,
Up to a better cov'nant; diſciplin'd
From ſhadowy types to truth; from fleſh to ſpirit;
From impoſition of ſtrict laws, to free
Acceptance of large grace; from ſervile fear,
To filial; works of law, to works of faith ¶.

* Alluding to thoſe remarkable words of Benhadad's ſervants; Let us put ſackcloth upon our loins, and ropes upon our heads, and go out to meet the king of Iſrael; peradventure he will ſave thy life. 1 Kings xx. 31.

† Fiery law, Deut. xxxiii. 2. I dare not affirm, that this is the exact import of the original, nor do I preſume to determine the preciſe ſignification of a phraſe ſo remarkably difficult. But as this is our received verſion; as it ſuggeſts a very uſeful truth; and a truth, which, in the preſent age, is peculiarly needful to be inculcated; I am inclined to acquieſce in the common rendering.

‡ Prov. xxv. 13. ‖ Acts x. 36.

§ 2 Cor. iii. 9. ¶ B. XII. 302.

DIALOGUE X.

Aſp. AGAIN, Theron! muſt we never lay aſide the weapons of controverſy?—You put me in mind of the reſolute Athenian; who having fought with diſtinguiſhed bravery on the field of Marathon, purſued the vanquiſhed Perſians to their fleet. At that very inſtant, a galley full of the enemy's troops was putting off to ſea. Determined if poſſible, to prevent their eſcape, he laid hold on the veſſel with his right hand; which was no ſooner fixed, than chopped off by the ſailors. The warrior, not at all diſcouraged, ſeized it with his left. When that alſo was cut away, he faſtened his teeth in its ſide; and never quitted his gripe, till he reſigned his breath *.

Ther. I have been reconſidering the caſe of imputed righteouſneſs; and am by no means ſatisfied, as to the propriety of the phraſe, or the truth of the doctrine,

* The Athenian's name was Cynægyrus. The author who relates this extraordinary ſtory, is Juſtin. If the reader ſhould think it a rhodomontade, I believe, he will not judge amiſs. And I promiſe myſelf, the ſame good ſenſe will enable him to diſtinguiſh between what is hinted by way of pleaſantry, and what is urged by way of argument.

especially in the sense which you espouse.—Objections arise, more substantial and weighty, than any that have hitherto been urged; and which, if I mistake not, you will find it a more difficult task to answer.

Asp. I must do my best. And if my best attempts prove unsuccessful, I shall say with the gallant Ipbicrates, when overpowered by the eloquence of his antagonist; "My adversary is the better actor, but mine is the bet-"ter play."

I say better—For to you, Theron, I will freely own, what to another person I should not be so willing to disclose, That I receive no comfort, but from the habitual belief, and daily application of this precious doctrine.—Whenever I read the most correct and beautiful writings, that proceed in the contrary strain, I feel my spirits heavy; I find my prospects gloomy; and not one ray of consolation gleams upon my mind. Whereas much meaner compositions, which breathe the savour of this evangelical unction, seldom fail to quicken my hopes; to brighten my views; and put into my mouth that piously-alert profession of the psalmist, I will run the way of thy commandments, now thou hast set my feet at liberty *. —Though I am far from laying any considerable stress upon this observation, farther still from advancing it into the place of an argument; yet I may be permitted to mention it, in the confidence and familiarity of friendship.

Ther. An opinion proposed with so much modesty, and so nearly connected with my Aspasio's comfort, has doubtless a claim to my serious attention. Otherwise, it might possibly provoke my raillery. For, you must know, I am no great admirer of inward feelings. I cannot think them a very solid method of demonstrating your point. It must be enforced by better reasons, if you would gain it access to my heart.

We must place, you say, a dependence upon the LORD JESUS CHRIST, in all that he has done and suffered. What HE has done and suffered, you add, is our only justifying righteousness; and to place our dependence on it, is the only method to obtain pardon of our sins, and life eternal.

Asp. I have said it, Theron, and I abide by it. This being the righteousness of GOD, is——

Ther. Give me leave, before you proceed farther, to propose a query. Does the righteousness of GOD signify the active and passive obedience of CHRIST?

Asp. Righteousness is a conformity to the law, in heart, and in life. As the SON of GOD voluntarily made himself subject to the law; perfectly fulfilled its precepts; and suffered to the utmost its penalty; this I should imagine, furnishes us with the truest and noblest signification of the phrase.

Ther. What, if I or others should imagine quite the reverse?

Asp. I thank my friend for his admonition. It is indeed unreasonable, that my bare imagination should pass for orthodoxy and truth. Let us then inquire after better proof.

When the divine name, in the sacred phraseology, is added to a substantive, it expresses some very extraordinary property.—The trees of the LORD †, denote those stately and magnificent forests, which the hand of the MOST HIGH planted.—The mountains of GOD ‡, are those prodigiously-large elevations of the earth, which none but an almighty arm could establish.—The righteousness of GOD likewise means, a righteousness of the most super-eminent dignity; such as is worthy to be called by his name; and may justly challenge his acceptance. And where shall we find this, but in the conduct and person of his blessed SON?—This has a most unexceptionable claim to the exalted title; being, as a masterly critic explains the phrase, "a righteousness devised by "GOD the FATHER, from all eternity, wrought out "by GOD the SON, in the person of JESUS CHRIST, "applied by GOD the HOLY GHOST, to the sin-"ner's soul."

Ther. This doctrine of yours, if I rightly understand it, would make remission of sins but one half of our justification; and something else necessary, in order to obtain eternal life. Which is just as rational, as to suppose, that though one cause may expel darkness, another must supervene, in order to introduce light.

Asp. The nature of justification, and the nature of condemnation, are two opposites, which will mutually illustrate each other.——What is implied in the condemnation of a sinner? He forfeits eternal life, and is doomed to eternal death.——What is included in the justification of a sinner? It supersedes his obligation to punishment, and invests him with a title to happiness.——In order to the first, there must be a remission of sins; in order to the second, an imputation of righteousness. Both which are derived from CHRIST's mediation in our behalf, and both take place, when we are united to that divine HEAD.——So that we do not derive them from two different sources, but ascribe them to one and the same great, all-sufficient CAUSE.

Your comparison, though intended to overthrow, I think, fully establishes the sentiment.——When yonder bright orb makes his first appearance in the east, what effects are produced? The shades of night are dispersed, and the light of day is diffused.——To what are they owing? Each to a separate, or both to the same origin? Every one's experience will answer the question. Thus when the Sun of Righteousness arises in the soul, he brings at once pardon and acceptance. Remission and salvation are under his wings. Both which constitute the healing * of the nations; and both owe their being to CHRIST's obedience, embraced as active, and not rejected as passive.

Ther. This, I know, is the fine-spun theory of your systematic divines. But where is their warrant from scripture? By what authority do they introduce such subtile distinctions?

Asp. I cannot think the distinction so subtile, or the theory so finely spun. To be released from the damnatory sentence, is one thing; to be treated as a righteous person, is evidently another.——Absalom was pardoned, when he received a permission to remove from Geshur, and dwell at Jerusalem. But this was very different from the recommencement of filial duty, and parental endearment †. A rebel may be exempted from the capital punishment, which his traiterous practices deserve; without being restored to the dignity of his former state, or the rights of a loyal subject. In Christianity likewise, to be freed from the charge of guilt, and to be regarded as a righteous person, are two several blessings; really distinct in themselves, and often distinguished in scripture.

Ther. Where are they distinguished? in what texts of scripture? This is what I called for—your scriptural warrant.

Asp. What think you of Job's reply to his censorious friends? GOD forbid, that I should justify you ‡! That he forgave them, there is no doubt. Yet he could not justify them; could not allow their reflections to be equitable, or their behaviour charitable.

What think you of Solomon's supplication? Then hear thou in heaven, and do, and judge thy servants; condemning the wicked, to bring his way upon his head; and justifying the righteous, to give him according to his righ-

* Psal. cxix. 32. † Psal. civ. 16.

‡ This is the import of the original, ההרי אל Psal. xxxvi. ver. 7. Heb. ver. 6. Eng.

* Mal. iv. 2. † 2 Sam. xiv. 24.

‡ Job xxxvii. 5. Vos justos in causa vestra adversus me pronunciem. SCHULT.

teousness

condemn. To condemn, in this paſſage, evidently ſignifies to pronounce guilty, and obnoxious to puniſhment. By parity of reaſon, to juſtify muſt denote to pronounce righteous, and entitled to happineſs.

What ſays Solomon's father? Enter not into judgment with thy ſervant, O LORD! For in thy ſight ſhall no man living be juſtified †. A man might be pardoned, if judged according to the tenor of his own obedience. But no man could be declared righteous, in conſequence of ſuch a trial: this were abſolutely and univerſally impoſſible.

From all which paſſages I conclude, that to be juſtified, is different from, is ſuperior to, the bare remiſſion of ſin.

Ther. All theſe inſtances are derived from the Old Teſtament: the New, if I miſtake not, ſpeaks another language. Conſider the caſe of the penitent publican. What does he requeſt? GOD be merciful to me a ſinner! What does he obtain? He went down to his houſe juſtified ‡. If then the petition and the grant may be deemed correſpondent, pardon and juſtification muſt be reckoned equivalent.

Aſp. The Old and the New Teſtament are, in their ſtyle and contents, exactly correſpondent. Echo, in yonder cloyſters, does not more punctually reverberate the ſpeaker's voice, than thoſe divine books harmonize with each other.

Yet it will not follow, from the publican's requeſt and the publican's bleſſing, that pardon and juſtification are the ſame. Only, that GOD's bounty frequently exceeds our prayers, and is larger than our expectations; or, that the bleſſing which was implored, and the bleſſing which was vouchſafed, are inſeparably connected, and always accompany each other.

St Paul mentions a juſtification of life: not barely an exemption from the ſentence of death; but ſuch a juſtification, as gives a title ‖ to the reward of life. The words are very emphatical. We ſhall injure the dignity of their meaning, if we underſtand them in a more contracted ſenſe.—Towards the cloſe of the ſame chapter, we have another paſſage rich with conſolation, and full to our purpoſe: Grace reigneth through righteouſneſs unto eternal life §: Here is pointed out the prime ſource of all our bleſſings, infinitely-free and triumphant grace: the meritorious cauſe, not any works of man, not any qualifications of our own, but the perfect righteouſneſs of our LORD JESUS CHRIST: the effect or end of all; which is, not barely an abſolution from guilt, but an inſtatement in life; a life of holy communion with GOD in this world, to be crowned with an eternal fruition of him in another ¶.

Let me produce one text more, which juſt at this inſtant occurs to my memory. You will find it in the apoſtle's defence of himſelf, before Feſtus and Agrippa. He opens, as it were, his apoſtolical commiſſion, and repeats the words of his royal MASTER. I ſend thee to ignorant and enſlaved, guilty and ruined creatures; to turn them from darkneſs to light, and from the power of Satan unto GOD; that they may receive forgiveneſs of ſins, and inheritance among all them which are ſanctified by faith that is in me ‡. The great PREACHER of the Gentiles, or rather the ſupreme LORD of all preachers, has diſtinguiſhed between remiſſion of ſins, and the inheritance of ſaints; between the pardon that delivers from hell, and the juſtification that entitles to heaven. So that the former does by no means conſtitute the latter; but is connected with it, as a link in the ſame ſacred chain; or included in it, as part of the ſame glorious whole.

Ther. Admitting your diſtinction to be proper, is not the ſatisfaction made by the death of CHRIST, ſufficient of itſelf to obtain, both our full pardon, and our final happineſs?

Aſp. Since my friend has ſtarted the queſtion, I may venture, with all reverence to the divine counſels, to anſwer in the negative; it being neceſſary, that the REDEEMER of men ſhould obey, as well as ſuffer, in their ſtead.——For this we have the teſtimony of our LORD himſelf. This commandment, ſays he, have I received of my FATHER, that I ſhould lay down my life *. Thus it becometh us, adds he in another place, to fulfil all righteouſneſs †. To which his apoſtle ſubjoins, that, if we reign in life, it muſt be not only through thoſe ſufferings which expiate, but alſo through that righteouſneſs ‡ which merits.

Ther. Our LORD's teſtimony relates only to a poſitive inſtitution, and is quite foreign to your purpoſe.——I have often been diſguſted at ſuch ſtrained applications of ſcripture. The partizans of a ſyſtem wreſt the ſacred book. They deal with divine truth, as the tyrant Procruſtes ſerved thoſe unhappy creatures, who fell into his mercileſs hands. Is a text too ſhort, to ſuit their deſign? Our Procruſtean expoſitors can ſtretch it on the rack, and lengthen its ſenſe. Is it too full, to conſiſt with their ſcheme? They can lop off a limb, ſecrete a ſentence, or contract the meaning.——Is this to reverence the great GOD? Is this to treat reſpectfully his holy word?

Aſp. I have been grieved, I aſſure you, and diſguſted at this practice, as well as yourſelf. A practice, not only very irreverent, but very injudicious alſo. It really prejudices the cauſe it would unfairly recommend. Such a ſupport is like a broken tooth, or a foot out of joint ‖; not only unſerviceable, but hurtful; an obſtruction, rather than a furtherance.——However, I am not conſcious of committing any violence on this paſſage, or of forcing it into my ſervice. The circumſtance you object, rather ſtrengthens, than invalidates the concluſion. If it was ſo requiſite for our bleſſed MEDIATOR to obſerve a poſitive inſtitution, how much more neceſſary to fulfil thoſe moral precepts, whoſe obligation is unalterable and everlaſting?

Beſides, it ſhould be conſidered, whether CHRIST's ſufferings were a complete ſatisfaction to the law? Complete they were, with regard to the penalty, not with regard to the precept. A diſtinction obvious and important. From whence ariſes the following argument; which for once, you will allow me to propoſe in the logical form.

By what alone the law was not ſatisfied, by that alone ſinners could not be juſtified:

By CHRIST's ſufferings alone, the law was not ſatisfied:

Therefore by CHRIST's ſufferings alone, ſinners could not be juſtified.

But when we join the active with the paſſive obedience of our LORD; the efficacy of the one, with the perfection of the other; how does our juſtification ſtand firm, in the fulleſt ſenſe of the word! We have all that the law demands, both for our exemption from the curſe, and as a title to the bleſſing.

Ther. Does not the ſcripture aſcribe the whole of our ſalvation to the death of CHRIST? delivering it, as a never-to-be-forgotten maxim in Chriſtianity, That we have redemption through his blood §: are brought near through the blood of CHRIST ¶; nay, that we are juſtified (the very point under debate) through his blood †.——Would the inſpired writer have aſſigned theſe various bleſſings to this one cauſe, if it had been a

---

* 1 Kings viii. 32. † Pſal. cxliii. 2. ‡ Luke xviii. 13, 14.

‖ Rom. v. 18. Δικαιωσις ζωης eſt declaratio divina illa, qua peccator, mortis reus, vitæ adjudicatur, idque jure. BENGEL. in loc.

§ Rom. v. 21.

¶ Accordingly, eternal life is called the hope, not of forgiveneſs, but of righteouſneſs, Gal. v. 5. And it is beſtowed, not barely becauſe of abſolution, but becauſe of righteouſneſs, Rom. viii. 10.

† Acts xxvi. 18.

* John x. 18. † Matth. iii. 15. ‡ Rom. v. 17.

‖ Prov. xxv. 19. § Eph. i. 7. ¶ Eph. ii. 13.

† Rom. v. 9.

price

price inadequate to the purchaſe, or a means inſufficient to accompliſh the end?

Aſp. This part of our LORD's meritorious humiliation is, by a very uſual figure, put for the whole. The death of CHRIST includes, not only his ſufferings, but his obedience. The ſhedding of his precious blood, was at once the grand inſtance of his ſuffering, and the finiſhing act of his obedience. In this view it is conſidered, and thus it is interpreted, by his own ambaſſador; who, ſpeaking of his divine MASTER, ſays, He was obedient unto death, even the death of the croſs *.

By the ſame figure, faith is ſometimes ſaid to be a lively influential perſuaſion, That CHRIST died for our ſins †. At other times, it is repreſented as a firm practical belief, that GOD hath raiſed him from the dead ‡. Neither of which can, without the utmoſt contrariety to the analogy of ſcripture, be taken in the excluſive ſenſe. Each act muſt be underſtood, not ſeparately, but jointly; each as implying both, or reciprocally inferring one another.

In like manner, when the ſcripture aſcribes our juſtification to the death of CHRIST, we are not to think, that it would ſet aſide, but imply his obedience. It is not becauſe his active obedience has no concern in procuring the bleſſing; but becauſe his bitter paſſion was the moſt conſpicuous, and the completing ſtage of his ever-glorious undertaking. Then, and not till then, he could truly ſay, FATHER, I have finiſhed the work thou gaveſt me to do ||.

Ther. According to your account then, it ſhould be poſſible for a man to have all his ſins done away, yet not attain to complete juſtification. Which is as contrary to ſound ſenſe, and true divinity, as to imagine, that crookedneſs may be removed, and the object not become ſtraight.

Aſp. No, Theron. According to my account, it is impoſſible, that the active and paſſive obedience of our REDEEMER ſhould be diſjoined. To whomſoever the one is imputed, from him the other is not with-held. They were undivided in CHRIST the illuſtrious head, and they are undivided in their application to his myſtical body. As CHRIST in ſuffering obeyed, and in obeying ſuffered; ſo whoever receives CHRIST as an atonement, receives him alſo as a righteouſneſs.

This has been obſerved before; and if this be real fact, what an ineſtimably-precious gift is the gift of CHRIST! Never was the moſt ſovereign remedy ſo admirably ſuited to any malady, as this is adapted to all our wants. In HIM may we be found, living and dying! How ſafe, how happy then!—Let me not weary your patience, if I repeat a paſſage from our excellent Dr Lightfoot: which, though artleſs and remarkably ſimple, has very much affected my mind; and, I hope, will leave ſome valuable impreſſion on my friend's. "Juſtification," ſays that judicious divine, "is a man's being intereſted in all CHRIST's righteouſneſs. And if any "thing is to be longed for, ſure that is, to be intereſted "in all CHRIST's righteouſneſs."

Ther. You don't weary my patience; neither do you ſatisfy my doubts. For you take no notice of the abſurdity objected, and the compariſon that enforces it.

Aſp. Your compariſon, my dear friend, is not founded on a parallel caſe. Neither ſenſe nor philoſophy find a medium between the removal of crookedneſs, and the ſucceſſion of ſtraightneſs. But reaſon diſcerns an apparent, and revelation maintains an important difference, between the pardon of guilt, and a title to life. This has already been proved from ſcripture; and is, to me at leaſt, evident from the very nature of things. For, if a king, in favour of ſome condemned malefactor, revoke the ſentence of death; this is one very conſiderable act of clemency. But if he pleaſes to make the pardoned criminal, a partaker of his kingdom, or an heir of his crown; this ſurely is a new, and a much higher inſtance of royal bounty.

If you inſiſt upon a ſimilitude, the word of GOD, which always ſpeaks with conſummate propriety, will furniſh us with one. Zechariah illuſtrates the doctrine of juſtification. He repreſents the ſinner by a perſon arrayed in filthy garments. His pardon is deſcribed by taking away this ſordid apparel. By which benefit, he ceaſes to be defiled; yet is he not hereby clothed; yet is he not hereby juſtified. This is an additional bleſſing; ſignified by putting on change of raiment *, and wearing beautiful robes. Here the circumſtances tally. The two conſtituent parts of juſtification, are ſeverally diſplayed, and ſtrongly marked. Here we have the removal of filth, and the robe of righteouſneſs? that which frees us from being abhorred, and that which renders us accepted; which, though diſtinguiſhable in themſelves, and diſtinguiſhed by the ſacred writer, are always united in the divine donation.

Ther. This notion is founded on a chimerical covenant, that CHRIST would take upon him the obedience due from man, of which there is not the leaſt intimation in holy ſcripture.

Aſp. That CHRIST undertook every thing neceſſary to redeem loſt ſinners from guilt and condemnation, every thing neceſſary to procure for attainted rebels a freſh title to life and glory; this cannot be reckoned chimerical. This muſt be as real, as that loſt ſinners are redeemed, or attainted rebels reſtored. Every proof of the one, proves and eſtabliſhes the other. This is what we call a covenant; and, from its benign nature, THE COVENANT OF GRACE.

Without undertaking this, I ſee not how our LORD could ſubſtain the character of a SURETY; nor without fulfilling it, how he could execute the office of a REDEEMER.——And I believe, you yourſelf will be at a loſs to ſhew, with what kind of juſtice the eternal FATHER could lay † our iniquities on the innocent JESUS, unleſs he had conſented to be anſwerable for our guilt.

Ther. This is no anſwear to my objection. I ſaid,—and it has been aſſerted by a very eminent and able pen,—that there is no intimation of any ſuch covenant in the whole ſcriptures.

Aſp. What then can be the meaning of thoſe remarkable words, in the prophecy of Zechariah? The counſel of peace ſhall be between them both ‡. Here, I

* Phil. ii. 8. † 1 Cor. xv. 3.

‡ Rom. x. 9. || John xvii. 4.

* Zech. iii. 3. 4. 5. † Iſ. liii. 6.

‡ Zech. vi. 12. 13. Theſe two verſes contain a brief, but very fine deſcription of the REDEEMER; of his perſon, his office, and his glory; together with the all-gracious cauſe, and ever-bleſſed fruit of our redemption.

His perſon: He is the man; or, as the Hebrew imports, the real, but at the ſame time, the illuſtrious man.——Whoſe name is the BRANCH; being the new origin of a new race; the father of a ſpiritual ſeed, who are children, not of the fleſh, but of the promiſe.—A branch that ſhall ſpring, not from a common root, not from any human planting, but ויצמח from under himſelf; being born of a pure virgin, and by the power of his own SPIRIT, he ſhall be both ſtock and ſtem to himſelf.

His office: It is to build the temple, the church of the elect; which is the houſe of the living GOD; in which he dwells, and by whom he is worſhipped; laying the foundation of this ſpiritual edifice in his croſs, and cementing it with his blood.—Which he ſhall rule as a king, after having redeemed it as a prieſt; uniting the ſacerdotal cenſer with the regal diadem, and been a prieſt upon his throne. Hence proceeds his glory: for he ſtands not, like other prieſts, offering daily the ſame oblations; but having, by one ſacrifice, obtained eternal redemption for us, is ſet down at the right hand of the MAJESTY on high.

What is the cauſe of theſe great events? What, but that moſt ſacred and auguſt convention, the counſel of peace? which was think, the covenant is mentioned, and the parties are ſpecified.——The counſel of peace, if I miſtake not, ſignifies the myſterious and unſearchable contrivance, formed for the recovery of ruined man:—formed and carried into execution by the LORD almighty, or GOD the FATHER; and that illuſtrious perſon, who is to build the temple, and bear the glory. A character, which none can claim; a taſk, to which none is equal; but the bleſſed JESUS only.

In pſalm the xlth, the conditions of the covenant are circumſtantially recorded: which were the incarnation and obedience of the eternal SON: A body haſt thou prepared me. Lo! I come to do thy will *. The accompliſhment of theſe conditions, is alledged and pleaded by our great MEDIATOR, in the introduction to his laſt ſolemn prayer †. What he implores, in the proceſs of his ſupplications, may be looked upon as the recompence ‡ decreed him by the FATHER, and ſtipulated in this magnificent treaty. Implores, did I ſay? 'Tis very obſervable, that our LORD makes a demand, rather than a requeſt. The expreſſion is not αἰτῶ, but θέλω ‖: A word of authority, not of ſupplication. He claims what, by the FATHER's engagement, and by his own obedience, was become his unqueſtionable right.

Here are the parties of the covenant; the conditions of the covenant; the performance of the covenant; and the reward, which, by virtue of ſuch performance, is merited, is claimable, is due. All this, I ſhould imagine, amounts to an intimation, and ſomewhat more than an intimation of the covenant.

Ther. This you call the covenant of grace: but if we are juſtified by CHRIST's fulfilling of the law, we are juſtified by works. So that, before you can ſtrike out ſuch a way of ſalvation, you muſt contradict yourſelf: and, what is more adventurous, you muſt aboliſh that fundamental principle of the goſpel; By the works of the law ſhall no fleſh be juſtified.

Aſp. We are, I grant it, juſtified by works. But whoſe? The works of CHRIST, not our own.—This is very far from contradicting ourſelves; equally far is it from aboliſhing what you call the goſpel-principle. Which, though an undeniable truth, is not an evangelical doctrine: becauſe it only ſhews our miſerable ſtate, and the utter impoſſibility of relieving ourſelves. Whereas nothing is genuine goſpel, but what ſpeaks comfort, and adminiſters recovery.

Between the covenant of works, and the covenant of grace, this, I apprehend, is the difference: By the former, man was indiſpenſably bound to obey, in his own perſon. By the latter, the obedience of his Surety is accepted, inſtead of his own. The righteouſneſs required by both, is not ſincere, but complete; not proportioned to the abilities of fallen man, but to the purity of the law, and the majeſty of the LAWGIVER.—By this means, the glory of GOD as an awful Sovereign, and the glory of his law as an inviolable ſyſtem, are entirely preſerved and illuſtriouſly diſplayed. The ſalvation of ſinners, neither claſhes with the truth, nor interferes with the juſtice of the Supreme LEGISLATOR. On the contrary, it becomes a faithful and juſt § procedure of the moſt high GOD, to juſtify him that believeth on JESUS.

Ther. When you make this difference between the two covenants, where is your authority from ſcripture? Which of the ſacred writers have taught us, that, tho' one demanded perſonal, the other is content with vicarious obedience?

Aſp. Which?—The firſt three. The moſt eminent hiſtorian; the moſt enraptured poet; and the moſt zealous preacher. I need not inform you, that I mean Moſes, David, and Paul.

The teſtimony of David has been already recited.—Moſes gives us a conciſe, but very inſtructive account of the ſecond covenant. With whom, according to his repreſentation, was it made? Not with Adam, or any of his poſterity; but with the LORD JESUS CHRIST, in the room and ſtead of both. None of the articles are propoſed to a poor, impotent, ruined creature; but the whole is conſigned over to the interpoſing SAVIOUR, ſignificantly deſcribed by the ſeed of the woman. It is not ſaid, "Thy beſt endeavours, O Adam, thy true repen-"tance and ſincere obedience," ſhall retrieve this fatal "miſcarriage; but, The ſeed of the woman ſhall bruiſe the "ſerpent's head *: the SON of the MOST HIGH, by "taking thy nature, ſubmitting to thy obligations, and "ſuffering death for thy ſins, ſhall fully repair thy loſs."

CHRIST, we ſee, undertook to execute the conditions. CHRIST was our repreſentative in this great tranſaction. For which reaſon he is ſtyled by St Paul, the ſecond Man †, and the ſurety of a better covenant ‡.——Our help being laid upon ONE that is ſo mighty; upon ONE that is ſo faithful; the covenant is ſaid to be in all things well ordered and ſure ‖: admirably well ordered indeed, for the comfort of the Chriſtian, and the ſecurity of his ſalvation.—"'Tis true," may he argue, "I cannot ful-"fil the conditions; and 'tis equally true, that this is not "required at my hands. The LORD JESUS CHRIST, "of his adorably-rich goodneſs, has performed all that "was conditionary §; and has eſtabliſhed, for me and "for his people, a valid title to the promiſes, the privi-"leges, and—Ther. "has thereby releaſed me from all obligation "to duty,"—Farewell then to our own obedience. No more occaſion for any holineſs of life. Nay, the ſluice is opened for an inundation of ungodlineſs.——Fine divinity truly! Should I not rather ſay, downright Antinomianiſm!

Aſp. No, my friend: CHRIST came not to deſtroy the law, but to fulfil ¶. He has fulfilled it, to the very uttermoſt, in his own perſon. He has alſo merited for us thoſe ſupplies of the SPIRIT, which alone can enable weak corrupt creatures to yield faithful and acceptable obedience.—Though our LORD JESUS died, and was obedient for the ungodly; though he finds us ungodly, when he juſtifies us; yet he never leaves his people in this abominable ſtate. On the contrary, he teaches them to deny all ungodlineſs and worldly luſts †.

Pray, let us conſider the tenor of this covenant; ſince you are ſo very apprehenſive of its conſequences.—"I "will put my laws into their minds, and on their hearts "will I write them ††. They ſhall diſcern ſuch a "beauty and glory in my precepts, as will engage was ſettled between them both; between the LORD JEHOVAH on one hand, and the man whoſe name is the BRANCH on the other.—Called a council, from the entire conſent, which actuated each party; and the tranſcendent wiſdom, diſplayed in the whole ſcheme.—The counſel of peace, becauſe of its ſovereign efficacy, to make peace with an offended GOD, peace in the accuſing conſcience, peace among people of jarring tempers and diſcordant principles.

---

* Heb. x. 5. 7. † John xvii.

‡ The recompence is ſpecified and promiſed, in another authentic copy of the ſame grand treaty, recorded, Iſ. xlix. 1. 6.

‖ Not I beg, but I will, John xvii. 24. Sic volo, ſic jubeo.

§ 1 John i. 9.

* Gen. iii. 15. † 1 Cor. xv. 48.

‡ Heb. vii. 22. ‖ 2 Sam. xxiii. 5.

§ Witſius, inſtead of repreſenting the covenant of grace as a chimerical thing, moſt affectionately and charmingly diſplays its excellency: Si quicquam ergo attentiſſima conſideratione dignum cenſeri debeat, ſane id fœdus gratiæ eſt. Hic via oſtenditur ad meliorem terreſtri paradiſum, et ad certiorem ſtabilioremque felicitatem, ea qua Adamus excidit. Hic nova ſpes perditis mortalibus affulget, quæ eo gratior eſſe debet, quo inexſpectatior obvenit. Hic conditiones offeruntur, quibus æterna ſalus annexa eſt; conditiones non a nobis rurſus præſtandæ, quod animum deſpondere faceret: ſed ab EO, qui vita non excederet, antequam vere dixerit, Conſummatum eſt.

De Oecon. lib. II. cap. i.

¶ Matth. v. 17. † Tit. ii. 12. †† Heb. viii. 10.

"their deſires, and win their affections: ſo that it ſhall "be no longer their burden, but their delight, even their "meat and drink, to do the will of their FATHER in "heaven."——This, this is one of the privileges purchaſed by our great MEDIATOR. And it ſeems wondrous ſtrange, that the purchaſe of an eſtate for you or me, ſhould be reckoned the ſure means to deprive us of the poſſeſſion, or débar us from the enjoyment.

How often is this weak ſurmiſe urged as an argument? All whoſe plauſibility is owing to a palpable miſtake, or an egregious fallacy; to a ſuppoſed ſeparation of things, which are abſolutely inſeparable; I mean our juſtification and our ſanctification *. You are a philoſopher, Theron. Try, if you can ſeparate gravity from the ſtone, or heat from the fire. If theſe bodies and their eſſential properties are indiſſolubly connected; ſo are a genuine faith and a conſcientious obedience. To ſuppoſe them diſunited, is as contrary to ſound divinity, as it would be contrary to true philoſophy, if you ſhould talk of a burning ſubſtance that has no warmth, or of a ſolid ſubſtance that has no weight.——Never therefore, my dear friend, repeat this ſtale objection; never propagate this ungrounded † clamour; nor adopt a cavil, which is altogether as unphiloſophical, as it is anti-evangelical.

Ther. We digreſs from the point. My principal objection is not ſatisfied. I was obſerving, that, according to your manner of ſtating the affair, ſalvation is no longer free, but founded upon works.——They are the works of the law, though CHRIST performs them. To maintain, that we are juſtified by theſe works, is to confound the difference beween the law and the goſpel.

Aſp. Though we ſhould admit your premiſes, we cannot acquieſce in your concluſion. The ſame righteouſneſs, by which we are juſtified, is both legal and evangelical. Legal, in reſpect to CHRIST, who was made under the law, that he might obey all its commands. Evangelical, in reſpect to us, who work not ourſelves, but believe in the great FULFILLER of all righteouſneſs.—This is much of the ſame nature, with that other momentous diſtinction in divinity, Salvation is freely given, yet dearly bought. Freely given, with regard to us; dearly bought, with regard to CHRIST. So we are juſtified by works, if you look forward to our SURETY; we are juſtified without works, if you caſt a retroſpective view on ourſelves.

* See Iſ. xlv. 24. 1 Cor. i. 30. 1 Cor. vi. 11. where theſe bleſſings walk hand in hand; and never were, never will, never can be parted.

† This puts me in mind of what Theodorus replied to Philocles; who was often inſinuating, that he preached licentious doctrine; becauſe he enlarged, with peculiar aſſiduity, upon faith in JESUS CHRIST; and frequently choſe ſuch texts as, Believe in the LORD JESUS, and thou ſhalt be ſaved.

"I preach ſalvation by JESUS CHRIST; and give me leave "to aſk, whether you know what ſalvation by CHRIST means?" —Philocles pauſed. He began to bluſh: would have eluded the queſtion, and declined an anſwer.—"No," ſaid Theodorus: "you muſt permit me to inſiſt upon a reply. Becauſe, if it be a "right one, it will juſtify me and my conduct: if it be a wrong "one, it will prove, that you blame you know not what; and "have more reaſon to inform yourſelf, than to cenſure others."

This diſconcerted him ſtill more. Upon which Theodorus proceeded. "Salvation by CHRIST means, not only a deliverance "from the guilt, but alſo from the power of ſin. He gave himſelf "for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity; redeem us from "our vain converſation, as well as deliver us from the wrath to "come.—Go now, Philocles, and tell the world, that, by teaching theſe doctrines, I promote the cauſe of licentiouſneſs. And "you will be juſt as rational, juſt as candid, juſt as true, as if you "ſhould affirm, that the firemen, by playing the engine, and pouring in water, burnt your houſe to the ground, and laid your "furniture in aſhes."

Theron was ſilent. Aſpaſio, after a ſhort interval, renewed the diſcourſe.—I know not, whether my friend is yielding to my arguments, or ſearching after objections; deliberating upon a capitulation, or muſtering his forces for a freſh ſally. However, let me take this opportunity of dropping a hint, and ſuggeſting a caution.

The grand reaſon, which inclines ſome people to reject this comfortable doctrine, lies concealed, if not in an abſolute diſbelief of our LORD's eternal glory and GODHEAD, yet in unſettled apprehenſions of it, or an habitual inattention to it.——If our SAVIOUR was not really GOD, as ſome writers, unhappily miſtaken themſelves, endeavour to perſuade the world, it would be a reaſonable practice, and entirely conſiſtent with their ſcheme, to diſavow the imputation of his righteouſneſs. Becauſe, upon ſuch a ſuppoſition, his obedience was no more than bounden duty; in which there could not be the leaſt pretence to merit, and which could be profitable to none but himſelf.——Whereas, if we verily believe him to be the incarnate GOD, his ſubmiſſion to the law becomes an act of voluntary humiliation. Which circumſtance, together with the tranſcendent dignity of his perſon, render his obedience, not meritorious only, but inexpreſſibly and infinitely meritorious.

As the blood of CHRIST is called GOD's own blood *; ſo the obedience of CHRIST was performed in the perſon of that adorable MEDIATOR, who is GOD over all †. He acted through the whole courſe of his life, and ſuffered death at the laſt, not merely as man, but as GOD-Man; as JEHOVAH-JESUS; EMMANUEL.——Let me entreat you to remember, nay, let me entreat you never to forget this all-important article of our faith. And may the SPIRIT of wiſdom give us an underſtanding, to know the weighty, the extenſive influence of ſo glorious a truth!

Ther. Far be it from me, to derogate from the dignity of our SAVIOUR's perſon, or to depretiate the merits of his mediatorial office. Place them as high as words can reach; exalt them as far as thought can ſoar; I ſtedfaſtly believe, you will ſtill fall ſhort, unmeaſurably ſhort, of their real worth.—But this conſideration ſeems to increaſe the abſurdity of your notion. For, if CHRIST's righteouſneſs, his very righteouſneſs be imputed; then the true believers are altogether as righteous, as CHRIST himſelf. Whereas, if you maintain, that his righteouſneſs is imputed only as to its effects, you will keep clear of this rock.

Aſp. This, I apprehend, will be like keeping clear of Scylla, only to fall foul upon Charybdis.——What are the effects of the MEDIATOR's righteouſneſs? Pardon of ſin, juſtification of our perſons, and the ſanctification of our nature. Shall we ſay, theſe effects theſe benefits are imputed?—To talk of their imputation, I think, is an affront to ſound ſenſe; as, I am ſure, to be put off with their imputation, would be a fatal diſappointment of our hopes.—All theſe benefits are, not imputed, but imparted; they are not reckoned to us, but are really enjoyed by us; ours they are, not barely in the divine eſtimation, but by proper and perſonal poſſeſſion.

Yet it does by no means follow, that believers are altogether as righteous as CHRIST himſelf, unleſs you can prove, that to be the reciever is, in all reſpects, the ſame as to be the author and finiſher ‡.—The righteouſneſs of CHRIST ariſes wholly from himſelf, the ſource of ours ſubſiſts in another. CHRIST's righteouſneſs is originally and abſolutely his own; whereas it is made ours in a way of favour and gracious imputation. Circumſtances theſe, which create a material difference, which yield room for a vaſt pre-eminence.

* Acts xx. 28. † Rom. ix. 5. ‡ Heb. xii. 2.

Ther.

Ther. But if CHRIST's perfect obedience be accounted ours, methinks, we ſhould have no more need of pardoning mercy, than CHRIST himſelf.

Aſp. Yes; becauſe, before this imputation, we were ſunk in guilt, and dead in ſins; becauſe, after it, we are defective in our duty, and in many things offend.

Ther. Does not this doctrine render the interceſſion of our SAVIOUR ſuperfluous? What occaſion have they for an advocate with the FATHER, whoſe righteouſneſs has neither blemiſh nor imperfection?

Aſp. They ſtand in need of an advocate; firſt, that they may be brought home to the REPAIRER of their breaches *, and made partakers of his righteouſneſs by a living faith. Next, that their faith may be preſerved, notwithſtanding all oppoſition, ſtedfaſt and immoveable; or rather, may be carried on, victorious and triumphant, even to the end.

Ther. You ſay, "CHRIST performed all that was "conditionary;" then he repented for us, and believed for us. This muſt be admitted in purſuance of your principles. But this is ſo wild a notion, ſo contrary to reaſon and ſcripture, that to mention it, is to refute it.

Aſp. CHRIST performed whatever was required by the covenant of works, both before it was violated, and after it had been tranſgreſſed. But neither repentance nor faith were comprehended in this inſtitution. It knew nothing of the one, and it would not admit of the other. —It was not therefore neceſſary, neither indeed was it poſſible, for our ſpotleſs and divine LORD, to repent of ſin, or believe in a SAVIOUR. But he did unſpeakably more, He put away ſin by the ſacrifice of himſelf †. He is himſelf the SAVIOUR of all the ends of the earth; and he has power to beſtow that bleſſed SPIRIT, which worketh faith and produceth repentance.

Ther. However, from what you have advanced, this will unavoidably follow,—That a man is to be juſtified, under the character of a notorious tranſgreſſor of the law; and juſtified under the character of a ſinleſs obſerver of the law. And what is this, but a glaring inconſiſtency?

Aſp. Not at all inconſiſtent, but abſolutely needful, if we conſider thoſe diſtinct branches of the divine law, the preceptive and the penal. Both which, in caſe of guilt already contracted, muſt neceſſarily be ſatisfied.——Not at all inconſiſtent, but perfectly harmonious, if we take in the two conſtituent parts of juſtification, the acquittance from guilt, and a title to life. The former ſuppoſes us to be tranſgreſſors of the law; and ſuch the higheſt ſaints in the world are. The latter requires us to be obſervers of the law; and ſuch muſt the inheritors of heaven be. —Much leſs is this inconſiſtent, if we conſider believers in their perſonal and relative capacity; as they are in themſelves, and as they are in their SURETY. Notorious tranſgreſſors in themſelves, they have a ſinleſs obedience in CHRIST. The conſciouſneſs of that, will be an everlaſting motive to humility; the belief of this, an inexhauſtible ſource of joy.

All this is no more inconſiſtent, than the union of a gloomy contexture, and a lightſome ſplendor, in thoſe detached clouds, which float amidſt the firmament. In themſelves, they are a louring and dark collection of vapours; by the impreſſion of the ſun-beams, they are fair and bright as the poliſhed ſilver.

Ther. After all, the imputation taught in ſcripture, is not the imputation of CHRIST's righteouſneſs, but of our own faith. Agreeably to the apoſtle's expreſs declaration, Abraham believed GOD, and it was imputed to him for righteouſneſs ‡.

Aſp. This objection admits the thing in diſpute, though it controverts the way and manner of obtaining it; admits the neceſſity of ſome active, poſitive righteouſneſs, in order to our juſtification. In this particular, I am glad to agree with my Theron: and in this particular, I believe, the generality of ſerious people agree with us both.——Whenever their conſciences are awakened, and ſeek to eſtabliſh the hope of eternal life, they conſtantly turn their eyes to ſome righteouſneſs; which, they apprehend, may, either in whole or in part, anſwer the demands of the law. Some look to their own ſincere obedience. Others call in to their ſuccour works of ſupererogation. My friend would aſſign this office to his faith.

Ther. Is this a proper anſwer to my objection, Aſpaſio? The text is point-blank againſt your tenet. You do wiſely therefore not to confront, but to elude the evidence.

Aſp. I did not intend it for an anſwer; only as on occaſional obſervation, which nevetheleſs has a pretty cloſe connection with the ſubject.——Neither would I uſe ſo mean a ſubterfuge, as to elude an argument, which I could not confute. If my friend had allowed me leiſure to explain myſelf, this ſhould have been my reply.

That a man is not juſtified by works, is a poſition moſt clearly demonſtrated, and a doctrine moſt zealouſly inculcated, by St Paul. That faith is a work *, exerted by the human mind, is equally certain. Unleſs therefore we would render the apoſtle inconſiſtent with himſelf, we muſt underſtand the paſſage in a qualified ſenſe. ——Why ſhould we not ſuffer him to be his own interpreter? Why ſhould we not take the narrative of his experience, for a comment on his doctrine? He declares, that the ground of his own comfort, the cauſe of his own juſtification, was, not the grace of faith, but the righteouſneſs which is of GOD by faith †. Not the act of believing, but that grand and glorious object of a ſinner's belief, the LORD our righteouſneſs.

Beſides, what was that faith of Abraham, to which the apoſtle refers; and which he propoſes, as the invariable model of our juſtification?—It was faith in the promiſed ſeed; in JESUS CHRIST the righteous ‡. It was a firm perſuaſion, that this illuſtrious PERSON ſhould ſpring from his loins; and be the author of forgiveneſs, acceptance, and ſalvation to himſelf, and to a multitude of believers, numberleſs as the ſtars of heaven. Let us tread in theſe ſteps of the holy patriarch, and we ſhall aſcribe little, aſcribe nothing to our faith, but all to the infinitely-excellent obedience of our REDEEMER.

Ther. Sure, Aſpaſio, you will not preſume to correct inſpiration! The inſpired writer makes no mention of a REDEEMER's obedience. He ſays expreſsly and poſitively,—It, that is, Abraham's faith, and not any thing elſe, was counted unto him for righteouſneſs.

Aſp. True, Theron; as thoſe windows are reckoned, are counted, the lights of your houſe. Why? Becauſe they illuminate? No; but becauſe they afford a paſſage to the illuminating rays. Through them, the firſt and beſt of elements is diffuſed into all your habitation.—— So we are ſaved by grace through faith; by grace imputing, through faith accepting, the righteouſneſs of JESUS CHRIST. Grace is the magnificent ſource of this nobler light; faith is the means of tranſmitting it into all the faculties of the ſoul.

When our LORD declares to the diſeaſed woman Thy faith hath made the whole ‖; how are we to underſtand his words? that the patient's belief, and not

* Iſ. lviii. 12. † Heb. ix. 26.

‡ Rom. iv. 3.

* So it is called by HIM, who knew what was in man, and what were the differences of things; This is THE WORK of GOD, that ye believe on him whom he hath ſent, John vi. 29.

† Phil. iii. 9.

‡ Compare Gen. xv. 5, 6. with Gal. iii. 16.

‖ Matth. ix. 22.

the

he agency of CHRIST, wrought the cure? To suppose this, would be extremely derogatory to the power of our great PHYSICIAN. And if we ascribe justification to the act of believing, this will be equally derogatory to the obedience of our great MEDIATOR. In the former case, CHRIST and his omnipotent operation were all in all. In the latter case, CHRIST and his infinite merit are all in all. In both cases, faith is only the eye to discern, or the hand to receive, the sovereign good.

I would farther observe, that faith is very particularly distinguished from the righteousness which justifies. We read of the righteousness which is by faith, which is of faith *. This form of expression puts an apparent difference between the evangelical faith, and the evangelical righteousness. Since whatever is by another, and of another, cannot, without the greatest violence to reason and language, be reckoned that other.——If faith was the cause of our acceptance with GOD, then we should be justified by a righteousness which is confessedly imperfect. For who has ever attained to the highest degree of this virtue? Or whose faith is not mixed with an alloy of unbelief?—If faith itself was the matter of our justification, I see not how boasting could be excluded; how the law could be magnified; or what reason the apostle could have to account all things, but the righteousness of CHRIST, meaner than dross †.

Say not, that we presume to correct inspiration. We only interpret the inspired word in an harmonious consistency with itself. This sense is agreeable to the prevailing doctrine, and to the current language of scripture.—To the prevailing doctrine; which is a believing in HIM who justifieth the ungodly. Sift and examine this expression; him who justifieth. You will find, that the work is CHRIST's; CHRIST's and no other's. The HOLY GHOST assigns not the least share, not so much as a co-efficiency, to any other cause. Faith therefore, if it presumes to arrogate this exalted prerogative, or if it pretends to the least part in this important business, is a sacrilegious usurper.—To the current language; as when GOD is called our fear ‡, our hope ‖, our joy §. In these places, the act is undoubtedly put for the object. So, in the passage before us, the act must denote the object of faith. It is to be understood, not absolutely, but as some divines speak, objectively, instrumentally, relatively.

Ther. In the name of wonder, what can you mean by this heap of harsh and obscure expressions! Let me entreat you, Aspasio, to speak in your own style, not in the dialect of Aquinas. I have an irreconcileable aversion to these scholastic terms. They are the barbarisms of divinity. I know but one use they are fitted to serve; that is, to perplex and puzzle a cause you cannot maintain. Somewhat like the liquor, which a certain fish, when closely pursued, is said to emit, by which the water is darkened, and the foe eluded.

Asp. This, Theron, is the meaning of our uncouth phrases: It is not faith itself, which justifies; but that righteousness, which faith continually views; which faith delightfully apprehends; and on which it finally terminates.

To be plainer still;—we are justified by faith, in the same manner as we are fed by the hand, or as we are said to drink of a cup. Neither the hand nor the cup are the cause of our sustenance, but the instruments, one of conveying it, the other of receiving it *.——If an apostle affirms, We are justified by faith; faith itself declares, In the LORD I have righteousness. Put these passages together, and you will have the true sense of our doctrine, and the true doctrine of the gospel.

When Themistocles fled from the malice of his countrymen, what recommended him to the protection of King Admetus?—Not his name; that was obnoxious.—Not his actions; they had been hostile.—But the person of the young prince; whom the distressed refugee caught up in his arms; and, charged with these credentials, presented himself to the royal parent †.——So faith recommends to GOD, and justifies the soul, not for itself, or its own worth; but on account of what it presents, and what it pleads.

Ther. Is not this a fanciful distinction, and an excessive refinement? Has it any foundation in scripture?

Asp. It is implied in almost all the representations of CHRIST, and all the descriptions of faith, which occur in the sacred writings.

CHRIST is likened to cloathing; and believers are said to have put on CHRIST ‡. Now, it cannot be the act of putting on, that covers our bodies, or keeps them warm; but the commodious garment which is worn.—He is compared to bread: I am the bread of life ‖. Shall we say, it is the act of eating, which strengthens the constitution, and recruits our spirits? No surely; but the food eaten and digested.——CHRIST was typified by the cities of refuge §; and sinners, by the obnoxious manslayer; who, if he fled to one of those privileged abodes, and there remained, was safe. No prosecution against him could be valid. He had nothing to fear from the avenger of blood. In this case, was it the bare act of flying that screened the criminal? By no means. This conveyed him to a place of security. But the place itself was his sanctuary, his asylum, his safeguard.

Faith is styled, a receiving of CHRIST ¶: As many as received him, to them gave he power, or granted the privilege, to become the sons of GOD. The office of

* Rom. ix. 30. Phil. iii. 9. The apostles, I believe, never make use of this phrase δικαιωθεῖσες ὑπερ πιστεως, or διαι την πιστιν, but εκ πιστεως or διαι της πιστεως. Not for, or on account of our faith, but by or through faith; making this grace, not the procuring cause, but only the instrument of application.—Such language as the former seems contrary to the sound words of our LORD JESUS CHRIST. Yet if Theron's sense of the text were admitted, the doctrine, contained in this unscriptural and offensive style, were the unavoidable consequence.

† Phil. iii. 8. The original is σκυβαλα—a word of the most contemptible meaning; it signifies the worthless scraps, and sordid offals, that are cast to the dogs. The reader may see this passage more fully explained in Letter V.

‡ Gen. xxxi. 42 53. ‖ Psal. lxxi. 5. Jer. xiv. 8. § Psal. xliii. 4.

* Though I am entirely of Theron's mind, and can by no means admire our scholastic divines, or their logical terms; yet a remark from Paræus, couched in this style, is so pertinent to the purpose, and so full an explication of the point, that it would be an injury to the cause, not to make it a part of my notes. And some readers, I apprehend, not much acquainted with this old-fashioned dialect, may be well enough pleased to view a specimen; may like it, as they do the rust of a medal, merely for its uncouthness and antiquity.

"Faith justifies," says my author, "not effectively, as working "an habitual righteousness in us: not materially, as though it "were itself the constituent cause of our justification; but it justifieth objectively, as it apprehendeth CHRIST; and instrumentally, as it applieth his righteousness."

† This, says Plutarch, was a custom peculiar to that country; was reckoned the most solemn method of supplicating favour; and seldom met with a repulse.—To which I may add, it is a custom that Christians should imitate, in all their addresses to the GOD and FATHER of our LORD JESUS CHRIST. When thus used, thus improved, it will never fail of success.

‡ Gal. iii. 27. ‖ John vi. 35. § Numb. xxxv. 13.

¶ John i. 12. See also Rom. v. 17; where a critic of accurate judgment, and delicate taste, (though little known in England), makes this remark on the word λαμβανοντες, Non justificat actus sumendi, quatenus est actus; sed illud quod sumitur aut apprehenditur. BENGELIUS in loc.——His annotations on the New Testament are comprised in a small quarto volume. They present the reader with many refined observations on the faith is, according to this definition, not to contribute its quota, much leſs to depoſit the whole ſum, but to take and uſe the ineſtimable gift.——Faith is called, a looking into JESUS *; in allufion, I ſuppoſe to the famous expedient provided for the wounded Iſraelites ‡. Our crucified LORD was prefigured by the brazen ſerpent; our guilt by the ſtings of the fiery ſerpents; and our faith by looking to the miraculous remedy. Did the healing power, I would aſk, reſide in the mere act of viewing? No: but in the emblem of a dying SAVIOUR, elevated on the pole, and ordained for the recovery of the people. Here all the efficacy was lodged. From hence it was all derived. The action of the eye, like the office of faith, was only to fetch home, and apply the ſanative virtue.

Once more; Faith is repreſented, as laying hold on GOD, our SAVIOUR ‡; leaning upon our BELOVED ‖; cleaving to the LORD §.—Pleaſe to take notice of yonder vine. Its ſhoots are weak, and its branches ſlimſy. Being abſolutely unable to ſupport themſelves, they are furniſhed with a very remarkable ſet of claſpers; which, like ſo many fingers, lay hold on the pegs of the wall, or faſten themſelves to the poles within their reach. Without ſuch a proviſion, the boughs muſt lie proſtrate on the ground, and be expoſed to the inſults of every foot. Whereas, by this kind contrivance of nature, ſo creeping a plant will climb into the air, and enjoy the breeze; ſo feeble a plant will ſtand out the winter, and defy the ſtorms.——An inſtructive admonition to ſinners! and no contemptible illuſtration of faith, eſpecially in its principal and moſt diſtinguiſhing employ! Thus let us apprehend the bleſſed JESUS; hold us faſt by our adored REDEEMER; cleave to his ineffable worthineſs, as thoſe twining tendrils, by repeated circumvolutions, adhere to their ſubſtantial ſupporters. Then ſhall we riſe, by merits not our own, from the moſt abject and miſerable condition, to a ſtate of everlaſting honour and joy.

Ther. Some people, I believe, would hardly forbear ſmiling at the peculiarity of your diction; and might be inclined to call your diſcourſe canting, rather than reaſoning. For my own part, I muſt acknowledge, that, as all your peculiar phraſes are derived from the ſcriptures, I hear them with reverence, rather than any diſpoſition to ſneer. Was my friend delivering a Latin oration, it would be a ſufficient warrant for any of his expreſſions, to prove that they came from the Ciceronian mint. And will it not be, at leaſt, an equally-ſufficient authority for any modes of ſpeech uſed in a theological eſſay, to allege that they bear the ſtamp of the Bible?

Though I make no objection to your language, I have yet another ſcruple with regard to your doctrine.—Do the ancient fathers adopt or inculcate this imputed righteouſneſs? If it was ſo important an article of our faith, ſurely it could not be unknown in thoſe early ages, which were ſo near the apoſtolical fountain. It would not have been omitted by thoſe zealous preachers, who choſe to endure all the rigours of perſecution, rather than renounce their holy profeſſion.

Aſp. I think, it were ſufficient to anſwer this queſtion, by aſking another,—Do the apoſtles, does the HOLY SPIRIT of GOD ſpeaking in ſcripture, inculcate this doctrine, or diſplay this privilege? If ſo, we need not be very ſolicitous for any farther authority. To the law, and to the teſtimony ¶, is our grand, our final appeal. Amidſt all the darkneſs and uncertainty, which evidently run through the writings of the beſt of men, this is our unſpeakable happineſs, that we have a more ſure word of prophecy; to which we do well to take heed *.

However, to be a little more particular:——It cannot be expected, that we ſhould find many paſſages in thoſe pious authors, very ſtrong and very explicit, upon the point. Becauſe in their days, it was not ſo profeſſedly oppoſed; and therefore could not be ſo exactly diſcuſſed, as in later ages. Nevertheleſs, they have left enough behind them, to avouch the ſubſtance of what we aſſert, That a man is not juſtified by any works, duties, or righteouſneſs of his own, but only by faith in JESUS CHRIST.——I cannot ſay, that I have charged my memory with their very words; and, for that reaſon, muſt not attempt at preſent to make any citation. But, when a proper opportunity offers, and their works are before me, I may poſſibly produce a few of their teſtimonies.

In the mean time, I can mention a ſet of writers, whoſe atteſtation will, I imagine, carry as much weight with my friend, as the united voice of the Greek and Latin fathers.

Ther. Who are they?

Aſp. Our venerable reformers. The homilies compoſed by thoſe excellent divines, are as expreſs to my purpoſe, as they are unexceptionable in their evidence. This is their language:—"The true underſtanding of "this doctrine, We be juſtified freely by faith without works, "is not, that this our act to believe, or this our faith in "CHRIST, doth juſtify us: for that were to count our"ſelves to be juſtified by ſome act or virtue that is with"in ourſelves. But the true meaning thereof is, that al"though we hear GOD's word, and believe it; although "we have hope and faith, charity and repentance, and "do never ſo many good works: yet we muſt renounce "the merit of all our virtues and good deeds, as things "that be far too weak and inſufficient, to deſerve remiſ"ſion of ſin, and our juſtification. We muſt truſt only "in GOD's mercy, and that ſacrifice which our High "Prieſt and Saviour JESUS CHRIST, the SON of GOD, "offered for us upon the croſs."

The homily ſubjoins a very appoſite illuſtration; which may conclude our diſcourſe with perfect propriety, and I hope with equal efficacy.—"So that as St "John Baptiſt, although he were never ſo virtuous and "godly a man, yet in the matter of forgiving ſin, he did "put the people from him, and appoint them unto "CHRIST, ſaying thus unto them, Behold! yonder is "the LAMB of GOD, which taketh away the ſins of the "world: even ſo, as great and as godly a virtue as the "lively faith is, yet it putteth us from itſelf, and remitteth us "unto CHRIST, for to have only by him remiſſion of "ſins or juſtification. So that our faith in CHRIST, as "it were, ſaith unto us thus, It is not I that take away "your ſins, but it is CHRIST only; and to him only I "ſend you for that purpoſe, forſaking therein all your "good words, thoughts, and works, and only putting "your truſt in CHRIST †."

Ther. If there be any tolerable ſenſe of the notion under debate, I think, it muſt be underſtood as follows.—CHRIST's performance of the law of his mediation, or in other words, his unſinning obedience to the moral law, and the ſpotleſs ſacrifice of himſelf to the vindictive juſtice of GOD; theſe are the only valuable conſideration, on account of which the gracious GOD reſtores guilty creatures to a ſtate of acceptance with his divine MAJESTY.

Aſp. I am far from denying your propoſition. I rejoice in the propriety of my Theron's ſentiments. May the elegancies of the ſtyle, and ſublimity of the doctrines. They are a pattern of the conciſe manner; and, which is perhaps the crowning excellency, they all along indicate a heart warm and glowing with the love of its ſubject.

* Heb. xii. 2. † Numb. xxi. 8. ‡ Iſ. xxvii. 5.

‖ Cant. viii. 5. § Acts xi. 23.

¶ Iſ. viii. 20.

* 2 Pet. i. 19.

† See the ſecond part of the Homily on ſalvation.

his faith, which is thus far advanced, be carried on by grace, till it is completed in glory!—That unsinning obedience, and that spotless sacrifice, are indeed the only valuable, they are also the truly, or rather the infinitely valuable consideration, which has fully merited for us the remission of sins, and the enjoyment of life; and this not only from the gracious, but even from the just, the faithful, the righteous GOD.

But then, they must be imputed, in order to furnish us with a claim, and invest us with a right, to the purchased privileges.—Suppose them not imputed; and what becomes of our interest in them? They are like a medicine prepared, but not applied. Suppose them imputed; and they lay a firm, an apparent, a rational foundation, for every pleasing hope, and for every heavenly blessing.

Ther. I fear, I have acknowledged too much.——My thoughts fluctuate. My mind is unsettled.——I would not withstand the truth. I would not disbelieve any doctrine of the gospel. Yet—what shall I say? While I listen to your reasoning, I am half a convert. When I recollect the objections, I revert to my first opinion.

Of this, however, I am convinced, That human righteousness is insufficient for our justification. Here your arguments have carried their point. I shall henceforth place my hopes of everlasting happiness, not upon any works of my own, but upon the free goodness, and unbounded beneficence, of the Supreme BEING; pursuant to that maxim of scripture, The gift of GOD is eternal life.

Asp. You do right, Theron, to expect eternal life as the gift of GOD, not as the wages of your own obediential service. But be pleased to remember, that all the gifts of grace, though perfectly free to sinners, are founded upon a grand and inestimable price, paid by their SAVIOUR.——Are they entirely absolved from guilt? It is because CHRIST gave his life for their ransom.——Are they heard with acceptance when they pray? It is because their exalted HIGH PREIST intercedes in their behalf.—Are they completely justified, and instated in endless bliss? It is because their REDEEMER's consummate obedience, is the glorious equivalent for this and every other blessing.——Therefore, when you mention eternal life as the gift of GOD, you should not forget to add with the holy apostle, through JESUS CHRIST our LORD*.——Well, my Theron; what say you farther?——Is your quiver emptied? are your scruples satisfied? May I interpret this silence, as an act of assent?

Ther. Observe, how the ranunculuses, on yonder gay parterre, have contracted their spreading tufts, and the tulips have closed their expanded cups; while all the neighbouring flowers have shut their ivory doors, or drawn their velvet curtains.——Such is the state of my thoughts. They are all bent inwards; collected in themselves; and pondering upon your discourse. Which has inclined me, before I was aware, to contemplate, rather than talk.—You will excuse my thoughtfulness, Aspasio. Or, if it wants an apology, you must blame yourself. For, had your reasons been less cogent, my attention had been more disengaged.

* Rom. iv. 20.

Asp. My dear Theron, I shall only wish, in allusion to your own simile, and in the language of the best of books, that these truths may distil as the dew * upon your mind, and lie all night upon your branches †. This, I am persuaded, is the only way to have all your comforts green before the sun, and all your virtues flourish as an herb. Whereas, under the influence of any other faith, I am afraid, they will be as the garden that is visited with a drought, or as the leaves that are smitten with a blast.

Ther. I shall attentively consider, both your doctrine, and your arguments. Which that I may execute, with more ease, and to better purpose, be pleased to sum up, in a few words, the substance of what has passed.——This done, it will be time to withdraw. The flowers, you see, are our monitors. They have folded up their robes, and veiled their beauties. A custom which they seldom use, till the rising damps render it unsafe for their master to be among them; and the surrounding gloom renders it difficult for his eye to distinguish them.

Asp. You could not oblige me more, than by giving me such a command.——We trust for salvation,

Not on our own external duties. This were to build our house upon the sand; which, when the rains descend, when the torrents pour, when the winds blow with tempestuous violence, will certainly fall; and bury the builder, with all his vain hopes, in irretrievable ruin.

Not on the sincerity of our hearts. This, if opposed to CHRIST, and made the rival of his merits, will be a "despised broken idol." Despised by the infinitely sublime and majestic RULER of the world. Broken, with regard to the stress we lay, or the confidence we repose, on so deceitful a prop. No more able to stand in the judgment of the great day, than Dagon was able to maintain his station, before the ark of the LORD GOD of hosts ‡.

Not upon our faith. This is often weak, as the rickety child; sometimes quite faint, like the person in a deep swoon; always imperfect, like every other performance of ours. Alas! to what afflicting fears, to what grievous despondency should I, for my part, be perpetually liable, if my own faith was the ground of my justification? Blessed be the FATHER of mercies! we have a surer support. Not upon faith, not upon faith, but upon its gracious AUTHOR, and glorious OBJECT, is the hope of Israel founded. Yet

Not upon our LORD's righteousness considered only as passive; but upon his active and passive obedience united: all that he did, in conformity to the commands of the law, and all that he suffered in submission to its penalty. Both which, immensely dignified by his divine nature, are a basis for our faith, which nothing can shake; are a foundation for our affiance, which can never be removed.——Nothing else, in any creature, or in all worlds, could expiate the least sin. This not only expiates all sin, but gives a title to every blessing;—to the blessings of grace, and of glory; of evangelical holiness, and everlasting happiness.

* Deut. xxxii. 2. † Job xxix. 19.

‡ 1 Sam. v. 3. 4.

DIALOGUE XI.

Asp. I Have often purposed, and as often forgot, to ask my Theron,—what picture he was so attentively surveying, when I stole unperceived upon him, in this favourite arbour *.

Ther. I was indulging a pensive pleasure, in viewing the ruins, and contemplating the fate of Babylon,—that renowned and opulent city! once the residence of the Assyrian monarchs, and capital of one of the greatest empires in the world. The draught I held in my hand, represented some of its remains. And indeed this was the very last subject which employed my thoughts. In the morning, my son brought me his observations upon the scene, which I have just now been revising.

For I frequently set him to exercise his judgment, or display his fancy, on remarkable passages which occur in history.—He was lately commissioned to determine mine a controverſy between the illuſtrious Leonidas, and the leſs celebrated Pædaretus. This was the point in debate, Which of them diſcovered the trueſt generoſity of ſpirit, and the moſt heroic love of their country? The former, who willingly ſacrificed his life in its defence? or the latter, who, when he was candidate for a ſeat among the three hundred, and loſt his election, inſtead of being chagrined or diſſatisfied, went home unfeignedly rejoicing, "that there were found in Sparta three hundred "men more worthy than himſelf?"—The taſk of this day was, to give a deſcriptive picture of thoſe wonderful ruins.

* See Dialogue V.

Aſp. Pray let me have the pleaſure of hearing the young gentleman's performance.

Ther. It will be too long, and too puerile; tire your patience, and offend your taſte.

Aſp. I don't uſe to make either of theſe complaints, when I am entertained with Theron's compoſitions. And, as the ſon has ſo much of his father's genius, I am not at all apprehenſive of any ſuch diſappointment.——We have a moſt agreeable ſituation, and more than an hour's leiſure. I muſt therefore repeat my requeſt.

Ther. 'Tis true, I have retouched the ſketch; which may render it ſomewhat more tolerable. And ſince you perſiſt in your demand, I will read the paper.——Only deſiring ſome allowance for a little luxuriancy of imagination; which, in young writers, it may be adviſeable to indulge, rather than repreſs; as age and judgment will, probably, come with the pruning-knife, and make the proper retrenchments.——I muſt farther obſerve, that, contrary to the cuſtom which prevails in our ſchools, I generally chuſe to have him expreſs his ſentiments in Engliſh: becauſe it is in this language he muſt communicate his own, and become acquainted with the ideas of others: becauſe to acquire ſome good degree of propriety and fluency in this his native tongue, will be incomparably more ſerviceable, than to ſpeak Latin with the Terentian elegance, or to write it with the Ciceronian copiouſneſs.

Is this Babylon? the glory of kingdoms! the beauty of the Chaldean excellency!

Where once the gorgeous eaſt, with richeſt hand,
Shower'd on her kings barbaric pearl and gold.

How is ſhe fallen! fallen from the height of magnificence, into the abyſs of confuſion! What was once the object of univerſal admiration, is now a ſpectacle of aſtoniſhment and horror.

The palace, where Majeſty ſat enthroned like ſome terreſtrial deity, is a heap of rubbiſh; no longer diſtinguiſhed by an air of ſuperior elegance, but by ſtronger and more melancholy marks of departed dignity *.——Where the nobles of that ſumptuous court trailed along the marble pavements their robes of purple and embroidery, there the creſted ſnake hiſſes, or the fierce envenomed adder glides.

How changed is the hoſpitable hall, and how diſgraced the room of ſtate! The firſt offered a conſtant and cordial reception to the welcome gueſts; in the laſt, the great king gave audience to his cringing, his adoring vaſſals. Now thorns over-run the circumference, and "deſolation ſits in the threſhold of them both."——Where are the roofs of ivory, painted with vermilion, and adorned with ſculpture? the radiant roofs, whoſe lamps of burniſhed ſilver, pendent in many a blazing row, yielded light as from another ſky? Swept from their foundations, they lie clotted with defiling dirt, or claſped with tangling briers.——Muſic no longer pours her harmony, through the ſpacious and extended apartment; but the night-owl, neſtling in ſome clift of the ruins, ſcreams her harſh and portentous diſſonance. Joy no longer leads up the ſprightly dance, amidſt the luſtre of that artificial day; but the ſolitary bat flits in ſilent circles, or flaps her ſooty wings. All thoſe gay delights,—let the ſons of ſenſuality hear the tale, and take warning from the cataſtrophe! all thoſe gay delights are extinguiſhed, like one of their feebleſt tapers, which, having illuminated for a while the feſtive aſſembly, ſhone itſelf to the edges of the exhauſted ſocket, and in a moment flaſhed into ſtench and darkneſs.

The walls, though cemented with bitumen *, and conſolidated into the firmneſs of a flint, are become like the broken bubble. There was a time, when the inhabitants, confiding in the ſtrength of their bulwarks, and the multitude of their towers, looked down with fearleſs diſdain on the army of beſiegers. But now the prophet's threatening is moſt terribly fulfilled: The fortreſs of the high fort of thy walls hath HE brought down, laid low, and brought to the ground, even to the duſt †.——Where are the gates, the grand and glittering gates ‡, which admitted the triumphant hoſts, or poured forth their numerous legions againſt the day of battle? Not one trace remains, to tell the inquiſitive ſtranger, "Here the ſpacious ave-"nues opened: Here the maſſy portals roſe."—Commodious walks, in which the cluſtering merchants raiſed the buſy hum, and planned the ſchemes of commerce; ample ſtreets, in which Induſtry drove the toiling car, or ſmote the ſounding anvil; are ſhrouded with matted graſs, or buried beneath the rankeſt weeds. Silence, in both places, a ſullen ſilence reigns; and inactivity, a death-like inactivity, ſlumbers.

What is become of thoſe hanging-gardens, which, for curious contrivance and ſtupendous workmanſhip, were never equalled in any nation under heaven? Terraces, that overlooked the talleſt houſes! Parterres, exalted to the clouds, and opening their flowery beauties in that ſtrange region! Groves, whoſe very roots were higher than the tops of the loftieſt trees ‖!—They are now ſmitten by a dreadful blaſt. Their beauty is decayed, like a withered leaf. Their very being is gone, like the chaff of the ſummer threſhing-floors; which the wind carrieth away, and its place is no where found §. What was once the favourite retreat of a queen, and the admiration of the whole world, is now a neſt for poiſonous reptiles, and a kennel for ravenous beaſts.—The traveller, inſtead of expatiating with delight, where this penſile paradiſe flouriſhed, is ſtruck with horror; keeps at a trembling diſtance; and, ſurveying the rueful ſpot, cries out, Righteous art thou, O LORD, and true are thy judgments!

Here ſtands an obeliſk, maimed by the ſtroke of revolving years, like a mountain-oak ſhattered by the flaming bolt. Another, all unhinged and quite diſjointed, ſeems to tremble before every blaſt that blows. ——There the pyramid ¶, firm as the ſolid rock, and

* Benjamin, a Jew of Tudela, in his Itinerary, written about the year of our LORD 1170, tells us,—"That he was upon the place "where this city formerly ſtood, and found it wholly deſolated "and deſtroyed. Only ſome ruins of Nebuchadnezzar's palace "were ſtill remaining; but men were afraid to go near them, by "reaſon of the many ſerpents and ſcorpions, that were then in "the place."

* The walls were built of brick, and cemented with a glutinous kind of ſlime, which binds more firmly than any mortar, and ſoon grows harder than the bricks or ſtones themſelves.—Theſe fortifications were, according to the account given by Herodotus, in breadth eighty-ſeven feet, in height three hundred and fifty feet, and reckoned to be abſolutely impregnable: inſomuch that the inhabitants, when beſieged by Cyrus, inſulted him from the walls, and laughed at his attempt, as a vain impracticable project.—Οι δε εν των τειχων καθεζομενοι την πολιορκιαν. ΧΕΝΟΡΗ. Inſt. Cyr. lib. VII.

† Iſ. xxv. 12.

‡ There were no leſs than an hundred gates, all of ſolid braſs. Hence it is, that when JEHOVAH promiſes to make Cyrus maſter of Babylon, he ſpeaks in this very remarkable and particularizing manner, I will break in pieces before thee the gates of braſs, Iſ. xlv. 2.

‖ Penſiles horti ſunt, ſummam murorum altitudinem æquantes, multarumque urborum umbra et proceritate amœni. CURT. lib. V.

§ Dan. ii. 35.

¶ Strabo calls the temple of Belus a pyramid, lib. XV. But if ſtable, one would have thought, as the everlaſting hills, wrenched from its mighty baſe, is tumbled head-long in enormous ruin, and has cruſhed many a ſtructure by its fall.——See yonder the triumphal arch, which exhibited, through its extenſive and beautiful bend, an advantageous view of the firmament. It was, once, the graceful memorial of ſome celebrated victory; it is now converted into a trophy of a very different kind. Juſt retaining two uneven, battered, ragged ſtumps, it ſerves to recognize the deſtructive ravages of time.——Spires, that pierced the clouds, and ſhot into the ſkies, are levelled with the trodden ſoil. On pinnacles, to which the ſtrong-winged bird could hardly ſoar, the grovelling worm crawls, and the ſordid ſnail leaves her ſlimy track.——Baths, that contained the tranſlucent wave, and were ſo often perfumed with odoriferous unguents, are choked with filth; the grand colonnade, that ſurrounded them, is ſhivered to pieces, and the elevated dome, that covered them, is daſhed to the ground.——The public aqueducts, which conveyed cleanlineſs and health along their cryſtal currents, are degenerated into a ſtagnating lake; while croaking vermin ſwarm among the weeds, and noiſome exhalations ſteam from the mire.

Auguſt and ſtately temples, that ſeemed to affect the neighbourhood of heaven *, are ſunk to the very duſt.—Who can point the ſpot, where the conſecrated victim bled, or the ſacred fire glowed? where the ſceptered image liſted its majeſtic head, or the venerating crouds bowed the ſuppliant knee †? Degraded are thoſe ſplendid vanities, and caſt (according to the denunciation of the ſacred oracles) to the bats and to the moles ‡. All is low; low as the ſpurious dignity of the idols they complimented; low as the ſtraw that is trodden down for the dunghill.

Sepulchres, the once venerable repoſitories of the dead, awful manſions, deſtined to everlaſting concealment, are cleft and rent aſunder. They diſcloſe the horrid ſecrets of the pit, and frightfully yawn upon the blaſted day. Poſſibly ſome ravenous creature lurks within, that has already rifled the tomb of its hero; given the putrid bones a new grave; and waits only for the approach of night, to repeat his funeral dirge in yells.—Inſcriptions, deſigned to perpetuate ſome illuſtrious character, or eternize ſome heroic deed, are blended in the promiſcuous maſs. In vain would the prying antiquary ſearch for a legible or conſiſtent ſentence; in vain attempt to find the memorable names of a Nebuchadnezzar or a Nimrod. Theſe, though engraved on plates of braſs, or cut in blocks of marble, are loſt amidſt the ſtupendous lumber; as prints on the unſteady ſand are effaced, when returning tides ſmooth the furrowed beach.

Here and there a ſtraggling cypreſs riſes, as it were with funeral ſolemnity, amidſt the waſte §. Somewhat like the black plumes, nodding over the mournful hearſe, they augment the ſadneſs of the ſcene, and throw a deeper horror on all below.——No human voice is heard, nor human face ſeen, amidſt theſe deſolated heaps. Too dreary, even for the roam of hoary hermit, or the cell of gloomy monk. Abandoned they are, totally abandoned, to the dominion of ſolitude; or elſe to the unmoleſted reſort of ſhaggy monſters, and feathered hags; which ſtun the midnight-hours,—theſe, with their importunate ſkrieks,—thoſe, with their execrable howls.

See! to what a deſpicable, what an abhorred ſtate, the proudeſt monuments of earthly grandeur, and the moſt coſtly apparatus for earthly felicity, may be reduced! A pregnant and alarming proof, that for laſting honour, or real happineſs,

They build too low, who build beneath the ſkies.

Aſp. I very much approve the choice of your ſubject. The ruins of Perſepolis would have given us a view of magnificence in abaſement. The ruins of Palmyra might have ſhewed us elegance in the duſt. But the ruins of Babylon diſplay at once, magnificence and elegance under an eclipſe, ſcripture and revelation in their glory.——The utter deſtruction of this city, which was abſolutely unequalled * in every inſtance of dignity, and ſeemingly invincible by an enemy, muſt certainly have been looked upon as the moſt improbable of events. Nevertheleſs its utter deſtruction was decreed by JEHOVAH, and denounced by his prophet ſeveral ages before the execution took place. The awful ſentence was not only denounced, but recorded, and is ſtill remaining, in the public archives of our religion.

Ther. Where is this ſentence recorded, and remaining?

Aſp. In the prophecy of Iſaiah; and not only recorded, but in the moſt circumſtantial manner, and with a minute detail of the horrible deſolations. Theſe are the words of the inſpiried writer; BABYLON, the glory of kingdoms, the beauty of the Chaldees excellency, ſhall be as when GOD overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah. It ſhall never be inhabited; neither ſhall it be dwelt in from generation to generation: neither ſhall the Arabian pitch tent there; neither ſhall the ſhepherds make their fold there. But wild beaſts of the deſert ſhall lie there, and their houſes ſhall be full of doleful creatures, and owls ſhall dwell there, and ſatyrs ſhall dance there. And the wild beaſts of the iſland ſhall cry in their deſolate houſes and dragons in their pleaſant palaces †.

In the two firſt ſentences, is comprized the moſt finiſhed picture of proſperity and grandeur. The glory of kingdoms: beyond every other royal ſeat, ſpacious, ornamented, and wealthy; revered by many conquered and tributary dominions, as their miſtreſs, and their ſovereign. ——The beauty of the Chaldees excellency; the Chaldeans, who excelled all the nations of the earth in riches, in ſplendor, and in power, even they gloried in this wonderful city. This was the higheſt honour of the moſt illuſtrious, and chief ſtrength of the moſt victorious people; faireſt, where all was conſpicuouſly fair; nobleſt, where all was ſupereminently noble.——Yet this diſtinguiſhed, this crowning city, ſhall, at the blaſting of the breath of JEHOVAH, be totally, totally deſtroyed, even as when GOD overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah.

if the critics in hiſtory ſhould queſtion or deny the exiſtence of pyramids among the Babylonians, for this and other liberties uſed by our young declaimer, Horace ſhall make an apology:

——Pictoribus atque poetis
Quidlibet audendi ſemper fuit æqua poteſtas.

* A tower in the temple of Belus, and dedicated to his worſhip, was moſt amazingly high. It conſiſted of eight piles of building, erected one above another. It aroſe to the elevation of ſix hundred feet perpendicular; and is thought, by the learned Bochart, to have been part of that ſuperb work, which was began when the whole earth was of one language; but miſcarried, or rather was providentially defeated, by the confuſion of tongues. In this ſtructure, there were doubtleſs very ſtrong traces of that arrogant boaſt, Let us build us a city and a tower, whoſe top may reach to heaven, Gen. xi. 4.

† Alluding to that prodigious inſtance of profuſeneſs, oſtentation, and idolatrous madneſs, the golden image ſet up in the plain of Dura: whoſe height (that is, the height of the ſtatue and pedeſtal taken together) was threeſcore cubits, Dan. iii. 1. See PRIDEAUX's Connection, vol. I. p. 95. &c. p. 567. &c.

‡ Iſ. ii. 20. ‖ Iſ. xxv. 10.

§ Ranwolf, a German traveller, who paſſed that way, in the year of our LORD 1574, ſays, "This country is ſo dry and barren, that "it cannot be tilled; and ſo bare, that I ſhould have doubted, "whether the potent Babylon did ſtand there, if I had not known it "by ſeveral ancient and delicate antiquities, that are ſtill ſtanding "hereabout in great deſolation."

* Unequalled—repreſented therefore by the golden head, in Nebuchadnezzar's prophetic dream, and emblematic image, Dan. ii. 38.—and deſcribed by an ancient author, as omnium quas unquam ſol aſpexit urbium maxima. PAUSAN. in Arcad.

† Iſ. xiii. 19. 20. 21. 22.

In

In describing the overthrow, the prophet is equally admirable; and rises, by a most judicious gradation, into all the pomp of horror. q. d. "Now, indeed, it "is thronged with citizens; but the hour is coming, "when it shall be entirely depopulated, and not so much "as a single inhabitant left.——Lest you should think, "that in process of time it may be re-edified, and "again abound with joyful multitudes, it shall never be "inhabited more; no, never be dwelt in any more, from "generation to generation; but shall continue a dismal "waste, through all succeeding ages.—A waste so dis-"mal, that none of the neighbouring shepherds shall make "their fold, or find so much as an occasional shelter for "their flocks, where kings, grandees, and crouds of "affluent citizens, reposed themselves in profound tran-"quillity. Even the rude and roving Arabian shall not "venture to pitch his tent, nor be able to procure for "himself the poor accommodation of a night's lodging "where millions of polite people basked in the sunshine "of profuse prosperity.—In short, it shall neither be "habitable, nor accessible; but a dwelling-place for dragons, "an astonishment and a hissing *. What was once the gol-"den city †, and the metropolis of the world, shall be "an everlasting scene of desolation and horror; a fearful "monument of divine vengeance, and an awful admo-"nition to human pride."

All this is foretold in scripture; and, though to human appearance impossible, though to human apprehension incredible, was, in the appointed time, most minutely accomplished. The memorials and evidences of the accomplishment remain to this very day ‡. They are so authentic, that the most inquisitive curiosity cannot doubt; and so incontestable, that the most bigotted incredulity will not deny. And should not this teach us, to reverence the authority, to admire the wisdom, and confide in the promises, of that heavenly volume?

I know, you are not fond of compliments, Theron. Therefore, instead of speaking my opinion of your son's performance, I will endeavour to return your favour.—You have entertained me with an account of the most memorable ruins extant in the material world. Let me present my friend with a picture of ruins, no less remarkable, far more deplorable, and unspeakably interesting to us all. I shall give it, in the colouring of a great master; whose works, this very day, I happened to be perusing.

The passage displays a doctrine of the utmost importance in the Christian scheme; and by one of the finest pieces of imagery, to be met with in elegant writing. I think, it may be looked upon as a practical improvement of Eugenio's declamation. It pleased me so much, that I transcribed it; and I make no apology for reading it, because I shall expect your thanks.—Only let me hint, that it considers the human soul, as originally an habitation of GOD through the SPIRIT; and then, speaking of its fallen condition, proceeds.

"That he hath withdrawn himself, and left this his temple "desolate, we have many sad and plain proofs before "us. The stately ruins are visible to every eye, that bear "in their front (yet extant) this doleful inscription; "HERE GOD ONCE DWELT. Enough appears of "the admirable frame and structure of the soul of man, to "shew the divine presence did sometime reside in it; "more than enough of vitious deformity, to proclaim he "is now retired and gone. The lamps are extinct, the "altar overturned; the light and love are now vanished, "which did the one shine with so heavenly brightness; "the other burn with so pious fervour. The golden can-"dlestick is displaced, and thrown away as an useless "thing, to make room for the throne of the prince of "darkness. The sacred incense, which sent rolling up in "clouds its rich perfumes, is exchanged for a poisonous "hellish vapour; and here is, instead of a sweet savour, a "stench. The comely order of this house is turned all "into confusion; the beauties of holiness into noisome im-"purities; the house of prayer to a den of thieves, and that "of the worst and most horrid kind; for every lust is a "thief, and every theft is sacrilege. Continual rapine and "robbery is committed upon holy things. The noble "powers, which were designed and dedicated to divine "contemplation and delight, are alienated to the service of "the most despicable idols, and employed unto the vilest "intuitions and embraces; to behold and admire lying "vanities, to indulge and cherish lust and wickedness.

"There is not now a system, an entire table of cohe-"rent truths to be found, or a frame of holiness, but some "shivered parcels. How many attempts have been "made, since that fearful fall and ruin of this fabric, to "compose again the truths of so many several kinds in-"to their distinct orders, and make up frames of science "or useful knowledge! and after so many ages, nothing "is finished in any kind. Sometimes truths are mis-"placed, and what belongs to one kind, is transferred to "another, where it will not fitly match; sometimes false-"hood inserted, which shatters or disturbs the whole "frame. And what with much fruitless pains is done by "one hand, is dashed in pieces by another; and it is the "work of a following age to sweep away the fine-spun "cobwebs of a former. And those truths which are of "greatest use, are least regarded; their tendency and "design are overlooked, or they are so loosened and "torn off, that they cannot be wrought in, so as to take "hold of the soul; but hover as faint ineffectual notions, "that signify nothing. Its very fundamental powers "are shaken and disjointed, and their order towards one "another confounded and broken. So that what is "judged considerable, is not considered; what is recom-"mended as eligible and lovely, is not loved and chosen. "Yea, the truth which is after godliness, is not so much "disbelieved, as hated, held in unrighteousness; and "shines as too feeble a light, in that malignant dark-"ness, which comprehends it not. You come, amidst "all this confusion, as into the ruined palace of some "great prince, in which you see here the fragments "of a noble pillar, there the shattered pieces of some "curious imagery; and all lying neglected and use-"less amongst heaps of dirt. He that invites you to "take a view of the soul of man, gives you but "such another prospect, and doth but say to you, "Behold the desolation, all things rude and waste. So "that should there be any pretence to the divine pre-"sence, it might be said, If GOD be here, why is it "thus? The faded glory, the darkness, the disorder, "the impurity, the decayed state in all respects of this

* Jer. li. 37. † Is. xiv. 4.

‡ It is said, by a very learned author, Babylonem usque eo concidisse, ut nemo cum fiducia illius locum amplius demonstrare queat. i. e. "Babylon is now so totally destroyed, that the most skilful geo-"graphers cannot, with certainty, determine the place on which "it stood."

Should any of my readers prefer this account, I shall neither litigate the point, nor be anxious for the consequence. It may indeed rank Eugenio's composition among the works of fancy. But it will realize Aspasio's assertion, and corroborate his argument. If we find no memorials of the city, we have the most evident verification, and the fullest accomplishment, of the prophecy.

If this be the case, it gives an amazing emphasis to that just, but terrible decree, issued from the supreme tribunal; I will sweep it with the besom of destruction, saith the LORD of hosts. "I "will not lay it in ruins, but extirpate it from the earth. I will "efface the very footsteps of its existence; and not leave so much "as a fragment or a trace of the magnificent, but wicked Babylon. "Is. xiv. 23.

"temple, too plainly ſhew, The GREAT INHABI-"TANT is gone *."

Ther. Your painter, I muſt own, is a maſter in his profeſſion; and ſeems to have a peculiar talent for a night-piece.—But why, I beſeech you, ſo much of his ſhades and ſolemnity? Has he no colours, but the dark? no lineaments, but the four? Could he not allow us one bright tint, one ſmiling feature, when he was copying the nobleſt being in this ſublunary world?—Is it for the honour of the great GREATOR, to give ſuch a deformed draught of his moſt finiſhed workmanſhip?

Aſp. It reflects no kind of diſhonour upon the architect of Babylon, that its palaces are fallen, its edifices demoliſhed, and its walls levelled with the ground. They might have been built with the exacteſt ſymmetry, and once embelliſhed with every graceful ornament, notwithſtanding the ſtroke of violence, or the ſap of years, have now reduced them to heaps of rubbiſh.—The human ſoul, when recent from the inſpiration of the ALMIGHTY, was bright with knowledge, amiable with virtue, and in every reſpect excellent. But how—to ſpeak in the language of the mourning prophet, a language never more pertinent than on the preſent occaſion,—how is the gold become dim! how is the moſt fine gold changed!

Ther. Man's ſoul is rational and eternal; is the offſpring of the DEITY, and capable of reſembling its MAKER.

Aſp. What Milton allows to the fallen archangel, I can readily allow to fallen man:

——He had not loſt
All his original brightneſs.

The grand and diſtinguiſhing faculties of the ſoul remain. Juſt as, when a fountain is poiſoned, the waters continue to flow; but flow no longer with health, flow rather with death in the ſtream. Theſe very faculties, unleſs renewed and regulated by the influence of religion, muſt be our preſent miſery, and will prove our everlaſting curſe.——"The ſoul," you ſay, "is rational, "is eternal." And do not even the devils poſſeſs the powers of reaſon? Is not their exiſtence alſo of an endleſs duration? Yet are they, of all creatures, the moſt execrable and the moſt miſerable.

You call the human ſoul the offspring of the DEITY. And you call it properly. Muſt we not then adopt the prophet's exclamation, "How art thou fallen, O Lucifer, "ſon of the morning †! How art thou degenerated, O "man, ſon of the MOST HIGH! Thy glorious origi-"nal ſerves only to ſet forth, with more glaring evidence, "thy deplorable apoſtaſy."

Capable, you add, of reſembling its MAKER. This, I acknowledge, is a valuable prerogative. In this the infernal ſpirits have no ſhare. But this capacity will always lie dormant, will never awaken into act, never be eſtabliſhed in habit, unleſs almighty GRACE intervene.

Ther. The moſt celebrated philoſophers of antiquity, frequently exhort their readers to follow nature, as a certain guide to true excellence.——Many eloquent writers of our own country enlarge upon the dignity of human nature; and from this topic derive very forcible arguments, for a correſpondent dignity both of ſentiment and behaviour.—Upon what can thoſe principles of the ancient ſages, and of our later moraliſts, be founded?

Aſp. Indeed, Theron, I am at a loſs to tell. If they have any foundation, it is merely imaginary; not laid in truth, nor confirmed by experience.——According to my apprehenſion, they invert the order of things. They take that for a poſtulatum, which ought to be ranked among the deſiderata; and make an axiom of a mere figment.

Had man continued as he was created, to act according to nature, and according to the law of GOD, would have been one and the ſame thing. For which reaſon, we find no precepts of religion, no delineation of morality, given to Adam in paradiſe. Becauſe religion and morality were engraven on his heart; or rather, they reſulted from the very bent and tendency of his perfect frame.——But ſince the fall it is quite otherwiſe.

Ther. Have not many of the ancient worthies been living confutations of your opinion? wiſe philoſophers, judicious lawgivers, and ſteady miniſters of juſtice? their deſires refined, their affections benevolent, their whole conduct upright?

Aſp. I cannot forbear wondering, that you ſhould inſtance in lawgivers and miniſters of juſtice. Since the very inſtitution of their office preſuppoſes the depravity of mankind. Was human nature agitated by no irregular or vitious inclinations, the barrier of laws would be as needleſs in civil ſocieties, as the vaſt banks of Holland are needleſs in our upland counties.

But this, you will ſay, is a digreſſive obſervation. Your queſtion requires a poſitive anſwer. And it is eaſy to anſwer, That the painting is beyond the life. If my author has been too free with the dark, my friend has been too laviſh of the glittering colours.—Thoſe famous men might aim, perhaps, at the excellency you deſcribe. Not one of them came up to the mark.——Or, ſuppoſe they did, this would not invalidate my tenet.

Ther. This not invalidate your tenet! Then demonſtration carries no conviction.

Aſp. Pray, who is your greateſt favourite, among all the renowned perſons of antiquity?

Ther. Socrates.—He ſtands at the head of the claſs; and was, indiſputably, the wiſeſt and the beſt of the Heathen world.

Aſp. I think ſo too.——Be pleaſed, however, to recollect the ſtory of the phyſiognomiſt, who pretended to diſcover the diſpoſition of the mind by the caſt of the countenance. The profeſſor of this occult ſcience undertook, you know, to exerciſe his ſkill upon Socrates; and pronounced him, after an examination of his features, laſcivious, paſſionate and moroſe.——This judgment, ſo extravagantly wide of the truth, was bringing a ſtorm of ridicule and reſentment upon the poor fortune-teller. When the ingenuous philoſopher interpoſed, and owned the deſcription to be exactly true. That ſuch was his natural temper; and if his converſation had been of a different turn, it was owing to the aids of philoſophy.——So that, even in your moſt finiſhed * character, there was no innate dignity. All was adventitious.

Ther. If corruption was derived unto all men from

* See Mr Howe's treatiſe, entitled, The living temple.

† Iſ. xiv. 12.

* Though I love and admire the character of Socrates, yet I cannot approve the whole of his conduct. One thing which gives me particular offence is, the habitual practice of ſwearing, which occurs in all his conferences with his pupils. Μα τον Δια, Νη Δι, or ſome ſuch appeal to the DEITY, is uſed, not only in every diſcourſe, but almoſt in every page; and that upon the moſt unneceſſary occaſions.—I have often wondered, that ſo polite a writer as Xenophon ſhould admit this flagrant impropriety into his dialogues. Which beſides its irreligious air, is ſomewhat like the crambe repetita; and recurs, and recurs, and recurs, till it is really tireſome. But more I wonder, that his excellent maſter ſhould ſuffer the ſanction of an oath to become ſo trivial, and the honour of his Jupiter ſo cheap.

This proves the deplorable blindneſs of human reaſon; which could miſtake ſo notorious a profanation of the divine name, for a genteel embelliſhment of ſpeech;—it ſhews us, likewiſe, our extreme need of that revealed law, which, among other refined precepts, unknown to the religion of nature, injoins, Above all things, ſwear not;—and, Thou ſhalt not take the name of the LORD thy GOD in vain.

their

eir forefather Adam, methinks all ſhould be equally rrupt. But this is contrary to known fact. Some we naturally loving and lovely, gentle in their manners, d ſubject to no inordinate appetites.

Aſp. Some perſons may be of more compoſed, or, if you eaſe, of leſs diſſolute manners, than the generality of her people. Thanks to a better temperature of their nſtitution, or a more watchful care in their education. —But ſhew me the unregenerate man, who is ſub- ct to no inordinate appetites. One vile affection may eck another, or a ſenſe of decency may hold the curb on all. But it is one thing, to have the wild beaſt in e heart chained; another, to have him expelled, or the n transformed into a lamb.

Ther. Have we not often obſerved heroic courage, nd a generoſity of ſpirit, where the education has been one of the ſtricteſt? To what can we aſcribe theſe udable qualities, but to the innate virtue and nobleneſs the temper, working without any auxiliary ſuc- ours?

Aſp. Virtue, Theron, is a complete aſſemblage, not ſome disjointed ſhreds, of laudable qualities. Thoſe you men- on, if not accompanied with the whole circle of ami- le accompliſhments, are no more to be called virtue, an two or three ſcattered fragments of an edifice, are be honoured with the appellation of an houſe.—How ften are thoſe very perſons, with all the fortitude, ſlaves ignoble pleaſures, or in bondage to the baſeſt luſts? moſt infallible indication, that they have no uniform enerosity, nor any real courage.—Deſire of fame may rompt to many ſuch acts, as dazzle the ſuperficial eye; hich yet are far, very far from genuine virtue.

Ther. Do you then attribute the Grecian politeneſs, nd the high Roman ſpirit, all the gallant actions of their eroes and generals, to a deſire of fame?

Aſp. There is reaſon to ſuſpect, that they derived their rigin from ſome improper motive. And no motive as more artfully inſtilled, or more aſſiduouſly cheriſh- d, than the ſpirit of ambition.——View their crowns, heir ſtatues, their triumphal ſolemnities.——Read their rators, their hiſtorians, their poets.——The former were he ſchool, the latter were the maſters, to inculcate this rand leſſon.

Let us conſider the Romans a little more attentively; nd not amidſt the dregs of their community, but in heir very beſt ages; when their republic ſubſiſted, and heir Scipios flouriſhed. Many great and ſhining deeds were undoubtedly performed. But did they ſpring rom a reverential regard to the Supreme BEING; rom obedience to his will, or zeal for his honour?

If this principle ſhould be thought too refined, did hey proceed from a love to their fellow-creatures? In caſe neither of theſe motives * actuated their conduct, it can never be placed to the account of virtue.—Had benevo- ence been their leading principle, why ſuch inhumanity o Carthage? Why muſt that opulent city be laid in aſhes, and her numerous citizens be put to the ſword? Were they enemies to mankind, or a nuiſance in the world? You well know, that they were only too in- duſtrious, and too powerful. By which means, they would be in a condition to eclipſe the magnificence of the Roman name, and diſpute the prize of ſovereignty with the Roman ſtate. For this crime,—a crime, in ambition's eye, abſolutely inexcuſable,—even Cato's upright ſoul ſhall doom them to utter deſtruction, and Scipio's gentle hand ſhall execute the horrid decree.

Is this virtue? Does virtue ravage countries, from the mere wantonneſs of pride, or luſt of pre-eminence? Does virtue deſtroy millions of lives, only to aggrandize a particular people, or extend the dominion of ſome favourite empire? If this were virtue, Brutus thought too honourably of her character, when he termed her an empty name.——I am ſure, my Theron has juſter notions of things. He needs not be informed, that true virtue, far from perſonating the rapacious harpy, acts as a father to others, as a father to all; and, like HIM, who is both its pattern and its author, goes about doing good.

Ther. The moſt elegant cane, if plunged into yonder baſon, while the waters are curled by the breeze, will appear both crooked and coarſe. I cannot but think, the accuſers of human nature examine her ſtate with a prejudiced underſtanding; which has the ſame perverſe effect upon their judgment, as thoſe ruffled waves have upon the ſight.——Or elſe, they contemplate her condition with a melancholy mind; which, like a jaundiced eye, gives every object a diſtempered aſpect, darkens the chearful, diſcolours the beautiful, and hangs even the ſun in mourning.

Aſp. Rather let this be the compariſon to illuſtrate our point.——View the meaneſt piece of earth, through the priſmatic glaſs; and it will appear, not beautiful only, but perfectly ſplendid. Remove the deluſory medium, and all the ſophiſticated finery vaniſhes. The indigo, the orange, the violet are gone; and leave nothing to be ſeen, but a rude unornamented lump of clay.——So, if we conſider human nature according to the partial repreſentations of ſelf-love, or contemplate it in the flattering mirror of ſome popular writings, it may ſeem regular, holy, excellent. But if we behold it under the light, the unerring light of revelation, its fancied charms diſappear; it ſtands clothed with deformity; and is a ſpectacle of commiſeration, if not of horror.

Ther. What reaſon have you to father ſuch a notion upon the ſacred writings?—The ſacred writings inform us, that man was made after the image of GOD. This, ſure, could not be ſo diſhonourable and depraved a pattern, as your diſcourſe would inſinuate.

Aſp. Far, very far from a diſhonourable pattern! The image of GOD is the conſummate ſtandard of all perfection.—In conformity to this admirable exemplar, our firſt parents were created; and in this admirable condition they continued, till by tranſgreſſion they fell; fell from the moſt holy and happy ſtate, into guilt, condemnation, and ruin.——Therefore when this fatal cataſtrophe had taken place, the ſacred hiſtorian varies his ſtyle; and with a remarkable peculiarity, as well as propriety of ſpeech, ſays, Adam begat a ſon in his * ; not in the DIVINE likeneſs. That every reader may advert to this melancholy, but important truth, it is marked more ſtrongly ſtill, it is inforced by a very emphatical repetition. After his own image †, Moſes adds; as contradiſtinguiſhed to the image of GOD, mentioned in a preceding verſe. Which expreſſions are evidently intended to denote the difference between the ſtate in which Adam was created, and Seth was begotten.

Ther. Pray, let me have a ſuccinct, but full account of this tragical ſtory; ſince all your orthodox divines lay ſuch a mighty ſtreſs upon the doctrine of the fall.

Aſp. GOD, having formed the human body out of the ground, animated the ſtructure with a living ſoul; and tranſcribed upon this ſoul the image of his bleſſed SELF. All was light in the underſtanding;

* A zeal for the honour of GOD, and a concern for the good of our fellow-creatures, are the true ſources of virtue, 1 Cor. x. 24. 31. When our actions flow not from theſe principles, reaſon will put a query upon them, and revelation will expunge them from the liſt of virtues.—They may be ſpecious in themſelves; they may be coſtly to the performer; they may even be ſerviceable to others: but can no more deſerve the title of virtue, than the activity of our fun-fire officers, in extinguiſhing the flames on ſome inſured houſe, can merit the name of charity.

* This is affirmed, not of Cain, but of Seth, the moſt excellent of Adam's children, and father of the holy ſeed.

† בדמותו כצלמו Gen. v. 3. Corruptus corruptum.

all

all was rectitude in the will; and nothing but harmony in the affections.——Man, thus endowed, was placed in the delightful garden of Eden: and furnished with every accommodation, which was necessary to support his being, or desirable to gratify his senses.——He was constituted lord of this lower creation; and, amidst numberless indulgencies, received only one—easy—negative command, not to eat of the tree of the knowledge of good and evil.——From this he was to abstain, as a pledge of his subjection, and as an exercise of his obedience. Bliss and immortality were to be the reward of duty; misery and death the punishment of disobedience. In the day thou eatest thereof, thou shalt surely die *, was the sanction of the divine law.

How equitable! how gracious the terms! Yet neither the goodness of GOD could induce him to keep them, nor the authority of GOD deter him from breaking them.——Unreasonably discontented even with such advantageous circumstances, and presumptuously aspiring to be like the MOST HIGH, he hearkened to the suggestions of the evil spirit.——In a word he violated the precept, and incurred the penalty. GOD was just, and man was undone. He lost his uprightness †; became subject to mortality; and, as the nervous original expresses it, died the death.

Ther. True; he became subject to many bodily infirmities, and to the necessity of final dissolution.——But what has this sentence, or what have these sufferings to do with your notion of universal depravity in the mind? The death which the almighty LEGISLATOR threatened, can be opposed only to the life which the almighty CREATOR gave.

Asp. Be it so.—The CREATOR gave, and man possessed a life, incomparably more excellent than that which the pulse imparts, or the beasts enjoy. He possessed a divine life; which, according to the definition of the apostle, consisted in knowledge, in righteousness, and true holiness ‡. This,—which was the distinguishing glory, and the supreme felicity of his nature,—this, alas! was extinct.

His understanding, originally enlightened with wisdom, was clouded and overwhelmed with ignorance.—His heart, once filled with religious veneration, and warmed with heavenly love, became alienated from GOD his MAKER.——His passions and appetites, instead of moving on, in orderly array, according to the beauteous measures of truth and duty, grew mutinous; shook off the government of reason; and ran wild into the most lawless extravagancies.—In a word, the whole moral frame was unhinged, disjointed, broken.

Ther. What cause have you to suppose, that all this misery was either included in the threatening or introduced by the fall?

Asp. The ignorance of fallen Adam was palpable. Witness that absurd attempt to hide himself from the eye of OMNISCIENCE, among the trees of the garden.—His aversion to the all-gracious GOD was equally plain. Otherwise he would never have fled from his MAKER; but rather have hasted, and on the wings of desire, into the place of the divine manifestation.

A strange variety of disorderly passions ‖ were evidently predominant in his breast.——Pride; for he refuses to acknowledge his guilt, though he cannot deny own the fact.——Ingratitude; for he obliquely upbraids the CREATOR with his gift, as though it had been a snare, rather than a blessing; The woman whom thou gavest me.—Want of natural affection; for he endeavours to cast all the blame upon the weaker vessel; and to acquit his obnoxious self, by impeaching the wife of his bosom.—The female criminal acts the same unnatural part; neither takes shame to herself; nor gives glory to GOD, nor puts up a single petition for pardon.

As all these disasters ensued upon the breach of the commandment; they furnish us, I think, with the best key to open the meaning of the prohibitory sanction. They prove beyond any argument, that spiritual death and all its consequences, were comprehended in the extent of the threatening.

Ther. How could one act of disobedience produce such destructive effects? erase the fair image of the GODHEAD; and stamp the monster, stamp the very devil in its stead?—and so small an act of disobedience too!

Asp. The prohibition, if you please, was small, not so the transgression. It was committed against the clearest knowledge of duty, and the strongest obligations, to obedience. It argued ingratitude for the richest favours, and unbelief of the most solemn declarations. It was an act of the most horrid presumption in the creature, and of the most impious rebellion against the CREATOR.

As to the smallness, or rather the gentle and benign import of the command, this aggravates beyond measure the crime of disobedience. Alluding to the words once addressed to the Syrian general, we may justly expostulate,—"O thou Adam, if thy LORD had bid thee do "some great thing *, in submission to his high authority, "and out of gratitude for his unspeakable goodness, "oughtst thou not to have done it? How much more "when he says to thee?—Freely eat of all, except this "single tree. Thousands, thousands of honours, privileges, "and gifts be thine, only one acknowledgment of thy "subjection, mine; and that the easiest which thy heart "can wish, or even thy fancy conceive."

You ask, How could one act of disobedience produce such destructive effects?—I answer, the reality of the fact, in numberless instances of material nature, is plain to a demonstration; while the manner of operation remains an impenetrable secret. Every child perceives the former; Newton himself is at a loss for the latter.—For which reason, I have always thought it better to believe what GOD has taught, than attempt to explain what GOD has concealed. Let us forego this curious, perhaps fruitless inquiry; and substitute a remark, which naturally arises from the subject, and may considerably edify our minds.

Ther. Edify! Is it possible to render this dishonourable and afflictive notion edifying? Can any generous fruit spring from such a penurious soil?

Asp. Samson, I believe, had no expectation of finding any thing valuable in the relics of his slain lion. But, to his agreeable disappointment, there was honey in the carcase †. If our doctrine appear ghastly as the one, it may yield a benefit sweet as the other.

From hence we may learn (what, when rightly learned

---

* Gen. ii. 17.

† ——— Innocence, that as a veil
Had shadow'd them from knowing ill, was gone,
Just confidence, and native righteousness.
MILT. book IX. 1054.

‡ Eph. iv. 24. Col. iii. 10.

‖ Milton, speaking of the unhappy pair, and describing the consequences of their fall, says,

——— Nor only tears
Rain'd at their eyes: but high winds within Began to rise: high passions, anger, hate,
Mistrust, suspicion, discord, and shook sore
Their inward state of mind: calm region once,
And full of peace: now tost'd and turbulent!
For, understanding rul'd not, and the will Heard not her lore: but, in subjection now
To sensual appetite, who from beneath
Usurping, over sovereign reason claim'd
Superior sway.
Book IX. 1121.

* 2 Kings v. 13. † Judg. xiv. 8.

earned, is more ſerviceable than all the ſciences) the exceſſive malignity of ſin.——When volcanos open their tremendous jaws, and diſgorge a fiery inundation, they confine their fury to a ſingle territory.—When Famine ſifts her mildewed hand, and deſtroys the ſupports of animal life, ſhe is content with ruining a kingdom or a nation.——When War drenches his ſword in blood, or the Peſtilence impregnates the air with poiſon; they alſo, even they obſerve ſome limits, and never make the whole compaſs of nature the ſcene of their ravages.—— But Sin levelled its blow at the whole human race. SIN poured contagion, and ſpread deſtruction, through all countries, and all ages. One ſingle act of ſin brought confuſion and a curſe upon the material, and miſeries, infinite millions of miſeries, on the rational world *.—How then ſhould we fear this moſt pernicious of all evils! with what carefulneſs guard againſt its inſidious allurements! with what reſolution fly from its killing careſſes!

Ther. I muſt obſerve, that you take for granted, what remains to be proved. For ſuppoſing your account true with regard to Adam; yet how does this affect his children? Why muſt all his poſterity be contaminated, becauſe their forefather has played the prodigal! Such a heavy charge againſt the whole body of mankind will not be admitted, without very cogent proofs.

Aſp. The proofs are cogent; perhaps irrefragable.—Reaſon offers to turn evidence in the caſe. Reaſon, in concurrence with revelation, demands, Who can bring a clean thing out of an unclean †? If the fountain be polluted, how can the ſtreams be pure? and if the root is corrupt, 'tis impoſſible to conceive, how the branches ſhould be ſound, or the fruit good ‡.

The ſcriptural teſtimonies are almoſt innumerable. They pour their evidence from every quarter; and conſtitute, not two or three only, but a whole cloud of witneſſes.—GOD made man upright, ſays the royal preacher; the human nature in its primitive ſtate was without any wrong bias. But at, and ever ſince the firſt tranſgreſſion, they have found out and followed many perverſe inventions ‖.

Ther. I don't deny, but multitudes of people, ſeduced by bad example, or betrayed by their own inadvertency, have departed from the rule of duty; have, as the wiſe man affirms, tried many fooliſh experiments to acquire happineſs, and deviſed as many idle excuſes for their folly. But this is no ſuch irrefragable proof, that they were originally bad. It only implies, that, not taking proper heed to their ways, they warped from their native uprightneſs. As yonder tulips, though perfectly beautiful at preſent, if not attended with the neceſſary cultivation, will degenerate into homely flowers; and, at length, be no better than tawdry weeds.

Aſp. No, my friend. Iniquity is not an adventitious thing, catched from example, or contracted by careleſſneſs. Theſe may increaſe, but theſe do not occaſion, the moral malady. A ſinful diſpoſition is as early as our being; the very mould in which all our faculties are caſt.——David bears very expreſs teſtimony to this humbling truth. Behold! (He ſets his N. B. upon the paſſage. 'Tis a ſad, but certain fact; ſuch as ſhould never depart from my memory, nor ever, be omitted in my confeſſions; and is much to be regarded by every reader). I was ſhapen in wickedneſs, and in ſin did my mother conceive me *. As though he had ſaid,—"Alas! "LORD, this crime, though extremely horrid, is but a "little part of my guilt. I have not only ſinned in prac-"tice, but I am totally and univerſally corrupt in my "very nature."

This he acknowledges, not to extenuate his offence, but to lay open his exceſſive vileneſs. And indeed it is not poſſible to form a right judgment of ourſelves, or to be duly humbled before GOD, unleſs we add the depravation of our nature to the tranſgreſſions of our life. Juſt as it is impoſſible to diſcern what monſtrous and voracious animals lie hid in the ocean, if we only glance an eye even upon the ſurface of the waters.

Ther. This, you know, was written by the royal penitent, under the pangs of ſevere remorſe. Does not a ſenſe of his enormous iniquity, together with the apprehenſion of divine wrath, make his hand ſhake, and lead him to aggravate features?—Or ſuppoſe it were true of the adulterous king, is it equally applicable to others, who have eſcaped ſuch groſs pollutions?

Aſp. It is no exaggerating draught, but a faithful delineation; and exactly repreſents every child of Adam.—It was written with the utmoſt deliberation; and therefore is introduced with that call for peculiar attention, Behold!——And, though David was ſcandalouſly criminal in his intrigue with the wife of Uriah, yet the general tenor of his life was not only irreproachable, but exemplary. Who ſo zealous for the houſe of his GOD, or ſo devoted an admirer of the divine word? His heart was an altar, ever flaming with heavenly love; and his tongue a trumpet, to ſound the praiſes of JEHOVAH through all generations.——And if he had reaſon to make this abaſing confeſſion, who is the perſon that can think himſelf aggrieved by ſharing in the imputation?

One of our moſt eminent martyrs †, when he heard of any malefactor condemned to ſuffer an ignominious death, uſed to lay his hand upon his breaſt, and ſay,—"The ſeeds of all thoſe villanies, which brought that "unhappy wretch to the gibbet, were ſown here. And, "if they have not ſprung up into the ſame deteſtable "deeds, unto divine grace, unto divine grace alone, be "all the glory!"

Ther. Your martyrs had honeſt hearts, but not always the cleareſt heads. I admire their zeal, and reverence their memories; but I can no more receive their opinion as an oracle, than I can be perſuaded to worſhip their relics.

Aſp. I have no intention to palm Popery on my friend, nor any deſire to calumniate the human ſpecies. If it be diſingenuous and ſinful to aſperſe a particular character, how much more unjuſtifiable to traduce our nature in general!

My account, dark and diſguſtful as it is, ſtand confirmed by a higher authority than any private opinion. It is confirmed from an univerſal ſurvey of mankind, taken by the eye of the CREATOR himſelf, and left upon record in the books of revelation. The LORD looked down from heaven upon the children of men, to ſee if there were any that did underſtand, and ſeek after GOD.——What is the reſult of this grand inquiry? It muſt, without all peradventure, be infallibly true: becauſe GOD's inſpection is too keen to be deluded, and his judgment too impartial to be biaſſed. This is the report, made by the infinitely-wiſe OB-

* St Chryſoſtom calls the firſt tranſgreſſion, ἡ πανὸς λυμαινομένη ἁμαρτία. Which is, in a manner, tranſlated by Milton, who, ſpeaking of the ſame tragical act, ſays,

——It
Brought death into the world, and all our woe.

† Job. xiv. 4.

‡ Milton has anticipated Theron's objection; and, in Adam's ſoliloquy, very judiciouſly, ſolved it.

——Ah! why ſhould all mankind,
For one man's fault, thus guiltleſs be condemn'd,
If guiltleſs? But from me what can proceed
But all corrupt, both body and mind deprav'd;
Not to do only, but to will the ſame
With me? How can they acquitted ſtand
In ſight of GOD? Book X. 822.

‖ Eccl. vii. 29.

* Pſ. l. li. 5. † Mr Bradford.

SERVER: They are all gone aside, they are altogether become filthy *; there is none that doth good, no not one.

Ther. This, I apprehend, is the character of those besotted creatures, those most egregious of all fools, who say, There is no GOD. To them the psalm relates, and to them the abandoned character is appropriated. They have it, if I may so speak, cum privilegio.

Asp. It is meant rather of practical, than of speculative Atheists; who say, not explicitly with their mouths, but implicitly in their hearts, There is no GOD; who live, as if there was no ALL-SEEING, to take cognisance of their present conduct; no Supreme JUDGE, to call them to a future reckoning.—And I dare appeal to yourself, though perhaps the fondest of fathers, whether this instance of foolishness is not bound upon the hearts of our children †? nay, whether it be not natural to us all, both in youth and manhood, to forget our CREATOR?

In this case, Theron, there is no monopoly. Your right and mine are too strongly established by experience, and too clearly expressed in the preceding scripture, to admit of any controversy.——If there were any that understood—They are all gone out of the way—There is none that doth good—No, not one.—Could any conveyancer in Europe have contrived a form of words, more fully to ascertain our unhappy title?

Ther. There may be some texts in scripture, which seem to countenance your assertion. But these refer to the worst of men, in the worst of times. And can you, with any justice, ascribe the properties of a few reprobates to the whole species?

Asp. This very passage, and others of a like import, are adopted by St Paul, and applied both to Jews and Gentiles; with this professed design, that every mouth may be stopped, and all the world may be found guilty ‡ before GOD. Which evinces, I should think, beyond all doubt, the universality of its extent.

If to the universality, we add the antiquity of this fact, it will bear the two grand characteristics of truth. Far from being a novel opinion, it was received as a maxim, in the early age of Job. What is man, that he should pretend to be clean? and he that is born of a woman, that he should presume to be righteous? righteous before the infinitely JUST and HOLY ONE! Behold! he putteth no trust in his saints, though the most exalted of all intelligent beings. Yea, the heavens, those brightest parts of the material creation, are not clean in his sight. How much more abominable and filthy is man ‖? who drinketh iniquity; though loathsome to GOD, and worse than poison to his own soul; yet drinketh it like water; without any hesitation or the least fear, with an eager and profuse delight.

This, you will observe, was alledged in a dispute, carried on with no small vehemency? yet is admitted, on all hands, as unexceptionably true.——Be pleased also to take notice, that the charge is not confined to some very notorious sinners, but is laid against the whole body of mankind. Whatever figure they may make, each in his own conceit; they are all described in the word of GOD,—as beings, insatiably athirst after evil; —from objects, that we cannot endure to behold, or cannot behold without abhorrence *.——Such is man by nature! People must have eyes very different from mine, to discern any dignity in this draught.

Ther. As to innate dignity, we will let it pass. But this I must insist upon, and several writers of the first repute are on my side,—That we enter the stage of life, in a state of indifference either to good or evil:—That the affections are like a balance, nicely poised, and preponderating neither one way nor the other:—The whole soul, like a sheet of fair paper, is equally susceptible of strait or crooked lines; and will as readily receive the amiable features of an angel, as the hideous deformity of a devil.

Asp. With regard to your first illustration,—The simile, I think, confutes the sentiment. For to be in suspence where we shall love the LORD our GOD, the giver of all good, and the source of all perfection; this, surely, must be condemned as an irreligious temper.—This is a criminal halting between GOD and Baal.—A neutrality, which is no better than hostility.

I fear, the writers you mention, pay but little deference to the inspired volume. Our escutcheon is very differently blazoned in that office of spiritual heraldry. A transgressor from the womb †, is one of our hereditary titles. Transgressors we are by strong internal propensity, even before we transgress in outward act.

Observe the young hawthorn plants, which have unfolded their green leaves, in yonder nursery; but have scarce learned to spread the gay blossom. Is there in those an equal aptitude to produce the luscious juicy grape, or their own coarse and husky berry? By no means. They will (unless grafted with some generous cyon) certainly, universally, constantly bear the same harsh fruit with their parent-tree.——So certainly will the human mind, if not renewed by the SPIRIT of CHRIST, branch out into ungodly tempers, and bring forth wicked practices.

Ther. The nobleman, mentioned by Xenophon ‡, when overcome by an alluring temptation, devised, for his excuse, the notion of two souls; one that inclined him to vice; another that prompted him to virtue. This was a moderate caricatura ‖, compared with my friend's. He will allow nothing regular or graceful in the human heart.——You have metamorphosed the masterpiece of the creation into such a deformed object, as may justly render him a terror to himself.—Can there be a grosser libel upon the CREA-

---

* Psal. xiv. 2. 3. The two original words סר נאלחו are metaphorical expressions; taken from—wines, that are become sour, —and meats, that are in a state of putrefaction. I believe, it is impossible to find images, more strongly expressive of a total depravity, and of the utmost degeneracy.

† Prov. xxii. 15. Let none think, that by foolishness the sacred writer means only those silly tricks, which discover a weakness of understanding in children. Solomon's fool is not the idiot, but the sinner; and the folly stigmatized throughout the Proverbs, denotes, not a failure in the intellectual, but in the religious and moral character.

The words, in this passage, are peculiarly forcible. Foolishness is in the heart; implanted in the very nature; sunk deep into the inmost faculties: and not only sunk deep, but adhere almost inseparably: קשור is wrapt, tied, and bound: twines like the ivy, and is rooted like the oak.

‡ Rom. iii. 19. Υπόδικος γένηται, "May become guilty," does not so exactly answer the scope of the context, neither does it so solidly establish the apostle's argument, as "may be found guilty;" be fully convicted, and apparently liable to most just condemnation. —Those things were written of old, and were quoted by St Paul, not to render men criminal, but to prove them so.

‖ Job xv. 14. 15. 16. The immaculate purity of the blessed GOD, and the utter depravity of fallen man, are points of so great importance in the scriptural system of divinity, that they are inculcated no less than three times, within the compass of this single book; and by much the same noble contrast of striking images; chap. iv. 17. 18. xv. 14. 15. 16. xxv. 4. 5. 6.

* The original words are תועב ומאוס—One is used to signify that abominable practice, which the Ægyptians could not bear to see, Exod. vii. ver. 22. Heb. Bib. ver. 26. Engl. Bib.—The other denotes an object too squalid to be viewed without loathing.

† Is. xlviii. 8. A truth so apparent and undeniable, that Seneca could not but discern it, though he was an unenlightened Heathen; could not but acknowledge it, though he was one of the proud Stoic sect. Hac conditione nati sumus, animalia obnoxia non paucioribus animi quam corporis morbis. De ira. lib. II. c. 9.

‡ Cyropæd. lib. VI.

‖ A term used by the Italian painters, to signify a resemblance horrid, or ridiculous.

TOR,

TOR, or a greater diſcouragement to our fellow-creatures?

Aſp. If this be a diſtorted piece, what will you call the following deſcription? GOD ſaw that the wickedneſs of man was great upon the earth; and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually *.—— This, perhaps, may be reckoned a more monſtrous drawing ſtill. Yet it came from that hand, which painted the canopy of the ſkies, and touched all the pictures of nature into ſuch inimitable perfection.

Pray, let us examine the moſt diſtinguiſhing features in this draught.——Not barely the works of his hand, or the words of his tongue, but the imaginations of his heart, are evil. The contagion has ſpread itſelf through the inner man. It has tainted the ſeat of his principles, and the ſource of his actions †.——Is there not, you will ſay, ſome mixture of good? No; they are only evil. There is no hopeful tendency. Not ſo much as a little leaven of piety, that may have a chance to diffuſe itſelf, and meliorate the whole lump.——But are there no lucid intervals? No happy moments, when virtue gains the aſcendency? None: he is only evil continually. The uſurpation of ſin is total, and its tyranny perpetual.

What I have advanced, therefore, is no libel upon the CREATOR's benignity: becauſe it is the very echo of his own determination.——Neither is it ſo properly diſcouraging, as humbling and alarming to our fellow-creatures. Humbling, to make us ſenſible of our ruin; alarming, to make us deſirous of a recovery.

Ther. Is not the deſcription which you have produced, peculiar to the men of that wicked generation; whoſe guilt was as unparallelled, as their puniſhment?

Aſp. It is applicable both to them and their ſucceſſors. The wiſdom of GOD repeats the charge, and fixes it upon the race, which ſurvived the flood ‡. The depravity of human nature continued, nor could the waters of an univerſal deluge purge it away. So deep, alas! is the ſtain, and ſo incorrigible the virulency, of original corruption, that it will yield to nothing;—to nothing will it yield, but to the waſhing of regeneration, and renewing of the HOLY GHOST ‖. Till this takes place, every heart of man muſt wear the prophet's ſtigmatizing motto, Deceitful above all things, and deſperately wicked.

Ther. This paſſage, I am informed, is not rightly tranſlated; eſpecially in the laſt expreſſion. The Hebrew original does not bear ſo hard upon the human character, as the Engliſh verſion.

Aſp. You allow then, that the heart is deceitful. And of this we have a glaring proof in the conduct of Hazael. He thought it impoſſible, that he ſhould ever perpetrate ſuch horrid barbarities, as the prophet foretaw. Is thy ſervant a dog, that he ſhould do this great thing §? Yes, Hazael; however thou mayeſt imagine thyſelf gentle as a lamb, thou art fierce as a dog, and ſavage as a tyger.——Which was moſt terribly demonſtrated by the event.

Suppoſe we tranſlate the other word ſomewhat more accurately. The little alteration will be of leſs ſervice to your cauſe. Inſtead of deſperately wicked, you may, if you pleaſe, read deplorably diſordered *. This is the exact import of the phraſe.——It is a metaphor derived from a very diſtempered body. In which, the whole head is ſick, and the whole heart faint. From the crown of whoſe head, to the ſole of whoſe feet, there is nothing but conſuming diſeaſe, and enfeebling languors †.—— The rules of civility may ſet a ſpecious varniſh on the converſation. But until grace, ſanctifying grace adminiſters the remedy, the moſt civilized heart will be like the pale emaciated cheek, that is poorly enlivened with paint.

Ther. What ſay the writers of the New Teſtament? Is not their way of thinking more liberal and benign?—If human nature were ſo hideous an aſpect, under the legal diſpenſation; ſince the coming of our LORD, and the publiſhing of his goſpel, one may expect an improved and more pleaſing face of things.

Aſp. Human nature in every period of time, and under every diſpenſation of religion, is ſtill the ſame. It was the SPIRIT of CHRIST who indited the Old Teſtament, and he cannot vary from himſelf, in the declarations of the New.

I am very much inclined to believe, that all the bodily diſeaſes, which our divine PHYSICIAN healed, during his abode on earth, were ſo many emblematical repreſentations of ſpiritual diſorders, which, like certain family-diſtempers, may be ſaid to run in the blood of all mankind.——Will you give me leave, Theron, to explain myſelf? I don't like to ingroſs the diſcourſe. Yet I would willingly enlarge upon this ſubject.

Ther. By all means. The laws of argument, ſeparate from the indulgencies of friendſhip, give you a warrant to urge, whatever may ſupport your cauſe.—Beſides, I ſhall be glad to hear your ſentiments upon a point ſo curious.

Aſp. The poor leper, covered with noiſome ſores, is the very picture of a polluted ſinner. Was the one, for his contagious impurities, ſeparated from the ſociety of of his fellow-citizens? So ſhall the other, for his abominable uncleanneſs, be baniſhed from the beatific preſence, unleſs he be cleanſed by the blood, and juſtified by the righteouſneſs of JESUS.

You pity the condition of that unhappy creature, who was born blind. His eyes rolled, but rolled in vain, to find the dawning ray. Such is the benighted ſtate of the human mind, till almighty GOODNESS command the ſcales of ignorance to fall off, and pour heavenly day through all the intellectual faculties. Then, and not till then, we begin to know the holineſs, the juſtice, the adorable excellencies of GOD.——We ſee the ſublime purity of his law, and the extreme depravity of our own hearts.——We are brought acquainted with the tranſcendent glories of our REDEEMER's perſon, and apprehend that moſt comfortable myſtery of his ſubſtitution in our ſtead. We diſcern the ineffable perfection of his merits, and the divinely-rich freeneſs of his grace ‡. Truths, incomparably more delightful to the ſoul, than all the delectable ſcenes of creation are to the ſight.

The paralytic's enervated limbs too truly repreſent the impotence of our nature. Was he unable to grind at a mill, to run in a race, or to turn himſelf on his bed?

* Gen. vi. 5.

† The original is very nice in its ſtructure, and no leſs emphatical in its meaning.—לב The heart, or grand principle—מחשבות the thoughts of the heart, or the various actings of that principle.—יצר the imagination of the thoughts, or the produce and reſult of thoſe actings; namely, deſires and affections, counſels and purpoſes.—Not one, a few only, or the greateſt part, but all theſe are evil.

‡ Gen. viii. 21. Where, I think, the particle כי is uſed in the adverſative, not the cauſal ſignification; and ſhould be rendered though, rather than for.—Where it ſeems likewiſe, that the forbearance of the righteous GOD, is aſcribed to the great atonement; typified by Noah's burnt-offerings, and expreſſed by St Paul in his epiſtle to the Epheſians; who probably alludes to this paſſage. The LORD ſmelled a ſweet ſavour, and the LORD ſaid in his heart, I will not again curſe the earth any more for man's ſake, though the imagination of man's heart be evil from his youth, Eph. v. 2.

‖ Tit. iii. 5.

§ 2 Kings viii. 13.

* Jer. xvii. 3. שגיו

† Iſ. i. 6. Agreeable to this doctrine, and conſonant to this metaphor, is the confeſſion of our liturgy, There is no health in us.

‡ This, and the preceding particulars, are leſſons of the laſt importance in the Chriſtian ſchool. The knowledge of them deſerves to be moſt ſolicitouſly ſought, both by attentive contemplation, and by earneſt prayer. For to know them, is to be truly wiſe; to be influenced by them, is to be ſubſtantially happy.

bed? So unable are we to fight the good fight of faith, to exercise the graces of Christianity, or even to turn ourselves unto GOD.——Do not you, my friend, experience something of this inability? For my part, I must lay my hand on my breast, and daily, hourly, confess, "The palsy is here. Though not altogether dead in sin, "(blessed be CHRIST JESUS, and his quickening "SPIRIT!) yet how languid is my zeal, how enfeebled "my industry, in the great affair of everlasting salva- "tion!—I would fain believe, and with a full assurance "of faith, the promises of the unchangeable JEHOVAH. "But how often do I stagger through unbelief!——I "would fain love, and with the warmest gratitude, my "ever-merciful and most beneficent GOD. But oh! "what coldness benumbs my affections!——I wish to "be humble in every thought, heavenly in all my de- "sires, and wholly resigned to the divine will. But, alas! "my sufficiency for these things is like the flaccid sinew, "or the withered arm."

It would be endless to particularize all the maladies, which were emblems of our misery, and the triumphs of our LORD's power. Let me only remark,—That their bodies were afflicted with a single disorder; our souls labour under a complication of evils.——They felt their affliction, and were desirous, importunately desirous of relief. We are, till awakened from above, insensible of our calamitous case. We add, to all our other indispositions, a stupefying lethargy, or an extravagant delirium.

Ther. Such allegorical expositions of scripture are pretty enough. But I presume, you yourself cannot reckon them demonstrative. For my own part, I must appeal from the surmises of fancy, to the verdict of reason.

Asp. I cannot think, that the allegorical sense, when soberly introduced, is unworthy our regard, or without its weight. However, I have no design to preclude your appeal.——Will the avowed, will the reiterated decision of an apostle, satisfy my friend, and be admitted as the verdict of reason?—St Paul has declared of himself, In me, that is, in my flesh, or unrenewed nature, dwelleth no good *; no good temper, nor so much as any good desire.——Elsewhere he affirms, that the carnal mind, or unregenerate soul, is not subject to the law of GOD; nay, is an enemy, or rather enmity itself †,—against what? Against sin? That were a noble antipathy.——Against the world? That were a laudable disaffection.——No; but against GOD and his law. Amazing perverseness! to be enmity against GOD, who is boundless benignity, and consummate goodness. Enmity against his law, which is the transcript of his amiable perfections, and the faultless model of all virtue.

Ther. This, I suppose, is the character of Saul the Pharisee, not of Paul the apostle; descriptive of his condition, when he was "a blasphemer, a persecutor, "and injurious."

Asp. It relates not to himself alone, but is applicable to all who continue in a state of nature.—The blessed AUTHOR of our being, speaking of mankind in general, says, That he is even flesh ‡: mere flesh, altogether flesh; his very soul, and all its powers, are wholly inslaved to fleshly appetites.——The beneficent RESTORER of our happiness pronounces the same sentence, in the very same words: That which is born of the flesh, is flesh *; the faculties, which men receive by their natural birth, have a carnal bias; incline to nothing but sordid pleasures and ignoble pursuits.——Our SAVIOUR reinculcates the admonition, and illustrates it by a very remarkable allusion. You cannot forget his answer to a procrastinating disciple; Let the dead bury their dead †; intimating, that as many as are unsanctified by the HOLY GHOST, though possessed of an animal, are destitute of the divine life; are no more fit for the kingdom of heaven, for its converse or its joys, than a pale corpse in the coffin, or dry bones in the charnel-house, are qualified to transact any secular business.

St Paul sets the seal of heaven to this momentous truth, in various passages of his epistles. From a multitude let me select one, and recommend it to your serious consideration. You that were sometime alienated and enemies: the Colossians, and all mankind were alienated from the living GOD; had no true knowledge of him; and, what is worse, had no sincere desire after him. Nay, they were not only strangers, but enemies; in a state of hostility to his holy nature and heavenly will.——What can express a greater degeneracy? Nothing, unless it be the following clause: by a mind intent upon wicked works ‖; a mind, not only averse to all good, but passionately prone to all evil.

Ther. A few picked passages, of a figurative import, and artfully cogged by some dexterous interpretation, may seem to support your cause.

Asp. Ah! Theron, there is no need to use sleight of hand. He that runs, may read this doctrine in the sacred authors. It is interwoven with the whole series of their historical, and makes a professed part of their practical writings.

What is more common with the inspired penmen, than to express a profligate course of life, by following our own imaginations, and walking in our own ways? When immorality and licentiousness were predominant in Israel; knew no restraints, and kept no bounds; how does the unerring historian describe this horrible state of things? Every one did that which was right in his own eyes ‖. Nothing can more strongly imply the extreme depravity of mankind, than such a phraseology: which makes it one and the same thing, to pursue our natural inclinations, and to act the abandoned sinner.

St Jude cannot write a few lines, but he must touch upon this subject; must teach this humbling lesson. Sensual §, he says, not having the SPIRIT. According to his estimate, not to be actuated by the power of especial grace, is to remain under the dominion of sensuality. If we may credit this servant of CHRIST, every man, while unrenewed by the divine SPIRIT, is governed by flesh and sense. Can any man then pretend to be originally free from the influence of corruption?

St Paul exempts not himself, no, nor any of the highest saints, from the opprobrious charge: We all walked according to the desires of the flesh and of the mind. Which desires in us, as well as in the idolatrous Heathens, were base, sordid, and contaminating. Insomuch that we, who are Jews by birth, who are

* Rom. vii. 18. † Rom. viii. 7.

‡ Gen. vi. 3. The word flesh, by which the all-wise CREATOR characterizes man, signifies, in the sacred writings, whatever is dishonourable in itself, provoking to GOD, or introductory to the ruin of man.—The works of the flesh, are a compendium of all iniquity, Gal. v. 19, 20, 21.—To walk after the flesh, is the very reverse of walking in the SPIRIT; diametrically opposite to the divine law and true holiness, Rom. viii. 4.—To be carnally minded, or to have the influence, the savour, the relish of the flesh (φρονημα σαρκος) predominant in our minds, is the spiritual death of the soul; and a presage of eternal death, both in body and soul, Rom. viii. 6.

* John iii. 6. † Matth. viii. 22.

‡ Col. i. 21. Τη διανοια εν τοις εργοις τοις πονηροις, mente malis operibus intenta. An eminent critic would thus point and thus translate the words; and assigns, for his alteration, the following reason; Mens enim dicitur esse in ea re, quam sedulo cogitat, ad quam cupidine fertur et inclinatur. DAVENANT in loc.—Let the words be pointed and translated, either in this or the received manner, they speak the language, and confirm the sentiments, of this whole dialogue.

‖ Judg. xviii. 6.—See also Psal. lxxxi. 12. Eccl. xi. 9. Acts xiv. 16.

§ Jude 19. The original expression is ψυχικοι, and denotes persons, who have no higher a principle, than the animal life, and the rational soul.

ons of GOD by our new birth; even we were by nature the children of wrath *. And if liable to wrath, then, doubtleſs, ſubject to depravity, and chargeable with ſin.

Ther. What ſays St James? You have ſuppreſſed, and I had almoſt forget, his teſtimony; though it is ſo very pertinent to my purpoſe, and ſo very explicit in my favour. Men, who are made after the ſimilitude of GOD.—The ſimilitude of GOD ſignifies, in the ſacred books, thoſe moral endowments, which diſtinguiſh the poſſeſſor both from the brute and the devil. And if men are made after this image, if they are created with theſe endowments, where is your doctrine of original ſin?

Aſp. I began to flatter myſelf, that your objections were exhauſted. But, ſince I am miſtaken in this particular, ſurely it muſt be as great a miſtake to imagine, that our apoſtle would maintain an opinion, ſo repugnant to the aforementioned texts, and ſo contrary to univerſal obſervation.——Do not you perceive the very reverſe true, with regard to your own children? Why do you addreſs them with ſuch tender entreaties, ſuch warm exhortations, ſuch repeated arguments? Why do you allure them to duty by promiſes, and deter them from tranſgreſſion by threatenings? Is all this regimen, all this diſcipline, neceſſary for creatures that bear the holy image of GOD?

They made after the ſimilitude of GOD!—Then they have no need of the renewing influences of the HOLY GHOST, in caſe they live; and no need of the atonement of CHRIST's blood, in caſe they die. Would James the LORD's brother aſſert ſuch an egregious error, as not only oppoſes a ſingle article, but undermines the whole conſtitution of Chriſtianity? ſets aſide the ſanctification of the divine SPIRIT, and the propitiation of the REDEEMER's death?—Impoſſible for him to aſſert! impoſſible, I ſhould think, for us to ſuppoſe!

St James ſpeaks of a fact that is paſt; ſpeaks of men collectively, as they were all included in their firſt parent. The paſſage, I apprehend, ſhould be tranſlated, not, men that are, but, men that were † created, &c.—The ſcripture conſiders Adam, as the common parent of us all; nay more, conſiders us all as exiſting in our great progenitor. Which is ſo far from overthrowing, that it eſtabliſhes, the point in debate. For if we were all created after the ſimilitude of GOD, in and with Adam; it muſt follow, that we all fell from our conformity to GOD, in and with Adam. And if ſo—let me for once retort my friend's interrogatory—Where is not original ſin?

I am very ſure, it runs through our liturgy; is an eſſential part of our articles; and moſt ſtrongly delineated in our homilies. Shall I produce ſome of theſe teſtimonies, which are as clear, as they are copious?

Ther. No more of your teſtimonies, good Aſpaſio. Inform me rather, what advantages can accrue from your inculcating, or my adopting ſuch a doctrine. Suppoſe it were undeniably true, diſagreeable truths, like diſagreeable objects, ſhould be conſigned over to obſcurity, not obtruded upon our view.——On ſuch an occaſion, the reply of Themiſtocles ſhould be mine. One of the literati of Greece offered to communicate an elaborate and curious invention; by means of which, his memory ſhould be ſo wonderfully ſtrengthened, as to retain whatever he read or heard. "My friend," replied the hero, "you quite miſtake the way to ſerve me. I "want to learn the art, not of remembering, but of for-"getting."

Aſp. If to forget our diſeaſe, were a likely method to reſtore our health, I ſhould readily concur in your hero's way of thinking. As this will hardly be allowed, I cannot but judge it more adviſeable, to remember our diſeaſe, that we may inquiry after a remedy.

Ther. Where is this remedy to be had?

Aſp. Not on earth, but from heaven.——The ſchools of ſcience cannot diſcover it. The courts of kings are unable to procure it. The college of phyſicians, know not how to preſcribe it. But the goſpel of our ſalvation preſcribes, prepares, and diſpenſes it. The language of CHRIST in his holy word is, I will bring her health and cure *. And the beginning of our cure is, to be ſenſible of our diſorder.

Hence we are taught to be humble.——To review the catalogue of our actual tranſgreſſions, is a mortifying employ. But that which lays the ſoul in the loweſt abaſement, is the conviction of inbred iniquity. This ſtrikes at the root of human vanity, and cuts aſunder the very ſinews of ſelf-conceit. Blindneſs in the underſtanding; impotency in the will; diſorder in the affections; theſe are not viſitants, but † inhabitants; congenial with our frame, and ingrained in our conſtitution. How then—O! how can we be vain of our moral beauty, who have an hereditary defilement cleaving to all our faculties? Surely this muſt baniſh the Phariſee from our breaſt, and inſpire us with the ſentiments of that ſincere penitent, Behold! I am vile ‡! muſt teach us the language of the abaſhed leper, Unclean! unclean ‖!

Ther. I ſhould think, it would make us melancholy, rather than humble; ſerve to no other purpoſe, than to introduce an afflictive ſenſe of extreme wretchedneſs.

Aſp. Did we intend to reſt here, your apprehenſions would be juſt. But we urge the doctrine of original corruption, as a preparative for the redemption of CHRIST.

It is obſervable, that very few applied to the bleſſed JESUS in the days of his fleſh, but the ſons and daughters of affliction. The levee of that PRINCE of peace was crouded by the lame, the blind, the diſeaſed. Theſe, being ſenſible of diſtreſs, and longing for relief, fell as humble ſupplicants at his feet. While others who were firm in their health, and gay in their ſpirits, rejected him with contemptuous ſcorn.——When we perceive "the plague of our heart," and feel thoſe worſe than ulcerous ſores, which overſpread our nature; we alſo ſhall ardently ſeek to the LORD our healer. When we find ourſelves ſubject to the curſe of the law, in bondage to the tyranny of Satan, and liable to everlaſting damnation; then the divine PHYSICIAN, and the divine REDEEMER will be precious indeed.——Whereas, if we remain inſenſible of our miſery, the goſpel, which is ſaving health to the contrite ſoul, will be an unaffecting ſtory to our ears. We may hear it, we may read it, as an amuſing narrative; but ſhall not receive it, as a ſovereign remedy.

Ther. Not receive the goſpel, Aſpaſio! I hardly underſtand what you mean. I often ſtudy the goſpel; I believe it to be a divine revelation; and endeavour to follow its directions.—I look upon it, as containing the moſt refined ſyſtem of morality; as enforcing every virtue, by the ſtrongeſt motives; and recommending all, by the moſt perfect example.

Aſp. To which you ſhould add,—as revealing that great MEDIATOR, who has fulfilled all righteouſ-

---

* Eph. ii. 3. Hoc uno loco, ſays BEZA, quaſi fulmine, totus homo, quantus quantus eſt, proſternitur. Neque enim naturam dicit læſam, ſed mortuam, per peccatum: ideoque iræ obnoxiam.

† Jam. iii. 9. That this is the preciſe ſignification of the participle γεγονοτας, may be gathered from 1 Tim. v. 9. where γεγονυιαι is tranſlated having been; and muſt neceſſarily refer, not to the preſent, but to the paſt condition of the widow.

* Jer. xxxiii. 6.

† Called therefore η οικουσα εν εμοι αμαρτια ſin that dwelleth in me, Rom. vii. 17.

‡ Job xl. 4. ‖ Lev. xiii. 45.

neſs, to effect our juſtification; who has alſo the fulneſs of the SPIRIT, to accompliſh our regeneration. Otherwiſe, what you mention, is infinitely ſhort of the goſpel.—It brings no glad tidings to fallen creatures. It adminiſters no ſuccour to ruined ſinners. It is like writing a copy for the blind, or ſetting a taſk to the diſabled; which would rather be an inſult on their impotence, than a relief of their diſtreſs.

The firſt particular I wave at preſent. Only let me aſk your opinion of the laſt; which is a grand doctrine, and a very diſtinguiſhing privilege of the goſpel. I mean the doctrine and the privilege of ſpiritual regeneration. Excluſive of which, all your endeavours to poſſeſs virtue and practice morality, will be no morality, will be no better than endeavours to fly without wings, or to run without feet.

While unimpreſſed with a ſenſe of our original depravity, we ſhall probably ſit contented with ſome ſuperficial reformation, and not aſpire after a renewal of the heart. Civility will paſs for ſanctity, and a temperate diſpoſition for a gracious habit.——Why is the new birth, why are all the ſaving operations of the bleſſed SPIRIT, diſregarded by ſome, derided by others? Becauſe theſe perſons are inſenſible of their utter inability to all good, and of their abject ſlavery to all evil. Therefore they ſee no reaſon for this divine agency, or for that univerſal change.

You alſo, my dear friend, while unacquainted with your natural corruption, cannot apprehend either the reaſonableneſs or the neceſſity of being renewed in the ſpirit of your mind *. But when experience has taught you the former, you will want no arguments to convince you of the latter.—Can creatures, who are blind in their underſtandings, diſcern the things which belong to their eternal peace?—Can creatures, who are dead in ſin, exerciſe the graces, or diſcharge the duties, of a Chriſtian life?—Can creatures, whoſe hearts are enmity againſt GOD, either delight to do his will here, or be meet for his beatific preſence hereafter?

Under the influence of ſuch convictions, that new birth, which the goſpel of CHRIST promiſes, which the SPIRIT of GOD produces, will appear as neceſſary for your ſtate, and be as welcome to your ſoul, as theſe gentle dews are neceſſary for the languiſhing herbs, and welcome to the thirſty ſoil.

Ther. The dews, though refreſhing to the flowers, may be too chilly for our conſtitutions. And ſee! the ſtar of evening, by proclaiming the approach of night, has given us a warning to quit our arbour.——Some other time we muſt reſume this inquiry. For I am by no means ſatisfied, that your theory agrees with experience.

Aſp. I fear, I have already kept you out too long. Let me juſt obſerve, as we go in,—that the doctrine, however diſagreeable in itſelf, is conducted to an advantageous iſſue. It is productive of a much more ſubſtantial conſolation, than hiſtory aſſigns to the great, but exiled Marius. When he fled, with his ruined circumſtances, to linger out the poor remains of life among the ruins of Carthage, what was his chief ſupport? "Contemplating," ſays my author, "that famous city "in the duſt, he was the leſs afflicted with his own "downfall *."

We have not been put off with ſuch cold comforts, ſuch negative benefits. The belief of original ſin has a tendency,—to make us humble,—to ſhew us our need of CHRIST,—to create in us a hunger and thirſt after the renewing influences of his SPIRIT, and the juſtifying merit of his righteouſneſs.——So that it muſt be owing to our own perverſeneſs, or our own negligence, if we do not levy a tax upon our loſs, and riſe even by our fall.

* Eph. iv. 23.

* Inopem vitam in tugurio ruinarum Carthaginienſium tolerantem cum Mariut aſpiciens Carthaginem, illa intuens Marium, alter alteri poſſent eſſe ſolatio. VELL. PATERC.

DIALOGUE XII.

THE ſun was fiercely bright, and the ſky without a cloud.——Not a breath fanned the woods, nor a gale curled the ſtream.——The fields, expoſed to all the fiery beams, were like a glowing hearth.——The little birds, overcome by the potent influence, loſt for a while their tuneful notes. Nothing was heard in the garden but the drowſy hum of bees, and the moan-like buz of winged inſects.——All nature ſeemed to languiſh. The flouriſhing meads looked ſickly; the gayeſt bloſſoms began to fade; the ſprightlieſt animals, if not repoſed under ſome cooling ſhelter, panted for breath, and hung their drooping heads, amidſt the all-ſurrounding blaze and the unſufferable heat.

Aſpaſio diſappeared ever ſince dinner, and none could tell whither he was gone.——Theron, as ſoon as the tea-equipage was removed, took his way to the wood. Deſirous of the thickeſt ſhade, he haſtened to the centre. A ſerpentine walk compoſed the avenue: which, after ſeveral windings, delivered him into a large circular area: not covered with a Grecian or Roman temple, unmeaning imitation of pagan idolatry; but ſurrounded with aged and princely oaks: the coalition of whoſe branches threw over the graſſy plat a majeſtic rural dome, and their unpierced foliage imbrowned the noon-tide hours.

In the midſt, and elevated on a ſquare baſe, was a ſtatue repreſenting the venerable Elijah,—on his bended knees,—with hands ſtretched out, and eyes lifted up to heaven. His attitude, his air, his every feature, were a moſt lively comment on thoſe ſtrong energetic expreſſions of ſcripture; Take hold on GOD *; Wreſtle with the ALMIGHTY †; Pour out your hearts before him ‡.—On one ſide of the pedeſtal, were engraven the prieſts of Baal, in frantic emotions calling upon their ſenſeleſs deity, and gaſhing themſelves with unavailing wounds.—On the other was exhibited, in baſſo-relievo, the adoring Tiſhbite's altar; his victim burning with fire from the LORD, even while the water ran from every limb, and overflowed the trench below.

A remote caſcade tumbled from a craggy rock. The ſtream, after having waſted its ſilver foam in a winding progreſs, ſtraggled into this grand arbour. Here it juſt appeared, gliding down a gentle ſlope, with a flaunting air, and a prattling noiſe. Impreſſed, as it were, with the unexpected ſolemnity of the ſcene, it ſeemed to check its wanton waves, and turned aſide into a more ſequeſtered path. As ſome heedleſs trifler, who bolts unaware into the royal preſence, ſtands ſtruck with reverence and awe, or retires with precipitance and confuſion.

The deep gloom, ſhedding a kind of night, even

* Iſ. lxiv. 7.

† Coloſſ. iv. 12. Αγωνιζομενος υπερ ημων προσευχαις.

‡ Pſal. lxii. 8.

while

while the ſun glared in the ſky;—not a whiſper ſtirring, among ſo many millions of leaves; and all their warbling natives huſhed in ſilence;—the ſonorous toll of the diſtant caſcade, and the tinkling chime of the nearer rill;—the profound adoration, and fervent devotion, which lived in the lineaments of the impaſſioned ſtone:—all theſe circumſtances rendered the place prodigiouſly auguſt and ſtriking. Not much unlike the ancient oratories *, where holy people retired from the giddy ring, and the buſtling croud, to ennoble their minds, with ſublime contemplation; where they bid a temporary adieu to the tumultuous world, its gay impertinence and ſolemn dulneſs, in order to maintain a more uninterrupted communion with that mighty BEING, who ſitteth upon the circle of the earth, and the inhabitants thereof are as graſhoppers before HIM †.

Welcome to Theron was the ſhady bower; welcome the cool aſpect, and the muſical flow of the water; but more welcome than all was the ſight of his friend, who lay reclined at the foot of an oak, with a book half open in his hand, and his eye fixed upon the ſtatue.

Ther. I know not, Aſpaſio, whether I muſt make an apology, for breaking in upon your retirement; or call you to an account, for depriving the ladies of your company at the tea-table.

Aſp. Indeed, Theron, I have been ſo much delighted with the place, with the companion in my hand, and the noble object before me, that I ſcarce obſerved, how the time ſtole away. And I flatter myſelf, if you will take a ſeat by my ſide, and ſhare my entertainment; you will be more inclined to excuſe, than to aggravate my fault.

Ther. Is Tully then (for I obſerve his name on the volume) your companion? And can ſuch a devoted admirer of the Bible be ſo highly charmed with a Heathen claſſic?—St Auguſtine ſomewhere declares, that, though paſſionately fond, before his converſion, of Tully's writings; yet, after that memorable change, he could no longer relish thoſe admired compoſitions; becauſe they were not ſweetened, as he expreſſes himſelf, with the melliſluous name of JESUS.

Aſp. I am far from pretending to ſuch an exalted pitch of devotion, as that ſeraphic father attained. I can ſpend a vacant minute on the delicate odes of Horace; and taſte a refined entertainment in Virgil's beautiful poem. But when I hear a ſermon, or peruſe a religious treatiſe, which borrows neither dignity nor charms from that amiable and glorious name, I own myſelf extremely diſappointed. Without the offices, the merits, or the grace of CHRIST, the ſermon and the treatiſe appear as defective, as a body that is neither adorned with the head, nor enlivened with the heart.

Ther. I ſuppoſe then you cultivate an acquaintance with the Grecian and Roman authors, in order to improve your taſte, and poliſh your ſtyle.

Aſp. Theſe, and, I am apt to think, more conſiderable advantages than theſe, may be derived from an occaſional application to their works. They may ſerve as ſo many ſhades, to ſet off, with heightened luſtre, the beauty and glory of the ſacred oracles.

While I peruſe Plato's ornamented page, or liſten to Cicero's flowing periods, I am ſomewhat like the perſon who amuſes himſelf in a gallery of painted flowers. He is pleaſed with the curious creation of the pencil; but finds none of that delicious fragrance, none of thoſe breathing ſweets, which met him in the garden, and regale his ſenſe from the blooming parterre.——So here are brilliant ſentiments, and a florid diction; delicate touches of wit, and bold ſtrokes of deſcription. But no diſcovery of CHRIST JESUS,—no diſplays of his ineffable love,—no overtures of reconciliation with the bleſſed GOD. Nothing to yield us ſolid comfort in our preſent ſtate, or any joyful expectations with regard to the approaching eternity.

Beſides, when I converſe with thoſe celebrated geniuſes of antiquity, who were at once the moſt erroneous, and the moſt judicious;—the moſt judicious in their taſte of polite literature; the moſt erroneous in their apprehenſions of inviſible things; they ſhew me, what they never intended, the inexpreſſible need of revelation. They teach me to ſet a higher value on that ineſtimable gift. I bleſs the diſtinguiſhing goodneſs of Providence, which has caſt my lot *, not at Athens, but in EMMANUEL's land. I ſay, with wonder and gratidude,—"Why "did not my exiſtence commence in thoſe æras of re-"ligious dotage? Why was not my portion confined to "thoſe regions of barbariſm and deluſion? Why am "not I burning incenſe to idols; paying ſenſeleſs adora-"tion to ſculptured ſtone; or worſhipping, with deteſt-"able ceremonies, a ſet of laſcivious, debauched, and "ſcandalous † deities?"—Surely, Theron, from every peruſal of thoſe volumes, attended with ſuch a reflection, we ſhall ſee the utmoſt reaſon to magnify the tender mercies of our GOD; whereby the day-ſpring from on high hath viſited us ‡, and brought us out of darkneſs into the marvellous light of the goſpel.

Permit me to mention another benefit, which may reſult from a correſpondence with thoſe maſterly writers.——The ſtreams may lead us to the inexhauſtible fountain; lead us to admire the only wiſe GOD our SAVIOUR,

* It is thought by ſome eminent critics, that, when our LORD continued all night ἐν προσευχῇ Θεῦ, Luke vi. 12. the phraſe denotes his continuance in an oratory; a place ſet apart for prayer, and a devout intercourſe with GOD.

That there were places of this kind among the Jews, is indiſputable; and that the opinion is ingenious, cannot be denied. But I very much doubt, whether it gives us the true meaning of the evangeliſt.—Having mentioned a mountain, it would hardly ſuit his conciſe manner, to be more particular with regard to the place; neither was the circumſtance ſo important, as to deſerve a ſecond mention.—I am apt to think alſo, that ſuch a place would have defeated the deſign of our SAVIOUR's retirement, which ſeems to have been privacy; and that ſuch a title, as GOD's place of prayer, was wholly appropriated to the temple.

I apprehend, we ſhall have a more defenſible, and, I am perſuaded, we ſhall have a more exalted ſenſe, if we ſuppoſe the expreſſion to ſignify,—the copiouſneſs and fervour of our LORD's devotion,—the vaſt importance, and the unequalled ſucceſs, of this his prolonged and ſolemn prayer: which could no way be more emphatically declared, than by the addition of the divine name: He continued all night in the prayer of GOD.—See Aſpaſio's remark, p. 198.

† Iſ xl. 22. What a noble image is here, and what an exquiſitely-fine contraſt! GOD, the great GOD, ſitteth on thoſe lofty and immenſe heavens, which, at an inconceivable diſtance, ſurround this penſile globe. From that moſt ſublime and magnificent throne, he looks down upon the inhabitants of the earth: who,—in all their pomp and ſplendor,—amidſt all their admired works and boaſted acquiſitions,—are mean and impotent in his ſight: mean and impotent as the poor inſects, which wander over the parched heath for ſuſtenance; which ſpend all the day in idle inſignificant chirpings; and, at night, take up their contemptible habitation on a blade of graſs.

* Alluding to the ſtory of the philoſopher, who uſed to bleſs the gods for three privileges:—That he was made, not a brute, but a rational creature:—That he was born, not in barbarous climes, but in Greece:—That he lived, not in the more uncultivated ages, but in the time, and under the tuition of Socrates.

† This, I think, gives us the moſt deplorable and horrid idea of the blindneſs of our fallen nature. The Heathens, even amidſt all the politeneſs of their taſte, and notwithſtanding their ſuperior advancement in the ſciences, were haters of the true GOD, and robbed him of his honour: nay, what is unſpeakably worſe, they paid it to monſters;—monſters of lewdneſs and treachery, vice and immorality. Egregious, ſottiſh, almoſt incredible ſtupidity! to worſhip thoſe beings, which deſerved univerſal abhorrence! to deify thoſe characters, which could never be ſufficiently deteſted!

‡ Luke i. 78.

SAVIOUR, who has given such a shining vein of ingenuity to his rational creatures. As I read their works, and am charmed with their beauties, I would frequently reflect,—" If the essays of a finite mind, and the compo-" sitions of a moral pen, yield such high satisfactions; what " rapturous, what unknown delight must arise from an " uninterrupted communion with infinite Wisdom? To " stand,—not at the feet of Homer, and attend the flights " of his elevated imagination,—not in the presence of " Socrates, and hear the dictates of his sagacious soul;—" but to stand in the courts of the LORD, and before " the throne of the LAMB: there to contemplate, with-" out any interposing veil, the counsels of his unerring " providence; to have the mysteries of his redeeming love, " laid fully open to our view: and receive the brightest " manifestations of all his amiable, his adorable, his un-" speakable attributes!"

Ther. These are advantages truly desirable, and equally obvious. Methinks, it surprises me, that I should never so much as propose them; and grieves me, that I should so long be deprived of them. A view to such very superior improvements will, I hope, render my future intercourse with those favourite authors, still more agreeable, and abundantly more beneficial.

But let me ask, what passage was engaging your attention this afternoon?

Asp. The great orator's treatise concerning the nature of the divine BEING *: that part especially, which proves his existence and perfections, from the formation of the human body.

Ther. And don't you perceive, that he is almost as deficient in the knowledge of his subject, as he is mistaken in his ideas of the supreme CAUSE?—The exquisite contrivance and inimitable workmanship of the human frame, were, in those early ages, but dimly discerned. It was the infancy of anatomy; when the very professors had scarcely the qualifications of a modern pupil. Many of the received notions were childish, almost all of them superficial.

Asp. Will my Theron then entertain me with a more accurate description of this wonderful structure?

Ther. How could you take occasion, Aspasio, from the hint I dropped, to conceive any such expectation? It is one thing to discover, another to correct, what is amiss. Many spectators can point out an accidental defect in some celebrated statue, or a small indelicacy in some valuable piece of painting, who are absolutely incapable of retouching the one, or supplying the other.

Asp. Since we are fallen upon this point, you must give me leave to renew and urge my request. I shall be extremely glad to hear your remarks upon the subject; especially as you have made this branch of science, a part of your amusement; and not without the advantage of anatomical dissections. Whereas I have very seldom applied my thoughts to the former, and never had an opportunity of being present at the latter.

Let me also observe, that our very situation favours, or rather suggests such a topic of conversation. All the fine prospects of the country are excluded. We have scarce any thing left, but ourselves, to contemplate. And shall this be the only theme we neglect?

Ther. It is somewhat preposterous, I must confess, to pry into the archives of colleges; to ransack the cabinets of the virtuosi; to carry our search through the whole compass of external nature; and, at the same time, overlook the far more surprising curiosities which abound in the composition of our own bodies.

Since you insist upon it, my observations, crude and extemporaneous as they are, shall submit themselves to your judgment; provided you will be content to receive only a few of the outlines, and nothing like a finished draught.

Asp. Let me just hint, that the more circumstantial your account is, so much the more welcome will it be to your friend, and so much the more honourable to our common CREATOR. For I really think, that Galen's declaration upon this head is perfectly just; which I have read in my favourite commentator Beza, and which speaks to the following effect *.—" Such treatises as " display the excellencies of the great CREATOR, com-" pose one of the noblest and most acceptable hymns. " To acquaint ourselves with his sublime perfections; " and point out to others his infinite power, his un-" erring wisdom, and his boundless benignity; this is a " more substantial act of devotion, than to slay hecatombs " of victims at his altar, or kindle mountains of spices " into incense."—Theron, after pausing a few minutes, thus resumed the discourse.

Ther. When some master-builder undertakes to erect a magnificent edifice, he begins with the less decorated, but more solid parts; those which are to support, or those which are to contain the rest. This order, if you please, we will follow, in considering " the earthly house of " our tabernacle †."

First, you have a system of bones, cast into a variety of moulds, enlarged or contracted into a variety of sizes. All strong, that they may commodiously bear up the fleshly machine; yet light, that they may not depress the animal with an encumbering load.—Bored with an internal cavity, to contain the moistening marrow; and perforated with exceedingly-fine ducts, to admit the nourishing vessels.—Insensible themselves, they are covered with a membrane ‡ of exquisite sensibility: which warns them of the approach, and secures them from the annoyance, of any injurious friction; and, at the same time, preserves the muscular parts from being fretted in their action, by the hard and rough substance of the bones.—Their figures are always most precisely fitted to their uses. They are generally larger at the extremities, than in the middle; that they may be joined more firmly, and not so easily dislocated. The manner of their articulation is truly admirable ‖, and remarkably various; yet never varied, without demonstrating some wise design, and answering some valuable end. Frequently when two are united, the one is nicely rounded, and capped with a smooth substance; the other is scooped into a hollow of the same dimensions, to receive the polished knob; and both are lubricated with an unctuous fluid, to yield the readiest rotation in the socket.

The feet compose the firmest and neatest pedestal; infinitely beyond all that statuary or architecture can accomplish; capable of altering its form, and extending its size, as different circumstances require. Besides performing the office of a pedestal, they contain a set of the nicest springs; which help to place the body in a variety of graceful attitudes, and qualify it for a multiplicity of advantageous motions.—The

* De naturâ deorum.

* Vid. BEZ. Annot. ad Rom. i. 20.

† 2 Cor. v. 1. St Paul very pertinently compares the bodily structure to a house: and adds, in that strain of godly edifying, which runs through all his writings, our earthly and tent-like habitation, ἐπίγειος οἰκία τοῦ σκήνους. Referring to its mean original, as it was formed out of the dust; and to its short continuance, as it must soon return to dust again. Being, though commodious as a house, yet transitory as a tent: not like the everlasting mountains, which stand fixed and rooted to the centre; but like those portable tenements, which are set up in the evening, are taken down in the morning, and then their place is known no more.

‡ The periosteum.

‖ Mirabiles commissuras habent. CIC.

undermost

ndermoſt part of the heel, and the extremity of the ble, and, are ſhod with a tough, inſenſible, ſinewy iſtance. This we may call a kind of natural ſcandal. never wears out, never wants repair, and always pre- ents that undue compreſſion of the veſſels, which the eight of the body, in walking or ſtanding, might herwiſe occaſion.——The legs and thighs are like ſub- antial and ſtately columns *; articulated in ſuch a man- er, that they adminiſter moſt commodiouſly to the act f walking, yet obſtruct not the eaſy poſture of ſitting. The legs ſwell out, towards the top, with a genteel rojection; and are wrought off, towards the bottom, with neat diminutions. Which variation leſſens their ulk, at the ſame time that it increaſes their beauty.

The ribs, turned into a regular arch, are gently move- ble, for the act of reſpiration. They form a ſecure odgment for the lungs and the heart; which, being ome of the moſt diſtinguiſhed and important organs of ife, have their reſidence fortified by this ſtrong ſemicir- ular rampart †.——The backbone is intended, not only o ſtrengthen the body, and ſuſtain its moſt capacious tore-rooms; but alſo to bring down that communica- ion of the brain, which is uſually termed the ſpinal mar- row. As an open channel, it conveys, as a well-cloſed aſe, it guards this vital ſilver ‡; and, by ſeveral com- modious outlets, tranſmits the animating treaſure into ll the inferior parts. Had it only been large, ſtrait, nd hollow, it might have ſerved theſe ſeveral purpoſes. But then the loins muſt have been inflexible, and every man impaled (not by the executioner, but by nature) on a ſtake co-eval with his exiſtence. To avoid which, it conſiſts of very ſhort bones, cloſely knit together by intervening cartilages. This peculiarity of ſtructure prevents diſlocation; and gives the main pillar of our frame the pliancy of an oſier, even while it maintains the firmneſs of an oak.——By this means, it is a kind of continued joint; capable of various inflections, with- out bruiſing the ſoft medullary ſubſtance, which fills its cavity; without intercepting the nervous fluid, which is to be detached from this grand reſervoir; or diminiſh- ing that ſtrength, which is neceſſary to ſupport all the upper ſtories.——A formation ſo very peculiar in any other of the ſolids, muſt have been attended with great inconveniences. Here it is unſpeakably ſerviceable; is both, for workmanſhip and ſituation, a maſterpiece of creating ſkill, never enough to be admired.

The arms, pendent on either ſide, are exactly propor- tioned to each other; that the equilibrium of the ſtruc- ture may not be diſconcerted. Theſe, being the guards which defend ‖, and the miniſters which ſerve the whole body, are fitted for the moſt diverſified and extenſive ope- rations; firm with bone, yet not weighty with fleſh; and capable of performing with ſingular expedition and eaſe, all manner of uſeful motions. They bend in- wards, and turn outwards; they riſe upwards, and ſtoop downwards; they wheel about, and throw them- ſelves into whatever direction we pleaſe.—To theſe are annexed the hands; and all terminated by the fingers: which are, not like the arms, of the ſame length, and of an equal bigneſs; but in both reſpects different: which gives them a moſt graceful appearance, and a much greater degree of uſefulneſs. Were they all fleſh, they would be comparatively impotent; where they one entire bone, the would be utterly inflexible: but conſiſt- ing of various little bones, and a multitude of muſcles, what ſhape can they not aſſume? what ſervice can they not perform?—Being placed at the end of the arm, the ſphere of their action is exceedingly enlarged. This ad- vantageous ſituation realizes the fable of Briareus; and renders a pair of hands as ſerviceable as an hundred.— The extremities of the fingers are an aſſemblage of fine tendinous fibres, moſt acutely ſenſible *: which, not- withſtanding the delicacy of their texture, are deſtined to almoſt inceſſant employ, and frequently exerciſed among rugged objects. For this reaſon, they are over- laid with the nails, a ſort of horny expanſion; which, like a ferule, hinders the fleſh from being ungracefully flattened; and, like a ſheath †, preſerves the tender parts from injurious impreſſions.

In the miniſtry of the hands, and activity of the fingers, we poſſeſs a caſe of the fineſt inſtruments, or a col- lection of the nobleſt utenſils; qualifying us for the exe- cution of every work, which the projecting genius can deviſe, or the laviſh fancy crave.——To theſe we are obliged for the beautiful ſtatues, which have often en- tertained our eyes, in yonder ſolitary walks; and even for that melodious trumpet, which now addreſſes our ears, from the ſummer-houſe on the fiſh-pond.—Theſe raiſe the lofty column, and turn the ſpacious arch. Theſe ſwell the majeſtic dome, and adjuſt the commo- dious apartment. Architecture, with all her ſtriking beauties, and all her rich benefits, are the creation of the human hand.——Yielding to the ſtrength of the hand, the talleſt firs fall to the ground, and the largeſt oaks de- ſcend from the mountains. Faſhioned by the dexterity of the hand, they accommodate the ſailor with a floating warehouſe; and circulate, from Britain to Japan, the productions of nature, and the improvements of art.— Obedient to the human hand, metals aſcend from their ſubterranean beds; and compoſe the moſt ſubſtantial parts of that curious machine ‡, which tranſmits far and near, to the monarch's palace, and to the peaſant's hut, ſuch treaſures of wiſdom and knowledge, as the gold and cryſtal cannot equal ‖.

Among the Egyptians, the hand was the ſymbol of ſtrength; among the Romans, it was an emblem of fi- delity; and I think, it may, among all nations, be look- ed upon as the enſign of authority. It is the original and the univerſal ſceptre: that which not only repre- ſents, but aſcertains our dominion, over all the ele- ments, and over every creature.—Though providence has not given us the ſtrength of the horſe, the ſwift- neſs of the greyhound, or the ſagacious ſcent of the ſpaniel; yet, directed by the underſtanding, and enabled by the hand, we can ſubject them to our will; turn them to our advantage; and, in this ſenſe, make them all our own.—Theſe hands (ſurpriſing to relate!),

* Styled therefore by the ſacred philoſopher, the ſtrong men, Eccl. xii. 3.: and compared, by the ſame beautiful writer, to pillars of marble, Cant. v. 15.—As theſe are the ſtrongeſt parts of the body, and the ſupport of all the other, hence, I preſume, aroſe that proverbial expreſſion, which occurs in the hiſtory of Samſon, שוק על שוק Judg. xv. 8. rendered by the Septuagint, not very exactly, κνημην επι μηρον; by our Engliſh tranſlators, rather too vul- garly, hip and thigh. I believe, the word שוק ſignifies here, as it certainly ſignifies in many other places, what the Latins call armus; and that the image is taken from ſome robuſt and fierce animal, whoſe ſhoulders before, and whoſe thighs behind, are bro- ken in pieces. Then what miſchief can he do? what reſiſtance can he make? He is utterly diſabled. So that the expreſſion ſeems to denote, (and might perhaps, without violence to the original, be tranſlated) a total overthrow.

* Thou haſt fenced me, ſecured my inward and vital parts, with bones, and ſinews, Job. x. 11.—Crates pectoris, is Virgil's expreſ- ſion.

‡ This is ſuppoſed to be the part, which Solomon deſcribes by the ſilver cord: and is indeed like a cord, on account of its ſhape; like ſilver, on accouut of its colour, Eccl. xii. 6.

‖ Called, in Solomon's figurative but elegant ſketch of anatomy, the keepers of the houſe, Eccl. xii. 3.

* So very acute is the ſenſibility of theſe parts, that, I am in- formed, it furniſhes the tribunal of inquiſition with one of the moſt refined expedients in the art of torture. A ſtrong quill, ſharpened by the penknife, and dipped in ſome inflammable liquor, is thruſt deep between the nail and the finger. When the quill has cut its way through the ſhivering nerves; and ſtands planted, like a dagger, amidſt the guſhing blood; ſome barbarous hand ſets fire to the ex- tremity. The keen point, the ſlow flame, and both in the ſeat of the moſt lively ſenſation, put the miſerable ſufferer to the moſt ex- cruciating pain.

† Digitis munimina.

‡ The printing-preſs. ‖ Job xxviii. 17.

these short hands have found out a way, whereby they can dive to the bottom of the ocean; can penetrate the bowels of the earth; and reach from shore to shore. These feeble hands can manage the wings of the wind; can arm themselves with the rage of the fire; and press into their service the forcible impetuosity of the waters. ——How eminent is the dignity! how extensive the agency of the hand! it would require more eloquence, than your orator possessed, to display the former; and more pages, than your book contains, to describe the latter.——How greatly then are we indebted to our indulgent CREATOR, for accommodating us with this noble, this distinguishing, this invaluable member!

Above all, is the head; a majestic dome, designed for the residence of the brain. It is framed in exact conformity to this important purpose; ample, to receive it; strong, to uphold it; and firm, to defend it.——As the head resembles the general's tent in an army, or the monarch's palace in a city; it has a communication established with all, even the most inferior and remote, parts of the system; has outlets and avenues, for the ready dispatch of couriers to all quarters; and for the reception of speedy intelligence, on every interesting occasion. It is furnished with lodgments, wherein to post centinels of various characters, and appointed for various offices.—To expedite their operations; whether they are employed in reconnoitring what passes without, or examining what claims admittance within; the whole turns upon a curious pivot, most nicely contrived, to afford the largest and freest circumvolutions.

This stately capital is screened from heat; defended from cold; and at the same time very much beautified, by a copious growth of hair: which flows down from the parted forelock in decent curls; and hangs, mantling on the cheeks, clustering on the shoulders.——A decoration *, incomparably more delicate, than any or all the orders of architecture can supply; and so perfectly light, that it no way encumbers or incommodes the wearer.

While many animals creep on the ground; while all of them are prone in their posture, or their aspect; the attitude of man is erect.——Which is by far the most graceful, has an air of dignity, and bespeaks superiority. —It is by far the most commodious; fits us for the prosecution of every grand scheme, and facilitates the success of all our extensive designs.—It is likewise attended with the greatest safety; being, if not less than any other position exposed to dangers, yet more happily contrived to repel or avoid them.

Asp. May it not likewise be intended to remind us of our exalted orginal, and our sublime end? Our original, which was the breath of the ALMIGHTY, and the spirit of the MOST HIGH. Our end, which is, not the soil we tread on, or any of its low productions, but the heaven of heavens, and the things that are above.

But not to divert from our subject; which, in my friend's manner of handling it, is as entertaining, as it is instructive.—The bones (to carry on your own allusion) are only the rafters, the beams, the shell of the living edifice. You have raised the walls, and laid the floors; you have made the proper divisions, and left the necessary apertures. But, in every finished house, the roof is covered, and the rooms are wainscotted. The fashes are hung, and the doors turned upon their hinges. The grotes are fixed, and the stairs ascend. Within, the lodgings are furnished; without, the front is ornamented. All is rendered commodious for domestic use, and graceful to the external view.

Ther. This likewise is executed by the great, the divine ARTIFICER.—Here are ligaments: a tough and strong arrangement of fibres; to unite the several limbs, and render, what would otherwise be a disjointed unwieldy jumble, a well-compacted and self-manageable system.——Membranes; or thin and flexile tunicles, appointed to enwrap the fleshy parts; to form a connection between some, and make a separation between others *.

Arteries, the rivers of our little world †, or the aqueducts of the organized metropolis. Some of which ascend to the head; others spread themselves over the shoulders; some extend to the arms; some descend to the feet; and striking out, as they go, into numberless smaller canals, visit the streets, the alleys, and every individual apartment of the vital city.——These, being wide at their origin, and lessening as they branch themselves, check the rapid impetus of the blood. To sustain this shock, they are endued with uncommon strength; by performing this service, they oblige the crimson current to pass into the narrowest defiles, and distribute itself into all quarters.——The blood, thrown from the heart, dilates the arteries, and their own elastic force contracts them. By which means, they vibrate, in proper places, very perceivably against the finger; bring advices of the utmost importance to the physician; and very much assist him, both in discovering the nature of diseases, and prescribing for their respective cures.—The larger arteries, where-ever the body is formed for incurvation, are situate on the bending side; lest, being stretched to an improper length by the inflection, their dimensions should be lessened, and the circulating fluid retarded.—They are not, like several of the considerable veins, laid so near the surface, as to be protrusive of the skin; but are deposited to a proper depth in the flesh. This situation renders them more secure from external injuries. It conceals likewise those starts and resilitions of the pulse, which, if apparent, would discompose the most sedate, and disfigure the most comely countenance.——Could we cast our eye upon the river, which runs through the neighbouring meadow, we might observe several mills intersecting the stream. The waters at those places, if not entirely stopped, drain away very slowly. In consequence of this obstruction, the lower channels would be sunk dry, and the upper ones swelled into a flood. To obviate both these inconveniencies, low-shots are provided; which, carrying off the surcharge, prevent a glut above, and supply the banks below. In those parts of the body, which are most liable to pressure, much the same expedient takes place. The arteries inosculate; or, breaking into a new tract, they fetch a little circuit, in order to return and communicate again with the main road. So that, if any obstacle blocks up or straitens the direct passage; the current, by diverting to this new channel, eludes the impediment; maintains an uninterrupted flow; and soon regains its wonted course.

Veins are appointed to receive the blood from the

* Absalom's hair was reckoned a distinguishing part of his beauty, 2 Sam. xiv. 26.—The amiableness of the church, in the exemplary conversation of true believers, is displayed by the same ornament, Thy hair is as a flock of goats, that are seen afar off, and appear in a pendent attitude from the summit of mount Gilead; most agreeably adorning the place, and detaining the spectator's eye. Cant. iv. 1. I prefer the exposition of Arias Montanus, שלשו quæ pendent, quæ prominent: as it takes in a circumstance, which corresponds with the pensile position of the hair; renders the comparison more full and exact; and is, according to the observation, of a most accurate judge, one of the chief remarkables in such a prospect;

Non ego vos posthac, viridi projectus in antro, Dumosis pendere procul de rupe videbo. VIRG.

* The intestines are fastened to each other by the mesentery. The breast is divided into two cavities by the mediastinum. Both which are reckoned among the membranes.

† A human body was called by the ancients, the microcosm; that is, a little world, or the world in miniature.

arteries, arteries, and reconvey it to the heart.——Small at their riſe, and enlarging as they advance, they are void of any pulſation. In theſe, the preſſure of the circulating fluid is not near ſo forcible as in the arterial tubes: for which reaſon, their texture is conſiderably ſlighter. Such an exact œconomiſt is nature, even amidſt all her liberality * !——In many of theſe canals, the current, though widening continually, and acquiring a proportionable increaſe of gravity, is obliged to puſh its way againſt the perpendicular. By which circumſtance, it is expoſed to the hazard of falling back, and overloading the veſſels, if not of ſuppreſſing the animal motion. For a ſecurity againſt this danger, valves are interpoſed at proper diſtances: which are no hindrance to the regular paſſage, but prevent the reflux, ſuſtain the augmented weight, and facilitate a progreſs to the grand receptacle. This auxiliary contrivance comes in, where the blood is conſtrained to climb; but is diſmiſſed where the ſteep aſcent ceaſes, and ſuch a precaution would be needleſs.

Here are glands, whoſe office it is to filtrate the paſſing fluid. Each of theſe glands is an aſſemblage of veſſels, complicated and intervolved, with ſeeming confuſion, but with perfect regularity. As ſome kind of ſieves tranſmit the duſt, and retain the corn; others bolt out the meal, and hold back the bran; ſo ſome of theſe glandulous ſtrainers draw off the fineſt, others the groſſeſt parts of the blood. Some, like the diſtiller's alembic, ſublimate †; others, like the common ſewers, defæcate ‡. Each forms a ſecretion, far more curious than the moſt admired operations of chemiſtry; yet all neceſſary for the ſupport of life, or conducive to the comfort of the animal.——Muſcles, wove in nature's niceſt loom; compoſed of the ſlendereſt fibres, yet endued with incredible ſtrength; faſhioned after a variety of patterns, but all in the higheſt taſte for elegance, convenience, and uſefulneſs.——Theſe, with their tendons annexed, conſtitute the inſtruments of motion. The former, contracting their ſubſtance, operate ſomewhat like the pulley in mechanics. The latter, reſembling the cord, are faſtened to a bone, or ſome partition of fleſh; and, following the muſcular contraction, actuate the part into which they are inſerted. This, and all their functions they execute, not like a ſluggiſh beaſt of burden, but quick as the lightning.——Nerves, ſurpriſingly-minute tubes; derived from the brain, and permeated by an exquiſitely-ſubtile fluid: which, gliding into the muſcles, ſets them on work; diffuſes the power of ſenſation through the body; or, returning upon any impreſſion from without, gives all needful intelligence to the ſoul.——Veſicles, diſtended with an unctuous matter, in ſome places, compoſe a ſoft cuſhion ‖ for nature; in other places, they fill up her vacuities, and ſmooth the inequalities of the fleſh. Inwardly, they ſupply the ſeveral movements of the active machine; outwardly, they render its appearance plump, well proportioned, and graceful.

The ſkin, like a curious ſurtout *, exactly fitted, is ſuperinduced over the whole. Formed of the moſt delicate net-work; whoſe meſhes † are minute, and whoſe threads ‡ are multiplied even to a prodigy.——The meſhes ſo minute, that nothing paſſes them, which is diſcernable by the eye; though they diſcharge, every moment, myriads and myriads of ſuperfluous incumbrances from the body. The ſteam ariſing from the warm buſineſs tranſacted within, is carried off by theſe real, though imperceptible funnels §. Which conſtitutes what we uſually call inſenſible perſpiration.——The threads ſo multiplied, that neither the point of the ſmalleſt needle, nor the incomparably-nicer ſpear of a gnat, nor even the inviſible lancet of a flea, can pierce any ſingle part, without cauſing an uneaſy ſenſation and a ſuffuſion of blood; conſequently, without wounding, even by ſo ſmall a puncture, both a nerve and a vein §.

The veins, either pervading or lying parallel with this fine tranſparent coat, beautify the human ſtructure; thoſe parts eſpecially, which are moſt conſpicuous, and intended for public view. The pliant wriſt, and the taper arm, they variegate with an inlay of living ſapphire. They ſpread vermilion over the lips ¶, and plant roſes in the cheeks. While the eye, tinged with gloſſy jet, or ſparkling with the blue of heaven, is fixed in an orb of poliſhed cryſtal. Inſomuch that the earthly tabernacle exhibits the niceſt proportions, and richeſt graces; ſuch nice proportions, as afford the moſt correct model for ſtatuary; ſuch rich graces, as the canvaſs never bore, as painting imitates in vain.

Aſp. How juſt in itſelf, and how pertinent to our purpoſe, is that well-known acknowledgment of the ſacred and royal anatomiſt; I am curiouſly wrought ‡ !

* A parallel inſtance of frugality is obſervable in the arteries: whoſe coats are ſpun thinner, as the diameter of the veſſels becomes ſmaller, and the preſſure of the blood weaker.

† The glandulous ſubſtance of the brain, which ſecretes the animal ſpirits.

‡ The liver and kidneys. The former of which ſeparates the gall; the latter drains off a fluid, which, being ſufficiently known, need not be named. I could wiſh, it had not been ſo explicitly and coarſely mentioned in our tranſlation of the beſt of books; but that we had rendered the original, in 1 Kings xiv. 10. Every male, in Iſ. xxxvi. 12. Eat and drink their own excrements.

‖ The calf of the leg, for inſtance: whoſe large collection of muſcles, intermingled with fat, is of ſingular ſervice to thoſe important bones. It ſtanks and fortifies them, like a ſtrong baſtion. It ſupports and cheriſhes them, like a ſoft pillow. And what is no leſs pleaſing to obſerve, it accommodates and defends them on that very ſide, where they moſt frequently reſt their weight, and where they are leaſt capable of being guarded by the eye.

* Thou haſt clothed me with ſkin and fleſh, Job x. 11.—The word ſurtout is uſed according to the French etymology; ſignifies a garment, coming over the whole body; and is moſt beautifully expreſſed by our LORD's ἀμφιεσμον, Matth. vi. 30.

† The pores of the cuticula.

‡ The nervous fibres, and other veſſels of the cutis.—Nature is ſomewhat like Solomon's virtuous woman: who is not afraid of the ſnow for her houſehold, becauſe her houſehold are clothed in ſcarlet; or, as it may be rendered, are clothed with pairs, have two coats a-piece, Prov. xxxi. 21. (See Gen. vi. 19, 20. where the word כפל occurs in this ſignification.)—The body alſo is accommodated with a double covering. The outermoſt is that ſoft whitiſh tegument, which riſes in the puſtule of a bliſter. The innermoſt is that reddiſh and exquiſitely-tender part, which appears when the bliſter is broke, and the dead ſkin taken off.—The firſt is void of ſenſe, and intended to ſcreen the ſecond, not only from the ſtroke of injuries, but even from the impreſſions of the air, which, mild as it may feel to the ſheathed would be too rough and ſharp for the naked nerves.

There ſeems to be an alluſion to this particular in that remarkable expreſſion, Skin for ſkin, עור בעד עור Job ii. 4. Skin even unto ſkin; the very innmoſt ſkin, which cannot be taken away without the greateſt loſs, and ſevereſt pain. Yet, even this loſt a man would ſuffer, this pain he would endure in order to preſerve precious life.

‖ Theſe are ſomewhere prettily ſtyled cutaneous chimneys; and no wonder they are imperceptible, if, as Mr Lewenhoeck affirms, a ſingle grain of ſand will cover no leſs than 125,000.

§ A blood-veſſel at leaſt. Compared with theſe veſſels, the fine filmy threads, which, on ſome bright autumnal morning, float in the air, or hang on the ſtubble, muſt be large as a bell-rope, or bulky as a cable.——Such tubes, one would think, ſhould burſt at every breath we draw, or even break with their own fineneſs. Yet they are the conduit-pipes, which convey the vital fluid from and to the grand reſervoir. And ſo exquiſite, ſo admirable is their texture, that they will outlaſt the ſtrength of lead, or the heart of oak; theſe wearing away, thoſe growing ſtronger, by uſe!

¶ Thy lips are like a thread of ſcarlet, Cant. iv. 3. Like a thread, for their delicate ſhape; like a thread of ſcarlet, for their glowing colour.

‡ The original רקמה ſignifies finely wrought, or elegantly flouriſhed with a needle.—The tranſlation adopted by our liturgy is, in this place, flat and inexpreſſive. The Engliſh word faſhioned, has juſt the ſame inferiority to the beautiful Hebrew phraſe;

"There is a variety, a regularity, and an elegance, in "the texture of my body; in the formation and arrange- "ment of theſe bones and muſcles, theſe veins and arte- "ries;—reſembling, ſhall I ſay?—rather, infinitely ſur- "paſſing, the moſt coſtly and admired pieces of em- "broidery."

It is one of the fineſt ſimilitudes, which the whole circle of polite arts could afford. Yet every compariſon, fetched from the performances of mankind, muſt neceſſarily debaſe the noble ſubject. All the enrichments, which the needle can give, or the moſt ſplendid ſilks receive, are rude, are coarſe, are mere ſackcloth, when ſet in oppoſition to the exquiſite delicacy of the fleſhly web. As indeed all the celebrated palaces, amphitheatres, temples, which ever adorned the moſt magnificent cities in the world, are but a heap of confuſion, if compared with the ſymmetry and beauty of the bodily fabric.——And, what is beyond meaſure marvellous, all theſe wonders of mechaniſm and decoration aroſe,—not from the purer elements,—not from the more refined parts of the creation,—but from the duſt of the ground *. How eaſily, Theron, can that ſtupendous ARTIFICER renew our hearts, and transform our ſouls into his own image, who could raiſe ſuch delicate and ſtately edifices from particles—deſpicable particles of the trodden ſoil!

I could not forbear interpoſing this remark: becauſe it tends to manifeſt our CREATOR's glory, to encourage our hopes, and ſtrengthen our faith. Otherwiſe, I ſhould be angry with myſelf, for interrupting your diſcourſe.——Pray go on with your deſcription of the animal œconomy. Only let me obſerve, that ſuch a courſe of inceſſant action muſt exhauſt the fluids; muſt waſte the ſolids; and, unleſs both are ſupplied with proper recruits, muſt gradually weaken, and at length totally deſtroy, the machine.

Ther. For this reaſon, it is furniſhed with the organs, and endued with the powers of nutrition.—Teeth; the foremoſt, thin and ſharp; fitted to bite aſunder the food, or cut † off ſuch a portion, as the mouth can conveniently manage. The hindermoſt, broad and ſtrong; indented like the ſurface of a milſtone ‡, with ſmall cavities, and jagged with little aſperities: which qualify them to grind in pieces whatever is tranſmitted to their operation.—Were the teeth, like our other bones, covered with the uſual membrane, the act of chewing would always occaſion great uneaſineſs; and when any hard ſubſtance is eaten, might even lacerate the tender tegument. Were they left without any ſort of covering; they would ſuffer from the inclemencies of the air, and be liable to the penetration of liquors. In which caſe they muſt ſoon become ſoft and unfit for ſervice, or be corrupted, and entirely periſh. To guard againſt theſe diſadvantages, they are curiouſly glazed, or overlaid with a neat enamel; as white as ivory, and harder than the bone itſelf; which renders them an ornament to the mouth ‖; ſecures them from various injuries; and exempts them from pain in the office of maſtication.

As the rims and cuſhions of a billiard-table, keep the ball from flying off; and ſend it back into the green area, for repeated eſſays of ſkill; ſo the lips prevent the food from ſlipping out of the mouth; and, aſſiſted by the tongue, return it to the renewed attrition of the grinders.——While the lips, in concert with the cheeks, are employed in this work, their motion compreſſes the circumjacent glands; and, from innumerable little orifices, a thin pellucid liquor exſudes: which moiſtens the attenuated food, and prepares it for more eaſy digeſtion. ——When the mouth remains inactive, theſe fountains of ſpittle are, in a manner, cloſed. But when it is exerciſed, either in ſpeaking or eating, their moiſture then being peculiarly neceſſary, they never fail to give out a ſufficient quantity.

When the ſoldier charges his carbine, the cartridge could not make its way to the bottom, without the proſtruſion of the rammer *. Neither would the food, which we receive at the mouth, deſcend by the force of its own weight, through a narrow and clammy channel, into the ſtomach. To effectuate therefore, and expedite its paſſage, muſcles, both ſtrait and circular, are provided. The former enlarge the cavity of the throat, and afford a more eaſy admittance; the latter, cloſing behind the deſcending aliment, preſs it downwards, and finiſh the deglutition.——Before the food enters the gullet, it muſt of neceſſity paſs over the orifice of the windpipe; conſequently, muſt be in very imminent danger of falling upon the lungs. Which would, if not entirely obſtruct the breath, yet occaſion violent coughing †, and great inconveniencies. To obviate this evil, the all-foreſeeing CONTRIVER has placed a moveable lid, or hung a cartilaginous drawbridge ‡: which, when any the ſmalleſt particle of food advances to enter the ſtomach, is pulled down and ſhut cloſe; but the very moment the morſel is ſwallowed, it is ſet looſe and ſtands open. By this twofold artifice, the important paſſage is always barred and made ſure, againſt any noxious approaches; yet is always left free for the neceſſary acceſſion of air, and commodious for the purpoſes of reſpiration.

When the maltſter prepares his grain for the tranſmutations of the brewhouſe; he ſuffers it to lie ſeveral hours, ſteeping in the ciſtern, before it is fit to be ſpread upon the floor, or dried on the kiln. The

* This, and the other ſimilitudes, are undoubtedly too mean for the noble occaſion. Neither do they, in every circumſtance, quadrate with the functions deſcribed. The motion of the muſcles, which miniſter to the act of deglutition, is different from the perpendicular protruſion of the rammer. And it is mentioned, only to demonſtrate the neceſſity of ſome propelling force, in order to convey the aliment into the proper receptacle.

When we deſcant upon a ſubject of ſuch extenſive contrivance, and ſuch finiſhed perfection, as the human ſtructure; it is ſcarce poſſible to find ſimilitudes, that will correſpond in all particulars, or that can riſe to the dignity of the original. Yet if they tend, in any tolerable degree, to explain its formation, to diſplay its uſes, and render its wonderful œconomy ſomewhat more intelligible, perhaps they may be allowed to take place.

I hope, it will be remembered that Theron ſpeaks, not as an adept in the ſcience, but as one whoſe higheſt pretenſions are, to admire the work, and adore the ARTIFICER. Which acknowledgment may entitle him to ſome candid indulgence, in caſe he ſhould offend againſt the preciſe anatomical exactneſs, either of ſentiment, or expreſſion.

* The LORD GOD formed man of the duſt of the ground, Gen. ii. 7.

† Called therefore, inciſivi.

‡ Styled accordingly, molares.—We find neither of theſe kinds in the new-born babe. As milk is, for a conſiderable time, its appointed food, teeth would be of no ſervice to the infant itſelf. As it is to preſs the tender nipple for this milky ſuſtenance, teeth would be painful and prejudicial to the nurſe. Therefore nature has poſtponed the formation of theſe fine implements, till they become both neceſſary and beneficial.

‖ This ornamental furniture of the mouth, is, in the grand oriental manner, deſcribed by Solomon; Thy teeth are like a flock of ſheep, that are even ſhorn which come up from the waſhing, Cant. iv. 2. Growing, not ſingle, like the noſe; not in pairs, like the eyes; but in rows conſiderably numerous, like a flock.——None riſing higher than the other; none ſtanding unduly prominent beyond another; but all ſet as true, as if they were ranged by the compaſs; and making as regular an appearance, as the flocks that are even ſhorn.—They are clean alſo as the fleeces which have no ſpot, and white as the colour of the pureſt wool, like the flocks juſt come up from the waſhing.

† This is what we experience, when, in eating or drinking, any thing goes (as is commonly, and not improperly ſaid) the wrong way.

‡ Called the epiglottis.

meat

meat and drink likewiſe muſt remain a conſiderable time in the ſtomach, before they are of a proper conſiſtence and temperature, either for the tender coats, or the delicate operation of the bowels. For which purpoſe, that great receiver is made—ſtrong to bear,—capacious to hold,—and ſo curiouſly contrived, as to lay a temporary embargo * upon its contents. Here they are lodged in the very centre of warmth, and concocted by the moſt kindly combination of heat and humidity. Here they are ſaturated with other fermenting or diluting juices; and are kneaded, as it were, by the motion of the ſtomach, and compreſſion of the neighbouring parts. So that every the minuteſt fragment is ſeparated; the whole is reduced to a tenuity, abundantly finer than the exacteſt grinding could effect; and all is worked up into the ſmootheſt, moſt nicely mixed pulp imaginable.——From hence it is diſlodged by a gently-acting force; and paſſes, by a gradual tranſition, into the cavity of the inteſtines.

Near the entrance, punctual as a porter in his lodge, waits the gall-bladder †; ready to transfuſe its acrimonious, but ſalutary juices, on the advancing aliment: which diſſolve its remaining viſcidities; ſcour the paſſage of the inteſtines; and keep all its fine apertures clear.—This bag, as the ſtomach fills, is elevated by the diſtention; as the ſtomach empties, is proportionably depreſſed. The former poſture brings on a diſcharge, the latter occaſions a ſuppreſſion of the bile. It is furniſhed alſo with a valve, of a very peculiar, but moſt convenient form ‡; through which the deterſive liquid cannot haſtily pour, but muſt gently ooze.——Admirable conſtruction; which, without any care or conſciouſneſs of ours, prohibits an immoderate effuſion, yet aſcertains the needful ſupply.

Sufficiently charged with this adventitious fluid, the nutritive maſs purſues its way through the inteſtines. Whoſe wonderful meanders are incomparably more curious, than the mazes of the Dædalean labyrinth. They are actuated with a worm-like or undulatory motion ‖; which protrudes the received aliment, and forces its fine milky particles into the lacteal veſſels. Theſe are a ſeries of the moſt delicate ſtrainers; ranged, in countleſs multitudes, all along the ſides of the winding paſſage. Each ſo nicely framed, as to admit the nutrimental balmy juices, and reject the groſs excrementitious dregs.—— Had the inteſtines been ſtrait and ſhort, the food might have gone through them, without reſigning a ſufficient quantity of its nouriſhing particles. Therefore this grandeſt of all the vital ducts, is artfully convolved, and greatly extended; to afford nature an opportunity of ſifting more thoroughly whatever paſſes, and of detaining whatever may ſerve her purpoſes.—Leſt ſuch lengths of entrails ſhould be entangled among themſelves, or be cumbrous to the wearer, they are packed into the neateſt folds, and lie within a narrow compaſs. They are at leaſt ſix times longer § than the body which contains them. Yet are they lodged, not crouded; in a part, not in the whole region of the lower belly; and, amidſt this ſmall ſpace, have ſufficient room to execute the niceſt and moſt important functions.——Though the alimentary ſubſtance can never miſtake its way; yet it may, through ſome accidental impediment, attempt to return backward. In this caſe, a valve intervenes; and renders what would be extremely pernicious, almoſt always impracticable.——As the whole proceeds in this ſerpentine courſe, it is perpetually ſending off detachments of nutritious juices. In conſequence of which, it would loſe its ſoft temperature; might become rugged, and pain the tender parts; perhaps, be hindered from ſliding on to its final exit. To prevent ſuch an obſtruction, glands are poſted in proper places *, and diſcharge a lubricating fluid, which aids the progreſs of the maſs, and renews the ſecretion of the chyle. Till all that remains of the one, is clean drawn off; and the other—But here you muſt excuſe me; and for my neglect of farther particularity, your author ſhall make an apology; Quemadmodum autem reliquiæ cibi depellantur, tum aſtringentibus ſe inteſtinis, tum relaxantibus, haud ſane difficile dictu eſt: ſed tamen prætereundum eſt, ne quid habeat injucunditatis oratio †.

The chyle, drawn off by all the ſecretory orifices, is carried along millions of the fineſt ‡ ducts, and lodged in ſeveral commodious cells ‖. As a traveller, by baiting upon the road, and taking proper refreſhment, is better qualified to purſue his journey; ſo the chyle, diverting to thoſe little inns, is mixed with a thin, diluting, watery ſubſtance, which renders it more apt to flow, and more fit for uſe.——From hence it is conveyed to one common receptacle §, and mounts through a perpendicular tube. When proviſion or ammunition is tranſmitted to an army, it generally paſſes under an eſcort of able troops. As this is the immediate ſupport, and principal nouriſhment of the whole ſyſtem, its conveyance is guarded and aſcertained with peculiar caution. The perpendicular tube, not having ſufficient force of its own, is laid contiguous to the great artery; whoſe ſtrong pulſation drives on the creeping fluid; enables it to overcome the ſteep aſcent, and unload its precious treaſure at the very door of the heart.——Here it enters the trunk of a large vein, moſt conveniently opened for its reception. It enters in a ſlanting or oblique direction. By this method of approach, it avoids thwarting, and coincides with the purple ſtream; which, inſtead of obſtructing its admiſſion; expedites its paſſage; and, inſtead of being a bar to exclude it, becomes a vehicle to waft it. ——Its entrance is farther ſecured by a valve, admirably conſtructed, and moſt happily ſituate: which ſhuts the aperture againſt the refluent blood, in caſe it ſhould offer to obtrude itſelf; but opens a free, ſafe, and eaſy avenue, to introduce this milk, this manna of nature.

* Which is quite contrary to the œconomy of the gullet; tho' they are not only contiguous to each other, but a continuation of the ſame tube.

† The gall-bladder is ſituate upon the lower margin of the liver; and to ſecrete the bilious juice, is ſuppoſed to be the principal uſe of that largeſt of glands.

‡ A ſpiral form.

‖ Styled vermicular or periſtaltic.

§ According to this calculation, they muſt meaſure, in a pretty tall man, more than thirty-ſix feet.—The ſubſtance of the bowels, though thin to a delicacy, is ſtrong to a wonder. The ſkin of an ox-gut, I am told, will endure the blows of the gold-beater's hammer, for many months, nay for ſeveral years.

* In the bowels, which lie neareſt the ſtomach, theſe glands are ſmaller or fewer; becauſe in thoſe parts the aliment is copiouſly furniſhed with moiſture. Whereas, in the bowels, which are more remote from the ſtomach, and receive the food drained of a conſiderable quantity of its chyle, the lubricating glands are either multiplied or enlarged. A moſt admirable proviſion! apparently diverſified, according to the ſeveral changes of the aliment, yet exactly adapted to the exigencies of the animal.

† Cicero de nat. Deor.—As Theron avoids meddling with a ſubject, which is become uſeleſs and putreſcent, I think myſelf obliged to imitate his delicacy. Only I would add one remark in the notes, and ſhall beg leave to expreſs it in Greek: that if it ſhould prove, in any degree, diſguſtful; it may have, at leaſt, the negative merit, not to offend many readers. Ενια δε των αποχωρηματων δυσχερη, απεστρεψε τους τε των οχλων η φυσις, ω απαντεχειν η δυναμις, προσωπαλιν απο των ακοντων. Socrat. Memorab.

‡ Fine indeed! ſince their orifices, through which they admit the chyle, are not diſcoverable even by the very beſt microſcopes. To this prodigiouſly-nice conſtructure it is owing, that nothing enters the ſubſtance of the blood, but what is ſmaller than the ſmalleſt arteries in the ſyſtem; and thereby fitted to paſs through the fineſt capillary veſſels, without cauſing any obſtruction.

‖ The glands of the meſentery.

§ The receptaculum chyli; a reſervatory placed near the left kidney.

The blood, through every ſtage of its ample circuit, having ſuſtained great expences; being laid under contribution, by every gland in the whole ſyſtem; and having ſupplied myriads of the capillary veſſels with matter for inſenſible perſpiration; muſt be very much impoveriſhed; but is moſt opportunely recruited by this acceſſion of chyle.——Yet though recruited, it is not refined. In its preſent crude ſtate, it is abſolutely unqualified to perform the vital tour, or carry on the animal functions. Therefore, by a grand apparatus of muſcular fibres, it is waſted into the lungs; and pours a thouſand, thouſand rills into either lobe.——In the cells, the ſpongy cells of this amazing laboratory, it imbibes the influences of the external air; its heterogeneous parts are thoroughly incorporated; and its whole ſubſtance is made cool, ſmooth, and florid.——Thus improved, thus exalted, it is tranſmitted to the left ventricle of the HEART; a ſtrong, active, indefatigable * muſcle; placed in the very centre of the ſyſtem. Impelled by this beating engine, part ſhoots upward; and ſweeps, with a bounding impetus, into the head. There it impregnates the prolific fields of the brain; and forms thoſe ſubtile ſpirituous dews †, which impart ſenſe to every nerve, and communicate motion to every limb. Part flows downward; rolls the reeking current through all the lower quarters; and diſpenſes the nutrimental ſtores, even to the meaneſt member, and the minuteſt veſſel.

Obſerve, how the ſtately Thames, and the rapid Rhine, refreſh the foreſts and the groves; water the towns, which croud their banks; and make the meadows they interſect, laugh and ſing. So, only with an incomparably-richer fluid, and with infinitely more numerous ſtreams, this human river laves the ſeveral regions of the body; transfuſing vigour, and propagating health, through the whole.

But how ſhall a ſtream, divided into myriads of channels, and pervading innumerable tracts, how ſhall this be brought back again to its ſource? Should any portion, like your lake-waters after a land-flood, deviate from their courſe, or be unable to return,—putrefaction would take place,—a nuiſance would ariſe,—death might enſue. Therefore the all-wiſe CREATOR has connected the extremity of the arteries, with the beginning of the veins. So that the ſame force, which darts the crimſon wave through the former, drives it through the latter. Thus it is reconducted, without the leaſt extravaſation, to the great ſalient ciſtern ‡. There played off afreſh, it renews and perpetuates the vital functions.

Where two oppoſite currents would be in danger of claſhing, a fibrous excreſcence interpoſes *; which, like a projecting pier, breaks the ſtroke of each, and throws both into their proper receptacle.——When the waſture is to be ſpeedy, the channels either forbear to wind in their courſe †, or to leſſen in their dimenſions ‡. When the progreſs is to be retarded, the tubes are twined into various convolutions ‖, or their diameter is contracted into a narrower ſize.—Modelled by theſe judicious rules, guarded by theſe wiſe precautions, the living flood never diſcontinues its interchangeable tide; but, night and day, whether we ſleep or wake, ſtill perſeveres to ſally briſkly through the arteries, and return ſoftly through the veins.

Such aſtoniſhing expedients are uſed, to elaborate the chyle,—to blend it with the blood, and to diſtribute both through the body; by means of which, the animal conſtitution is maintained. In youth, its bulk is increaſed; in age, its decays are repaired; and it is kept in tenantable condition for the ſoul, during the ſpace of ſeventy or eighty years.

Theſe are a few, and but a very few inſtances of that contrivance, regularity, and beauty, which are obſervable in the human frame. Attentive inquirers diſcover deeper footſteps of deſign, and more refined ſtrokes of ſkill; diſcover them, not only in the grand and moſt diſtinguiſhed parts, but in every limb, and in every organ; I may venture to add, in every fibre that is extended, and in every globule § that flows.

Aſp. What a various, but uniform ſyſtem, is the body! I ſee the greateſt multiplicity of parts, yet the moſt perfect harmony ſubſiſts between them all. No one hinders, but each aſſiſts, the operation of another; and all conſpire to the benefit and preſervation of the whole.—Moſt judiciouſly has the great apoſtle touched this ſubject; and moſt happily applied it, to illuſtrate the reaſonableneſs, and enforce the practice, both of perſonal and ſocial duties, of private content and of public concord ¶.

The body, he obſerves, is not one member, but many. To each of which ſome peculiar and needful office is aſſigned. So that the foot, though placed in the loweſt order, and deſtined to ſerve on the very ground, has no reaſon to reckon itſelf a worthleſs outcaſt; or to ſay, Becauſe I am not the head, I am not of the body. Neither has the head, in its exalted ſtation, and amidſt its honourable functions, any cauſe to deſpiſe the inferior limbs; or to ſay with contempt and ſelf-ſufficiency, I have no need of you.——If there were no feet, what would become of the locomotive faculty? Or how could the body convey itſelf from one place to another? If there were no hands, what ſhould we do for the inſtruments of action? or how could the animal frame be defended and accommodated? —Nay, the parts, which ſeem to be leſs honourable, are neceſſary. Even thoſe which form the ſediments, or throw off the dregs, are of the laſt importance to life

* Indefatigable.—This is a very diſtinguiſhing, and no leſs amazing property of the heart. The large muſcles of the arm, or the much larger of the thigh, are ſoon wearied. A day's labour, or a day's journey, will exhauſt their ſtrength. But the muſcle, which conſtitutes the heart, works through whole weeks, whole months, whole years, and never becomes weary; is equally a ſtranger to intermiſſion and fatigue.

† Theſe are, what we call, the animal ſpirits: and it is generally ſuppoſed, that ſenſation is cauſed by the undulatory motion of this nervous fluid.—Though ſome imagine it is performed by the vibratory motion of the nerves themſelves.—Others think, that neither of theſe opinions will comport with the texture of thoſe fine tubes, or with the nature of the fluid they contain.—It is, I believe, one of thoſe myſteries in the material world, which may reconcile thinking and unprejudiced minds to the myſteries of the Chriſtian revelation. Why ſhould any one wonder, to find ſome doctrines in the BIBLE, that ſurpaſs the reach of human underſtanding; when there are ſo many operations in the body, confeſſedly and abſolutely inexplicable by the moſt acute anatomiſt?

‡ Solomon makes uſe of this ſimilitude—Or ever the pitcher be broken at the fountain; or the wheel broken at the ciſtern. The two ventricles of the heart, repleniſhed with blood, are fitly repreſented by a ciſtern; and the contractile force of their fibres, acts like the water-wheel in hydraulics.——The pitcher, which receives the water at the ſpring-head, and conveys it away for the owner's ſervice, may probably ſignify the aorta, and the pulmonary artery; whoſe functions correſpond with the uſes of ſuch a veſſel, Eccl. xii. 6.

* In the point, where the ſtreams, from the vena cava and vena aſcendens, meet.

† In the great artery, that deſcends to the feet.

‡ In every interval, between all the ramifications.

‖ In the veſſels, which carry the blood to the brain; which form the viſcous ſecretions; and indeed which conſtitute all the glands.

§ The extreme minuteneſs of the globules, which form the red part of our blood, is one exemplification of this remark; if, as Mr Lewenhoeck computes, every globule be 125,000 times ſmaller than the ſmalleſt grain of ſand.

¶ See 1 Cor. xii. 12. &c.

and

and its comforts. Should those be obstructed in their action, the most raging torment ensues; should the obstruction continue, death is the inevitable consequence. —By this wise adjustment, there is no schism in the body; no separate or interfering ends are pursued by the members; but the safety and support of each are the one undivided care of all.

Thus should it be among men, and among Christians; in the civil community, and in the catholic church. There is in both a subordination of persons, but a concatenation of interests. For which reason, a general agreement should take place, and a mutual subserviency to each other's welfare.——The meanest have no cause to be dissatisfied with their condition; but to acquiesce in the unerring disposal of Providence, and chearfully contribute their share to the common good.——The highest should condescend to men of low estate; and maintain a regard to the wellbeing of the poorest, as that which is intimately connected with their own.—In a word, each should feel a tender concern for all; rejoicing in their happiness, and studying to establish it; sympathizing with their miseries, and endeavouring to heal them.

I am sure, my Theron will be pleased with this fine comparison, used by the apostle; and adapted to purposes, at once so noble and so benevolent. Especially, as it receives additional propriety and force from his own observations.——But I have one more inquiry to make.

Your system, though organized, though endued with a principle of motion, and furnished with the powers of nutrition, is still destitute of sense.—The creation abounds with objects fitted to yield the most refined entertainment. The sun impurples the robe of morning, and stars bespangle the curtains of night. Flowers of silver whiteness, and of golden lustre, enamel the ground. Fruits of all radiant hues, and of every delicious taste, hang amiably dangling on the boughs.

> ——Airs also, vernal airs,
> Breathing the smell of field and grove, attune
> The trembling leaves.

But we hear of no capacities formed for the enjoyment of these various delights. Without which, the breath of fields must lose its reviving fragrance; the whispering grove must degenerate into sullen silence; and nature's book of knowledge, all fair and instructive, be no better than a vast unmeaning blank.

Ther. Therefore the great CREATOR, profusely gracious to mankind, has made us a present, an inestimable present, of the senses; to be the inlets of innumerable pleasures, and the means of administering the most valuable advantages.

High in the head, bright and conspicuous as a star in the brow of evening, is placed the eye. In this elevated situation, like a centinel posted in his watch-tower, it commands the most enlarged prospect.——Consisting only of simple fluids, inclosed in thin tunicles, it conveys to our apprehension all the graces of blooming nature, and all the glories of the visible heavens.——How prodigiously wonderful! that an image of the hugest mountains, and a transcript of the most diversified landscapes, shall enter the small circlet of the pupil!—How surprisingly artful! that the rays of light, like an inimitable pencil, should paint on the optic nerves; paint in an instant of time; paint in their truest colours, and exactest lineaments, every species of external objects!

The eye is so tender, that a slight accident, scarce perceivable by some other parts of the body, would be very injurious to its delicate frame. It is guarded therefore with remarkable circumspection, and the most solicitous care; with a care evidently proportioned to its nice texture, and extensive usefulness. It is intrenched deep in the head; and barricaded, on every side, with a strong fortification of bones.——As the incursion of the smallest fly would incommode the polished surface, it is farther defended by two substantial curtains, hung on a most slender cartilaginous rod: which secure it, not barely from blows, and from any hurtful attrition, but also from every troublesome annoyance. In sleep, when there is no occasion to exercise the sense, but an absolute necessity to protect the organ, these curtains spontaneously close, and never fail to lie shut. At any time, they will fly together with a motion quick as the alarm of fear, I had almost said, quicker than thought itself. At all times they are lined with an extremely-fine sponge *, wet with its own native dews; which lubricate the eyeball; oil, as it were, its wheels; and fit it for a course of unwearied activity.——At the end of this skinny mantelet (if I may use the military style) is planted a range of bristly palisadoes †: which keep out the least mote; ward off even the straggling atom; and moderate the otherwise too potent impressions of the sunbeams ‡.

The brows are a kind of natural pent-house, thatched and arched with curious wreaths of hair. The thatch is intended to divert the sweat from trickling into the eyes, and offending them with its brine. The arches are so finely coloured, and so elegantly turned, that they set off the whiteness of the forehead, and bestow additional grace on the whole countenance.——Because, in our waking hours, there is almost an incessant call for those little orbs, they run upon the finest casters; rolling upwards or downwards, to the right hand or to the left, with the utmost speed, and with equal ease. Which circumstance, added to the flexibility of the neck, renders our two eyes as useful, as if the whole body, like the living creatures in St John's vision, was full of eyes before and behind ‖.

The ear consists of an outward porch and inner rooms, with tools of the most admirable contrivance and finished workmanship. The contrivance and the workmanship incomparably nicer than the designs of Palladio, or the architecture of Solomon's temple; though the former were drawn from the magnificent monuments of Rome, though the latter was built in the taste of heaven. Yea, so consummately nice is the structure of this organ, that GOD, the only wise GOD, is not ashamed to be called its artificer. He that planted the ear §, is to be found among the titles of the exalted JEHOVAH.——In one very remarkable peculiarity, this minute fabric resembles that sa-

* The glandula lachrymalis and its ducts; opening on the inner part of the eyelid, and secreting the fluid, which Theron calls its oil; because it irrigates the eyeball, and facilitates its motion.

† The hairs, which arise upon the extremities of the eyelash, grow only to a certain convenient length, and never stand in need of cutting.——They are not flaccid and pendulous, like those of the head; but stiff and prominent, like bristles. The first sort would be troublesome, the last is beneficial.——Add to this, that their points stand out of the way; those of the upper eyelid being bent upwards, and those of the lower downwards.——So nice is nature, even in such small matters!

‡ The incessant, the more than fatherly care, which the LORD GOD ALMIGHTY takes of his people, is represented in scripture by this extraordinary provision made for the security of the eye; which is one of the finest images, that fancy can form; and one of the most consolatory truths, that faith can believe. He kept him as the apple of his eye, Deut. xxxii. 10.—He that toucheth you, toucheth the apple of his eye, Zech. ii. 8.—The reader will easily see, that the comparison, every way beautiful, is carried to the highest pitch of energy and beauty, by the sacred writers. Not barely the eye, but the apple or pupil of the eye; the tenderest part even of the most tender member.

‖ Psal. xciv. 9. § Rev. iv. 6.

cred

cred edifice, the porch being loftier * than any other part of the building.

The porch I call that ſemicircular lodge, which ſtands ſomewhat prominent from the head; and is—not ſoft and ſinking as fleſh, leſt it ſhould abſorb the ſound, rather than promote the repercuſſion; not hard and ſtubborn as bone, leſt it ſhould occaſion painful inconveniencies, when we repoſe our ſelves on either ſide;—but of a cartilaginous ſubſtance, covered with a tight expanſion of ſkin, and wrought into irregular bends and hollows: which, like circling hills, or ſurrounding rocky ſhores †, collect the wandering undulations of the air; and tranſmit them, with a vigorous impulſe, to the finely-ſtretched membrane of the tympanum ‡.——The avenue, or narrow entry, is ſecured from the inſinuating attempts of little inſects, by a moraſs (ſhall I ſay?) of bitter and viſcous matter; diſguſtful to their taſte, and embarraſſing to their feet.——The hammer and the anvil; the ſtirrup and the drum; the winding labyrinths ‖, and the ſounding galleries; theſe, and other pieces of mechaniſm, all inſtrumental to the power of hearing, are beyond deſcription curious.

Amazingly-nice muſt be the formation, and inconceivably-exact the tenſion, of the auditory nerves; ſince they correſpond with the ſmalleſt tremors of the atmoſphere, and eaſily diſtinguiſh their moſt ſubtile variations. With the gentle gales that fan us, or even with the ruder blaſts that aſſault us, theſe delicate ſtrings are but little affected. Whereas they are perfect uniſons with thoſe fine, thoſe ſignificant agitations of the air, which the acuteſt touch is unable to diſcern. Theſe living chords, tuned by an almighty hand, and diffuſed through the echoing iſles, and ſonorous cells,—theſe receive the impreſſions of ſound, and propagate them to the brain. Theſe § give exiſtence to the charms of muſic, and reciprocate the rational entertainments of diſcourſe. Theſe treat my Aſpaſio with the melody of the woodland choirs, and afford me the ſuperior pleaſure of my friend's converſation.

The eye perceives only the objects that are before it; whereas the ear warns us of tranſactions, that paſs above us, behind us, all around us.—The eye is uſeleſs, amidſt the gloom of night, and cannot carry its obſervation through the bolted door, or the cloſed window-ſhutter. But the ear admits her intelligence, through the darkeſt medium, and the minuteſt cranny.——The eye is upon duty, only in our walking hours; but the ear is always expanded, and always acceſſible *; a courier which never tires; a centry ever in his box.——To ſecure a reſource, in caſe any misfortune ſhould diſable one of the hearing or ſeeing organs, our all-gracious MAKER has given us duplicates of each.

As there are tremulous concuſſions impreſſed upon the air, diſcernable only by the inſtruments of hearing; there are alſo odoriferous particles, wafted by the ſame aereal vehicle, which are perceivable only by the ſmell. ——The noſtrils are wide at the bottom, that a large quantity of effluvia may enter; narrow at the top, that, when entered, they may cloſe their ranks, and act with greater vigour.——Fine, beyond all imagination, are the ſteams which exhale from fetid or fragrant bodies. The very beſt microſcopes, which diſcover thouſands and thouſands of animalcules in a drop of putrefied water, cannot bring one individual, among all theſe evaneſcent legions, to our ſight. They fail, in numberleſs ſquadrons, cloſe to our eyes, cloſe by our ears; yet are ſo amazingly attenuated, that they elude the ſearch of both. Nevertheleſs, ſo judiciouſly † are the olfactory nets laid, and ſo artfully their meſhes ſized, that they catch theſe vaniſhing fugitives. They catch the roaming perfumes, which fly off from the opening honeyſuckle; and take in the ſtationed ſweets, which hover round the expanded roſe. They imbibe all the balmy fragrance of ſpring, all the aromatic exhalations of autumn, and enable us to banquet even on the inviſible dainties of nature.

Furniſhed with theſe ſeveral organs,

——Not a breeze
Flies o'er the meadow, not a cloud imbibes
The ſetting ſun's effulgence, not a ſtrain
From all the tenants of the warbling ſhade Aſcends, but whence our ſenſes can partake
Freſh pleaſure ‡.

Another capacity for frequent pleaſure, our bountiful CREATOR has beſtowed, in granting us the power of taſte. By means of which, the food that ſupports

* Compare 1 Kings vi. 2. with 2 Chron. iii. 4.

† Alluding to thoſe expreſſive lines, where echo ſeems to live in the ſound, as well as in the ſenſe;

——Vocemque incluſa volutant
Littora, pulſati colles clamore reſultant. VIRG.

‡ So called, becauſe it reſembles a drum, both in figure and uſe. Being a fine ſkin, expanded upon a circle of bones, and over a poliſhed reverberating cavity.—It is affected by the vibrations of the external air, as the covering of the war-drum is by the impreſſions of the ſtick.—It is alſo furniſhed with braces, which ſtrain or relax it at pleaſure; and accommodate its tenſion either to loud or languid ſounds.

‖ Of this kind is the auditory tube, intended to ſoften and qualify the ruſhing ſound. Leſt, if the incurſion were direct, it might be too impetuous, and injure the delicate expanſe of the tympanum.—While this is deſigned to moderate, the concavities of the inner ſtructure are prepared to heighten and invigorate the ſound, by calling in the auxiliary force of an echo.—Such intentions, ſo varying, may ſo oppoſite, concur to form this admirable organ!

§ Elegantly ſtyled, the daughters of muſic. For this phraſe may refer, as well to the organs which diſtinguiſh, as to thoſe which, form, the harmonious accents. Eccl. xii. 4.——Methinks, I am always deſirous to add any appoſite expreſſion, or parallel paſſage from the BIBLE. As I find, writers of taſte and politeneſs are ſtudious to embelliſh their works, with quotations from the claſſics. And I perſuade myſelf, the reader will allow me to gratify this favourite inclination; becauſe every portion of that ineſtimable book, however minute, is like the filings of gold, or the ſparks of a diamond; is ſure, when properly applied, to add worth, and impart beauty.

* Auditus autem ſemper patet. Ejus enim ſenſus etiam dormientes egemus. A quo, cum ſonus eſt acceptus, eitam e ſomno excutimur. De nat. Deor.

† The keenneſs and ſagacity of this ſenſe, furniſhed the evangelical prophet with a beautiful metaphor, to diſplay the accuracy of the MESSIAH's judgment in ſpiritual things, Iſ. xi. 3. ‏והריחו implies his faculty or ſenſe of ſmelling; which expreſſion is accommodated to our language, and properly enough tranſlated, ſhall make him of quick underſtanding. q. d. "He ſhall judge, "not according to external appearance, but according to the ſtate "of the inner man. Unfeigned ſelf-abaſement, affiance in a "REDEEMER's righteouſneſs, and faith purifying the heart; "theſe endowments, though not obſerved, or, if obſerved, not "valued by the world; theſe ſhall be the teſt of his approbation, "and the objects of his eſteem. Theſe conſtitute, what is called "in the next words, the fear of the LORD.

"In determining the reality of theſe qualities, he ſhall be unerringly exact, and infallibly true. Let Hypocriſy put on every "maſk, and practiſe all her wiles, they ſhall avail nothing before "the ROOT and OFFSPRING of David. (ver. 1.) As thoſe "extremely ſubtile effluvia, which eſcape the inquiſition of every "other ſenſe, are eaſily and perfectly diſtinguiſhed by the ſmell; "ſo thoſe receſſes of the breaſt, and thoſe ſecrets of the heart, "which lie too deep for all human diſcernment; even they are "naked and open, are obvious and palpable, to his divinely ſagacious underſtanding."

‡ See that very elegant poem, The pleaſures of imagination, book III.

our body, feasts our palate; first, treats us with a pleasing regale; then, distributes its beneficial recruits.——The razor, whetted with oil, becomes more exquisitely keen. The saliva, flowing upon the tongue, and moistening its nerves, quickens them into the livelier acts of sensation.——This sense is circumstanced, in a manner peculiarly benign and wise; so as to be a standing, tho' silent plea for temperance. Without recurring to the vengeance of GOD, or the terrors of eternal judgment, it is a powerful dissuasive from irregular and excessive indulgencies. Because the exercise of sobriety sets the finest edge on its faculties; and adds the most poignant relish to its enjoyments. Whereas riot and voluptuousness pall the appetite; blunt its sensibility; and render the gratifications extremely languid, if not perfectly insipid.——The sight, the smell, the taste are, not only so many separate sources of delight, but a joint security to our health. They are the vigilant and accurate inspectors, which examine our food, and inquire into its properties, whether it be pleasant or disagreeable, wholesome or noxious. For the discharge of this office, they are excellently qualified, and most commodiously situate. So that nothing can gain admission through the mouth, till it has undergone the scrutiny, and obtained the passport of them all.

To all these, as a most necessary and advantageous supplement, is added the sense of feeling: which renders the whole assemblage complete.——While other senses have a particular place of residence, this is diffused throughout the whole body. In the palms of the hands, on the tips of the fingers, and indeed through all the extreme parts of the flesh, it is most quick and lively; as the advanced guards, or scouts upon the frontiers, are or ought to be peculiarly attentive and wakeful.—Scouts did I say? The whole army of Xerxes, drawn out in battle array, with his millions of supernumerary attendants *, were but like a few gleaners straggling in the field, if compared, either in number or order, with those nervous detachments, which pervade the texture of the skin, and minister to the act of feeling.—How happily is this sense tempered between the two extremes! Neither so acute, as the membranes of the eyes; nor so obtuse, as the callus of the heel. The former would expose us to continual pain; render our cloaths galling, and the very down oppressive. The latter would quite benumb the body, and almost annihilate the touch.—Nor this alone, but all the senses are most exactly adapted to their respective offices, and to the exigencies of our present state. Were they strained to a much higher tone, they would be avenues of anguish. Were they relaxed into greater insensibility, they would be so many useless incumbrances.

Asp. How admirable and gracious is this provision, which the blessed GOD has made, to accommodate us with delightful sensations, and instructive ideas!—The taste, the touch, and the smell, are somewhat straitened in the extent of their operations. The ear carries on a correspondence with a larger circle of objects. But the sight most amply supplies whatever is wanting in all the other senses. The sight spreads itself to an infinite multitude of bodies, and brings within our notice some of the remotest parts of the universe.—The taste, the touch the smell, perceive nothing but what is brought to their very doors. Whereas the eye extends its observation, as far as the orbit of Saturn; nay glances, and in an instant of time, to the inconceivable distance of the stars. The compass of the earth, and the immensity of the skies, are its unlimited range.

From this remarkable variety, with regard to the sphere and activity of the senses, St Paul forms one of the finest, boldest, and most important comparisons in the world. By this he illustrates the difference between the wisdom which is derived from the word of divine revelation, and the wisdom which is acquired by dint of human application.—In his oration to the Athenians, speaking of their most celebrated sages, he says, If so be, they might feel after, and find HIM *. In his epistle to the Hebrews, speaking of the man Moses, our author observes, that he endured as seeing him who is invisible †. Writing to his Corinthian converts, he adds, as a farther heightening of the contrast, We all, beholding, with open face the glory of the LORD ‡.——The knowledge of the philosopher, is like that obscure and scanty information, which is to be obtained by groping with the hand in a dark night. The knowledge of the Christian, is like that copious influx of clear and enlarged ideas, which we receive by the mediation of the eye, amidst the shining of a bright day.

Tully, we find, has, in the book before us, hit upon some of the most general and obvious uses, to which the several parts of the body are adapted. Yet how superficial and deficient appears his penetration, when we take in the much deeper discoveries, and the much higher improvements of our modern anatomy! Thus, and abundantly more defective, is his knowledge of moral duties and divine doctrines; when compared with what is taught us in the plain sermon on the mount, and the unstudied epistles of the Jewish tent-maker!

Therefore, though I would bless the beneficent GOD, for the ministration of all the senses, and particularly for the noble organs of vision; I would be more especially thankful for that light of the world, CHRIST JESUS and his glorious gospel; as well as for that spiritual eye ‖, by which the one is understood, and the other seen,—a lively faith. I would also long for that place of beatific enjoyment, where our views of the adorable GODHEAD, and our acquaintance with the sublimest truths, will as much transcend all our present apprehensions, as the most enlightened saint exceeds the benighted Gentile.

Ther. The crowning gift,——that which improves the satisfaction, and augments the beneficial effects, accruing from all the senses, is speech.—Speech makes me a gainer from the eyes and ears of other people; from the ideas they conceive, and the observations they make. And what an admirable instrument, for articulating the voice, and modifying it into speech, is the tongue!—The tongue has neither bone nor joint; yet fashions itself, with the utmost volubility, into every shape and every posture, which can express sentiment, or constitute harmony. This little collection of muscular fibres, under the conducting skill of the CREATOR, is the artificer of our words §. By this we communicate the secrets of the breast, and make our very thoughts audible. By this we instruct the ignorant, and comfort the distressed; we glorify GOD,

* The soldiers and attendants of Xerxes, amounted to five millions two hundred and eighty thousand. Another army, so large and numerous, occurs not in all the records of history. Vid. HERODOT. lib. VII.

* Acts xvii. 27. Ει αρα γε ψηλαφησειαν αυτον.

† Heb. xi. 27. ‡ 2 Cor. iii. 18.

‖ Luke xxiv. 45. Then opened he their understanding, that they might understand the scriptures. Διηνοιξε is the word used in this place, and the word used by the evangelical historian, when he relates that supernatural act, which gave sight to the blind.

§ I am sensible that the glottis has a considerable share, in modulating the sound, and forming the voice. But, as the nature and office of this most curious aperture, are very little known by the generality of people; we chuse to follow the popular opinion, so neatly described by the poet,

——Dædala lingua,
Lingua figuratrix verborum, opificxque loquelæ.
Anti-Lucret.

and edify each other*; the academic explains the abſtruſeſt ſciences, and the eccleſiaſtic preaches the everlaſting goſpel.——This is likewiſe the efficient of muſic. It is ſoft as the lute, or ſhrill as the trumpet; it can warble as the lyre, or reſound like the organ. Connecting the ſacred anthem with its tuneful ſtrains, we ſoothe the cares, and beguile the toils of life; we imitate the angelic choirs, and anticipate, in ſome degree, their celeſtial joys.——As the tongue requires full ſcope, and an eaſy play, it is lodged in an ample cavity; and ſurrounded with reſervoirs of ſpittle, always ready to diſtil the lubricating dews. It moves under a concave roof, which ſerves as a ſounding-board to the voice; giving it much the ſame additional vigour and grace, as the ſhell of a violin adds to the language of the ſtrings.

Wiſe,—wonderfully wiſe, and eminently gracious, is the regulation both of ſpontaneous and involuntary motion. Was this regulation reverſed, what deplorable inconveniencies would take place; nay, what unavoidable ruin muſt enſue! Deplorable inconveniencies; if the diſcharges of the bowels, or evacuations of the bladder, were quite independent on our leave. Unavoidable ruin; if the action of the heart required the co-operation of our thoughts, or the buſineſs of reſpiration waited for the concurrence of our will.

The will, in ſome caſes, has not ſo much as a ſingle vote. In others ſhe determines and commands, like an abſolute ſovereign; nor is there a monarch upon earth ſo punctually obeyed, as this queen of the human ſyſtem. If ſhe but intimate her pleaſure, the ſpirits run, they fly, to execute her orders; to ſtretch the arm, or cloſe the hand; to furrow the brow with frowns, or dimple the cheek with ſmiles.——How eaſily, as well as punctually, are theſe orders carried into execution! to turn the ſcrew, or work the lever, is laborious and weariſome. But we move the vertebræ, with all their appendent chambers; we advance the leg, with the whole incumbent body; we riſe from our ſeat; we ſpring from the ground; and though much force is exerted, though a very conſiderable weight is raiſed, we meet with no difficulty, we complain of no fatigue.

That all this ſhould be effected without any toil, and by a bare act of the will, is very ſurpriſing. But that theſe motions ſhould be made, renewed, continued, even while we remain entirely ignorant of the manner in which they are performed, is beyond meaſure aſtoniſhing.—Who can play ſo much as a ſingle tune upon the ſpinnet, without learning the difference of the keys, or ſtudying the rudiments of muſic? Impoſſible! Yet the mind of man touches every ſpring of the human machine, with the moſt maſterly ſkill; though ſhe knows nothing at all concerning the nature of her implements, or the proceſs of her operations.——We walk, we run, we leap; we throw ourſelves into a variety of poſtures, and perform a multitude of motions; yet are utterly unable to ſay, which nerve ſhould be active; which muſcle ſhould ſwell; or which tendon approximate.

Put a German flute into the hand even of a ſenſible perſon: without a maſter to inſtruct him, he is at a loſs to make the inſtrument ſpeak; much leſs is he able to ſink and ſoften the ſound, to exalt and extend it, juſt as he pleaſes.——Yet we are ſelf-taught in the method of forming, regulating, and varying the voice. Naturally, and with unpremeditated fluency, we give it the languiſhing cadence of ſorrow, or the ſprightly airs of joy; the low faultering accents of fear, or the elevated tone and rapid ſallies of anger.

The eye of a ruſtic, who has no notion of optics, or any of its laws, ſhall lengthen and ſhorten its axis, dilate and contract its pupil, without the leaſt heſitation, and with the utmoſt propriety; adapting itſelf, even with mathematical exactneſs, to the particular diſtance of objects, and the different degrees of light. By which means, it performs ſome of the moſt curious experiments in the improved Newtonian philoſophy, without the leaſt knowledge of the ſcience, or ſo much as any conſciouſneſs of its own dexterity.

I can never ſufficiently admire this multiplicity of animated organs; their finiſhed form, and their faultleſs order. Yet I muſt confeſs myſelf ſtruck with greater admiration at the power, the truly-myſterious power and ſway, which the ſoul exerciſes over them. Ten thouſand reins are put into her hand; ſhe is not acquainted with their office, their uſe, or their name; ſhe has not learned ſo much as to diſtinguiſh one from another; nevertheleſs ſhe manages all, conducts all, without the leaſt perplexity or the leaſt irregularity; rather with a promptitude, a conſiſtency, and a ſpeed, which nothing elſe can equal!

Upon the whole—great reaſon had Euripides to call the human body, Σοφα τεκτονος καλον ποικιλμα.

I believe, the preceding obſervations will juſtify us, if we give a fuller meaning to the poet, and tranſlate his words—the infinitely-varied, and inimitably-fine workmanſhip of a great, ſupreme, unerring ARTIST. Or, as Virgil ſpeaks, with a pertinency and a ſpirit, which epitomizes all I have ſaid, and expreſſes all I would ſay; this bodily ſtructure is indeed—non enarrabile textum *.

Aſp. Wonderfully, I perceive, and fearfully are we made†!—Made of ſuch complicated parts, each ſo correctly faſhioned, and all ſo exactly arranged ‡; every one executing ſuch curious functions, and many of them operating in ſo myſterious a manner; as may juſtly render us a wonder to ourſelves.—Since health depends upon ſuch a numerous aſſemblage of moving organs: ſince a ſingle ſecretion ſtopped, may deſtroy the ſalutary temperature of the fluids; or a ſingle wheel clogged, may put an end to the vital motion of the ſolids: with what holy fear ſhould we paſs the time of our ſojourning here below ||? truſting, for continual preſervation, not merely on our own care, but on that omnipotent hand, which formed the admirable machine: that the ſame hand which formed it, may ſuperintend its agency, and ſupport its being §.

When we conſider the extenſive contrivance, and delicate mechaniſm,—what plans of geometry have been laid; what operations of chemiſtry are performed; in a word, what miracles of art and elegance are executed, in order to furniſh us with the neceſſary recruits, and the ſeveral delights of life;—is there not abundant reaſon to cry out, with the ſame inſpired writer, "How dear are thy counſels unto me, O GOD! "Thy counſels of creating wiſdom! thou haſt not

* The articulating tongue is called our glory, Pſal. lvii. 8. And ſuch indeed it is, when devoted to theſe purpoſes. It is then a diſtinction, not only of man from the brutal herd, but of the righteous from the congregation of the ungodly. It is then like choice ſilver, or as a tree of life.

Who would not bleſs for this the gift of ſpeech,
And in the tongue's beneficence be rich?

* That is, a ſtructure, not barely correct, or highly finiſhed, but (as Theron has elſewhere expreſſed it) beyond deſcription curious.

† Pſal. cxxxix. 14.

‡ St Paul's language on the ſubject is exceedingly beautiful and expreſſive, Συναρμολογουμενον και συνβιβαζομενον. Eph. iv. 16. The ſeveral parts moſt nicely adapted to each other, and moſt perfectly harmonizing with the whole. All aſſociated with that propriety, and connected with that firmneſs which are the very foundation of ſymmetry, vigour, and agility.

‖ 1 Pet. i. 17.

§ Agreeable to that philoſophical maxim, Creatio et conſervatio eadem eſt actio; and to thoſe ſcriptual acknowledgments, It is GOD who holdeth our ſoul in life; he is the length of our days; his viſitation prolongeth our ſpirit.

"been ſparing, but even laviſh of thy indulgent de"ſigns. Thou haſt omitted no expedient, which might "eſtabliſh my eaſe; enlarge my comforts; and pro"mote, yea complete my bodily happineſs!" And is not this a moſt endearing obligation to glorify the bleſſed GOD, with our bodies, as well as with our ſpirits *?

Ther. Our ſpirits! Ay; what is this manſion of fleſh, though ſo exquiſitely wrought, compared with the noble and immortal inhabitant, which reſides within?

——That intellectual being;
Thoſe thoughts, which wander through eternity †!

This conſideration inclines me to think, that, if the caſket be ſo highly poliſhed, the jewel cannot be ſo exceſſively coarſe, as my Aſpaſio's doctrine of original corruption ſuppoſes.

Aſp. I perceive your aim, Theron; but muſt beg leave, at preſent, to decline all overtures for a diſpute. If my arguments have failed, your deſcription has anſwered its end.——I cannot ſuffer my thoughts to be diverted from a ſubject, which is ſo very engaging, yet ſo rarely diſcuſſed. I have ſuch a ſtrong deſire to recollect and retain what has been obſerved, that even your converſation will, at this juncture, loſe its reliſh. Here therefore I put a period to our diſcourſe, and muſt break away from your company, in order to ruminate and digeſt my notions, in ſome ſequeſtered lonely walk. Unleſs you will permit me, before I retire, to make one remark.——And let it not ſtartle my friend, if I venture to ſay, That, amidſt all his curious obſervations, he has forgot the principal circumſtance of honour and excellence, which dignifies the human body.

Ther. I have omitted many fine and admirable properties I confeſs. But ſure I have not forgot the principal and moſt diſtinguiſhing.

Aſp. You need not be diſpleaſed with yourſelf. It argues no defect in your diſſertation. The circumſtance I have in my view, could never be diſcovered, by following the diſſecting knife. It is learned, not from Cheſelden's draughts, or the tables of Albinus; but from the word of revelation. What I mean, is this:—The human body was exalted to a moſt intimate and perſonal union with the eternal SON of GOD. He who decorated the heaven with ſtars, and crowned the ſtars with luſtre; HE vouchſafed to be made fleſh *, and was found in faſhion as a man †.——Nay, this is, even now, the apparel of that divine and adorable PERSON. He is cloathed with our nature; he wears our very limbs; and appears in the dreſs of humanity, even at the right hand of GOD, and at the head of all the heavenly hoſts.

What think you of another privilege, mentioned by the apoſtle? Your bodies are the temple of the HOLY GHOST ‡. Not your ſouls only, but your very bodies are the ſhrine, in which the high and holy ONE, that inhabiteth eternity, condeſcends to dwell. HE, who ſitteth between the cherubim, and walketh in the circuit of the ſkies, is pleaſed to ſanctify theſe earthly tenements, for his own habitation. And is not this a much grander embelliſhment, than all their matchleſs contrivance and maſterly workmanſhip? Juſt as the rod which budded, and the manna which was miraculouſly preſerved; the ſacred oracle of Urim and Thummim, with the cloud of glory covering the mercy-ſeat; were a much higher diſtinction to Solomon's temple, than the moſt heightened beauties of architecture.

Nor muſt I omit the dignity,—the tranſcendent and amazing dignity,—which is reſerved for theſe ſyſtems of fleſh, at the reſurrection of the juſt. They will then be refined and improved into the moſt perfect ſtate, and the moſt beauteous form; ſurpaſſing whatever is reſplendent and amiable in the moſt ornamental appearances of material nature. They will be purer than the unſpotted firmament; brighter than the luſtre of the ſtars; and, which exceeds all parallel, which comprehends all perfection, they will be made like unto CHRIST's glorious body ‖; like that incomparably-glorious body, which the bleſſed JESUS wears, in his celeſtial kingdom, and on his triumphant throne.

When we add all theſe magnificent prerogatives, which are revealed in ſcripture, to all thoſe inimitable niceties, which are diſplayed by anatomiſts, what thankfulneſs, what admiration, can equal ſuch a profuſion of favours?

When all thy mercies, O my GOD,
My riſing ſoul ſurveys,
Tranſported with the view, I'm loſt
In wonder, love, and praiſe!

* 1 Cor. vi. 20. † Milton. * John i. 14. † Phil. ii. 8. ‡ 1 Cor. vi. 19. ‖ Phil. iii. 21.

DIALOGUE XIII.

THE morning had been wet. At noon the rain ceaſed. But the heavens ſtill continued gloomy. ——Towards evening, a gentle eaſtern gale ſprung up; which diſſipated the dead calm, and cleared the face of the ſky.—The ſun, which had been muffled in clouds, dropped the veil. Diſengaged from the duſky ſhroud, he ſhone forth with peculiar ſplendor. His beams, endeared by their late ſuſpenſion, were doubly welcome, and produced unuſual gaiety.

At this juncture, Theron and Aſpaſio walked abroad. They walked alternately on the terraces; one of which was oppoſite to the country, the other contiguous to the parterre.——Where the gales, impregnated with the freſheſt exhalations of nature, breathed the ſmell of meads, and heaths, and groves.—Or elſe ſhaking the cluſters of roſes, and ſweeping the beds of fragrance, they flung balm and odours through the air.

At a diſtance, were heard the bleatings of the flock, mingled with the lowings of the milky mothers. While more melodious muſic warbled from the neighbouring boughs, and ſpoke aloud the joy of their feathered inhabitants;—and not only ſpoke their joy, but ſpread an additional charm over all the landſcape. For, amidſt ſuch ſtrains of native harmony, the breathing perfumes ſmell more ſweet, the ſtreaming rills ſhine more clear, and the univerſal proſpect looks more gay.

Then was experienced, what Milton ſo delicately deſcribes;

If chance the radiant ſun with farewell ſweet
Extend his evening beam, the fields revive,
The birds their notes renew, and bleating herds
Atteſt their joy, that hill and valley rings.

With wonder and delight our friends obſerved, both the exquiſite beauty, and the immenſe magnificence of things.——They were ſtruck with the moſt profound veneration veneration of that almighty MAJESTY, who hung the ſun in vaults of azure, and clothed his orb with robes of luſtre: whoſe right hand ſpanneth the heavens *, and ſtretcheth them out as a tent, for innumerable creatures, worlds, ſyſtems to dwell in †.——Charmed they were at the conſideration of the CREATOR's boundleſs beneficence: who lifts up the light of his countenance, and joy is ſhed; who opens his munificent hand, and plenty is poured, throughout all the regions of the univerſe. Inſomuch, that even inanimate beings ſeem to ſmile under a ſenſe of the bleſſings: and though they find not a tongue to praiſe, yet ſpeak their acclamations by their gladdened looks.

Ther. How very different, Aſpaſio, is this delightful appearance of things, from your ill-favoured doctrine of original guilt, and original depravity! Your doctrine is a contradiction to the language of nature. Nature ſays, through all her works, "That GOD is good, and "men are made to be happy." Whereas your opinion would turn the whole world into a vaſt hoſpital, and make every individual perſon, a leper or a Lazarus.

Aſp. I join with my Theron, and with univerſal nature, in bearing witneſs to the goodneſs of our GOD. And nothing, I am perſuaded, diſplays it more, nothing manifeſts it ſo much, as the doctrine of our fall in Adam, connected with our recovery in CHRIST.——Only in one particular I am obliged to diſſent. It is not my opinion that would make, but the ſin of our forefather which has made, the whole world an infirmary, and every individual perſon a leper.

Ther. At this rate, you would croud into that ſingle act of diſobedience, evils more numerous, and more fatal, than the plagues which were lodged in Pandora's box, or the troops which were ſtowed in the Trojan horſe.

Aſp. Far more numerous, and infinitely more pernicious.——The fable of Pandora's box ſeems to have been a ſhred of the doctrine, picked up by the Heathen wits, and faſhioned according to their ſportive fancy. This would, if there was any occaſion for ſuch weak aſſiſtance, bring in the Pagan theology, as a ſubſidiary evidence to our cauſe.——The Trojan horſe poured ruin upon a ſingle city; but the primitive tranſgreſſion entailed miſery upon all generations.

Ther. You have advanced this heavy charge pretty ſtrenuouſly, I muſt confeſs; but without deſcending to facts, or appealing to experience. All the invectives are general and declamatory, none pointing and particular.

Aſp. It is eaſy, my dear friend, too eaſy to draw up a particular bill of indictment; and not only to ſpecify the facts, but to demonſtrate the charge. Experience, ſad experience will furniſh us with a cloud of witneſſes, and prove my remonſtrances to be more than invectives.

Were we to diſſect human nature, as, in our laſt conference, you treated the animal ſyſtem, we ſhould find the leproſy of corruption, ſpreading itſelf through our whole frame. For which reaſon, it is ſtyled, by an inſpired writer, "the old man ‡."——Old; becauſe, in its commencement, it was early as the fall; and in its communication to individuals, is co-eval with their being.—Man; becauſe it has tainted the body, infected the ſoul, and diſordered the whole perſon.

St Paul, deſcribing a profligate converſation, ſpeaks in this remarkable manner; fulfilling the deſires of the fleſh, and of the mind ‖. By the deſires of the fleſh, he means thoſe irregular inclinations, which correſpond with the animal part of our conſtitution. By the deſires of the mind, he denotes thoſe evil propenſities, which are more immediately ſeated in the intellectual faculties. And by both, he very ſtrongly expreſſes the total depravation of our nature.

* Iſ. xlviii. 13. † Iſ. xl. 22.
‡ Rom. vi. 6. ‖ Eph. ii. 3.

Ther. What you call evil propenſities, I am apt to think, are not really ſinful, but appointed for the trial of our virtue.——Nay, ſince they are confeſſedly natural, they cannot be in themſelves evil: becauſe, upon this ſuppoſition, GOD, who is the author of our nature, would be the author alſo of our ſin.

Aſp. Then you imagine, that propenſities to evil are void of guilt. This is the Popiſh notion, but neither the Moſaic nor the Apoſtolic doctrine.——In the law of Moſes it is written, Thou ſhalt not covet *. The divine LEGISLATOR prohibits, not only the iniquitous practice, but the evil deſire.—The apoſtle gives it in charge to the Coloſſians, Mortify you members, which are upon the earth; fornication, uncleanneſs, inordinate affection, and which is the ſource of all, evil concupiſcence †. Now, can that be free from guilt, which we are commanded to mortify? which, if not mortified, denominates us children of obedience, and ſubjects us to the wrath ‡ of GOD.

Though theſe propenſities are confeſſedly natural, they may be evil notwithſtanding. The ſacred writers oppoſe what is natural, to what is ſpiritual. Inſtead of commending it, as innocent; they condemn it, as fooliſh §, baſe §, and criminal ¶.——Neither does this make the AUTHOR of our nature, the author of our ſin. But it proves, that our nature has ſuſtained a deplorable loſs; that it is quite different from its original ſtate; that what is ſpoken of the Iſraelitiſh people, is applicable to the human race; I planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right ſeed; how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a ſtrange vine †?

However, let us obſerve your propoſal; dwell no longer on general hints, but deſcend to a particular examination. As our examination will chiefly reſpect the ſoul, let me inquire, what are her principal faculties?

Ther. The underſtanding, the will, and the affections. Theſe are the moſt diſtinguiſhing powers, which that queen of the human œconomy retains in her ſervice.—Theſe, like the ſeveral diſtributions of ſome ample river, run through the whole man; to quicken, fertilize, and enrich all his converſation.——But you repreſent them bitter, as the waters of Marah; unwholeſome, as the ſtreams of Jericho; noxious, as the pottage prepared for the ſons of the prophets.

Aſp. Nor is this a miſrepreſentation. For ſuch they really are, till divine grace, like Moſes's wood +- like Eliſha's ſalt ++, or the meal = caſt in by that holy man of GOD, ſweeten them, heal them, and render their operations ſalutary.

The underſtanding claims our firſt regard.——This, however qualified to ſerve the purpoſes of civil life, is unable to diſcover the truths, in which wiſdom conſiſts; or to form the tempers, from which happineſs flows.

Let us take our ſpecimen, not from the uncultivated ſavages of Afric, but from the politeſt nation in Europe.—The Grecians piqued themſelves on their intellectual accompliſhments. They termed all the reſt of mankind barbarians. Yet even theſe ſons of ſcience, profeſſing themſelves wiſe, were, in fact, egregious fools ~.—Not to enumerate the ſhocking immoralities, which the poets aſcribed to their deities; not to inſiſt upon the groſs idolatries, which the common people practiſed in their worſhip: even their philoſophers, the moſt improved and penetrating geniuſes, were unacquainted with the very firſt principle ⁂ of true religion.——

* Exod. xx. 17. † Col. iii. 5.
‡ Col. iii. 6. ‖ 1 Cor. ii. 14.
§ 2 Pet. iii. 12. ¶ Eph. ii. 3. † Jer. ii. 21.
+- Exod. xv. 25. ++ 2 Kings ii. 21. 22.
= 2 Kings iv. 41. ~ Rom. i. 22.
⁂ The firſt of all the commandments is, Hear, O Iſrael, The LORD our GOD is ONE LORD; and thou ſhalt love the LORD, even they could not pronounce, with an unfaltering tongue *, "That GOD is ONE."

Ther. With regard to the philoſophers, the prejudices of a wrong education might pervert their judgment; or, in compliance with the prevailing mode, they might adopt cuſtoms, and aſſent to notions, which they did not thoroughly approve.

Aſp. A poor compliment this to their integrity! Had I been their advocate, methinks, I would have given up the ſagacity of my clients, rather than their fidelity to the cauſe of GOD and truth.

With reference to the ſupreme GOOD, they were equally at a loſs.——There's not one among all the inferior creatures, not even the crawling worm, or the buzzing fly, but perceives what is beneficial, and purſues it; diſcerns what is pernicious, and avoids it. Yonder caterpillar, whoſe nouriſhment is from one particular ſpecies of vegetables, never makes a wrong application to another: never is allured by the fragrance of the auricula, or dazzled by the ſplendor of the tulip; but conſtantly diſtinguiſhes, and as conſtantly adheres to the leaf, which affords her the proper food. So ſagacious are the meaneſt animals, with relation to their reſpective happineſs! While the moſt celebrated of the Heathen ſages were, on a ſubject of the very ſame import, mere dotards.—Varro reckons up no leſs than two hundred and eighty-eight different opinions concerning the true good; and not one of them derives it from the true ſource; I mean a conformity to the ever-bleſſed GOD, and an enjoyment of his infinite perfections.

If, on theſe leading points, they were ſo erroneous; no wonder, that they were bewildered in their other reſearches.

Ther. We are not inquiring into the circumſtances of this or that particular nation; but into the ſtate of mankind in general.

Aſp. Caſt your eye, Theron, upon thoſe ſwallows. They ſhoot themſelves, with ſurpriſing rapidity, through the air. I ſhould take them for ſo many living arrows, were it not for their ſhifting, winding, wan-

LORD, &c. Mark xii. 29. From which it appears, that the unity of the GODHEAD is the foundation of all the divine commandments, and of all human worſhip.

* Unfaltering, for though, in Plato's book of laws, we meet with ὁ Θεος—τῳ Θεῳ—τον Θεον again and again; yet he ſoon departs from this ſound ſpeech, and relapſes into the language of idolatry.

A learned and ingenious friend would fain have Socrates exempted from this charge.—I wiſh, I could gratify his benevolent temper, and ſpare that amiable philoſopher. But, however juſtly he may expreſs himſelf on ſome occaſions, at other times he wavers; he evidently revolts; and is moſt pitiably inconſiſtent with himſelf.——Even in his excellent conference with Ariſtodemus, where he argues admirably well for the exiſtence, he cannot readily adhere to the unity, of the GODHEAD.——Nay, in his laſt ſolemn apology before his judges, he publicly renounces the truth; declares that he worſhipped thoſe gods, which were acknowledged by his country; worſhipped them, and no other; on the ſame feſtivals, at the ſame altars, and in the ſame ſidolatrous manner.—No other: theſe are his words; Οὐ γαρ εἶναι ἀλλους, ἢ ἡρας, ἢ των συν τουτοις θεων, ἀλλ' θυων τισι καιτοις Δαιμοσιν, οὐδ' ὀμνυων, ἀλλ' ὀμνυειν ἀλλους θεους ἀνεπιφθονα. SOCRAT. Memorab. lib. I. i. ſect. 11. 24.

Let none conclude from this or any other paſſage, that we would conſign over all the Heathens to damnation. This is as far from our intention, as it is foreign to the argument. We are only like witneſſes, ſummoned to give in our evidence. From which it appears, that the very beſt among the Gentiles were ignorant of the true GOD; or, if they knew him in any degree, they glorified him not as GOD; but became vain in their imagination, and vile in their worſhip.—Whether they ſhall obtain mercy, or which of them ſhall be objects of divine clemency, is left ſolely to the determination of their ſupreme, unerring, righteous JUDGE.

— Non noſtrum eſt tantas componere lites.

ton motions.——Are not theſe what you call birds of paſſage?

Ther. Theſe, and ſome other of the feathered race, are our conſtant viſitants in ſummer; but leave us, at the approach of winter. As ſoon as the weather becomes cold, they aſſemble themſelves in a body, and concert meaſures for their departure. Who convenes the aſſembly,—what debates ariſe,—or how they communicate the reſolution taken,—I do not preſume to ſay. This is certain, that not one of them diſlodges, till the affair is ſettled, and the proclamation has been publiſhed. Not a ſingle loiterer is to be ſeen, when the troops are preparing for their decampment; nor a ſingle ſtraggler to be found, when they have once begun their march.—— Having finiſhed their journey through the land, their wings become a ſort of ſails *; and they launch, not into, but over the ocean. Without any compaſs to regulate their courſe, or any chart to make obſervations in their voyage, they arrive ſafely at the deſired ſhore. And what is ſtill more extraordinary, they always find the readieſt way, and the ſhorteſt cut.

Aſp. The ſtork in the heavens knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle, and the crane, and the ſwallow, obſerve the time of their coming: but my people know not the judgment of their GOD †. The young ones of thoſe birds perceive, how abſolutely neceſſary it is, to forſake the land of their nativity, and travel in queſt of milder climes.——But our offſpring, even when their minds begin to open, are brutiſh in their knowledge ‡. Born they are, and too long continue, like the wild aſs's colt ‖: not only quite deſtitute of heavenly wiſdom, but ſtupid to apprehend it, and averſe to receive it. As ſoon as they are born, they go aſtray, and——

Ther. Go aſtray—To what is this owing, but to the bad examples they behold? They catch the wayward habit from the irregular converſation of others.

Aſp. Is not this a confirmation of my point? Why are they yielding clay to each bad impreſſion? caſe-hardened ſteel to every edifying application?—From imitating unworthy examples, you can hardly with-hold them by the tighteſt rein. But if you would affect them with a ſenſe of divine things, or bring them acquainted with GOD their Maker, line muſt be upon line, line upon line; precept muſt be upon precept, precept upon precept; here a little, and there a little §.—What farther coroborates my ſentiment, is, that all theſe tender toils of erudition are generally unwelcome, are too often unſucceſsful, nay, will always be ineffectual, without the concurrence of almighty grace.

* Remigio alarum. VIRG.

† Jer. viii. 7. ‡ Jer. x. 14.

‖ Job xi. 12. How keenly is this compariſon pointed!—Like the aſs's, an animal remarkable for its ſtupidity, even to a proverb.—Like the aſs's colt, which muſt be ſtill more egregiouſly ſtupid than the dam.——Like the wild aſs's colt, which is not only blockiſh, but ſtubborn and refractory; neither poſſeſſes valuable qualities by nature, nor will eaſily receive them by diſcipline.—The image, in the original, is yet more ſtrongly touched. The comparative particle "like" is not in the Hebrew; "born a "wild aſs's colt;" or, as we ſhould ſay in Engliſh, "a mere "wild," &c.

§ A great critic has laid down the following rule, to be obſerved in fine writing;

"'Tis not enough no harſhneſs gives offence,
"The ſound muſt be an echo to the ſenſe."
POPE's eſſay on criticiſm.

Never was this delicate maxim more nicely exemplified, than in the above-cited paſſage of Iſaiah, chap. xxxiii. 13——Another inſtance of the ſame kind occurs in the ſeventh verſe; where the language ſeems to mimic the reeling, ſtruggling, giddy motions of a drunkard; while it iterates and reiterates the idea; expreſſes the ſame thing, in a different and ſtill different manner; with an apparent, and, in this caſe, a ſignificant circumrotation of words.

Beſides, Theron, if this propenſity to evil be obſervable in all children, it ſeems more than probable that the unhappy bias is derived from their parents, rather than catched from their neighbours; and owing, not to the influence of external examples, but to a principle of internal corruption *.——Neglect the education of children, and you are ſure to have their manners evil, their lives unprofitable. Nay, only remit your endeavours, and they loſe what has been gained; they ſtart aſide like a broken bow. And wherefore this? Why do they not, without the rules of diſcipline or leſſons of inſtruction, ſpontaneouſly addict themſelves to the exerciſe of every virtue? juſt as the cygnets in yonder canal, ſpontaneouſly take to the element of water, and the act of ſwimming.

That bed in the garden before us, will ſuggeſt the reaſon. It has been digged and dreſſed this very day. It now lies ſmooth and clean. Not a ſingle weed appears on its ſurface. Yet how certainly will it, in a very little time, produce a plenteous growth of thoſe vegetable nuiſances?—Whence can this proceed? No hand will ſow them. No wiſh will invite them. But the ſeeds, though unperceived by any eye, are already there. Diſſeminated by the winds, they have mixed themſelves with the mould, and are ſunk into the ſoil.——So, juſt ſo it is with our children. The ſeeds of iniquity are within † them; and unleſs proper diligence be exerted by us, unleſs gracious aſſiſtance be vouchſafed from above, they will aſſuredly ſpring up, over-run their ſouls, and diſhonour their lives.

Ther. Let us leave the children, and make men the ſubject of our inquiry.

Aſp. In this reſpect, Theron,

Men are but children of a larger growth.

We may leave the veſt or hanging-ſleeve coat, but we ſhall ſtill find the follies of the child. In youth, what low ambition and fondneſs for deſpicable pleaſures.—In manhood, what a keen purſuit of tranſitory wealth, yet what a cold inattention to GOD and holineſs?—Men, and men too of the greateſt abilities, whoſe penetration on other ſubjects is piercing as the eagle's ſight, are, on the moſt important points, blind as the incaverned mole.

Ther. What! is the underſtanding like the moſt dim-ſighted animal, when lodged in her darkeſt retirement? that ſublime faculty of the ſoul; which lends her eye to all the reſt; ſits at the helm, and directs their motions!

Aſp. You remember, I preſume, that beautiful paſſage in Milton ‡; which Mr Addiſon ſo highly admires, and ſo judiciouſly illuſtrates. The paſſage I mean, where the archangel Michael comes down, to advertiſe Adam of future events, and to execute the ſentence of divine juſtice.

Ther. I remember it perfectly well.—In the eaſt, the great light of day lies under an eclipſe. In the weſt, a bright cloud deſcends; filled with an hoſt of angels, and more luminous than the ſun itſelf. The whole theatre of nature is darkened, that this glorious machine may appear in all its magnificence and beauty.——From this radiant chariot the Potentate of heaven alights, and advances with a majeſtic ſtateline's to meet Adam.

Aſp. Should you ſee ſuch an auguſt perſonage, alighting from ſuch a ſplendid chariot, and walking amidſt the thronged ſtreets of a city? ſhould you behold every one intent upon his buſineſs or diverſions, ſtruck with no awe, paying no reverential regard to this celeſtial viſitant; what would you think?

Ther. I ſhould certainly ſuſpect, that ſome ſuperior power had drawn a veil over their ſight, and hid this wonderful ſpectacle from their view.

Aſp. Such is really the caſe with all mankind by nature, and with the generality of people, during their whole life.——GOD, the infinitely-great GOD, is in every place. Yet how few advert to his preſence?—All nature exhibits him to their ſenſes; yet perhaps he is not in any of their thoughts.

The ſun clothed in tranſcendent brightneſs, moſt illuſtriouſly diſplays his MAKER's glory. The moon, though dreſſed in fainter beams, has luſtre enough to ſhew us the adorable DEITY, and his marvellous perfections. The ſtars, fixed as they are at an unmeaſureable diſtance, and leſſened almoſt to a point, come in with their evidence, and magnify their CREATOR to a gazing but unaffected world.

The air whiſpers his clemency in the gentle, the refreſhing gales of ſpring. If we take no notice of this ſoft perſuaſive addreſs, the tone is elevated; the majeſty of JEAOVAH ſounds aloud, in roaring winds, and rending ſtorms. Yet both expedients fail. Man is like the deaf adder, that ſtoppeth her ears. He refuſeth to hear the voice of the charmers, charm they never ſo ſweetly, never ſo forcibly.

Each flower, arrayed in beauty and breathing perfume, courts our affections for its infinitely-amiable AUTHOR.——Not a bird that warbles, nor a brook that murmurs, but invites our praiſe, or chides our ingratitude.——All the claſſes of fruit depoſit their atteſtation on our palates, yet ſeldom reach our hearts. They give us a proof of the divine benignity, a proof as undeniable as it is pleaſing, and too often as ineffectual alſo.

In ſhort, the whole creation is like a kind of magnificent embaſſy from its almighty LORD; deputed to proclaim his excellencies, and demand our homage. Yet who has not diſregarded the former, and with-held the latter?—How few walk, as ſeeing HIM that is inviſible, or have fellowſhip with the FATHER of ſpirits? tho' to walk before him, is our higheſt dignity; and to have fellowſhip with him, is our only felicity?

Ther. This is owing to inattention, rather than to any blindneſs or defect in man's underſtanding. The many works of genius, which have been produced in various ages, are an abundant proof of his intellectual capacity.——Have not the ſeas been traverſed, and the ſkies meaſured? Has not the earth been diſembowelled of its choiceſt treaſures; while its ſurface is beautified with towns, cities, palaces innumerable?—What fine arts are invented and exerciſed; and to what a pitch of perfection are they carried? Arts that ſeem, if not to exceed, at leaſt to rival nature.—It was the underſtanding, which formed all theſe great deſigns. It was the underſtanding, which contrived the means, and conducted the execution.—And are not theſe unqueſtionable evidences of her very ſuperior abilities?

Aſp. Then ſhe is like ſome great empreſs, who conquers half the world, but is unable to rule herſelf; who extends her regulations into foreign climes, while her domeſtic affairs are involved in confuſion.——Do you doubt the reality of this remark? Set yourſelf to meditate upon the moſt intereſting truths. How deſultory, how incoherent are your thoughts?——Charge them to be collected. They diſobey your orders.——Rally the undiſciplined vagrants. Again they deſert the

* St Paul confeſſes, that he and his fellow-ſaints were in their unconverted ſtate, depraved: and this, not διὰ τὴν ἕξιν, by cuſtom, or habit, but φύσει, by nature. Eph. ii. 3.

† Whoever chuſes to examine the ſeeds, the poiſonous ſeeds, which are lodged in this nurſery of all evil, may ſee a ſample of them in our LORD's deſcription, Mark vii. 20. 21. 22. 23; where he characterizes the heart, not barely of the hypocritical Phariſee, or the abandoned publican, but of mankind in general.—After ſuch an authority, ſhall I mention the teſtimony of Seneca? We are allowed to glean the grapes, when the vintage is gathered. In ſuch a view I would introduce the philoſopher after the SAVIOUR. Omnia in omnibus vitia ſunt; ſed non omnia in ſingulis extant. De Benef. lib. IV.

‡ Book XI. 203. &c.

the taſk.—Exert all your power, and keep them cloſe to their buſineſs. Still they elude your endeavours.

The other day, I could not forbear ſmiling at a little adventure of your youngeſt ſon's. Some quick-ſilver, which happened to be ſpilt upon the floor, parted into ſeveral globules. The ſhining balls looked ſo prettily, he longed to make them his own. But when he offered to take them up, they ſlipt from his hand. As ſoon as he renewed the attempt, ſo often he met with a diſappointment. The cloſer he ſtrove to graſp them, the more ſpeedily they eſcaped from his fingers. He ſeemed at firſt to be amazed, then became quite angry, that the little fugitives ſhould ſo conſtantly baffle his repeated efforts.——Thus unmanageable I very often find my own thoughts. If yours are under no better regimen, this may convince us both, that all is not according to the original creation.

We apply ourſelves to converſe with the everlaſting GOD in prayer. Here one would expect to have the thoughts all clearneſs, and all compoſure. But here we are not ſufficient of ourſelves to think any thing as of ourſelves *. All thoſe holy ideas, which create reverence, or ſtrengthen faith, or quicken love, come from the FATHER of lights. Should HE withdraw his influence, all will be dull, and dark, and dead.——It may be we are ſomewhat enlivened in this ſacred exerciſe; before we are aware, perhaps in the very midſt of the ſolemn office, our attention is diſſipated; and not diſſipated only, but ſcattered to the ends of the earth. The GOD of all glory is forſaken, and the devotion paid to ſome ſenſeleſs foppery. A malefactor, begging his life at the knees of his ſovereign; and diſcontinuing his ſuit, in order to careſs a lap-dog, or purſue a butterfly; is but a faint image of the vanity which attends our devotional ſervices.—Reaſon, which ought to correct theſe irregularities, is treated like the incredulous lord; who, inſtead of controlling the unruly multitude, was overborne by their impetuoſity, and trodden under foot †.

Since then the reins are ſtruck out of our hands, and we have loſt the rule over our own faculties; ſurely we are in a ſtate different, very different from our primitive conſtitution.

Ther. However inſenſible to refined ſpeculation, the underſtanding, when intereſt is in the caſe, is apprehenſive enough.

Aſp. In temporal ‡, not in ſpiritual affairs.——Your younger brother, Theron, is a merchant. We will ſuppoſe him at the ſea-ſide; within a ſmall diſtance of the veſſel, on which a conſiderable part of his ſubſtance is embarked.—We will ſuppoſe the veſſel in the utmoſt diſtreſs, ready to founder with her leaks, or to ſtrike upon the rocks.——If he diſcovers no ſign of concern, calls in no aſſiſtance from the country, makes no effort to ſave the crew, and ſecure the cargo; would you not think him bereaved of his underſtanding, or deprived of his ſight?—Could you conceive a more favourable opinion of his eyes or his intellect; if, inſtead of trying every method to prevent a ſhipwreck, he ſhould amuſe himſelf with picking ſhells from the ocean, or drawing figures on the ſand?

We, and every one of our fellow-creatures, have an intereſt in jeopardy, unſpeakably more precious, than all the rich lading of a thouſand fleets. Our ſouls our immortal ſouls, are expoſed, every day, every hour, to the peril of everlaſting deſtruction. Every temptation is threatening to their endleſs welfare, as a ridge of craggy rocks to a ſhip that drives before the ſtrongeſt gale.——Yet how unconcerned are mankind? Where is their holy fear? where their godly jealouſy? where their wakeful circumſpection? Rather what a gay inſenſibility is obſervable in their behaviour? Or elſe, what a lifeleſs formality prevails in their ſupplications? their ſupplications to that almighty BEING, who alone is able to ſave and to deſtroy?—Was not the human underſtanding both darkened and benumbed, we ſhould ſee our neighbours, we ſhould feel ourſelves awakened, into much the ſame earneſt ſolicitude, as the diſciples expreſſed, when, perceiving the waves boiſterous, and their bark ſinking, they cried, LORD! ſave us! we periſh!

But alas! in things of an unſeen nature, though of eternal conſequence, intereſt, that habitual darling of every heart, loſes its engaging influence. Nay, when eternity, all-important eternity is at ſtake, even ſelf-preſervation is ſcarce any longer a governing principle.—— What can be more deplorable! and if we admit not the doctrine of original corruption, what ſo unaccountable?

Ther. This, I muſt confeſs, is true with regard to the unthinking rabble. To them may be accommodated the remark of Auguſtus; who, when he ſaw ſome foreign females, carrying apes in their arms inſtead of infants, ſaid to one of his courtiers, "Have the women of thoſe "countries no children, that they are ſo fond of ſuch "deſpicable animals?"—The vulgar are ſo immerſed in ſecular cares, that one might indeed be tempted to aſk, "Have thoſe people no ſouls, that buying and ſelling, "eating and drinking, ingroſs their whole concern?"— But perſons of rank and education think in a more exalted manner.

Aſp. Do you then imagine, that an elevation of circumſtances ſets the affections on things above? or that it is the peculiar infelicity of the vulgar, to grovel in their deſires?—Gold, I believe, is more likely to increaſe, than to diſſipate the fog on the mind. Abundance of poſſeſſions inſtead of diſengaging the heart, faſten it more inſeparably to the earth. Even ſuperior attainments in learning, if not ſanctified by grace, ſerve only to render the owner ſomewhat more refined in his follies. —But compariſons between the various claſſes of mankind, are as uſeleſs as they are invidious. None, in either condition, attend to the things which make for their peace, till they are awakened from their lethargy, by the quickening SPIRIT of CHRIST. And even then we cannot but obſerve evident indications of much remaining blindneſs.

How apt are ſuch perſons to miſtake the way of ſalvation? to place their own works for a foundation of hope inſtead of CHRIST the Rock of ages? thinking by their own performances to win, not ſeeking from unmerited grace to receive, the inheritance of eternal glory. Which is more abſurdly vain, than to offer toys as an equivalent for thrones, or to dream of purchaſing diadems with a mite.——They are alſo prone to miſapprehend the nature of holineſs; are zealous to regulate the external conduct, without attending to the renovation of the heart; in outward forms elaborate; with reſpect to inward ſanctity, leſs if at all exact. A labour juſt as prepoſterous, as to ſkin over the ſurface of a wound, while it feſters at the bottom, and conſumes the bone.

Give me leave to aſk, Theron; When our LORD declares, Unleſs a man be born again, he cannot enter into the kingdom of heaven *; when he ſpeaks of eating his fleſh and drinking his blood †, when you hear or read of union with the bleſſed JESUS, or communion with the moſt high GOD: is there not a cloud, if not total darkneſs, on your mind ‡?—How errone-

* 2 Cor. iii. 5. † 2 Kings vii. 17.

‡ Called therefore by the apoſtle, fleſhly wiſdom, and oppoſed to the grace of GOD, 2 Cor. i. 12.

* John iii. 3. † John vi. 54.

‡ With regard to the myſteries of CHRIST, the greateſt proficients are but obtuſe acute, dull even in their acuteneſs.—— What ſays the wiſe Agur? an invaluable fragment of whoſe works is preſerved in the book of Proverbs. Surely I am more bruiſh than any man, and have not the underſtanding of a man;

even

ous was the pſalmiſt himſelf, in his judgment concerning the divine diſpoſals? So fooliſh was I and ignorant, even as it were a beaſt, or as the veriеſt beaſt, before thee *.——The voice of experience therefore will atteſt, what the word of revelation has averred, That the natural man, be his intellectual abilities ever ſo pregnant, or ever ſo improved, cannot know the things of the SPIRIT of GOD †: he has no ſight to diſcern their beauty, no taſte to reliſh their ſweetneſs. Nay, though they are the pureſt light, and the moſt perfect wiſdom, to him they appear, not only dark and obſcure, but even fooliſhneſs itſelf.

Would this be the caſe, if the underſtanding was not greatly depraved? Should it be difficult for your ear, to diſtinguiſh the diverſity of ſounds; or for your eye, to diſcern the variety of colours; would you not conclude, that the organs were very much impaired?

Ther. I think, you have treated the underſtanding, as Zopyrus ſerved his own body ‡, when he went over to the enemy.——Do you intend to mangle the other faculties, at the ſame unmerciful rate?

Aſp. That nobleman made the wounds, which diſfigured his fleſh. I have only probed the ſores, which were found in the underſtanding. If I have touched the quick, and put the patient to pain, it is only to facilitate the operation of medicine, and make way for a cure.——But permit me to aſk, Wherein does the excellency of the human will conſiſt?

Ther. In following the guidance of reaſon, and ſubmitting to the influence of proper authority.

Aſp. The will, I fear, rejects the government of reaſon; and it is undeniably certain, that it rebels againſt the authority of GOD.

Caſt your eye upon that team of horſes, with which yonder countryman is ploughing his fallow-ground. No leſs than five of thoſe robuſt animals are linked together, and yield their ſubmiſſive necks to the draught. They have more ſtrength than twenty men, yet are managed by a ſingle lad. They not only ſtand in awe of the laſh, but liſten to the voice of their driver. They turn to the right hand or to the left; they quicken their pace, or ſtop ſhort in the furrow; at the bare intimation of his pleaſure.—Are we equally obedient to the calls, to the exhortations, the expreſs injunctions of our heavenly LORD? The bleſſed JESUS ſpoke at the beginning, and the world was made. He ſpeaks by his providence, and the univerſe is upheld. When he ſhall ſpeak at the laſt day, the heavens will paſs away, and the earth be diſſolved. Yet he ſpeaks to us in his divine word, and we turn a deaf ear to his addreſs. He ſpeaks in tender expoſtulations, and no melting of heart enſues. He ſpeaks in precious promiſes, and no ardent deſires are enkindled.——The will, which, in theſe caſes, ought to be turned as wax to the ſeal, is unimpreſſed and inflexible as an iron ſinew.

Ther. The human will is conſtantly inclined to preſerve, accommodate, and make its poſſeſſor happy. Is not this the right poſition, in which it ſhould always ſtand? or the moſt deſirable direction, that can be given to its motions?

Aſp. I ſhould be glad, if fact bore witneſs to your aſſertion. But fact, I apprehend, is on the contrary ſide.——I took notice, as we came along, of ſome ants buſily employed on a little hillock. Have you made any obſervations, Theron, on this reptile community?

Ther. It is a little republic *. They inhabit a kind of oblong city, divided into various ſtreets. They are governed by laws, and regulated by politics, of their own. Their magazines are commodiouſly formed, and judiciouſly guarded againſt the injuries of the weather. Some are defended by an arch made of earth, and cemented with a peculiar ſort of glue. Some are covered with rafters of ſlender wood, and thatched with ruſhes or graſs. The roof is always raiſed with a double ſlope, to turn away the current of the waters, and ſhoot the rain from their ſtore-houſes. They all beſtir themſelves, with inceſſant aſſiduity, while the air is ſerene; while the roads are good and abundance of looſe grain lies ſcattered over the fields.——By theſe precautions, they live ſecure, when ſtorms embroil the ſky; they want no manner of conveniency, even when winter lays waſte the plains.

Aſp. Do we improve, ſo diligently, our preſent opportunities? This life is the ſeed-time of eternity. Do we huſband the precious moments like perſons ſenſible of their unſpeakable importance? ſenſible, that if we trifle and are indolent, they will be irrecoverably gone, and we irretrievably ruined?

Sickneſs, we know not how ſoon, may invade us, pain may torment us, and both may iſſue in our final diſſolution. Are we duly aware of theſe awful changes, and properly ſolicitous to put all in order for their approach?—We walk (alarming thought!) upon the very brink of death, reſurrection, and judgment. Do we walk like wiſe virgins, with our loins girt; with our lamps trimmed; in a ſtate of continual readineſs, for the heavenly BRIDEGROOM's advent?

Thoſe ants have no guide, overſeer, or ruler. Yet they prepare their meat in the ſummer, and gather their food in the harveſt †. We have all theſe, yet neglect the time of our viſitation.——We have GOD's unerring word, to guide us; GOD's ever-watchful eye, to overſee us; GOD's ſovereign command, to rule and quicken us. Notwithſtanding all theſe motives, is not the ſpeech of the ſluggard, the very language of our conduct? A little more ſleep, a little more ſlumber, a little more folding of the hands to ſleep ‡. The moſt ſupine indifference, where all poſſible diligence is but juſt ſufficient!—This, you muſt allow, is the true character of mankind in general. And does this demonſtrate the rectitude of their will?

Ther. The underſtanding may be ſaid to carry the torch, the will to hold the balance. Now, the perfection of a balance conſiſts, in being ſo nicely poiſed, as to incline at the leaſt touch, and preponderate with the ſlighteſt weight. This property belongs, without all diſpute, to the human will.

even though the following verſes beſpeak the very ſingular elevation and extent of his knowledge. Prov. xxx. 2.—Conformably to the experience of this excellent man, I have always obſerved, that the more enlightened people are, the more they lament their ignorance; the more they pant after a continual progreſs in heavenly knowledge; and pray for clearer, ſtill clearer manifeſtations of the incomprehenſible GOD.

* I queſtion whether Aſpaſio's tranſlation comes fully up to the emphaſis of the original. The comparative particle is omitted in the Hebrew. As ſoftens and palliates the matter. Therefore the pſalmiſt, to expreſs the deepeſt ſenſe of his ignorance, ſays, I was a beaſt, yea, the veriеſt braſt, בהמות Pſal. lxxiii. 22.

† 1 Cor. ii. 14.

‡ See ROLLIN's ancient hiſt. vol. III. p. 46.

* See Nat. Diſpl. vol. I.

† Prov. vi. 7.

‡ There is, if I miſtake not, a nice gradation, in this ſpeech of the ſluggard; ſuch as very naturally mimics the manner of that lazy creature.—He pleads, firſt, for ſome conſiderable degree of indulgence, A little ſleep.—If that is too much to be granted, he craves ſome ſmaller toleration of his ſloth; A little ſlumber.—If the taſkmaſter ſtill rings in his ear, ſtill goads his ſide; one almoſt ſees him, rubbing his heavy eyes, and yawning out his laſt requeſt; A little folding of the hands at leaſt to lie down, מעט תכף ידים לשכב Prov. vi. 10.—When ſuch is our conduct with regard to eternal intereſts, how juſtly may we apply that ſpirited expoſtulation of the poet;

Tantæne rem tam negligenter!

Aſp.

Aſp. What? If one of your ſcales ſhould deſcend to the ground, though charged with trifles, that are light as air? if the other ſhould kick the beam, though its contents be weightier than talents of gold?—Is not this an exact repreſentation of our will, when the fleeting pleaſures of ſenſe, or the puny intereſts of time, excite our wiſhes; even while the ſolid delights of religion, and the immenſely-rich treaſures of immortality, can hardly obtain our attention?—However, let us quit the metaphor, and examine fact. Suppoſe I make it appear, that, inſtead of chuſing the moſt eligible objects, the will is ſo deplorably vitiated, as to loath what is ſalutary, and be fond of what is baneful.

Ther. If you prove this to be univerſally the caſe, you will prove your favourite point with a witneſs.

Aſp. When Providence is pleaſed to thwart our meaſures, or defeat our endeavours; to bring us under the cloud of diſgrace, or lay upon us the rod of affliction; what is our behaviour?——Do we bow our heads in humble reſignation? Do we open our mouths in thankful acknowledgments?——Obſerve the waters in that elegant octangular baſon.——They aſſimilate themſelves, with the utmoſt readineſs, and with equal exactneſs, to the veſſel that contains them. So would the human will, if it were not extremely froward and fooliſh, conform itſelf to the divine; which is unerringly wiſe, and, of all poſſible contingencies, incomparably the beſt *.——Yet how apt are we to fret with diſquietude; and ſtruggle under afflictive diſpenſations, as a wild bull in a net!

Ther. This is a very imperfect proof, Aſpaſio, and correſponds only with part of your accuſation. We may diſlike what is wholeſome, eſpecially if it be unpalatable, yet not be fond of our bane.

Aſp. Should you ſee a perſon, who thirſts after the putrid lake, but diſreliſhes the running fountain; who longs for the empoiſoned berries of the nightſhade, but abhors the delicious fruit of the orchard; would you applaud the regularity of his appetite?—I don't wait for your anſwer. But I more than ſuſpect, this is a true picture of all unregenerate people. How do they affect dreſs and external ornament; but are unwilling, rather than deſirous, to be clothed with humility †, and to put on CHRIST ‡! Amuſement will engage, play animate, and diverſion fire them: but as to the worſhip of the living GOD, O! what a wearineſs is it ‖! This is attended, if attended at all, with languor, and a liſtleſs inſenſibility. Frothy novels, and flatulent wit, regale their taſte; while the marrow and fatneſs of the divine word are as "their ſorrowful meat §." What is all this, but to loath the ſalutary, and long ¶ for the baneful?

Let me, from the ſame compariſon, propoſe one queſtion more, which may be applicable both to the will and to the underſtanding.—Should you hear of another perſon, the ſtate of whoſe ſtomach was ſo diſpoſed, that it turned the moſt nouriſhing food into phlegm; and derived matter of diſeaſe, from the moſt ſovereign ſupports of health; what would you think of this conſtitution?

Ther. I ſhould certainly think it very much diſtempered.

Aſp. Without the grace of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, our ſouls turn every occurrence into an increaſe of their ſinful depravity. Our very table is a ſnare; and inſtead of exciting us to gratitude, is a provocative to gluttony.——How difficult is it, when we flow in plenty, not to be elated; when we are preſſed with poverty, not to repine!—Have we buſineſs in the world? It cumbers our thoughts, or tempts us to avarice. Have we no buſineſs to manage? We ſink into ſloth, and ſettle on the lees of voluptuouſneſs.—If our ſchemes are proſperous, it is odds but they attach us to the intereſts of time. If they prove unſucceſsful, we too often are chagrined with the diſappointment, and ſin againſt meekneſs.——Even the holy commandment, inſtead of reſtraining ſin, or producing obedience, irritates the inbred depravity; and renders it more reſtleſs, more impetuous, more ungovernable *.——Thoſe very things, which ſhould have been for our welfare (ſo malignant and raging is our corruption!) are converted into an occaſion of falling.

Ther. The will is under no neceſſity of miſemploying her powers. She is free to act in this manner or in that; and, if a ſpendthrift, is not a ſlave.

Aſp. In actions which relate to the animal œconomy, the will is unqueſtionably free. She can contract the forehead into a frown, or expand it with a ſmile.—In the ordinary affairs of life, ſhe is under no controul. We can undertake or decline a journey, carry on or diſcontinue an employ, juſt as we pleaſe.——In the outward acts of religion alſo, the will is her own miſtreſs. We can read the word of GOD, or go to the place of divine worſhip, without any extraordinary aid from above.——But in matters which are more intimately connected with our ſalvation, the caſe is different. Here, as our liturgy expreſſes it, "we are tied and bound "with the chain of our ſins."

Would you have a perſon delight himſelf in the LORD; take pleaſure in devotion; ſet his affections on things above?—All this is both his duty and his happineſs. But alas! he is alienated from the life of GOD. His inclinations gravitate quite the contrary way. His will is in the condition of that diſtreſſed woman, who was bowed down with a ſpirit of infirmity, and could in no wiſe lift up herſelf †. Corruption, like a ſtrong bias influences, or rather like a heavy mountain oppreſſes his mind. Neither can he ſhake off the propenſity, or ſtruggle away from the load, until grace, almighty grace, interpoſes for his releaſe.—— Where the SPIRIT of the LORD is, there and there alone is liberty ‡; that ſacred and glorious liber-

* This ſeems to be the meaning of the prophet, לִנְתִ֥יק מישרים Iſ. xxvi. 7. Not—The way of the juſt is uprightneſs——This ſenſe, in the preſent connection, is hardly conſiſtent with humility; is by no means proper, to introduce a devotional addreſs to the great JEHOVAH. Rather—GOD's way to the juſt is uprightneſs: or, ſtill more emphatically, uprightneſſes: is in all reſpects irreprovable, excellent, admirable; ſuited, perfectly ſuited, to every ſacred attribute of wiſdom, goodneſs, and truth.

† 1 Pet. v. 5. ‡ Rom. xiii. 14. ‖ Mal. i. 13. § Job vi. 7.

¶ The reader may ſee this unhappy contraſt drawn in the ſtrongeſt colours, by the royal preacher, and by the mourning prophet.—Becauſe I have called, and ye refuſed; I have ſtretched out my hand, and no man regarded; but ye have ſet at nought all my counſel, and would none of my reproof. What a croud of words! emphatically declaring the moſt incorrigible perverſeneſs; which is proof againſt every method of reformation, againſt all the arts even of divine perſuaſion. Prov. i. 24. 25.—The hoſt of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have ſerved, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have ſought, and whom they have worſhipped. What a heap of expreſſions! ſignificantly deſcribing that impetuous ardor, which no prohibitions can reſtrain; and that inſatiable avidity, which never knows when to ſay "It is "enough." Jer. viii. 2.

If I beg leave to add another example of this kind, it is chiefly for the ſake of clearing up an obſcure paſſage in the Pſalms; which ſeems to have been miſtaken by the authors of both our verſions.—David, to ſet forth the barbarous aſſiduity of his perſecutors, ſays, They wander up and down. They pry into every corner; they ſearch the city, and examine the country; וְלִנ֣וּ not for meat; which, in this connection, is a ſenſe quite foreign to the ſubject, and very jejune indeed; but to devour; to devour me the deſtined victim of their rage. And if they are not ſatisfied, if they cannot compaſs their deſign by day, will they grudge? No; but they will continue all night, in the proſecution of their purpoſe. Neither cold nor darkneſs can retard them; neither hardſhips nor dangers can divert them; but their attempts are as indefatigable, as their malice is implacable. Pſal. lix. 15.

* Rom. vii. 8. † Luke xiii. 11. ‡ 2 Cor. iii. 17.

ty, which is not the common privilege of all men, but the high prerogative of the children of GOD.

Would you have a perſon apply to the great REDEEMER; apply with a real ardor of deſire; as Bartimæus of old, or the Syrophœnician mother?—His will is like the withered arm; cannot ſtretch forth itſelf to the all-gracious SAVIOUR: cannot hunger and thirſt after his everlaſting righteouſneſs and infinite merit; till the SAVIOUR himſelf ſpeaks power into the enfeebled, the perverted faculty.——If you think otherwiſe; try the experiment. Perſuade men to this neceſſary practice. Urge the moſt weighty arguments; deviſe the moſt pathetic expoſtulations; let zeal ſummon all her force, and rhetoric employ all her art. Without being a prophet, I dare venture to foretel the iſſue. Diſappointments, repeated diſappointments, will convince you, that our divine MASTER knew what he ſaid, when he ſolemnly declared, No man can come to me, except the FATHER, which hath ſent me, draw him *.—— Our church, in conformity to this and other ſcriptures, has taught us to pray, Turn thou us, O good LORD; for nothing but thy omnipotent agency is capable of doing it; and ſo ſhall we be turned.

Ther. Are we ſlaves then? Will Chriſtianity ſend us to ſeek our brethren, in the mines or in the galleys?

Aſp. Chriſtianity does not ſend, but find us there. There, or in a worſe ſlavery †.——It is doubtleſs a moſt abject ſtate, to wear the yoke, and truckle in chains. Yet ſuch, I apprehend, is the ſtate of our minds by nature. To prove this, we need not go down to the loweſt ranks of life. Theſe, you might ſay with the prophet, are poor; theſe are fooliſh; they have not known the way of the LORD, nor the judgment of their GOD.——I will get me therefore to the great men ‡, and examine their diſpoſition.

Have you not known perſons of the greateſt intrepidity, and firmeſt reſolution, hurried away by their luſts, as "a rolling thing before the whirlwind ‖?" Perhaps, they were bold enough to face danger, and defy the ſword, in the field of battle; yet were no more able to withſtand the wanton allurements of beauty, or the ſoft ſolicitations of pleaſure, than the moth can forbear fluttering about the flame, even though it ſinges her wings, and is ſcorching her to death.—— Others, poſſeſſed of a refined imagination, diſdain the groſs indulgencies of ſenſuality; yet are ſlaves to their own domineering paſſions. They are blown into the moſt intemperate rage, and puſhed on to the moſt extravagant actions, by every little ruffling accident. They ſee the meanneſs, which ſuch an ungovernable ſpirit argues; they feel the miſery, which ſuch internal tempeſts create; nay, they reſolve to ſuppreſs the impetuoſity of their temper: yet are bore away by the torrent; and, upon the very firſt provocation, are as furiouſly reſentful as ever.—Will you call theſe perſons free, becauſe their taſk-maſters and their tyrants are lodged within *? becauſe the fetters are forged, not for the meaner, but for the immortal part of their nature?

Ther. Let us paſs to the affections. Theſe are to the ſoul, what wings are to the eagle, or ſails to the ſhip. Theſe always ſtand ready to receive the gales of intereſt, and to ſpring at the ſignal of reaſon.

Aſp. O! that they did!—But, if the wings are clogged with mire; if the ſails are diſproportioned to the ballaſt; what advantage will accrue, either to the animal, or to the veſſel?—The one will, probably, be overſet in the voyage; the other will lie grovelling on the ground.

Ther. Deſire ſeems to be the firſt, which "opens the "mouth, or moves the wing, or peeps †." Deſire is active as a flame, and ever in purſuit of happineſs.

Aſp. What if your flame, inſtead of ſhooting upwards, ſhould point its inverted ſpires to the earth? Would not this be ſtrange, and a ſign of great diſorder?—GOD is the centre of perfection, and the ſource of felicity. All that is amiable in itſelf, is comprehended in GOD. All that is beneficial to us, proceeds from GOD. Do our deſires uniformly tend to this ſuper-excellent being? Do our wiſhes terminate in the enjoyment of his ever-glorious Majeſty? Alas! we are naturally eſtranged from him: we covet no communion with him. We are wedded to trifles, and dote upon vanity: but to GOD we ſay,—it is evidently the language of our conduct,—Depart from us; we deſire not the knowledge of thy ways ‡.

If deſire is the firſt-born among the affections, obſerve it in children. There it appears in its dawn, and has moſt of pure nature.——See, how thoſe flies, exulting in the ſunny gleam, vibrate with all the rapidity of motion their little wings ‖. So prompt and expedite are the deſires of children to any corrupting diverſion.—— See, how ſluggiſhly that ſnail, crawling forth amidſt the refreſhing moiſture, drags her ſlow length alone. So dull, if not reluctant, are the diſpoſitions of our children to any improving exerciſe. Rewards will hardly win them to the latter; the rod can hardly deter them from the former.——And none, none but GOD, "by his "ſpecial grace preventing them, can put into their minds "good deſires §."

Is our love under better regulation?—How eaſily are we captivated with a fair complexion and graceful form, eſpecially when ſet off with the decorations of dreſs! but but how little affected with the beauty of internal character; with the ornaments of virtue, and the graces of Chriſtianity? Can it be ſuppoſed, that the pulſe of the ſoul beats regularly, when there is ſuch a paſſionate fondneſs for fading embelliſhments, and ſuch a cold indifference for the moſt ſubſtantial endowments? How ready are we to be enamoured with well-proportioned clay, often to our apparent prejudice, ſometimes to our utter ruin! yet how backward to love that infinitely loving and lovely REDEEMER, who would die himſelf, rather than we ſhould become a prey to death! Tinder we are, perfect tinder to the ſparks of irrational and diſſolute affection; harder than adamant, colder than ice, to this heavenly flame.

Ther. If our love is blind, our fear has not loſt her eyes. Fear is quick of apprehenſion; and, inſtead of

* John vi. 44. It is not ſaid, The FATHER drives but draws: not by violent, irrational, compulſive means; but by clear conviction, ſweet perſuaſion, and inducements ſuited to a reaſonable being. Thoſe are the cords of a beaſt, theſe of a man. So that we are not acted upon as clock-work, or influenced as mere machines, but made willing in the day of his power, Pſal. cx. 3.

† St Paul ſays of Chriſtians, and reckons himſelf in the number, that naturally they ſerved (not διακονοῦσι, but δουλευον, were abſolute ſlaves to) divers luſts and pleaſures, Tit. iii. 3. The whole verſe is very remarkable, and nothing can be more appoſite to Aſpaſio's purpoſe. It ſhews us, what they were by nature, who through grace became living images of the bleſſed GOD.

This mortifying doctine is often acknowledged by our church. Thus begun one of her public ſupplications; Almighty GOD, who alone canſt order the unruly wills and affections of ſinful man. It ſeems, we cannot determine our own wills, nor regulate our own affections. What is this but bondage?

‡ Jer. v. 4. 5. ‖ Iſ. xvii. 13.

* ——Inordinate deſires
And upſtart paſſions catch the government
From reaſon, and to ſervitude reduce Man, till then free. MILT.

† Iſ. x. 14. ‡ Job xxi. 14.

‖ The wings of a fly are ſuppoſed to have the quickeſt motion of any material ſubſtance which lives. And if they make, as naturaliſts imagine, ſome hundreds of vibrations in a ſecond of time, I think, there can be no competition in the caſe.

§ Collect for Eaſter-day.

being

being ſtupidly inſenſible, is ready to "riſe up at the "voice of a bird *."

Aſp. The paſſion of fear is ſufficiently active, but deplorably miſapplied.——We fear the reproach of men. But are we alarmed at the view of that everlaſting ſhame, which the LORD, the righteous Judge, ſhall pour upon the ungodly? We ſhudder at the drawn dagger, and ſtand appalled at the headlong precipice. But how often have we defied the ſword of almighty vengeance, and ſported upon the brink of irretrievable perdition?

Sin is the moſt pernicious of all evils. Sin violates the divine command, and provokes the divine MAJESTY. Sin offers deſpite to the bleſſed SPIRIT, and tramples upon the blood of JESUS. For ſin, the tranſgreſſor is baniſhed from the bliſsful preſence of GOD, and doomed to dwell with inextinguiſhable burnings. Do we dread this grand deſtroyer of our happineſs? dread it more than any calamities, more than all plagues?—Take one of thoſe fine may-dukes, which glow with ſo beautiful a ſcarlet on yonder eſpalier. Offer it to the blackbird, that ſerenades us from the neighbouring elm. The creature, though fond of the dainty, will fly from your hand, as haſtily as from a levelled fowling-piece. He ſuſpects a deſign upon his liberty; and therefore will endure any extremity, will even ſtarve to death, rather than taſte the moſt tempting delicacy in ſuch hazardous circumſtances.——Are we equally fearful of an infinitely-greater danger? Do we fly, with equal ſolicitude †, from the deluſive but deſtructive wiles of ſin? Alas! do not we too often ſwallow the bait, even when we plainly diſcover the fatal hook? Do we not ſnatch the forbidden fruit, though conſcience remonſtrates, though GOD prohibits, though death eternal threatens?

Ther. Conſcience then, according to your own account, has eſcaped the general ſhipwreck. Conſcience is GOD's vicegerent in the ſoul, and executes her office faithfully. Even the Gentiles ſhew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conſcience alſo bearing witneſs, and their thoughts the mean while accuſing, or elſe excuſing one another ‡.

Aſp. If there be any remains of the divine image, perhaps, they are to be found in the conſcience. But even this is not exempt from the common ruin.—Conſider its light. It is like a dim taper, feebly glimmering, and ſerving only to make the darkneſs viſible. Or, if it diſcovers any thing, it is an obſcure ſomething, we know not what: which, inſtead of informing, fantalizes us, and inſtead of guiding, bewilders us. As falſe and deluſory lights on the ſhore, put a cheat upon the mariner, and lead him on to ruin ‖.——Conſider its operations. It is either dumb or dead, or both. Dumb; or elſe how vehemently would it upbraid us, for our ſhocking ingratitude to the ſupreme omnipotent BENEFACTOR? How loudly would it inveigh againſt our ſtupid neglect of ſpiritual intereſts, and eternal ages? Dead; otherwiſe how keenly would it ſmart, when gaſhed with wounds,—numerous, as our repeated violations of the divine law,—deep, as the horrid aggravations of our various iniquities?

Ther. Do you call this an anſwer to my objection, Aſpaſio? If it be an anſwer, it reſembles, in point of ſatisfactory evidence, the light which you aſcribe unto the conſcience.

Aſp. The Gentiles, you allege, ſhew the work, but not the love of the law, written on their hearts. Some leading notices of right and wrong they have; ſome ſpeculative ſtrictures of good and evil; but without a real abhorrence of the one, or a cordial delight in the other: which, far from ennobling their nature, far from vindicating their practice, argues the exceeding depravity of the former, and renders the latter abſolutely without excuſe.

No; you ſay, conſcience excuſes the Heathens. Rather, their conſcience bears witneſs to the equity of the law, while their thoughts make ſome weak apology * for the tenor of their conduct. This is far from acquitting, far from juſtifying them.——Beſides, theſe weak attempts to excuſe, are always founded on ignorance. Did they know themſelves, their duty, or their GOD, conſcience would, without the leaſt heſitation, bring in her verdict, Guilty.——The apoſtle aſſures us, that, till faith, which his a divine principle, takes place in our breaſts, both the mind and conſcience are defiled †: here, and elſewhere, very plainly intimating, that the conſcience is evil, and ever will be evil, till it is ſprinkled with the blood of CHRIST ‡.

It accuſes ſome, I acknowledge; and it ought to accuſe, yea, to condemn all. But even here it evidences itſelf to be corrupt. For its accuſations are ſometimes erroneous ‖, and no better than falſe witneſs; ſometimes partial §, and ſuborned by appetite; and very, very often ineffectual.——Nay, when they do take effect, they produce no fruit that is truly good. They work not a genuine humiliation, or an unfeigned repentance; but either a ſlaviſh dread of GOD, as a ſevere judge; or hatred of him, as an inexorable enemy.

Ther. Hatred of GOD—Aſtoniſhing impiety! Is it poſſible for the human heart to admit ſuch enormous, almoſt incredible wickedneſs?

Aſp. You may well be aſtoniſhed, Theron; and GOD may juſtly demand; What iniquity have my people found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity ¶? "I created you out of nothing, "and endowed you with an immortal ſoul. As a fa"ther, I have provided for you. As a nurſe, I have "cheriſhed you.——I have conſigned over to your poſ"ſeſſion the earth, and the fulneſs thereof. All my

* Eccl. xii. 4.

† The inſtigating admonition, tranſmitted to Brentius by an anonymous letter, when the Papiſts had formed a plot againſt his life, ſhould be the rule of our conduct on ſuch an occaſion; Fuge! fuge! cito—citius—citiſſime!

‡ Rom. ii. 15. Methinks, I would not tranſlate the word μεταξυ, the mean while, but alternately or interchangeably accuſing or excuſing; ſometimes one, ſometimes the other; in conformity to the different circumſtances of their temper and behaviour.

‖ This ſeems to have been the caſe with the bulk of the Heathen world.—Conſcience arraigned, and found them guilty. This put them upon practiſing their abominable, ſometimes their inhuman idolatries.—Nay, this induced them to give the moſt ſcandalous and impious miſrepreſentations of the DEITY. That they might ſheath the ſting of conſcience, and find ſome ſalve for their own iniquities, they made even the objects of their worſhip, the patrons and the precedents of their favourite vices.

* The word is απολογουμενων, not επιμαρτυρουντων, not συναισθανομενων.

† Tit. i. 15. ‡ Heb. x. 22.

‖ Erroneous—What elſe was that grand article in the accuſations of conſcience, mentioned, with ſuch particular diſtinction, by Virgil?

——Phlegyaſque miſerrimus omnes
Admonet, et magna teſtatur voce per umbras,
Diſcite juſtitiam moniti, et non temnere divos.

For men to deſpiſe ſuch dunghill, worſe than dunghill deities, had been their virtue if done, and was their duty to do.—What elſe was that voice of conſcience, mentioned by our LORD, John xvi. 2. or that confeſſed by the apoſtle, Acts xxvi. 9.

† Partial—Otherwiſe, how could the moſt celebrated among the ancient heroes applaud and practiſe that execrable, unnatural crime, ſelf-murder? How could their firſt-rate hiſtorians extol and almoſt conſecrate that diabolical principle of action, pride? And how could their ableſt teachers of morality, not only tolerate, but eſtabliſh the error, by neglecting to find ſo much as a name for that amiable virtue, humility?

¶ Jer. ii. 5.

" creatures

"creatures do you ſervice, and even my angels miniſter "unto your good.——Do you deſire greater demonſtra- "tions of my love? I have given what was dearer to me "than all angels, than all worlds. I have given my SON "from my boſom, to die in your ſtead.——Would you "have farther evidences of my tender, my diſtinguiſhed "regard? Behold! I touch the mountains, and they "ſmoke: I look upon the earth, and it trembles: I caſt "even the princes of heaven, when they break my law, "into chains of darkneſs. But to you, O men, I con- "deſcend to act as a ſupplicant. Though highly in- "jured, and horribly affronted, I beſeech you, again and "again I beſeech you to be reconciled."

To hate* ſuch a GOD, is indeed the moſt deteſtable impiety. Yet man, fooliſh man, practiſes this impiety, whenever, for the ſake of a vile luſt, an ignoble pleaſure, or an unruly paſſion, he tranſgreſſes the command of his CREATOR.

Shall I exemplify the doctrine, in another of the affections?

Ther. In truth, Aſpaſio, I begin to be ſick of the ſubject. If human nature is ſo ulcerated, the leſs you touch it the better.——However, let us not quite omit the iraſcible appetite.

Aſp. Of this we have already taken a ſide-view; if you chuſe to ſee it in fuller proportion, make your obſervation on Fervidus.—Fervidus comes home in a rage. His cheeks are pale, and his lips quiver, with exceſs of paſſion. Though he can hardly ſpeak, he vows revenge, and utters imprecations.——What is the cauſe of all this wondrous ferment? A neighbour, it ſeems, has dropt ſome reflecting hint, or a ſervant has blundered in ſome trifling meſſage. Such uſage, Fervidus ſays, is intolerable; and ſuch negligence unpardonable.——This ſame Fervidus has offered numberleſs affronts to his MAKER; he has moſt ſcandalouſly neglected the will of his almighty LORD; yet feels no indignation againſt himſelf.—He is all fury, when his own credit is touched. But when the intereſt of CHRIST is wounded, he can ſit unconcerned, or paſs it off with a laugh.——Anger, I acknowledge, is ſometimes becoming and uſeful. But is this its right temperature? this its proper application?

Ther. This is the practice only of ſome few turbulent ſpirits. To ſaddle their qualities upon every perſon, is a procedure juſt as equitable, as the madman's † calculation was reaſonable, who took an account of every ſhip which entered the harbour, and ſet it down for his own.

Aſp. The latter part of my charge, I fear, is applicable to more than a few.——However, let us conſider the moſt calm and ſedate minds. How are they affected under injuries? Do they never aggravate failings into crimes? Do they find it eaſy to abſtain from every emotion of ill-will! eaſy to love their enemies, and do good to thoſe who hate them? Theſe godlike tempers, if our nature was not degenerated, would be the ſpontaneous produce of the ſoul. But now, alas! they are not raiſed, without much difficulty; ſeldom come to any conſiderable degree of eminence; never arrive at a ſtate of true perfection. An undoubted proof, that they are exotics, not natives of the ſoil.

Now we are ſpeaking of plants, caſt your eye upon the kitchen-garden. Many of thoſe herbs will perfume the hard hand which cruſhes them, and embalm the rude foot which tramples on them. Such was the benign conduct of our LORD. He always overcame evil with good. When his diſciples diſregarded him in his bitter agony, he made the kindeſt excuſe for their ungrateful ſtupidity *. When his enemies, with unparalleled barbarity, ſpilt his very blood; he pleaded their ignorance, as an extenuation of their guilt †.——Is the ſame ſpirit in us, which was alſo in our divine MASTER? Then are our paſſions rightly poiſed, and duly tempered. But if reſentment kindles, and animoſity rankles in our hearts; this is an infallible ſign, that we ſwerve from our SAVIOUR's pattern; conſequently, are fallen from our primitive rectitude.

Ther. What ſay you of the fancy? This ſure, if no other, retains the primitive rectitude. What pictures does ſhe form, and what excurſions does ſhe make! She can dive to the bottom of the ocean, can ſoar to the height of the ſtars, and walk upon the boundaries of creation.

Aſp. That the fancy is lively and excurſive, I readily grant. It can out-travel the poſt, or outfly the eagle. But if it travel, only to pick ſhells; or fly abroad, to bring home miſchief; then, I apprehend, though you ſhould admire the faculty, you will hardly be in raptures with its agency.——This is the real truth. Our fancy, till divine grace regulate and exalt its operations, is generally employed in picking painted ſhells, or culling venomous herbs: weaving (as the prophet very elegantly, and no leſs exactly deſcribes the caſe) the ſpider's web, or hatching cockatrice-eggs ‡: buſied in the moſt abſurd impertinencies; or acting in ſpeculation the vileſt iniquities. That which ſhould be a garden incloſed, a fountain ſealed ‖, for the PRINCE of peace, is the thoroughfare of vanity.——And even when we are renewed from above, O! how neceſſary is it to keep an inceſſant watch, and exerciſe a ſtrict diſcipline, over this volatile, variable, treacherous vagrant!

The memory, as well as the fancy, is impaired; or, if not impaired, is debauched. Why elſe does it ſo firmly retain the impreſſions of an injury, but ſo eaſily let ſlip the remembrance of a benefit? Any idle fopperies, which ſooth our vanity, and increaſe our corruption, cleave to the thoughts, as the vexatious bur to our cloaths. While the noble truths of the goſpel, and the rich mercies of a gracious GOD, ſlide away from the mind, and leave no laſting trace behind them. This double perverſeneſs is very emphatically and too truly repreſented by Jeremiah; Can a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire? Yet my people have forgotten me, days without number §.—If we hear a looſe hint, or read an immodeſt expreſſion, they are almoſt ſure to faſten themſelves on our memory. If ſhaken off, they follow us with a troubleſome importunity. If excluded, as unwelcome viſitants, they force themſelves, again and again, upon our imagination. They dog us to the cloſet; they haunt our moſt retired hours; and too often diſturb our very devotions.—Tell me now, can that faculty be upright and uncorrupted, which is a perforated ſieve, to tranſmit the beneficial; but a thirſty ſponge, to imbibe the pernicious ¶?

Ther. Well, my friend, whatever guilt I or others have contracted, flattery, I dare be poſitive, is none of yours. Human nature has received no heightening or adulatory touches from your pencil. You have pourtrayed her fooliſh, and beaſtly, and every thing bad but deviliſh.

* Hatred of GOD is ſo ſhocking an expreſſion, that one would almoſt wiſh never to hear or read it. But it occurs in our unerring book; is too often exemplified in common life; and is engraven by corrupt nature on every human heart. See Rom. i. 30. Exod. xx. 5. John xv. 25. Rom. viii. 7.

† Thraſylus, an Athenian.

* Matth. xxvi. 41. † Luke xxiii. 34.

‡ If. lix. 5. ‖ Cant. iv. 12. § Jer. ii. 32.

¶ This, I think, ſuggeſts an unanſwerable confutation of that ſpecious argument, frequently uſed in behalf of ſome faſhionable but diſſolute diverſions. "They are interſperſed," ſay their admirers, "with ſentiments of virtue, and maxims "of morality."—Should we admit the truth of this plea; yet the depraved diſpoſition of mankind is pretty ſure to drop the morality, and carry away the ribaldry.

Aſp.

Asp. And this, even this abomination I must not secrete, I dare not except.—Envy is a devilish disposition. It subsists no where, but in damned spirits, and fallen souls. Yet, infernal as it is, it has been found in persons of the most exalted character. The magnanimous Joshua felt its cancrous tooth *. The disciples of the blessed JESUS were soured with its malignant leaven †. An apostle declares, that the spirit which dwelleth in us lusteth to envy ‡; is impetuously prone to that detestable temper.

Lying is confessedly a diabolical practice; yet how unaccountably forward are our children to utter falsehood? As soon as they are born, they go astray; and as soon as they speak, they speak lies.——I said unaccountably. But I recall the expression. The cause is evident. They have lost the image of the GOD of truth; and are become like that apostate spirit, who is a liar, and the father of it ‖.

What think you of malice, of hate, and revenge? Are they not each a species of murder, and the seed of the old serpent? Unless, therefore, we are entirely free from all these hellish emotions, we must, we must acknowledge, that the prince of this world § has his party within us. May the almighty hand of our GOD extirpate and subdue it, day by day!

You tell me, I am no flatterer.—Should a person who professes himself the friend of his fellow-creatures, sooth them into a false peace? should he bolster them up in a groundless conceit of their excellency, when they really are no better than "an unclean thing?"—Shall the surgeon assure his patient, "All is well;" even when the mortification has taken place, and the gangrene is spreading? This were to refine the first out of all benevolence, and to flatter the last into his grave.

A disputant of less complaisance than my Theron, would probably ask, with a contemptuous sneer, "Have you then been drawing your own picture?"—To whom I would reply, with confusion and sorrow, "I have:" alledging this only, to moderate my confusion, that I am daily seeking, by prayer and watchfulness, more and more to put off this old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts ¶. And, to alleviate my sorrow, I am endeavouring continually to remember, that, however unworthy I am, however vile I may have been, my adored REDEEMER's righteousness is perfect; and in this righteousness every believer is to make his boast.

Ther. So then man is blind in his understanding; perverse in his will; disorderly in his affections; influenced by dispositions, which are partly brutal, and partly diabolical.——I have often heard you extol, in terms of high admiration, the virtue of humility. You have lavished all the riches of eloquence, when haranguing on poverty of spirit. If such be the condition of mankind, they have infinite cause to be poor in spirit. They must, therefore, have one excellency left; and, according to your own account, a very distinguishing one.

Asp. Scarce any thing displays, in a more glaring light, the extreme depravity of man, than his strong propensity to pride, notwithstanding so much vileness, and so many deformities.——Should the noisome leper admire the beauty of his complexion, or the impotent paralytic glory in the strength of his sinews; would they not be mistaken, even to a degree of sottishness and frenzy? Yet for man, fallen man, who has lost his original righteousness, which was the true ornament of his nature; who is become subject to base and sordid lusts, or, as the apostle speaks, is earthly and sensual,—for him to be proud, is still more absurdly wicked. And since this is the case, I cannot acquit him from the last and heaviest article of the sacred writer's charge; I have a fresh and more convincing proof, that we do him no wrong, when we call his nature, his disposition, his wisdom—devilish *.

Ther. Why do you reckon pride an universally-prevailing corruption? I see no ground for such a dishonourable suspicion. I hope, I myself am an instance to the contrary. To unguarded sallies of passion, to several other faults, I confess myself subject; but cannot think, that I am proud.

Asp. Ah! Theron, if you was not proud, you would not be passionate. Unreasonable anger always proceeds from an overweening opinion of our own worth.——One who, besides his acquired knowledge of human nature, had the supernatural gift of discerning spirits, is observed to join humility and meekness †: intimating, that they are amiable twins; and where one exists, the other cannot be absent.——Always consistent with himself, he links together the opposite vices, heady and high-minded ‡: not obscurely hinting, that those who are easily provoked, are certainly proud.——Shall I add, without offence? If we fancy our minds to be clear from the weeds of vanity, and our thoughts free from the workings of self-admiration; it is a most pregnant symptom, that we are over-run with the former, abandoned to the latter, and blinded by both.

Pride was the first sin, that found entrance into our nature; and it is, perhaps, the last that will be expelled.—What are all our afflictions, but a remedy provided for this inveterate disease? intended to hide pride ‖ from man. What is the institution of the gospel, but a battery erected against this strong-hold of Satan? ordained to cast down every high imagination §.—Though that remedy is often applied, though this battery is continually playing; yet the peccant humour is not entirely purged off, nor the elatement of spirit totally subdued, till mortality is swallowed up of life.

Pride is the sin which most easily besets us. Who can say, I have made my heart clean ¶ from this iniquity? It defiles our duties, and intermingles itself with our very virtues. It starts up, I know not how, in our most solemn hours, and our most sacred employs.—The good Hezekiah, whose prayers were more powerful than all the forces of Sennacherib, was not proof against the wiles of this subtil sorceress +. Even the great apostle, who had been caught up into the third heavens, was in danger of being puffed up with pride: in such great danger, that it was necessary to put a lancet into the gathering tumour; or, as he himself expresses it, to fix a thorn in his flesh ++ and permit the messenger of Satan to buffet him.

How pathetically is this corruption lamented, and how truly described by "a sweet singer of our Israel!"

But pride, that busy sin,
Spoils all that I perform.
Curs'd pride! that creeps securely in,
And swells a haughty worm.

Thy glories I abate,
Or praise thee with design;
Part of thy favours I forget,
Or think the merit mine.

The very songs I frame,
Are faithless to thy cause;
And steal the honours of thy name,
To build their own applause ==.

Ther. Now, I presume, you have given the last touches to your distorted portrait.

* Numb. xi. 29. † Matth. xx. 24.
‡ Jam. iv. 5. ‖ John viii. 44.
§ John viii. 44. ¶ Eph. iv. 22.

* Jam. iii. 15. † Eph. iv. 2. ‡ 2 Tim. iii. 4.
‖ Job xxxiii. 17. § 2 Cor. x. 4. 5. ¶ Prov. xx. 9.
+ 2 Chron. xxxii. 25. ++ 2 Cor. xii. 7.

Asp. There are other disagreeable and shocking features. But those I shall cast into shades, or hide under a veil. One particular you must allow me to add, which, like a sullen air in the countenance, throws aggravated horror over the whole. I mean, an inclination to be fond of our slavery.

In other instances, the captive exile hasteth to be loosed *. But here we prefer bondage to freedom, and are loath to leave our prison. Of this, our backwardness to self-examination, is both a consequence and a proof. Self-examination, under the agency of the SPIRIT, would open a window in our dungeon; would shew us our wretched condition, and teach us to sigh for deliverance. ——Why have we such a dislike of reproof? Because we hug our chains, and chuse darkness rather than light. Reproof is more grating than the harshest discord, tho' it tends to dissolve the inchantment, and rescue us from the tyranny of sin. While flattery, which abets the delusion, and strengthens the spell, is music to our ears.—Is not our reason, which should arraign and condemn every irregularity, forward to invent excuses, and to spare the favourite folly? Reason, which should unsheath the dagger, superinduces the mask; and, instead of striking at the heart of our vices, screens them under the cover of some plausible names. A wicked habit is called a human infirmity; insnaring diversions pass for innocent amusements; a revengeful disposition is termed spirit, gallantry, and honour. Thus our reason (if, when so egregiously perverted, it deserves the name) is ingenious to obstruct our recovery; and rivets on the shackles which our passions have formed †.

This the eternal WISDOM foresaw, and therefore uttered that tender expostulation; How long ye simple ones will ye love simplicity, and scorners delight in their scorning, and fools hate knowledge? Even the inestimably-precious knowledge of an all-atoning and completely-justifying SAVIOUR; who preaches, who has purchased, and who works deliverance,—preaches in his word, has purchased by his blood, and works by his SPIRIT, deliverance for the captives,—the wretched captives of ignorance, sin, and death.

This I take to be the most flagrant and deplorable effect of human depravity,—our aversion to the doctrine, the privileges, the grace of the gospel. Beware, dear Theron, lest you prove my point by—shall I speak it? would you suspect it?—your own practice. Zealous as I am for my tenets, I should be sorry, extremely sorry, to have such a demonstration of their truth.

Ther. You are highly obliging, Aspasio, to single me out for your evidence. Yet why should the honour be appropriated to myself? It belongs, upon the foot of the preceding calculation, not to your friend only, but to the whole species.——If you was aiming at none but the licentious and abandoned, you would have none to oppose you, but persons of that character. Your arrows of satire would then be rightly levelled, and might be serviceable to mankind. Whereas to put all in the black list, to mark all with the villain's brand; this can never be Christian charity, this is unsufferable censoriousness.

Asp. Let me beseech you, Theron, not to misapprehend my design. I speak not as a malevolent satirist, but would imitate the faithful physician. I am opening the sore, that it may admit the healing balm: and should I perform the operation with an invenomed instrument? My soul abhors the thought.—I must entreat you likewise to remember the distinction between a state of nature and a state of grace. We are all naturally evil. Such we should for ever continue, did not a supernatural power intervene; making some to differ, both from their original selves, and from the generality of their neighbours.——Are they refined in their temper, and reformed in their life? I grant it. But then it is the influence of the sanctifying SPIRIT, which purges away their dross, yet not without leaving some alloy.

Ther. Here, Aspasio, you certainly strain the bow, till it breaks. Since scripture itself celebrates some persons as absolutely perfect.——What says Moses, the inspired historian? Noah was perfect in his generation *.——What says the GOD of Moses, who can neither deceive nor be deceived? Job was a perfect man and an upright †. Consequently, their nature must be entirely cleansed from this hereditary defilement; and their character confutes your derogatory representations of mankind.

Asp. Those eminent saints were perfect; that is, they were sanctified throughout; sanctified in all their faculties; no one grace of religion was lacking. As in the new-born infant, there is a human creature complete; no constituent part of the vital frame is wanting; though each is tender, all are very feeble, and none arrived at the full size.

They were upright. This word seems to be explanatory of the preceding; and signifies an unfeigned desire, joined with a hearty endeavour, to obey the whole will of GOD; excluding, not all defect, but all reigning hypocrisy, and wilful remissness.——The interpretation, thus limited, is of a piece with their conduct. If stretched to a higher pitch, it is evidently inconsistent with the narrative of their lives.

Pray, what was your motive for decorating the silvan retirement (which sheltered us yesterday) with the statue of Elijah?

Ther. Because I thought, his solitary life, and gloomy temper, suited that sequestered bower: because the memorable adventure, there represented, is, with me, a favourite portion of sacred history.

Are we pleased with spirited and delicate raillery? Nothing exceeds his pungent sarcasm on the stupid and despicable dupes of idolatry. Every sentence is keen as a razor, and pointed as a dagger, yet wears the appearance of the most courtly complaisance. We may truly say, in the beautiful language of the psalmist, His words are smoother than oil, and yet be they very swords ‡.

Are we delighted with instances of magnanimity? A single prophet, unsupported by any human aid, maintains the cause of truth, against the king, his grandees, and hundreds of the apostate priests. He ventures to stake all his credit, to risk his very life, and (what was dearer to him than personal credit, or bodily life) the honour of the true GOD, and interests of his holy religion,—to risk all on the immediate interposition of a most surprising miracle.

Do we admire the triumphs of faith? His faith was, in a manner, omnipotent. He prays, and torrents of fire descend from the sky, to devour his adversaries ||.—He prays again, and the sluices of heaven are shut: there is neither dew nor rain for several years §.——A third time he prays, and the windows from on high

* If. li. 14.

† Perhaps, this is what our LORD means, when, developing the human heart, and discovering its latent enormities, he closes the dark account with ἀφροσυνη, foolishness: implying that stupidity, which has no sense of its misery; that perverseness, which has no inclination for a recovery: both which render all the other evils far more inveterate, Mark vii. 22.

* Gen. vi. 9. † Job i. 1.

‡ 1 Kings xviii. 27. And it came to pass at noon, that Elijah mocked them, and said, Cry aloud; for he is a God. Either he is talking, or he is pursuing, or he is in a journey, or peradventure he sleepeth, and must be awaked.

|| 2 Kings i. 10. § 1 Kings xvii. 1.

are

are opened; abundance of ſhowers water the earth *.—On another occaſion he preſents his ſupplications, and GOD makes his feet like harts feet, inſomuch that an aged prophet outruns the royal chariot †.

Aſp. I commend your taſte, Theron; and am particularly pleaſed with the reaſons of your choice.—But do not you remember, that even the wonder-working Tiſhbite failed in his reſignation, and failed in his faith? Eminent as he was for mortification, he gave way to unreaſonable diſcontent; and, though a champion for the living GOD, he yielded to unbelieving fear ‡.—The man Moſes was very meek, above all the men which were upon the face of the earth ‖: yet he, even he was provoked in his ſpirit, and ſpake unadvitedly with his lips §.—Was not Peter the hero among our LORD's followers? Yet he trembles, more than trembles, at the ſhaking of a leaf; he denies his divine MASTER, ſcared by the voice of a woman.

Look where-ever we will, we find proofs of human depravity; reigning uncontrolled in ſome, making frequent inſurrection in all. It is written in our own hearts, by the pen of experience; the finger of obſervation points it out, in the practice of others;—even in the practice of thoſe who have ſeen ſaints of the firſt rank, and of the higheſt endowments. Yet they were defective;—defective too, in that very quality, which was their diſtinguiſhing gift, in which they particularly excelled.

Ther. While we are talking, the day has inſenſibly ſtole itſelf away, and left us ſurrounded with twilight: which is a ſort of luſtre intermingled with darkneſs; no part wholly lucid; no part wholly obſcure.——An emblem, according to your repreſentation, of the renewed ſoul, and its imperfect holineſs.

Aſp. A very juſt one.—Even where the goſpel ſhines, ſtill there is an incurrent gloom of corruption. Ignorance mixes itſelf with our knowledge. Unbelief cleaves to our faith. Nor is our purity free from all contamination.——The prophet Zechariah, fortelling the eſtabliſhment of the goſpel-kingdom, and deſcribing the ſtate of its ſpiritual ſubjects, ſays, It ſhall come to paſs in that day, that the light ſhall not be clear nor dark ¶. This, as to its literal ſenſe, we now ſee exemplified in the circumambient atmoſphere. With regard to its ſpiritual meaning, every true believer feels it accompliſhed in his own breaſt.

Ther. While you are ſo vehement in decrying all human attainments, conſider, Aſpaſio, whether you do not check and diſpirit us in the purſuit of exalted virtue.

Aſp. I ſuppoſe, you never expected to be ſuch an adept in geometry as Archimedes, nor ſo profound an aſtronomer as Newton; yet this did not check your application to the ſtudy of mathematics, or the contemplation of the heavens.——Your brother the merchant, I preſume, has no proſpect of amaſſing the wealth of a Craſus, or the immenſe treaſures of a Kouli-Kan; yet this does not diſpirit him in proſecuting the buſineſs, which brings him both opulence and honour.

However, Theron, ſo long as you deny the imputation of CHRIST's righteouſneſs, I muſt acknowledge, you act a conſiſtent part, in being zealous for the perfection of perſonal obedience. You ought either to acquire the one, or to accept the other. Therefore I ſhall produce no more arguments for your diſcouragement; but ſhall compriſe the whole of my anſwer, in the motto to an Iriſh nobleman's arms, TRY. Or, if this be too conciſe, I will ſubjoin, with a very little alteration, the words of a king; "When you have attained what you purſue, "bring me word again, that I may go and poſſeſs it alſo *."

Ther. According to your account, the moſt advanced and eſtabliſhed Chriſtians are but like a company of invalids. Does not this extremely derogate from the honour of our LORD, conſidered as the Phyſician of ſouls? It ſeems to make a mere nothing of ſanctification, and would ſwallow up CHRIST the King in CHRIST the Prieſt.

Aſp. Invalids they are †; and ſuch will continue, till they are diſmiſſed from this great infirmary, and admitted into that only, happy, bleſſed world; where the inhabitant ſhall no more ſay, I am either in ſoul or in body ſick ‡.

If the cure was never to be completed, this doubtleſs would be diſhonourable to our almighty PHYSICIAN. But the ſpiritual recovery, begun on earth, and advancing through time, will be perfected in heaven, and prolonged to eternity.——Does this make a mere nothing of ſanctification? No, but it makes room for a continual progreſs, and affords cauſe for continual humiliation. It reſerves a moſt exalted prerogative for the heavenly ſtate and beatific viſion; and perpetually reminds us of a moſt important truth, That our preſent bleſſedneſs conſiſts, not in being free from all ſin, but in having, no ſin imputed to us ‖.

This imperfection of our obedience, inſtead of confounding, maintains a proper diſtinction between CHRIST the King, and CHRIST the Prieſt. Whereas, if we were perfect in piety, the prieſtly office, with regard to us, would be ſuperſeded. What need of an interceſſor to recommend our prayers? what occaſion for an high prieſt to bear the iniquity of our holy things §? if ſome taint of the original leaven did not pollute our beſt ſervices?

Neither does this detract from the wiſdom, from the goodneſs, or from the power of CHRIST. It rather adminiſters to the advantageous diſplay of all theſe divine attributes.——Of his wiſdom, in conducting the affairs of his church with ſuch exact propriety, that the righteouſneſs of faith may have its due honour,

* Jam. v. 17. 18. † 1 Kings xvii. 46.

‡ Elias, or rather Elijah, was a man ſubject to like paſſions as we are, Jam. v. 17. Upon which paſſage, an eminent commentator makes the following remark: "This probably is ſaid, with re- "ſpect to his fear and diſcontent, manifeſted 1 Kings xix. 3. 4."—Ὁμοιοπαθὴς muſt, I think, imply a ſtate liable to the irregular workings of paſſion; not free from the ſinful infirmities of nature. Otherwiſe, it is an inſtance foreign to the purpoſe; does by no means anſwer the end deſigned; which is to encourage the heart, and ſtrengthen the faith, even of frail, corrupt offending creatures. See ver. 16.

‖ Numb. xii. 3. § Pſal. cvi. 33.

¶ Zech. xiv. 6. 1 Cor. xiii. 9. For we know in part. Perhaps this declaration of the apoſtle may be a key to the prophet's meaning. However, it is a ſufficient confirmation of Aſpaſio's ſentiment.

* Matth. ii. 8.

† Do not the beſt of men lament their ignorance of the divine perfections, their ſlowneſs of heart to believe the divine promiſes, and the languor of their gratitude for ineſtimable, for innumerable gifts of the divine goodneſs?—Do they not frequently feel deadneſs in their devotions, diſorder in their affections, and various, others relics of the original leaven!—Do they not often complain, in the language of the apoſtle, When I would do good, evil is preſent with me? and ſay, with the earlieſt Chriſtians, We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened: burdened, not ſo much with affliction; thoſe heroes in Chriſtianity had learned, to rejoice in tribulation: but burdened with a ſenſe of their ſpiritual infirmities, and with the workings of their inbred corruption; which, to a tender and lively believer, are the heavieſt of croſſes and the moſt galling of loads.——Nay, do not the heirs of glory waſh their very robes, even their faireſt deeds, and their brighteſt graces, in the blood of the LAMB? which, if they were free from ſpot, and void of impurity, need not be made white in this ſacred fountain. See 2 Cor. v. 4. Rev. vii. 14.

‡ Pſal. xxxii. 2. ‖ Iſ. xxxiii. 24.

§ Exod. xxviii. 38. Id eſt, expiare peccata, quibus ſanctiſſimæ cæteroquin actiones noſtræ inquinatæ ſunt. WATS. de Oecon.

nour,

hour, and the ſanctification of the SPIRIT its proper eſteem.——Of his goodneſs, in carrying on the work of grace, amidſt ſo much infirmity, and ſo many corruptions; and in crowning, which conſummate happineſs, ſuch frail undeſerving creatures.——Of his power, in extracting a variety of benefits even from——

Ther. Benefits, Aſpaſio!—Can any thing beneficial proceed from an evil, which, according to your own repreſentation, is ſo incorrigibly malignant?

Aſp. It will tend to make us lowly in our own eyes. When we remember, that by nature we are altogether become abominable; that the remains of natural depravity ſtill adhere to our minds; how muſt ſuch a view of ourſelves cover us with ſhame, and lay us low in abaſement! Leſs than the leaſt of all thy mercies *, will be the language of ſuch a one's very ſoul.

It will diſpoſe us to compaſſionate others. How can we take a brother by the throat, and require faultleſs perfection in his behaviour, when we ourſelves in many things offend, in all things fall ſhort? Every ſuch conſideration rebukes, what I may call ſpiritual unmercifulneſs; it pleads for tenderneſs and forbearance to our fellow-creatures; is a monitor within, and whiſpers that affecting remonſtrance, Oughteſt not thou to have compaſſion upon thy fellow ſervant, ſince thy almighty LORD hath ſuch renewed, ſuch unwearied pity on thee †?

It will teach us to admire the riches of grace. Shall fallen creatures, that are taken from the very dunghills of ſin, and reſcued from a hell of inward iniquity,—ſhall they, notwithſtanding their deplorable depravity, and innumerable deficiencies,—ſhall they be admitted into the boſom of eternal love? they be exalted to the thrones of glory, and numbered with the princes of heaven? This is grace, tranſcendently rich, and divinely free indeed!

Will it not reconcile us to the approach of death? This, methinks, like wormwood on the nipple, or gall in the cup, muſt tend to wean us from the world. How can we be enamoured with ſuch a land of darkneſs, and ſuch a vale of tears? Or why ſhould we covet, when Providence gives us the ſignal for our departure, to prolong our abode in theſe territories of diſorder?—Surely this muſt incline us to leave them, every day, more and more in our affections; and at laſt, to leave them, without any reluctance, by final diſſolution; leave them, for that better country, where our perſonal righteouſneſs will no longer be defective, like the waning moon; but ſhine forth with conſummate luſtre, like the meridian ſun, in the kingdom of our FATHER.

It will endear the bleſſed JESUS in every capacity; as the ſtings of the fiery flying ſerpents, and the dearth of the waſte howling wilderneſs, endeared to the Iſraelites both their miraculous antidote, and their bread from heaven.——They who believe this truth, muſt ſee their inexpreſſible and inceſſant need of CHRIST's Spirit. The proteſtation of Moſes, on a particular occaſion, will be the daily, the hourly breathing of their ſouls; Carry us not up hence, unleſs thy preſence, thy SPIRIT go with us ‡. For without this aid, we can diſcharge no duty aright, nor ſucceſsfully reſiſt any temptation.——They will be exceedingly cautious, not to grieve ‖ that ſacred gueſt, leſt he depart from them, and abandon them to the power of their lurking corruptions: knowing, that if he abandon them, when ſuch foes are within, and ſo many ſnares without, their caſe will be worſe than Samſon's, when his locks were ſhaven, and the Philiſtines all around him.

How highly will ſuch perſons value the blood of the covenant, and the interceſſion of their great HIGH PRIEST!—They will no more preſume to enter into the preſence of the moſt high GOD, without a fiducial reliance upon the atoning and interceding SAVIOUR; than the ſons of Jacob would have ventured to appear before the viceroy of Egypt, without the company of their younger brother *. In all, in all their intercourſe with heaven, the great PROPITIATION will be their plea, and the great ADVOCATE their confidence.——The impotent man waited at the pool of Bethesda, and the Syrian general dipped ſeven times in Jordan. Theſe perſons will not only wait, but live by the fountain opened for ſin and uncleanneſs †. They will waſh in the ſacred ſanctifying ſtream, not ſeven times only, but ſeventy times ſeven.

And when ſuch ſentiments poſſeſs the mind, how dear! O how dear and deſirable will our LORD's obedience be!—I called ſometime ago, our own works worm-eaten things; and muſt not theſe corruptions, if they remain ever ſo little in the heart, tarniſh our graces, and debaſe our duties? Muſt they not be depretiatory to all our accompliſhments; and too much like corroding vermin, in the ſubſtance of our timber, or at the core of our fruits?—Should we not then renounce, utterly renounce theſe tarniſhed, worm-eaten things? and rely, wholly rely, for everlaſting acceptance, on our divine HIGH PRIEST? who, in his mediatorial works, as well as in his wonderful perſon, is altogether light and perfection ‡; and neither in him, nor in them, is there any deficiency or any darkneſs at all.

Excuſe me, Theron; I fear, I have been preaching. The importance of the text muſt form my apology. It is an introduction, not to the records of hiſtory, or the tranſactions of philoſophy, but to the riches of CHRIST.

Ther. If my Aſpaſio has been preaching, I can aſſure him for his comfort, that his audience has been very attentive; and though the ſermon was ſomewhat copious, the hero neither ſlept not gaped.——However, I ſhould be glad to have the whole reviewed, and ſummed up; that, if it has been large as the pyramid, it may, like the pyramid, terminate in a point.

Aſp. This then is the ſtate of our nature.——The image of the CREATOR is loſt; blindneſs is in the underſtanding; diſorder in all the affections.——In the will, enmity againſt GOD, the ſovereign good; inability to all that is ſpiritual and heavenly; with a propenſity to whatever is ſordid and earthly.——The whole ſoul is deformed, diſtempered, rebellious.——And ſhall ſuch a creature lay claim to thoſe amiable and ſacred endowments, which may be a proper recommendation to infinite holineſs?——Is ſuch a creature qualified to perform thoſe righteous acts, which may approve themſelves to the demand of GOD's law, and to the inflexibility of his juſtice?

Should he conceive the vain hope, or make the vainer attempt, I would now addreſs him, as Jehoaſh formerly anſwered Amaziah.——Amaziah king of Judah, elated with the little victories he had obtained over the Edomites, began to fancy himſelf invincible. Prompted by this fooliſh imagination, he challenges Jehoaſh king of Iſrael, to meet him in a pitched battle; and

* Gen. xxxii. 10. † Matth. xviii. 33.

‡ Exod. xxxiii. 15. ‖ Eph. iv. 30.

* Gen. xliii. 5. † Zech. xiii. 1.

‡ Light and perfection—This is the meaning of that myſterious ornament, which in the grand officiating robes of the Jewiſh high prieſt, was annexed to the breaſt-plate, and ſtyled Urim and Thummim. Only the Hebrew words are in the plural number, and denote every degree of illumination, and all kinds of perfection.—Does not this very ſignificantly teach ſinners, whence to ſeek their wiſdom, and where to look for their perfection? There never was, in all ages, more than one Urim and Thummim; and only one perſon, in each generation, was appointed to wear it. And who is there, in all worlds, that can give us heavenly knowledge, but the SPIRIT of CHRIST? What is there, in ourſelves or all creatures, that can preſent us unblameable before GOD, but the obedience of CHRIST?

receives

receives this ironical apologue, by way of reply; —which for gallantry of ſpirit and delicacy of wit, for poignancy of ſatire and propriety of application, has ſeldom been equalled, perhaps never exceeded:— The thiſtle that was in Lebanon, ſent to the cedar that was in Lebanon, ſaying, Give thy daughter to my ſon to wife: and there paſſed by a wild beaſt that was in Lebanon, and trod down the thiſtle. What are we,—when we offer to eſtabliſh our own righteouſneſs, or preſume to juſtify ourſelves before the moſt high GOD,—but deſpicable thiſtles, that fancy themſelves ſtately cedars? And is not every temptation, is not each corruption, a wild beaſt of the deſert, which will trample on the impotent boaſter, and tread his haughty pretenſions in the duſt?

2 Kings xiv. 9.

DIALOGUE XIV.

ASPASIO was employed in preparing for his journey. Theron, free from buſineſs, and diſengaged from company, had the greateſt part of the day to himſelf. Which he ſpent, in reviewing the ſubſtance of their late conferences; not without intermingled aſpirations to GOD, for the guidance of his divine SPIRIT.

At evening, he went, like the patriarch of old, into the field to meditate *; amidſt the calm of nature, to meditate on the grace of the goſpel.——The ſky was peculiarly beautiful, and perfectly clear; only where the fine indigo received an agreeable heightening, by a few thin and ſcattered clouds; which imbibed the ſolar rays, and looked like penſile fleeces of pureſt wool.—All things appeared with ſo mild, ſo majeſtic, ſo charming an aſpect, that, intent as he was upon a different ſubject, he could not but indulge the following ſoliloquy.

"How delightful are the ſcenes of rural nature! eſpecially, to the philoſophic eye, and contemplative mind. —I cannot wonder that perſons in high life are ſo fond of retiring from a conſpicuous and exalted ſtation, to the covert of a ſhady grove, or the margin of a cooling ſtream; are ſo deſirous of quitting the ſmoky town, and noiſy ſtreet, in order to breathe purer air, and ſurvey the wonders of creation, in the ſilent, the ſerene, the peaceful villa.

"'Tis true, in the country, there are none of the modiſh, I had almoſt ſaid, meretricious ornaments of that falſe politeneſs, which refines people out of their veracity: but an eaſy ſimplicity of manners, with an unaffected ſincerity of mind.——Here the ſolemn farce of ceremony is ſeldom brought into play, and the pleaſing deluſions of compliment have no place. But the brow is the real index of the temper, and ſpeech the genuine interpreter of the heart.

"In the country, I acknowledge, we are ſeldom invited to ſee the mimic attempts of human art. But we, every where, behold the grand and maſterly exertions of divine power.—No theatre erects its narrow ſtage, ſurrounds it with puny rows of aſcending ſeats, or adorns it with a ſhifting ſeries of gorgeous ſcenery. But fields extend their ample area; at firſt, lightly clad with a ſcarf of ſpringing green; then, deeply planted with an arrangement of ſpindling ſtalks; as a few more weeks advance, covered with a profuſion of bearded or huſky grain; at laſt, richly laden with a harveſt of yellow plenty.

"Meadows diſcloſe their beautiful boſom; yield a ſoft and fertile lap for the luxuriant herbage; and ſuckle myriads of the faireſt, gayeſt flowers: which, without any vain oſtentation, or expenſive finery, outvie each other in all the elegance of dreſs.—— Groves of various leaf; arrayed in freſheſt verdure, and liberal of their reviving ſhade; riſe, in amiable, in noble proſpect, all around.——Droves of ſturdy oxen, ſtrong for labour, or fat for the ſhambles; "herds of ſleeky kine, with milk in their udders, and "violets in their noſtrils; flocks of well-fleeced ſheep, "with their ſnowy lambkins, friſking at their ſide; "theſe compoſe the living machinery.——Boundleſs "tracts of bending azure, varniſhed with inimitable de"licacy, and hung with ſtarry lamps, or irradiated with "ſolar luſtre, from the ſtately ceiling.——While the "early breezes, and the evening gales; charged with "no unwholeſome vapours, breeding no peſtilential "taint; but fanning the humid buds, and waving their "odoriferous wings; diſpenſe a thouſand ſweets, min"gled with the moſt ſovereign ſupports of health.—— "And is not this ſchool of induſtry, this magazine of "plenty, incomparably more delightful, as well as infinite"ly leſs dangerous, than thoſe gaudy temples of profuſe"neſs and debauchery, where ſin and ruin wear the "maſk of pleaſure? where Belial is daily or nightly "worſhipped with, what his votaries call, modiſh re"creation, and genteel amuſement?

"Here indeed is no tuneful voice, to melt in ſtrains "of amorous anguiſh, and tranſfuſe the ſickening fond"neſs to the hearer's breaſt. No ſkilful artiſt, to inform "the lute with muſical inchantment; to ſtrike infectious "melody from the viol; and ſooth away the reſolution "and activity of virtue, in wanton deſires, or voluptuous "indolence.——But the plains bleat; the mountains low; "and the hollow circling rocks echo with the univerſal "ſong. Every valley re-murmurs to the fall of ſilver "fountains, or the liquid lapſe of gurgling rills.—Birds, "muſicians ever beauteous, every gay, perched on a "thouſand boughs, play a thouſand ſprightly and harmonious airs.

"Charmed therefore with the fineſt views, lulled with "the ſofteſt ſounds, and treated with the richeſt odours, "what can be wanting to complete the delight? Here "is every entertainment for the eye; the moſt refined "gratifications for the ear; and a perpetual banquet for the "ſmell; without any inſidious decoy, for the integrity "of our conduct, or even for the purity of our fancy.

"O ye blooming walks, and flowery lawns, ſurrounded with dewy lanſcapes! how often have patriots and heroes laid aſide the burden of power, and ſtole away from the glare of grandeur, to enjoy themſelves * in your compoſed retreats!—Ye moſſy couches, and fragrant bowers, ſkirted with cooling caſcades! how many illuſtrious perſonages, after all their glorious toil for the public good, have ſought an honourable and welcome repoſe in your downy lap †!—Ye venerable oaks, and ſolemn groves;

* Gen. xxiv. 63.

* ——Mihi me reddentis agelli, ſays Horace of his little country-ſeat.

† Virgil was ſo ſmitten with the amiableneſs of theſe ſcenes, that he aſſigns them as an habitation for happy ſpirits, in the regions of Elyſium.

——Lucis habitamus opacis,
Riparumque toros, et prata recentia rivis Incolimus.

"woods, that whiſper to the quivering gale; clifts that "overhang the darkened flood; who can number the "ſages and ſaints, that have devoted the day to ſtudy, or "reſigned a vacant hour to healthy exerciſe, beneath "your ſilvan porticoes, and waving arches? that, far "from the dull impertinence of man, have liſtened to "the inſtructive voice of GOD; and contemplated the "works of his adorable hand, amidſt your moſs-grown "cells, and rocky ſhades.—How inelegant, or how in- "ſenſible is the mind, which has no awakened lively re-"liſh for theſe ſweet receſſes, and their exquiſite beau-"ties!"

But whither am I carried? Is not this rural enthuſiaſm? I find myſelf talking to trees; and forget the momentous queſtion, which waits for our deciſion. Here then let my rhapſody ceaſe, and my inquiry proceed.—Does it betray a want of true delicacy, to be inſenſible of nature's charms? My Aſpaſio thinks, it argues as wrong a taſte in practical divinity, not to acquieſce in the imputed righteouſneſs of JESUS CHRIST. To this doctrine I have been always extremely averſe. I ſet myſelf to oppoſe it with objections, drawn from the reaſon of things, and from various paſſages of ſcripture. To all which my friend replied. And though I was ſcarcely convinced, yet I was ſilenced by his anſwers.

I pleaded for the ſufficiency of our ſincere obedience; eſpecially, when accompanied with repentance, and recommended by the merits of CHRIST.——Neither was this attempt ſucceſsful. His arguments, ſomewhat like the flaming ſword, planted at the entrance of paradiſe, turned every way *, and precluded all acceſs to life on the foot of our own duty.

At length, Aſpaſio quitted the defenſive, and attacked me in his turn. He explained the precepts, and enforced the threatenings, of the divine law. So exact its tenor! that it demands a perfect and perſevering conformity to every injunction.—So extenſive its authority! that it reaches the inmoſt thoughts; and requires obedience, not barely in the actions of the life, but the very intentions of the heart.—So inexorable its ſeverity! that it condemns every the ſmalleſt offence, and curſes every the leaſt offender.

This remonſtrance had ſome of the terror, and almoſt all the effect, of a maſked battery. It was quite unexpected, and alarmed me conſiderably.—To puſh his advantage, he enlarged upon the infinite purity of GOD: A GOD glorious in holineſs; who cannot look upon evil, with any connivance, or without the utmoſt abhorrence; before whom the very heavens are unclean, and who will in no wiſe clear the guilty.

To complete his victory, he played off the doctrine of original guilt, and original depravity:—That, beſides the imputation of Adam's apoſtaſy, beſides the commiſſion of numberleſs iniquities, we were born in ſin;—are, by nature, enmity againſt GOD;—in all our faculties corrupt;—in every imagination evil;—and, even when renewed † by grace, are ſtill, ſtill tainted with ſome baſe remains of the old leproſy.

After all, he bid me conſider,—what fruits muſt ſpring from ſuch a nature?—how they muſt appear, when compared with ſuch a law?—what they muſt deſerve, when tried before ſuch a GOD?—Theſe, I muſt confeſs, are very weighty and ſtartling queries. If theſe repreſentations are true, the face of human affairs carries a moſt gloomy aſpect. Or rather, a moſt dreadful ſtorm is hanging over the children of men.—Aſpaſio urges me to fly, without any delay, to the covert of CHRIST's meritorious obedience. This, he ſays, was wrought out in my name, and in my ſtead; this will be admitted, both at the throne of grace, and the bar of judgment, as my juſtifying righteouſneſs.

This, he adds, opens a way, on GOD's part, for the largeſt emanations and moſt honourable exerciſe of mercy. On man's part, it founds a title to pardon, to life, and every ſpiritual bleſſing.——This doctrine, eſpecially in ſuch a connection, begins to put on a more recommending appearance. My prejudices are really wearing away. I am almoſt a convert.

Aſpaſio overheard the cloſe of theſe reflections. Unwilling to interrupt his friend in ſo ſerious an inquiry, and deſirous to obſerve the iſſue of ſo intereſting a debate, he had hitherto concealed himſelf. But thinking this a favourable minute, he ſtepped forward, and ſaid,——

Aſp. Almoſt! and why not altogether a convert? What ſhould hinder my dear Theron from ſubmitting to ſo rational a ſcheme, with the moſt entire acquieſcence? What ſhould hinder him from embracing ſo comfortable a doctrine with the utmoſt complacency? Why ſhould he not ſubſcribe, both with hand and heart, that divine decree? Their righteouſneſs is of me, ſaith the LORD *.

Ther. If, by this doctrine, the claims of the law are anſwered,—if the perfections of GOD are glorified,—if the intereſts of morality are ſecured,—I muſt acknowledge, it will be more worthy of acceptance, than I could once have imagined.

Aſp. And if all theſe points are not gained, gained too in the moſt eminent manner, I ſolemnly declare, that I will never plead for imputed righteouſneſs more.

But the claims of the law are all anſwered.—For there is nothing in its ſacred injunctions, which CHRIST did not perform; and nothing in its awful threatenings, which CHRIST did not ſuſtain. He fulfilled all its precepts, by an unſpotted purity of heart, and the moſt perfect integrity of life. He exhauſted its whole curſe, when he hung upon the croſs, abandoned by his FATHER, and a bleeding victim for the ſins of his people.—This obedience brings higher honour to the divine law, than it could have received from the uninterrupted duty of Adam, and all his poſterity, in all their generations.

The perfections of GOD, which were diſhonoured by our rebellion, are glorified.——He appears, by this method of juſtification, inconceivably rich in ſhewing mercy; yet ſteady, inflexibly ſteady, in executing vengeance. The ſceptre of grace, and the ſword of juſtice, have each its due exerciſe, each its full ſcope. The holineſs of the divine nature, and the dignity of the divine government, are not only maintained, but moſt magnificently diſplayed. Indeed, it is the peculiar excellence of this wonderful expedient, that it renders all the divine attributes ſupremely venerable, and ſupremely amiable.

Ther. But are intereſts of morality ſecured? This is what I am ſtrongly inclined to doubt. And, to ſay the truth, this is now my principal objection to your ſcheme.

Aſp. I ſhall never blame my friend, for being vigilant and jealous over the intereſts of morality. If our doctrine had a malignant aſpect on true morality, I would give my voice againſt it, and uſe all my endea-

* Gen. iii. 24.

† Even when renewed—For a diſplay of this important truth, and a remedy againſt this ſtubborn evil, let me refer the reader to a little treatiſe publiſhed by Dr Owen, and entitled, The nature, power, deceit, and prevalency of the remainders of indwelling ſin in believers.——The author's pen is indeed a diſſecting knife, goes deep into his ſubject, and lays open this plague of the heart. Like a workman that need not be aſhamed, he demonſtrates his point from the unerring word of GOD, and the acknowledged experience of Chriſtians. Like a compaſſionate as well as able phyſician, he all along preſcribes the proper antidote; nay, he ſhews how the poiſon may be ſo over-ruled by divine grace, and ſo managed by the watchful patient, as to become medicinal, ſalutary, and conducive to the moſt beneficial purpoſes.

* Iſ. liv. 17.

vours to suppress it.——But it is formed with every tendency to awaken the utmost dread of sin, and affect us with the warmest sense of our CREATOR's love. And is not that the strongest barrier against the incroachments of vice? Is not this the sweetest inducement to the practice of virtue?

I am glad to find, that a jealousy for the interests of morality, is the chief obstacle in the way of your assent; because, I am perswaded, it is much of the same nature with those forbidding and mistaken apprehensions, which our ancestors entertained, concerning the ocean. They looked upon it as an unsurmountable obstruction to universal society. Whereas it is, in fact, the very cement of society; the only means of accomplishing a general intercourse; and the great highway to all the nations of the earth. What is here affirmed, may, on some future occasion, be proved.——At present, let me desire you to imagine, rather, may the blessed SPIRIT enable you to believe, that your sins are expiated, through the death of JESUS CHRIST: That a righteousness is given you, by virtue of which, you may have free and welcome access to GOD; the merit of which you may plead, for obtaining all the blessings of time and eternity.—Then let me ask, Will this alienate your affections from your Almighty BENEFACTOR? Will this irritate evil concupiscence, or send you to carnal gratifications in quest of happiness? Quite the reverse. When this faith is wrought in your heart, nothing will be so powerful to produce holy love, and willing obedience; to exalt your desires, and enable you to overcome the world.

What says the apostle? I through the law am dead to the law *. Being made to understand its spirituality and perfection, I have no longer any hope of justification from my own conformity to its precepts.——Did this prompt him, did this embolden him, to neglect or violate his duty? Hear the sacred writer's own declaration. I am released from the rigour and bondage of the law; I am directed to CHRIST for righteousness and salvation; that I may live unto GOD: that my whole life may be devoted to HIS honour, who has brought me into a state so delightful, into a liberty so glorious.

Ther. This liberty, I am afraid, will be of very little service to the licentious and gay world.

Asp. I shall be in no pain even for the gay world, if once they cordially receive this grace, and are vitally influenced by this doctrine: which, far from dissolving the least obligation to obedience, or weakening any one principle of piety, adds to every other motive, the endearing engagements of gratitude, and the winning perswasives of love.

Nay, I verily believe, that multitudes in the gay and licentious world, are held fast in the fatal snare, by their ignorance of this sweet, alluring, consolatory truth. They find themselves deeply obnoxious to divine justice, and feel themselves strongly bound with the chains of sensuality. They think, it is impossible to clear the enormous score of their guilt; impossible to deliver themselves from the confirmed dominion of sin. Therefore, like desperate debtors, they stifle every serious thought; lest a consciousness of their long arrears, and a prospect of the dreadful reckoning, should torment them before the time †.

But if they were informed, that the infinitely-merciful SON of GOD has undertaken to redeem such undone and helpless sinners;—that he has thoroughly expiated the most horrid transgressions, and procured even for ungodly wretches, all the needful supplies of strengthening grace;—that, instead of being prohibited, they are invited to partake, freely to partake, of these unspeakable blessings;—were they acquainted with these glad tidings of the gospel, surely they would burst their chains, and spring to liberty. These truths, if once revealed in their hearts, would, of all considerations, be most effectual to make them free *.

What shall I say more, to obtain my Theron's approbation? Shall I point out and plead the most illustrious precedents?—GOD the FATHER is well pleased with this righteousness of our REDEEMER. He expresses his complacency by the most emphatical words: Behold my servant, whom I uphold; mine elect, in whom my soul delighteth †. In CHRIST and his righteousness, GOD is not only pleased but delighted: his very soul, every perfection of the GODHEAD, with ineffable satisfaction, rests and acquiesces in them.——I said ineffable; for he has declared this, in a manner superior to all the energy of language, by raising our crucified SURETY from the dead, by exalting him to the heaven of heavens, and placing him at his own right hand in glory.

Our LORD JESUS CHRIST is well pleased. He esteems it his honour to shine forth as the everlasting righteousness of his people. It is the brightest jewel of his mediatorial crown. In this he sees of the travail of his soul and his satisfied: accounting himself fully recompensed, for all the labours of his life, and all the sorrows of his death, when sinners are washed from their guilt in his blood, and presented faultless by his obedience.

The HOLY SPIRIT is equally pleased with this great transaction, and its noble effects. It is his peculiar office, and favourite employ, to convince the world of their SAVIOUR's righteousness: not only that his nature was spotlessly pure, and his conversation perfectly holy; but that from both results a righteousness, of infinite dignity, and everlasting efficacy; sufficient, throughout all ages sufficient, for the acceptance and salvation of the most unworthy creatures.

Since then this method of acceptance and salvation is excellent and glorious, in the eyes of the adorable TRINITY; since it magnifies the law, and yields the most exalted honour to its divine AUTHOR:—since it makes ample provision for the holiness of a corrupt, and the happiness of a ruined world;—why should my friend any longer dislike it, oppose it, or treat it with a cold indifference? Surely, all these grand recommendations, are enough to over rule any little objections, which may arise from the suspicions of timidity, or may be started by the artifices of sophistry.

Ther. I know not how it is, Aspasio; but I cannot reconcile myself to this doctrine of imputed righteousness, notwithstanding all the pains you have taken to make me a convert.

Asp. The disappointment is mine, but the loss is yours, Theron.——However, let me entreat you, not to reject my sentiments absolutely, nor to condemn them prematurely. Suppose it possible at least, that they may be true; and weigh them in an even balance.——Learn wisdom from your Aspasio's folly. I was once exactly in your situation; saw things in your light, and through your medium.

Conversing, I well remember, with a devout but plain person, our discourse happened to turn upon that solemn admonition; If any man will come after ME, let him deny himself ‡. I was haranguing upon the import and extent of the duty; shewing, that merely to forbear the infamous action, is little. We must deny admittance, deny entertainment at least, to the evil imagination; and quench even the enkindling spark of irregular desire.——When I had shot a random bolt, my honest friend replied, "There is another in-"stance of self-denial, to which this injunction ex-

* Gal. ii. 29. † Matth. viii. 29.

† Is. xlii. 1. ‡ Matth. xvi. 24.

"tends,

"tends, and which is of very great moment in the "Chriſtian religion. I mean, the inſtance of renouncing our own ſtrength, and our own righteouſneſs; not "leaning on that for holineſs; nor relying on this for "juſtification."——I thought the old man, I muſt confeſs, little better than a ſuperſtitious dotard; and wondered at (what I then fancied) the motley mixture of piety and oddity in his notions. But now I diſcern ſenſe, ſolidity, and truth in his obſervation *. Now I perceive, that we ourſelves are often the dreamers, when we imagine others to be faſt aſleep.

Ther. I ſhall not forget your caution, and will endeavour to avoid the rock, on which my Aſpaſio ſtruck; but happily, it ſeems, eſcaped ſhipwreck.——You may likewiſe aſſure yourſelf, that, upon a ſubject of exceeding great and eternal conſequence, I ſhall not fail to uſe the moſt attentive and impartial conſideration. An indolent ſupineneſs, or a bigotted obſtinacy, in this great criſis of affairs, would be of all errors the moſt inexcuſable, and muſt prove of all miſcarriages the moſt fatal.

Aſp. But ſtill you cannot reconcile yourſelf.——And no wonder. For this way of ſalvation runs directly counter to the ſtream of corrupt nature. It puzzles our reaſon, and offends our pride. What? ſhall we, not work, but believe unto righteouſneſs †? Shall we receive all freely, and reckon ourſelves no better than unprofitable ſervants? This is a method, to which we ſhould never ſubmit; this is a propoſal, which we ſhould always ſpurn; were not our ſentiments rectified, and our hearts new moulded, by ſovereign grace.

Let me remind you of a little incident, which you muſt have read in the Grecian hiſtory. A certain ſtranger came, one day, to dine with ſome Lacedæmonians. They, you know, always ſat down at a public table, and were content with the plaineſt food. The gentleman, accuſtomed to higher eating, could not forbear expreſſing his diſguſt at the homely proviſion.——Sir, ſaid the cook, you don't make uſe of the ſauce.—What do you mean? replied the gueſt.—You don't uſe hard exerciſe; nor habituate yourſelf to long abſtinence; nor bring a ſharpened appetite to the meal.——And you, my dear friend, I am apprehenſive, have not the ſauce; have not the proper preparative for this ſalutary doctrine; which is indeed the bread of life, and the very marrow of the goſpel.

Ther. What preparative?

Aſp. A ſenſe of your great depravity, your extreme guilt, and your utterly-undone condition.——While deſtitute of theſe convictions, our ſouls will be like the full ſtomach, that loaths even the honeycomb.——So long as theſe convictions are ſlight, and hover only in the imagination; we ſhall be like Gallio ‡ liſtleſs, indifferent, and caring for none of theſe things.—But when they are deep and penetrate the heart, then the righteouſneſs of a REDEEMER will be ſweet, taſteful, and inviting; as myrrh and frankincenſe to the ſmell, as milk and honey to the palate, as gold and treaſures to the ruined bankrupt.

Ther. What method would you adviſe me to uſe, in order to get theſe convictions impreſſed on my heart?

Aſp. Endeavour to underſtand GOD's holy law. Conſider, how pure, how extenſive, how ſublimely perfect it is.—Then judge of your ſpiritual ſtate, not from the flattering ſuggeſtions of ſelf-love, nor from the defective examples of your fellow-creatures, but by this unerring ſtandard of the ſanctuary.—Above all, beſeech the GOD and FATHER of our LORD JESUS CHRIST, to ſend his enlightening SPIRIT into your ſoul. For indeed, without the enlightening influences of the SPIRIT, we may have the divine law in our hand; we may comprehend its grammatical meaning; yet be like blind Bartimeus under the meridian ſun. It is the bleſſed SPIRIT alone, who can rend the veil of ignorance from our minds; and ſhew us either "the wonderful things of GOD's law," or the glorious myſteries of his goſpel. In this ſenſe, our polite poet * ſpeaks a truth, as ſingularly important, as it is elegantly expreſſed:

He from thick films ſhall purge the viſual ray,
And on the ſightleſs eye-ball pour the day.

Will you give me leave to propoſe another expedient? which, I believe, may be conſiderably ſerviceable in this particular caſe; which, I am aſſured, will be greatly advantageous in many other reſpects.

Ther. Backward as I am to adopt your doctrine, I am no enemy to my own intereſt; therefore ſhall not only give you leave to propoſe, but give you thanks for communicating, ſo valuable an advice.

Aſp. It is, in reality, none of mine. It was long ago recommended by your old acquaintance Horace †. It conſiſts in keeping a diary.

Compile a ſecret hiſtory of your heart and conduct.—Take notice of the manner in which your time is ſpent, and of the ſtrain which runs through your diſcourſe; how often the former is loſt in trifles, how often the latter evaporates in vanity.——Attend to the principle from which your actions flow; whether from the ſteady habitual love of GOD, or from ſome rambling impulſe, and a cuſtomary propenſity to please yourſelf:—Minute down your ſins of omiſſion; how frequent you neglect to glorify your CREATOR, to edify your fellow-creatures, and to improve yourſelf in knowledge and holineſs.——Obſerve the frame of your ſpirit in religious duties. With what reluctance they are undertaken, and with what indevotion performed; with how many wanderings of thought, and

* Milton thought the ſame, otherwiſe he would never have put theſe words into the mouth of a divine ſpeaker.

——Thy merit
Imputed ſhall abſolve them, who renounce
Their own, both righteous and unrighteous, deeds;
And live in thee tranſplanted, and from thee
Receive new life. Book III. 290.

† Rom. x. 10.

‡ Acts xviii. 17. A late commentator, of diſtinguiſhed eminence, has attempted to vindicate Gallio's conduct; and would repreſent it as an amiable inſtance of prudence and moderation.

According to my apprehenſion, this Roman governor acted a part both irreligious and unjuſt.—Irreligious, becauſe he refuſed to hear the apoſtle's defence; which was the moſt likely means of his converſion and ſalvation. As one great end, why providence permitted the preachers of the goſpel to be brought before rulers and kings, was, that ſuch an incident might ſerve εις μαρτυριον αυτοις, Matth. x. 18. for a teſtimony (not againſt, but) to them: that even the potentates of the earth, prejudiced and ſupercilious as they were, might hereby have an opportunity of hearing the Chriſtian doctrine, and ſeeing its efficacy on the ſpirits of men.—Unjuſt, becauſe he permitted Soſthenes, then an innocent perſon, afterwards a diſciple of CHRIST, (1 Cor. i. 1.) to be ſo illegally treated, and outrageouſly abuſed, without interpoſing for his reſcue. Here was evidently a breach of the peace; a violation of the laws. Of this therefore the civil magiſtrate ought to have taken cogniſance; however he might fancy himſelf diſcharged from the obligation of attending to the goſpel, or protecting its preachers: however he might imagine himſelf authoriſed, to treat divine truths with contempt; and call the ſtriving for the faith, a wrangling about words and names.

Beſides, if the HOLY SPIRIT intended to fix a mark of oppro-bution, rather than a brand of infamy upon the proconſul's behaviour, I cannot but think, it would have been expreſſed in a manner different from—χ ουδεν τουτων τω Γαλλιωνι εμελεν. Which, if it be the language of applauſe, requires ſome more than ordinary ſkill in criticiſm, to underſtand it aright. But, if it be the voice of cenſure, it is obvious and intelligible to every reader.

* Mr Pope, in his charming poem ſtyled the Meſſiah.

† Ille velut fidis arcana ſodalibus olim
Credebat libris: neque ſi male ceſſerat uſquam
Decurrens alio, neque ſi bene: quo fit, ut omnis
Votiva pateat veluti deſcripta tabella
Vita ſenis. HORAT. Sat.

how

how much unlineſs of deſire.—How often, in the common affairs of life, you feel the inordinate ſallies of paſſion, the workings of evil concupiſcence, or the intruſion of fooliſh imaginations.

Regiſter thoſe ſecret faults, to which none but your own conſcience is privy, and which none but the all-ſeeing eye diſcerns. Often review theſe intereſting memoirs. Frequently contemplate yourſelf in this faithful mirror. An artiſt, ſometime ago, took a ſurvey of your eſtate; drew the form, and meaſured the dimenſions, of each incloſure; pictured out every hedge, and ſcarce omitted a ſingle tree, which grew upon the premiſes.—Act thus with your will, your underſtanding, your affections. Theſe are your noble internal demeſne; of which none but yourſelf can be a competent ſurveyor.

Ther. It is unreaſonable and prepoſterous, I muſt acknowledge, to be minutely exact in meaner matters, and uſe no accuracy of inſpection in the moſt momentous affairs; to have a correct draught of our lands, which are a tranſient inheritance; and no map of that everlaſting poſſeſſion, the ſoul.

Aſp. Gratify me then, my dear Theron, in this particular. As I purpoſe to ſet out, very early in the morning, I ſhall inſiſt upon it, that you do not riſe before your uſual time, in order to compliment my departure. But I now make it my laſt wiſh, and my parting requeſt, that you will, for ſome months at laſt, keep a diary.

You have wondered at my opinion, concerning the corruption of our nature, and the inſufficiency of our righteouſneſs. This may ſeem ſtrange, this may appear ſhocking, to a mind unacquainted with itſelf. But, when you have ſearched your heart, by this probe; when you have felt the pulſe of your ſoul, by ſelf-examination; then you will be better able to judge of my ſentiments, and enter into the reaſons of my faith.

By this means, we ſhall alſo diſcover the ſins that moſt eaſily beſet us; which moſt frequently elude our vigilance, and baffle our reſolution. We ſhall learn, how to poſt our guard; when to exerciſe the ſtricteſt watch; and where to direct the artillery of prayer.—In a word, we ſhall learn, better than from ten thouſand volumes, to KNOW OURSELVES: A knowledge, which was ſuppoſed, by the ancient philoſophers, to deſcend from heaven *; and which, I believe, our Chriſtian divines will allow, has a happy tendency to lead people thither: becauſe, of all other preparatives, it beſt diſpoſes them for that bleſſed REDEEMER, who is the way, the only way to thoſe bliſsful manſions.

Now I have mentioned a way, let me ſuppoſe you travelling through an unknown country. You come to a place, where the road divides itſelf into two equally-inviting parts. You are at a loſs, which track to purſue. Whoſe direction will you chuſe to follow? that man's, who has paſſed through neither of them? that man's, who has paſſed through one of them only; or that man's, who has paſſed and repaſſed them both?—To wait for an anſwer, would be an affront to your judgment. Only let me obſerve, that the laſt is your Aſpaſio's caſe. He has travelled long, and proceeded far, even in your path. All that circumſpection and aſſiduity, all that prayer and ſelf-denial, all that faſting and alms, and every other means of grace could do, in order to eſtabliſh a righteouſneſs of his own, has been done. But to no purpoſe.——He has alſo trod every ſtep in the way, which he recommends to his beloved friend. He has made the trial; can ſet his Probatum eſt, to whatever he adviſes; and may very truly ſay, with his divine MASTER, We ſpeak that we do know *, and teſtify that we have experienced.

Ther. I am ſorry to obſerve, that the night is coming on, and our converſation almoſt at an end. My regret is increaſed, by the conſideration of your intended journey.——Though buſineſs obliges you to depart; it will, I hope, afford you leiſure to write. This will be ſome compenſation for the want of your company.

Yonder ſun is ſinking below the horizon, and juſt taking his leave of our earth. To retard the departing radiance, at leaſt to alleviate the approaching loſs, thoſe weſtern clouds catch the rays; and reflect them to our view, in a moſt amuſing diverſity of colours. By this means, we enjoy the great luminary in his beams, even when his orb is withdrawn from our ſight.——An epiſtolary correſpondence has ſomething of the ſame nature. Letters may be called the talk of abſent friends. By this expedient, they communicate their thoughts, even tho' countries, kingdoms, or ſeas intercept their ſpeech. You muſt, therefore, promiſe me this ſatisfaction; and let me converſe with my Aſpaſio by the pen, when I can no longer have an intercourſe with him in perſon.

Aſp. You have anticipated me, Theron. Otherwiſe, what is now my promiſe, would have been my requeſt.

I cannot but take notice of another particularity in that magnificent aſſemblage of clouds. How they varied their appearance, as the lamp of day changed its ſituation.—A little while ago, thoſe curtains of the ſky were ſtreaked with orange, or tinged with amber. Preſently, they borrowed the bluſh of the roſe, or the ſoftened red of the pink. Ere long, they glow with vermilion, or deepen into crimſon. Soon ſucceeds the purple-tinctured robe of majeſty; and as ſoon (thus tranſient is all ſublunary grandeur!) gives place to the ſable veil of evening, or the gloomy pall of night.——Such, I truſt, will be the iſſue of my Theron's preſent apprehenſions. All his ſplendid ideas of human excellency and ſelf-righteouſneſs will become faint; will loſe their imaginary luſtre; till, at length, they fade away, and darken into abſolute ſelf-abaſement.——Then the SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS will be amiable, will be deſirable, as the beauties of the dawn, breaking upon the ſhades of night.

* ——E cœlo deſcendit, γνῶθι σεαυτὸν. JUVEN.

* John iii. 11.

THERON AND ASPASIO:

OR, A SERIES

OF LETTERS.

LETTER I.

ASPASIO to THERON.

Dear THERON,

I AM now at the ſeat of my worthy friend Camillus; where buſineſs and inclination will fix me for ſome weeks.——This evening we had a moſt pleaſing ramble. I have met with nothing ſo agreeable, ſince I left your houſe, and loſt your company.

The time was juſt arrived, and the ſcene was fully opened, which furniſhed our great poet with his fine deſcription;

Now was the ſun in weſtern cadence low,
From noon; and gentle airs, due at their hour,
To fan the earth now walk'd, and uſher in
The evening cool.

At this juncture, Camillus invited me to take the air. ——We walked, ſeveral times, along a cloſe ſhady alley, arched with the foliage of filberts. Here, hid from every eye, and the whole world withdrawn from our view, we ſeemed like monks ſtrolling in their cloyſters.—Turning ſhort at the end, we enter a parallel range of majeſtic and uniformly-ſpreading walnut-trees. This tranſition was ſomewhat like advancing, through a low porch, into the iſles of a magnificent cathedral. The broad leaf, and large trunk of thoſe lordly trees,—their very diffuſive ſpread, added to their prodigious height, —give them an air of uncommon dignity. It ſwells the imagination with vaſt ideas, and entertains us with a romantic kind of delight, to expatiate amidſt ſuch huge columns, and under ſuch ſuperb elevations, of living architecture.

Quitting our cathedral, we turn once again, and paſs into a grand colonnade of oaks: ſo regular in their ſituation, ſo ſimilar in their ſize, and ſo remarkably correſpondent in every circumſtance, that they looked like the twins of nature; not only belonging to the ſame family, but produced at the ſame birth. Through theſe lay a walk, ſtrait, ſpacious, and gracefully long; far exceeding the laſt in the extent of its area, though much inferior in the ſtatelineſs of its ceiling. It puts me in mind of that divine benignity, which has allowed us ſix days, for the proſecution of our own comparatively-low affairs; and ſet apart but one, for the more immediate attendance on the ſublime exerciſes of devotion.

This walk was covered with the neateſt gravel; and not a weed to be ſeen, nor one ſpire of graſs, through the whole extended ſurface. It ſtole into a continual aſcent; yet ſo very gradually, that the riſe was ſcarce diſcernable, either by the ſearching eye, the toiling feet, or the panting breath.—At the extremity, a handſome ſummer-houſe ſhewed a flight of ſteps, and half a Venetian door. The reſt of the building was hid by the cluſtering branches.

As ſoon as we enter the apartment, Camillus throws open the left-hand ſaſh; and, with it, a moſt enlarged and amuſive proſpect.——The ſtructure appeared ſituate on the brow of a conſiderable eminence: whoſe ſides were partly confuſed and wild with broken rocks, partly ſhagged and perplexed with thorny ſhrubs. The ſpectator is agreeably ſurpriſed, to find himſelf accommodated with ſo elegant a manſion, on the ſummit of ſo rude and ruinous a ſpot.——But how greatly is his ſurprize and his ſatisfaction augmented, when he caſts his eye forward; and beholds the beautiful meads, which, from the foot of this ragged hill, ſtretch themſelves into a ſpace almoſt unmeaſureable!

Through the midſt of this extenſive vale, which was decked with the fineſt verdure, and repleniſhed with the richeſt herbage, a river rolled its copious flood; rolled in a thouſand ſerpentine meanders, as though it had loſt its way in the flowery labyrinth, or made repeated efforts of flowing back to its ſource. Till, at laſt, having wandered more than twice the length of the meadows; having held a mirror to the aſpiring poplars, and bending willows; having paid a welcome ſalute to ſeveral ornamented villas, and paſſed through the arches of two or three curiouſly pendent bridges; it ſeemed to meet the ſky, and mingle with the horizon.

Oppoſite to the front-window, a caſcade fell from the adjacent ſtream. It flaſhed and foamed along the broad ſlope, indented with ſmall pits, and jagged with protuberant ſtones. The current, vexed and embarraſſed, ſeemed to rave at the intervening obſtacles; and forcing its rapid, indignant, ſonorous way, ſtruck the ear with a peal of liquid thunder. Theſe fretful waters,—let our angry paſſions obſerve the admonition, and follow the example,—ſoon were pacified; ſoon forgot to chide. Collected into a little rivulet, they ran off in calm and ſilent lapſe, till they loſt themſelves amongſt beds of oſier, and plantations of alder.

The river, widening as it flowed, was parted here and there by ſeveral little iſlands. Some tufted with reeds, and the reſort of ſwans. Some adorned with ſtately porticoes, and ſplendid alcoves, the graceful retreats of rural pleasure. Some furnished with green embowering walks, fitted for studious retirement and sedate contemplation.——On either side of the charming valley, towns and villages lay thick and looked gay; adding ornament and variety to the scene, and receiving innumerable advantages from the passing wave.

treats

The whole recalled to an attentive observer's mind, that amiable and august spectacle, which the Syrian * soothsayer could not behold, without a rapture of delight:—From the top of the rocks I see the tribes of JEHOVAH, and from the hills I behold the habitations of his chosen people. How goodly are thy tents, O Jacob! and thy tabernacles, O Israel! As the valleys are they spread forth; as gardens, by the river's side; as trees of exquisite fragrance †, which the LORD hath planted; as cedars of stateliest growth, flourishing beside the waters.

We had but just looked about us, when a messenger came for Camillus. As he was called to settle some private affairs, I chose to stay in this inviting retreat; and determined to make myself amends for the loss of Camillus's company, by beginning a correspondence with my Theron.——We have pen, ink, and paper, in all our rural retirements; that, if any thing is started in discourse, or occurs in meditation, worthy to be remembered, it may immediately be committed to writing.

I could not but observe to my friend, that, fine as the prospect appeared, there was one decoration wanting; if some grand deformity may be called a decoration. The ridges of a bleak and barren mountain, or the skirts of a sun-burnt tawny heath, would give additional liveliness to the ornamented parts of the landscape, and make their beauties strike with double vigour.——This also, by shewing us, what wretched abodes and inhospitable quarters might have fallen to our share, would awaken in our hearts a more fervent gratitude to the supreme DISPOSER of things; who has cast our "lot in a fairer "ground, and given us a more goodly heritage."

So, a proper knowledge of the divine law,—of its sublime perfections, and rigorous sanction,—joined with a conviction of our own extreme deficiency, and manifold transgressions;—all this would endear the blessed JESUS to our affections, and powerfully recommend his righteousness to our desires.——The remainder of this epistle, therefore, shall turn upon some instances of duty, injoined in that sacred system. By which it may be highly useful to examine our conduct, and sift our hearts; in which, I believe, we have all fallen short, and are all become guilty; from which, we may learn the imperfection of our best services, and see the inexpressible need of a better righteousness than our own.

The knowledge of GOD is the foundation of all vital religion, and indeed is the consummation of human happiness. It is not only matter of present duty, but the very essence of our future bliss: This is life eternal, to know thee the only true GOD, and JESUS CHRIST whom thou hast sent ‡.——Yet, important and obligatory as it is, are we not very defective in this divine science? Have we duly acquainted ourselves with the marvellous excellencies of the LORD JEHOVAH? his uncontrollable power, and all-comprehending wisdom; his unbounded goodness, and unwearied patience; his immaculate holiness, and inflexible justice; his never-failing faithfulness, and inviolable veracity?—Have we, according to the direction of our inspired tutor, pursued this sacred study on our knees *; and sought this most noble of all intellectual endowments, not merely from books, but principally at the throne of grace? Have we sought it, like that ancient Jewish student, with an early application, and with incessant assiduity; even "from the flower, till the grape "was ripe †?"

Is that scanty ray of knowledge, which perhaps has forced itself through our original darkness, operative on our affections? Have we loved the LORD our GOD with all our heart? This is the first and great commandment ‡.——Have we constantly entertained the most magnificent and honourable thoughts of his sublime perfections? Is our esteem for this immensely great and most blessed BEING, high, superlative, matchless? somewhat like that expressed by the psalmist; Whom have I in heaven but thee? and there is none upon earth that I desire in comparison of thee ‖.——Have we been affectionately concerned for his glory, and zealous to advance his holy religion? troubled, very sensibly troubled, when our MAKER's honour has been trampled in the dust, by licentious tongues, or flagitious deeds?

Have we made it our ruling care, to approve the whole of our life, and the most secret transactions of our breast, to his all-seeing eye? resolved, deliberately resolved to sacrifice, not only our darling lusts, but even our most valuable interests, whenever they stand in competition with the good pleasure of his will?—In a word, as the hart, panteth after the water-brooks, with such vehement and inextinguishable ardour, have we thirsted after—a brighter manifestation of his divine attributes,—some sweeter assurances of his special love,—and an ever-increasing conformity to his holy image?

Such was the temper of those excellent men, who are characterized in the scriptures of truth, as children of the HIGHEST, and patterns for our imitation. This is their language; The desire of our soul is unto thy name, and to the remembrance of thee. With my soul have I desired thee in the night; yea, with my spirit within me will I seek thee early §.——Neither is such warmth of love, and fervour of desire, any needless or extravagant pitch of devotion; but a reasonable service, indispensably due, from all intelligent creatures, to the great AUTHOR of their being;—in whom all possible perfections, with the utmost exaltation and dignity, reside;—from whom all manner of blessings, in the most copious and never-failing communications, flow.

When we receive, from an absent friend, rich and repeated presents; casks of generous wine, or jars of delicious fruit; we feel ourselves enkindled into a grateful affection. We honour, we love the person, who allows us such a distinguished place in his heart; and expresses his cordial regard, by such a series of

* Numb. xxiii. 7.

† Numb. xxiv. 5. 6. It is well known, that the word אהלים is used in the sacred writings, to denote either a delightful perfume, Prov. vii. 17. or that aromatic plant, which produces it, Cant. iv. 14.—For which reason, I think it very justifiable, to render the expression, trees of exquisite fragrance; and am persuaded, it will be far more intelligible to the generality of readers, than trees of lignaloes.

‡ John xvii. 3

* Jam. i. 5.

† Ecclus li. 15.

‡ Matth. xxii. 38.

‖ Psal. lxxiii. 25.

§ Is. xxvi. 8, 9. We can hardly tell, which to admire most, the beauty of the description, or the piety of the person. I have desired; and not with inactive wishes, but such as prompt to vigorous endeavours. I will seek thee; and early, with the most vigilant application and unwearied assiduity.—The emphasis is very much increased, by the addition of those lively words, with my soul, yea with my spirit; with the whole bend and sway of my affections, and with the steady invariable determination of my judgment.—Thus have I desired thee, even in the night; when both the pursuits and the thoughts of other people are sunk and lost in profound repose. Thus will I seek thee, with a zeal—early as the rising,—constant as the returning sun.

active

active and tender benevolence.——The bleſſed GOD is a friend to us all, infinitely powerful, and equally munificent. We are the conſtant objects of his more than friendly, of his parental cares. Every paſſing moment is a meſſenger of his patience, and charged with ſome token of his bounty. For our ſake, he has diffuſed bleſſings over all the face of the earth; and commanded every element to concur, in miniſtering to our accommodation. He has not only adapted his benefits to our ſeveral wants; but has given them a diverſification, large as the ſcope of our wiſhes; and an enrichment, far beyond all that our fancy could conceive.——Profuſe liberality! yet ſmall and ſcanty, compared with his moſt adorable benignity in CHRIST JESUS.

What, if GOD, willing to manifeſt the ſuperabundant riches of his kindneſs, had made bare the arm of his omnipotence; and ſtruck a moſt miraculous road through the ſurges of the ocean, to afford us a ſafe paſſage!—if, to accommodate us in our travels, he had brought waters out of the flinty rock; and bid the ravens bring meat to our hands, bid the winds convey manna to our doors?—if, to furniſh us with a commodious ſettlement, he had dethroned mighty kings, diſpoſſeſſed populous nations, and made the walls of impregnable cities fall to the ground?—if, to further the diſpatch of our buſineſs, or facilitate the conqueſt of our enemies, he had arreſted the ſun in his meridian career, and laid an embargo upon the moon, ſetting out on her nightly tour?—in ſhort, if, to promote our welfare, he had ſuſpended the powers, and controlled the laws of univerſal nature; had wrought all the miracles, exhibited in the land of Egypt, or recorded in the volumes of inſpiration:—ſhould we not think ourſelves under the moſt inviolable engagements, to love the LORD our GOD, who had done ſo great things for us; to love him unfeignedly and ardently; to love him with a ſupreme affection, far above every other amiable object?—Yet we have greater, incomparably-greater obligations to our almighty BENEFACTOR. For (hear O heavens! wonder O earth! and let eternity dwell upon the ſtupendous truth!) GOD ſpared not his SON,—his own SON,—his tranſcendently-glorious and divinely-excellent SON,—but delivered him up to the deepeſt humiliation, and to the moſt accurſed death, for us men and our ſalvation.

O, Theron! have we been impreſſed with wonder, at the contemplation of this goodneſs? Have our hearts glowed with gratitude, under a ſenſe of theſe mercies? Surely, no man need be convicted of any other crime, at the great tribunal, than inſenſibility of ſuch love, and ingratitude for ſuch favours. This, without the acceſſion of horrid impieties, is enough to leave him abſolutely inexcuſable. This is enough to prove him one of the moſt diſingenuous and deteſtable of creatures.

Have we exerciſed ourſelves in frequent thankſgiving? Many are the exhortations to this honourable duty. Praiſe thy GOD, O Zion *: praiſe him for his mighty acts †:—praiſe him according to his excellent greatneſs ‡.——Innumerable are the incitements to abound in this pleaſant ſervice. Every comfort has a voice, and cries in the ear of reaſon, O! that men would therefore praiſe the LORD for his goodneſs. Every deliverance enforces the addreſs, and furniſhes freſh materials for the heavenly employ.——The man after GOD's own heart declares, as an inviting example for our practice, I will bleſs the LORD at all times: his praiſe ſhall continually be in my mouth *: yea, as long as I have any being, I will ſing praiſes unto my GOD †.——Indeed, when we conſider the inexhauſtibly-rich bounty of GOD our CREATOR, and the inconceivably-tender mercy of GOD our REDEEMER, it is both ſtrange and deplorable, that the love of GOD is not always prevailing in our hearts, and the language of praiſe ever flowing from our lips.

I will not ſuppoſe our character ſo irreligious, that we have neglected the daily worſhip of GOD, either in our cloſet, or in our family.——But have we prayed with that profound reverential awe, which is due to the HIGH and LOFTY ONE, who inhabiteth eternity?—Have we made our ſupplications with that fervent importunity, which may in ſome meaſure correſpond with the extreme indigence of our ſtate, and the invaluable worth of the bleſſings we crave?—Have our petitions been attended with that ſteady affiance, which may glorify the goodneſs, the power, the veracity of the LORD? may evidently declare, that he is rich in mercy, to all that call upon him ‡; that he is the LORD JEHOVAH, in whom is everlaſting ſtrength ‖; that he is the GOD of truth, and faithful for ever §. We call him FATHER: but have we truſted in him, with that unſuſpecting, cheerful, filial confidence, which a child repoſes on the fidelity and indulgence of ſuch an earthly relative? Have we not entertained, too often entertained, narrow, diſhonourable, beggarly apprehenſions, concerning the treaſures of his liberality, and the bowels of his pity? rating them even lower than our parents, our friends, or our own.

Have we been careful to carry the ſpirit of our prayers into our ordinary converſation; and waited at the door, as well as approached to the throne of grace?—Amidſt the intervals of our ſolemn devotions, have we cultivated an ejaculatory intercourſe with heaven? How highly would the ambitious courtier prize, and how frequently would he uſe a privy key, which ſhould give him, at all hours, free admittance to his ſovereign. This key of admittance, only to an infinitely more exalted POTENTATE, we all poſſeſs in the practice of mental aſpirations to GOD.——It is certainly the nobleſt employ, and will be the richeſt improvement of our thoughts, to ſend them in ſuch ſhort embaſſies to the KING of kings; and to derive, by ſuch occaſional ſallies ¶ of faith, a renewed ſupply from the

* Pſal. cxlvii. 12. † Pſal. cl. 2.

‡ Among theſe exhortations, we may rank that beautiful and devout addreſs to GOD, ישב תהלות ישראל Pſal. xxii. 3. Thou that inhabiteſt—light inacceſſible, ſhall I ſay? the regions of immenſity, or the ages of eternity? No; but what is a more exalted character, —the praiſes of Iſrael: finely ſignifying, that praiſe is a moſt acceptable ſacrifice, to which the divine MAJESTY attends with the greateſt delight:—intimating alſo, that the exerciſe of praiſe ſhould not be an occaſional thing, like a tranſient viſit to a ſtranger's houſe; but a daily and almoſt unintermitted ſervice, like the ſtated reſidence of a perſon in his own habitation.

* Pſal. xxxiv. 1. † Pſal. cxlvi. 2.

‡ Rom. x. 12. ‖ Iſ. xxvi. 4. § Deut. xxxii. 4.

¶ We have, in ſcripture, very remarkable inſtances of the ſucceſs which has attended ejaculatory prayer.—Obſerve Nehemiah: He ſtands before Ahaſuerus, apprehenſive of the monarch's diſpleaſure, yet deſirous to ſolicit him in behalf of Jeruſalem. To be delivered from his fears, and to obtain his deſires, what method does he uſe? the mean and ſervile arts of flattery? No; but the manly and devout expedient of prayer. I prayed, ſays the patriot, to the GOD of heaven.—We cannot ſuppoſe, that he fell on his knees, or ſpoke with his lips, while he continued in the royal preſence. But he darted up his ſoul in ſilent ſupplication. Which ſupplication "pierced the clouds;" reached the eternal throne; and returned not again till a bleſſing was ſent: ſuch as totally averted the wrath he dreaded; and procured favour and aſſiſtance, much larger than he expected, Neh. ii. 4.

When David heard, that Ahithophel, the ableſt politician in his kingdom, was revolted to Abſalom: ſenſible what a loſs his affairs had ſuſtained, and what an advantage the rebellious party had acquired, he betook himſelf to his GOD. He ſtaid not for an opportunity of retirement, but inſtantly and upon the ſpot cried, O LORD, I pray thee, turn the counſel of Ahithophel into fooliſhneſs!—A ſhort addreſs, but very efficacious. HE, who diſapfountain of all good. How great a loss then muſt it be to our ſpiritual intereſts, and how contemptuous a diſregard of the ever-preſent JEHOVAH, to omit entirely, or long to diſcontinue, this moſt beneficial practice of habitual adoration?—Can you, my dear Theron, acquit yourſelf on this article of inquiry? Has not every day of your life been a day of negligence in this reſpect? been a perpetual diſobedience to our SAVIOUR's injunction, Men ought, in this manner, always to pray, and not to faint *?

Have we ſanctified the Sabbath? Has the LORD's day, with all its ſolemn and ſacred offices, been our delight?—Have we remembered that diſtinguiſhed portion of our time, as Jacob remembered the delightful interview at Peniel? Have we expected it, as merchants expect the arrival of a richly-laden veſſel? Have we improved it, as huſbandmen improve the ſhining hours of the harveſt?—Have we wholly laid aſide every earthly engagement; not ſpeaking our own words †, nor allowing ourſelves in any gratifications, that may interrupt our communion with the FATHER of ſpirits?—Has one day in his courts been preferable to a thouſand ‡, ſpent either in the works of our calling, or in the ſcenes of recreation?—Have the memorials of our REDEEMER's dying merits, and the ſeals of his unchangeable loving-kindneſs, been reliſhed as a feaſt, and prized as a portion?

Have we honoured GOD's holy word?—What greater mark of diſeſteem, than to deſpiſe a perſon's diſcourſe, and not to think his ſpeech worthy of our notice? eſpecially, when he addreſſes us with very great ſeriouſneſs, and with the utmoſt affection. In our Bible, the GOD of glory ſpeaks to his creatures; ſpeaks with the moſt perſuaſive energy, and with all the yearnings of parental tenderneſs. Have we liſtened to our CREATOR, with reverence and delight; and rejoiced with trembling at——Thus ſaith the Lord?

Have we ſearched the oracles of truth, not merely as ſcholars, but as ſinners; not from a ſpirit of curioſity, or with an air of formality, but with a ſolicitude and ardour, becoming perſons who inquire after the SAVIOUR of their loſt ſouls? Have we ſubmitted our inmoſt thoughts to their impartial ſcrutiny; to receive conviction of ſin from their awful remonſtrances, and to hear the ſentence of condemnation at their righteous bar?—Have we been willing to ſuffer the reproach of conſcious baſeneſs, while they have ripped up the diſguiſes of falſehood; laid open our ſecret iniquities; and brought all our evil ways to remembrance? Thus Joſiah acted. His heart was tender, and he humbled himſelf before the LORD; he rent his cloaths, and wept before the LORD, when he heard the words of the book of the law *,

Have we laid the glad tidings of the goſpel within our memories, within our hearts? Have we been diligent to ſuck this honeycomb † of grace by concomitant meditation, and ſubſequent prayer?—Have we valued the precious promiſes, as gentlemen of wealth value the writings of their private eſtates; or as infranchiſed bodies eſteem the charter of their public privileges?—Have we, like the princely patriarch, longed for thoſe words of edification, exhortation, and comfort, more than for our neceſſary food ‡; and, like the royal prophet, prevented the night-watches, that we may be occupied in thoſe ſtatutes ‖ and ordinances of heaven?

We have hitherto confined the examination to a few inſtances of the affirmative kind; how dreadfully will the dark account be ſwelled, if inſtead of love and obedience, there be hatred and oppoſition;—hatred of the name, glory, and worſhip of GOD;—oppoſition to his intereſt, kingdom, and ſervice!

GOD is infinite perfection; worthy of all admiration; exalted above all praiſe. Yet do not our thoughts more frequently, or more naturally turn upon our own accompliſhments, than upon the adorable and ſhining attributes of the ALMIGHTY? This is, in itſelf, the moſt ſhameful dotage; and, in GOD's ſight, the moſt abominable idolatry. Yet let us obſerve what paſſes within, and we ſhall probably find, that as damps ariſe in the mines, or fogs in the fenny grounds, ſo naturally, and ſo copiouſly do theſe overweening reflections ariſe in our depraved minds.

GOD is an everlaſting King. Have we not too often reſiſted his authority? Have we not, as far as in us lay, depoſed the omnipotent SOVEREIGN, and exalted ſelf into the throne? made ſelf-will our law, and ſelf-pleaſing our end? thus adding ſacrilege to rebellion?

GOD is tranſcendently gracious and amiable. Have we not turned our backs upon him, by forgetting his mercies? Nay, have we not ſpurned him from our affections, by being lovers of pleaſure, more than lovers of GOD §?——Awake, conſcience bear thy impartial teſtimony; and I am perſuaded, the Phariſee in our breaſts, like the man unfurniſhed with the wedding-garment, muſt be ſtruck dumb; muſt be covered with confuſion.

Is our heart warm with brotherly love?—Good manners will put expreſſions of civility into our mouths; but has a power from on high implanted the royal law of charity in our breaſts? The character of a gentleman requires a deportment acceſſible, obliging, and courteous: has the ſpirit of Chriſtianity taught us to love, not in word or plauſible appearance only, but in deed and in truth ¶?—Do we love our neighbours, not merely on account of ſome relation they bear us, or ſome ſervices they have done us? but becauſe they are creatures of the bleſſed GOD; are the objects of his providential care; and capable at leaſt of being conformed to his image? Do we love them, becauſe we hope, that the LORD JESUS CHRIST has bought them with his blood; is willing to make them partakers of his SPIRIT, and members of his myſtical body?

Are we ſincerely concerned for their preſent welfare, and their eternal happineſs? Do we embrace all opportunities of promoting both the one and the other? embrace them with the ſame alacrity, and improve them with the ſame zeal, which actuate us in ſeeking our own felicity?—If they exceed us in all that is amiable, and all that is proſperous, do we contemplate their ſuperior excellence with a real complacency, and their more abundant ſucceſs with a real ſatisfaction?

Do we diſlike to hear, and abhor to ſpread, defamadiſappointeth the devices of the crafty, ſent a ſpirit of infatuation among the rebels; and inclined them to reject the advice of that judicious ſtateſman. Which falſe ſtep brought upon their horrid enterpriſe, the ruin it deſerved; and chagrined the wretched traitor, even to rage, frenzy, and ſuicide, 2 Sam. xv. 31. xvii. 23.

Amyntor, at a memorable period of his life, was under great diſtreſs of conſcience, and haraſſed by violent temptations. He made his caſe known to an experienced friend; who ſaid, Amyntor, you do not pray.—Surpriſed at this, he replied; "I pray, if "ſuch a thing be poſſible, too much. I can hardly tell, how "many times in the day I bow my knee before GOD; almoſt to "the omiſſion of my other duties, and the neglect of my neceſ"ſary ſtudies."——"You miſtake my meaning, dear Amyntor. "I do not refer you to the ceremony of the knee, but to the devo"tion of the heart: which neglects not any buſineſs, but inter"mingles prayer with all; which, in every place, looks unto the "LORD; and, on every occaſion, lifts up an indigent longing "ſoul for the ſupply of his grace. This," (added he, and ſpoke with a peculiar vehemence), "this is the prayer which all the "devils in hell cannot withſtand."——This, I would farther obſerve, is the prayer, which brings down ſomewhat of heaven into the heart; in which I would myſelf deſire to abound; and would earneſtly recommend to all my acquaintance, and all my readers.

* Luke xviii. 1.

† If. lviii. 13. ‡ Pſal. lxxxiv. 10.

* 2 Chron. xxxiv. 27. † Cant. v. 1.
‡ Job xxiii. 12. ‖ Pſal. cxix. 148.
§ 2 Tim. iii. 4. ¶ 1 John iii. 18.

tory tales; even when our adverſaries are the men whom they tend to blacken?—When rudely affronted, or cauſeleſsly abuſed, do we pity the offenders, for the wrong down to their own ſouls; rather than kindle into reſentment, at the indignity offered to ourſelves?—When greatly injured, are we ſlow to anger, and not eaſily provoked? Are we much more willing to be reconciled, than to foment diſpleaſure, and proſecute revenge? In a word, do we love our enemies; bleſs them that curſe us; do good to them that hate us; and pray for them which deſpitefully uſe us, and perſecute us *?—Without this loving and lovely diſpoſition, we abide, ſays the apoſtle, in death †; are deſtitute of ſpiritual, and have no title to eternal life.

Let me add,—Are all our graces, and all our works, clothed with humility? This ſhould be the dreſs, in which they ſeverally appear; as well as the bond of connection, which unites them all ‡.—Do we maintain a very low opinion of our own accompliſhments, and in honour prefer others to ourſelves ‖? habitually ſenſible, that we are leſs than the leaſt of the divine mercies, and the very chiefeſt of ſinners?

I might eaſily have branched out the preceding ſubjects, into a much greater variety of interrogatory articles. But I intend only to preſent you with a ſpecimen. Your own meditations will enlarge the ſketch, and ſupply what is defective. Only let me beg of you, my dear friend, to try your ſtate by this touchſtone; to prove your conduct by this ſtandard. And may the FATHER of lights give you an underſtanding, to diſcern the exact purity and ſublime perfection of his holy law!

Have you lived in the uninterrupted obſervance of all theſe duties; avoiding whatever is forbidden, and obeying whatever is commanded? Your outward behaviour, I know, has been free from notorious violations; but has your inward temper been preſerved from all ungodly motions, and from every irregular deſire? Is there no enmity in your heart to any of the precepts; nor any backwardneſs, nor any failure in performing each and every injunction?

When you put theſe queſtions to yourſelf, remember, that if you fail in one point, or in any degree, you are guilty of all §. If your conformity be not perſevering as well as perfect, you incur the penalty, and are abandoned to the curſe. You ſtand charged, before the JUDGE of the world, with all the guilt of all your ſins, both original and actual: and there is not one circumſtance, nor one aggravation, of any of your iniquities, overlooked or forgotten,——UNLESS, renouncing all your perſonal performances, you place your whole affiance on a SAVIOUR's atonement, and a SAVIOUR's righteouſneſs.——I think, you will not dare to put the iſſue of your everlaſting ſtate upon the former footing; which is not only hazardous, but muſt be inevitably ruinous. You will infinitely rather chuſe to acknowledge yourſelf a poor inſolvent; and plead the unſearchable riches of your REDEEMER's obedience.

To thoſe who believe, the law, though ſtrict, is not terrible. Becauſe, be its precepts of holineſs ever ſo extenſive, they have been moſt completely fulfilled by their glorious SURETY. Be its penal ſanctions ever ſo rigorous, they have been ſatisfied to the utmoſt, by their great MEDIATOR.—Believers, therefore, may make their boaſt of their adorable SPONSOR. They may ſit under his ſhadow with great delight *. While the thunderings of mount Sinai, and all the terrors of the legal diſpenſation, tend only to increaſe and quicken the refreſhing ſenſe of their ſafety. Juſt as the poſſeſſor of a plentiful eſtate, in ſome peaceful and proſperous country, repoſes himſelf under the ſhade of his vine, or the ſhelter of his fig-tree; and, hearing of the wars which embroil, or the plagues which depopulate other nations, taſtes, with augmented reliſh, his own felicity.

Let me cloſe with the affectionate and emphatical wiſh of an inſpired epiſtolary writer: That the LORD of peace may give my dear Theron peace—always, by all means †! Then I ſhall think my wiſhes are accompliſhing, and this bleſſing is at the door, when he ſees the purity of the divine law,—ſees the depravity of his own nature,—and the impoſſibility of being juſtified, without an intereſt in the great MEDIATOR's righteouſneſs: That righteouſneſs, which, as it is the only hope, and the conſtant joy, is therefore the darling theme, of

Your ever faithful

ASPASIO.

P. S. Shall I abridge the preceding letter, and contract the whole into thoſe two great commandments, which made the firſt awakening impreſſions on my own mind? Thou ſhalt love the LORD thy GOD with ALL thy heart: Thou ſhalt love thy neighbour as THYSELF.——Amazing! ſaid your Aſpaſio. Are theſe the commands of GOD? as obligatory, as the prohibition of adultery, or the obſervation of the Sabbath? Then has my whole life been a continual act of diſobedience. Not a day, no, nor an hour, in which I have performed my duty.—This conviction ſtruck me, as the hand-writing upon the wall ſtruck the preſumptuous monarch.——It purſued me, as Saul purſued the Chriſtians, not only to my own houſe, but even to diſtant cities;—nor ever gave up the great controverſy, till, under the influences of the SPIRIT, it brought me weary and heavy laden to JESUS CHRIST.

* Matth. v. 44. What manner of love is this? How diſintereſted! how extenſive! how triumphant! Muſt not all the boaſted benevolence of the philoſopher and moraliſt, ſtrike ſail to this evangelical charity? Muſt not both moraliſt and philoſopher acknowledge the neceſſity of a divine operation, thus to enlarge, exalt, and refine their ſocial affections?

† 1 John iii. 14.

‡ 1 Pet. v. 5. The unuſual word ἐγκομβώσασθε is ſuppoſed to have both theſe ſignifications.

‖ Rom. xii. 10. § Jam. ii. 10. Gal. iii. 10.

* Cant. ii. 3. † 2 Theſſ. iii. 16.

LETTER II.

THERON to ASPASIO.

Dear ASPASIO,

MORE than three weeks are elapſed, ſince you favoured me with your improving company. During which interval, I have frequently recollected the moſt material parts of our late diſcourſes. I have carefully conſidered, both the doctrines you advanced, and the anſwers you returned to my ſeveral objections. ——I have often reviewed your valuable letter; have uſed it as a touch-ſtone, to examine my ſtate; and have, with great punctuality, obſerved your parting advice. ——I have ſat, every evening, for a picture of my mind; and have endeavoured to take a true unflattering draught of all its diſtinguiſhing qualities. And, if the diary is a faithful mirror, if it does not aggravate the deformity of my features, I ſhall be abſolutely out of conceit with myſelf: I ſhall ever entertain the meaneſt opinion of my own, either moral or religious, qualifications.

conceit

Where is that intenſe and ſupreme love of GOD, which his tranſcendent perfections challenge, and his ineffable goodneſs claims?—Where that firm and joyful reliance on CHRIST JESUS, in any degree proportioned to his infinite merits and inviolable promiſes?—Where that cordial and tender affection for my fellow-chriſtians, which is due to the ſervants of a divine REDEEMER; the people, whom he ranſomed by his agonies, and purchaſed with his very blood?—Where is the incenſe of holy contemplation and refined deſire? where the flame of fervent devotion and ever-active zeal? ſuch as become the living temple of GOD, in which his moſt immaculate and glorious SPIRIT vouchſafes to reſide?——Theſe fundamental graces, like the grand organs in the animal ſyſtem, ſhould impart health to the ſoul, and ſpread the beauty of holineſs through all the converſation. But theſe, alas! far from beating with a vigorous and uniform pulſe, hardly heave with life; only juſt ſtruggle, now and then, with ſome faint, intermitted, uneven throes.

How ſeldom do my actions ſpring from gratitude to the everlaſting BENEFACTOR, or aim at the glory of his ſuper-excellent MAJESTY?—In addreſſing the KING immortal, inviſible, how languid are my affections, and how wandering is my attention? how great my unbelief, and how little my reverential awe?—I receive innumerable mercies; but where are my returns of correſpondent thankfulneſs? I am viſited with many gracious chaſtiſements; but without proper reſignation, or due improvement.——Alas for my heartleſs devotions, my lifeleſs virtues, and the multitude of my refined iniquities!——Hid behind the maſk of outward decency, and ſome cuſtomary forms of religion, I was altogether unacquainted with my ſpiritual ſtate. I fancied myſelf rich, and increaſed with goods, and to have need of nothing: even while I was wretched, and miſerable, and poor, and blind, and naked *.

If I look back, and review the years of youth and manhood, what has been the tenor, what is the aſpect of my life? More like a deſolate and horrid wilderneſs, than a cultivated garden, or a fruitful vineyard.——In youth, what ſordid gratifications of appetite! In manhood, what baſe compliances with a wicked world! In both, what ſholes of evil inclinations have polluted my heart! what ſwarms of vain imaginations have debaſed my thoughts! what frothy and unprofitable words have dropt from my lips!—By all which, how have I diſobeyed, and how diſhonoured GOD! how have I denied, and how crucified the LORD JESUS CHRIST!——and yet ſuppoſed myſelf, all the while, to be good enough!

It is ſomething unaccountable, that a perſon of my inquiſitive diſpoſition ſhould, through the courſe of ſo many years, be ſuch an utter ſtranger to himſelf. I wonder at my own prepoſterous folly!—To travel into foreign countries, and viſit the moſt renowned cities of Europe; yet never ſtep over the threſhold, nor look within the apartments of my own breaſt!——To carry on a correſpondence with my friends, even in the remoteſt nations; and never enter upon a conference, nor hold any intelligence with my own heart!——To inquire after news from the fleet, news from the army, news from the court; yet exerciſe neither curioſity nor care, with regard to the hope of heaven, and the concerns of eternity!——What egregious miſconduct is this! A moſt pernicious error, in the œconomy of religious life.

Sometimes I have caſt a tranſient glance on my outward behaviour; but never extended my ſearch to the delinquent, the traitor, the rebel within.——And even my outward behaviour has been ſurveyed, with as much erroneous partiality, as ſuperficial levity. It has been compared, not with that exact and ſublime ſtandard, the ſcriptures of truth; but, as in the caſe of the ſelf-deceiving Phariſee, with the unjuſt, extortionate, adulterous practices of ſome other people. From whence I moſt unwarrantably concluded, that, being not quite ſo abandoned as the moſt profligate creatures, my character muſt be good, and my condition ſafe.——But, thanks to your laſt friendly letter, and the ſearching expedient it recommended, I am now in a different way of thinking.

It is ſtrange to recollect, and indeed it is ſhameful to confeſs, the many artifices which I have uſed, to put a cheat upon myſelf.——Sometimes I have fancied, that the divine law could never be ſo ſtrict, as to condemn us inexorably, if we continue not in all its precepts.—Sometimes I have pleaded the infirmity of our nature, and endeavoured to make the works of darkneſs appear only as pitiable failings.—Sometimes I have taken refuge in the excellency of our church, and plumed myſelf with the borrowed feathers of a religious profeſſion.——At other times, I have ſoothed my conſcience to reſt, by a punctuality of attendance on places, or a zealous attachment to forms. And all this, to ſeduce, cajole, and betray myſelf,—betray myſelf, firſt into a vain conceit of my own endowments; then into a contemptuous diſregard of CHRIST; and at laſt into eternal deſtruction.—But now I ſee my guilt; I apprehend my danger; and feel my helpleſs condition.

Indeed, my Aſpaſio, I am now convinced, that the darkeſt colours cannot be too dark for the portrait of my ſpiritual ſtate. I ſee myſelf overſpread with an habitual depravity, and cannot forbear crying out, with the abaſhed leper; Unclean! unclean *!——The ſacred oracles in no wiſe miſrepreſent fallen man, when they deſcribe him as altogether become abominable †. They are far from under-rating human works, when they denominate them filthy rags ‡. Rags they are, if

* Rev. iii. 17.

* Lev. xiii. 45. † Job xv. 16.

‡ Iſ. lxiv. 6. Does not Theron miſapply this text? Can it be intended to diſcredit the qualifications of the upright? Is it not rather a brand ſet upon the works of the wicked: whoſe very "ſacrifices are an abomination to the LORD?" Or, a rebuke given to the ſpecious performances of the hypocrite; who is preciſe in the form, but deſtitute of the power of godlineſs? Or, may it not refer to ritual obſervances; in contradiſtinction to moral duties, and ſpiritual accompliſhments?

The diſparaging character muſt not, I think, be confined to ritual obſervances: becauſe it is expreſsly ſaid, ALL our righteouſneſſes, including every kind of religious duty.—Neither can it be appropriated to the formal hypocrite, much leſs to the notoriouſly-wicked; becauſe, thoſe very perſons, who are the ſubject of this aſſertion, declare in the context, LORD, we are thy people; thou art our FATHER; we ſhall be ſaved.—So that it ſeems intended to ſtain the pride of all human glory.

Beſides, the prophet ſpeaks of himſelf: WE all are as an unclean thing: which, however ſtrange or unreaſonable it may ſeem, is the very ſame charge, to which he pleads guilty in another place; Wo is me! I am undone! for I am a man of unclean lips! Not that he was defiled with any groſs pollutions; nay, he was a ſaint of the moſt diſtinguiſhed luſtre; but his eyes had ſeen the KING, the LORD of hoſts. He was under the clear manifeſtations of a GOD, glorious in holineſs, inflexible in juſtice, and infinite in all perfections.——Amidſt theſe manifeſtations, the impurity of his heart and nature were not only apparent, but glaring; overwhelmed him with abaſhment, and, till CHRIST was applied in a type, (Iſ. vi. 7.) filled him with terror.

In ſuch circumſtances and under ſuch views, all our moral virtues and evangelical graces; all our exerciſes of devotion, and acts of charity, will appear both defective and polluted; by no means proportioned to the demands of the law, nor ſufficient for our recommendation to the Supreme LAWGIVER;—no more than a few tattered rags, can claim the character, or perform the ſervices, of a complete ſuit;—no more than a few filthy rags are fit to dreſs the bride for her nuptials, or the courtier for a birth-night.

But there is a righteouſneſs—bleſſed be divine grace!—ſpotleſsly pure and conſummately excellent; a righteouſneſs, which anſwers all that the CREATOR requires, and ſupplies all that ——the we conſider their great imperfection; filthy rags, if we advert to their manifold defilements.——And ſince the nature of GOD is ſo irreconcilably averſe to all contamination; ſince the law of GOD requires ſuch unſpotted perfection; O! who can ſtand before this holy LORD GOD *, in any accompliſhments of their own?

When I farther reflect, that I have only a very obſcure glimpſe of the divine purity, and am a mere novice in the knowledge of my own heart; how am I amazed at the lofty apprehenſions which I once formed, concerning the dignity of my nature, and the integrity of my conduct! All owing to ignorance, the groſſeſt ignorance of myſelf and the ſcriptures.——How do I ſhudder to think, that, in expecting juſtification from the law, I was reſting the welfare of my immortal ſoul, not on the foundation of a rock, but on the point of a dagger. I was going to the deciſive tribunal, fluſhed with the falſeſt hopes, and charged with a ſet of glittering ſins; going, like poor deluded Uriah †, not with any valid credentials, but with the miniſtration of death ‡ in my hand.

Though I cannot but acknowledge the arrogance of theſe pretenſions, yet loath, very loath is my pride, to renounce the pleaſing abſurdity. Self-love has ſearched, and ſearched again, for ſomething excellent. It would fain make a better appearance, and can hardly brook the humiliation of imploring all ſub forma pauperis. With what reluctance is a ſinner brought to confeſs himſelf ſinful in every duty, ſinful in every capacity! Strange perverſeneſs!——But the charge is undeniable. However unwilling, I muſt plead guilty. THOU ART WEIGHED IN THE BALANCES, AND FOUND WANTING †, is evidently written on all I am, all I have, all I do.——And if I am thus defective, even in my own eſtimation; if I am utterly condemned, at the bar of my own conſcience; what then ſhall I do, when GOD riſeth up? and when HE viſiteth, what ſhall I anſwer him ‡?

I now ſee the neceſſity of an imputed righteouſneſs. Without ſome ſuch object for my truſt, I am undone. I long therefore to hear your arguments in its behalf. And I muſt declare to you, if it can be ſatisfactorily proved from the ſcriptures, it is the moſt comfortable doctrine in the world, and worthy of all acceptation.

A letter upon this ſubject, would be a ſingular favour, and, I hope, an equal bleſſing to

Your obliged, and affectionate,

THERON.

* That is, under the character of a poor deſtitute, or as a beggar ſues for his alms.

† Dan. v. 27. ‡ Job xxxi. 14.

* 1 Sam. vi. 20. † 2 Sam. xi. 14. 15. ‡ 2 Cor. iii. 9.

LETTER III.

ASPASIO to THERON.

Dear THERON,

THOUGH all your letters give me pleaſure, none was ever ſo highly pleaſing as your laſt. I look upon it with the ſame ſecret joy, as a compaſſionate phyſician obſerves ſome very favourable ſymptoms, in the criſis of a beloved patient's diſtemper.

What you aſk, I ſhall, without any farther preface, attempt to execute. If my attempt proves ſatisfactory to your judgment, I am ſure, it will be the moſt likely means of healing your conſcience, and calming your fears. ——When we perceive the odious depravity of our nature; when we diſcern the horrible iniquity of our lives; and are ſenſible of that tremendous wrath, and everlaſting vengeance, which are due to ſuch guilty creatures; then nothing can be found, that will ſpeak effectual peace, nothing that will adminiſter ſolid comfort, but only the vicarious ſufferings and the imputed righteouſneſs of JESUS CHRIST.

To this purpoſe ſpeaks one of the wiſeſt and beſt of ſpiritual guides; Has ſin abounded? as undoubtedly it has, in our heart, and our life; grace has much more abounded, in the obedience, and the merits of our REDEEMER.——Nay, has ſin reigned? exerted its malignant power, in the moſt extenſive and moſt deſtructive manner; rendering us ſubject unto death, both temporal and eternal? Even ſo has grace reigned; exerted its benign efficacy, and in a manner yet more triumphant; not only reſcuing us from guilt and ruin, but reſtoring us to everlaſting life and glory: and all this through the righteouſneſs, the complete meritorious righteouſneſs brought in by JESUS CHRIST our LORD *.

You inquire after the proofs of this imputed righteouſneſs. From a multitude I ſhall ſelect a few: ſufficient, I hope, to make it appear,—that this is the declared doctrine of our church, and the avowed belief of her moſt eminent divines;—that it is copiouſly revealed through the whole SCRIPTURES; revealed in many expreſs paſſages, and deducible from a variety of inſtructive ſimilitudes.

Hear the language of our Common Prayer, in a very affecting and ſolemn addreſs to the ALMIGHTY; "We do not preſume to come to this thy table, O mer-"ciful LORD, truſting in our own righteouſneſs."——If we may not, if we dare not, rely on our own righteouſneſs, when we approach the euchariſtic table; much leſs may we depend upon it, when we are ſummoned to the deciſive tribunal.——Should you aſk, On what we are to depend? The exhortation to the communion furniſhes an anſwer; "On the meritorious death and "paſſion of CHRIST, whereby alone we obtain remiſſion "of ſins, and are made partakers of the kingdom of "heaven."

The collect appointed for the feſtival of Circumciſion has this remarkable introduction; "Almighty GOD, "whoſe bleſſed SON was obedient to the law for man." In what ſenſe, or with what propriety, can this be affirmed, unleſs CHRIST's perfect obedience be referable to us, and accepted inſtead of ours? On any other interpretation, I ſhould think, he was obedient, not for man, but for himſelf.

Should the artful critic give ſome other turn to theſe paſſages, it will avail him but little. Becauſe the church, her own beſt expoſitor, has explained the meaning of ſuch phraſes, and put the matter beyond all doubt. In her eleventh article ſhe ſays, "We are "accounted righteous before GOD only for the me-"rits of our LORD and SAVIOUR JESUS "CHRIST."——The doctrine relating to pardon of ſin, had been ſtated in a preceding article. This diſplays the method, whereby ſinners may appear righteous in the eye of GOD, and in the court of heaven; ſo as to recover the divine favour, and obtain a title to eternal bliſs.——This is done, not by any native righteouſneſs, not by any acquired righteouſneſs, but by an an imputed righteousness. Were we justified by either of the former methods, it would not have been said, We are accounted, but we are righteous. They are so far from constituting our reconciling and justifying righteousness, that they have no share in it; contribute nothing towards it; are totally excluded from it. We are accounted righteous, and accepted as such, ONLY (mark the expression) ONLY through the meritorious obedience, and propitiating blood of our great MEDIATOR.

* Rom. v. 21.

The Homilies are, if it be possible, still more explicit, and more cogent. In the Homily concerning the salvation of mankind, we read the following words:—"The apostle toucheth three things, which must go together in our justification. On GOD's part, his "great mercy and grace. On CHRIST's part the satisfaction of GOD's justice, or the price of our redemption, by the offering of his body, and shedding of his "blood, with fulfilling of the law perfectly. On our "part, true and lively faith in the merits of JESUS "CHRIST, which yet is not ours, but by GOD's "working in us."——You see, according to the judgment of our venerable reformers, not only the offering of CHRIST's body, and shedding of CHRIST's blood, but also his perfect fulfilling of the law, are the adequate price of our redemption. All these act conjointly, they sweetly harmonize, in the great and glorious work. To suppose their disunion, is a doctrinal mistake, somewhat like that practical error of the Papists, in severing the sacramental wine from the sacramental bread; administering to the laity the symbols of the slaughtered body, but with-holding the symbols of the streaming blood.

There are other clauses in the same Homily, which set the seal of the church to our sentiments. I shall content myself with transcribing one from the conclusion.—"CHRIST," says that form of sound words, "is the "righteousness of all them that do truly believe. He "for them paid their ransom by his death. He for "them fulfilled the law in his life. So that now, in "HIM, and by HIM, every true Christian man may "be called a fulfiller of the law; forasmuch as that which "their infirmity lacked, CHRIST's righteousness hath "supplied."—This authority is as clear, as the doctrine authorised is comfortable. May the former sway our judgment! may the latter chear our hearts.

The Homily on CHRIST's nativity informs the reader, that the design of our LORD's incarnation was,—"to give light unto the world, and call sinners to repentance; to fulfill the law for us, and become the propitiation for our sins; to cast out the prince of this "world, and destroy the works of the devil."—We have all broke the law, we are all unable to keep the law; therefore the blessed JESUS fulfilled the law,—fulfilled it, in each and every of its demands,—fulfilled it, in the highest degree of perfection,—and, what is of all considerations most delightful, fulfilled it for us. His obedience took the place of what we were obliged to perform, under the covenant of works; and is not only the meritorious, but also the constituent cause of our justification.

So that,—if there be any worthiness in our LORD's most holy nature; any merit in his exercise of the sublimest virtues; completed by his submission to the most ignominious sufferings, and tormenting death;—then, according to this standard system of orthodox divinity, these are the ground, these are the substance of a sinner's justification.—And, according to the dictates of the most unbiassed reason, they are the best, the surest ground, that can either be wished or imagined.

Does it not, from the preceding quotations, appear, that the doctrine of justification through the imputed righteousness of our REDEEMER, is far from being disclaimed by the established church?—I am sorry, but constrained to own, that we rarely find any considerable strictures of this great evangelical peculiarity, in our modern theological discourses. Yet there have been preachers of the highest repute for learning, for judgment, and for piety, who professedly maintained this grand truth of the gospel.

The devout Bishop Beveridge, in his Private Thoughts, has left upon record the following very remarkable acknowledgment; which, if it suited his state of eminent holiness, cannot be too humbling, my dear Theron, for your lips and for mine. "I do not remember, neither "do I believe, that I ever prayed, in all my life-time, "with that reverence, or heard with that attention, or "received the sacrament with that faith, or did any "work with that pure heart, and single eye, as I ought "to have done. Insomuch that I look upon all my "righteousness, but as filthy rags; and it is in the robes "only of the righteousness of the SON of GOD, that I "dare appear before the MAJESTY of heaven."

The fervent and affectionate Bishop Hopkins * speaks in perfect consonance with his brother of St Asaph.—"The law was given us, not that we should seek justifi"cation by the observance of it, but finding it impossible "to be justified by fulfilling it, we should thereby be "driven to CHRIST's righteousness; who hath both "fulfilled it in himself, and satisfied for our transgressing "of it; and therefore saith the apostle, The law was a "schoolmaster to bring us unto CHRIST; that we might be justified by faith. To this end it was promulged, that "seeing the strictness of its precepts, the rigour of its "threatenings, and withal being convinced of our im"potence to fulfil its commands, we might be urged by "its terrors to fly to CHRIST, and find that righteous"ness in him which may answer all the demands of the "law."

Bishop Reynolds †, styled by his contemporaries, and not without reason, A walking library, bears his testimony in the following words:—"CHRIST as our "Surety paid our debt, underwent the curse due to our "sins, and bare them all in his own body on the tree; "became subject to the law for us, and representatively "in our stead fulfilled all the righteousness the law re"quired, active and passive. For sin being once com"mitted, there must be a double act to justification; the "suffering of the curse, and the fulfilling of righteous"ness anew. The one, a satisfaction for the injury we "have done to GOD, as our JUDGE; the other, the "performance of a service which we owe unto him as "our MAKER."

To this illustrious triumvirate, let me join Bishop Davenant; who, for his great abilities, and unquestionable integrity, was appointed one of our religious plenipotentiaries, at the renowned synod of Dort. In his very valuable exposition of the epistle to the Colossians, he writes to this effect: "Ye are complete in CHRIST. Ye "are furnished, in that all-sufficient REDEEMER, with "whatever is requisite to everlasting salvation. With "wisdom; since it is the consummation of this noble en"dowment, to know CHRIST and him crucified. "With righteousness; because he has perfectly satisfied "the law ‡, and thoroughly expiated our guilt. With "sanctification; because his SPIRIT dwelling in our "hearts, mortifies our corrupt affections, and renews "the soul after the image of its CREATOR."

* See his sermon on John vii 19.

† See his treatise, entitled, The life of CHRIST.——Which, as well as all his other works, abound with striking sentiments; have much elegance of diction, a copious variety of learning, and a lively animating spirit of evangelical piety.

‡ In this respect principally (says our author, enlarging upon the text) are believers complete; because though destitute of any righteousness, that may properly be called their own, CHRIST has graciously enriched them with his. Vid. DAVENANT in epist. ad Coloss. cap. ii. com. 10.

Let me beg leave to intimate, that this exposition of the epistle to the Colossians,—for perspicuity of style, and accuracy

Let me bring up the rear with a teſtimony, which, for clearneſs, ſolidity, and a full repreſentation of the evangelical doctrine, might very juſtly have claimed a place in the van. It is taken from an author, whom the general conſent of our nation has diſtinguiſhed with the title of Judicious. The judicious Hooker, in a treatiſe on juſtification, ſays,—"It is a childiſh cavil our "adverſaries ſo greatly pleaſe themſelves with, exclaim-"ing, that we tread all Chriſtian virtues under our feet; "becauſe we teach, That faith alone juſtifieth. Where-"as, by this ſpeech, we never meant to exclude either "hope or charity from being always joined as inſepar-"able mates with faith, in the man that is juſtified; or "works from being added, as neceſſary duties, required "of every juſtified man: but to ſhew, that faith is the "only hand, which putteth on CHRIST to juſtifica-"tion; and CHRIST the only garment, which being ſo "put on, covereth the ſhame of our defiled natures, "hideth the imperfection of our works, and preſerveth "us blameleſs in the ſight of GOD: before whom, other-"wiſe, the weakneſs of our faith were cauſe ſufficient "to make us culpable, yea, to ſhut us out of the king-"dom of heaven, where nothing that is not abſolute "can enter."

You will allow the ſagacious Biſhop Sanderſon * to ſum up the evidence; or rather to make an important remark on the whole of the controverſy. That great light of the church, both in caſuiſtical and practical divinity, obſerves,—"The tidings of a REDEEMER "muſt be bleſſed and welcome news, to thoſe that are "ſenſible of their own poverty, and take it of grace." Our eagle-eyed divine penetrates into the true cauſe of the prevailing averſeneſs to this evangelical doctrine. It is founded on the ſtate of the heart, more than upon any force of argument. People are but little, if at all, ſenſible of their ſpiritual and moral indigence; of the defects which depreciate, and the defilements which ſully, whatever they have, and whatever they do. Nay, ſtrongly tinctured with pride, they would be themſelves the Alpha, and ſuffer the bleſſed JESUS to be no more than the Omega, in procuring their eternal ſalvation. Therefore they can hardly be reconciled to the humbling character of an eleemoſynary; one why lives wholly upon the alms of the goſpel, and is dependent upon grace for his all.

Whereas, was this grand obſtacle once removed; were men convinced of ſin, of exceeding ſinfulneſs in their worſt eſtate, and of remaining ſinfulneſs in their beſt; they would ſoon be convinced of righteouſneſs †, of the abſolute neceſſity and ineſtimable worth of a REDEEMER's righteouſneſs. They would no longer diſpute againſt it, but cordially receive it; entirely rely on it; and adore the goodneſs, the tranſcendant and unutterable goodneſs of GOD, in providing it.

I think in one of our conferences, I undertook to produce my vouchers from the ancient fathers. Let me now ſubjoin two or three atteſtations of this kind. ——From one of which you will perceive, that thoſe early writers had a conſiderable degree of clearneſs upon the point. From the other you will ſee, that, far from rejecting the doctrine, they embrace it with delight and rapture. And if you will admit of the laſt, you cannot be ſtartled at any thing, which I ſhall advance upon the ſubject.——Let me only premiſe in general, that, if thoſe authors are not ſo copious and explicit, with regard to the imputation of active righteouſneſs; they abound in paſſages, which evince the ſubſtitution of CHRIST in our ſtead: Paſſages, which diſclaim all dependence on any duties of our own, and fix the hopes of a believer entirely upon the merits of his SAVIOUR. When this is the caſe, I am very little ſolicitous about any particular forms of expreſſion; and far from being angry, even though the words, which I think moſt ſignificant, are not retained.

Clemens,—an intimate acquaintance of St Paul's, and whoſe name was in the book of life *,—in his truly-excellent epiſtle to the Corinthians, aſſures that people †: We are not, in any reſpect or in any degree, juſtified by ourſelves, but wholly by JESUS CHRIST: not by our own wiſdom or prudence, which could never find out the way; not by the piety of our hearts, or works of righteouſneſs performed in our lives, which could never be ſufficient for the purpoſe; but by faith: the one invariable method, by which the almighty SOVEREIGN has juſtified all his people, ever ſince the world began.

Juſtin,—who was firſt a Gentile philoſopher, then an eminent Chriſtian, and at laſt a martyr for the truth,—ſpeaks more fully to the point ‡: What elſe could cover our ſins, but the righteouſneſs of JESUS CHRIST? By what poſſible means could we, unrighteous and unholy creatures, be juſtified, but only by the interpoſition of the SON of GOD in our behalf?—Having, in this clauſe, made a profeſſion of his faith, the good man, on the contemplation of ſuch a privilege, breaks out into a kind of holy tranſport. O SWEET AND DELIGHTFUL EXCHANGE! A diſpenſation unſearchably wiſe and gracious! Benefits, quite unexpected, and rich beyond all our hopes! that the ſin of many ſhould be hid by one righteous PERSON; and that the righteouſneſs of ONE ſhould juſtify many tranſgreſſors.

The following words are remarkably ſtrong, and the ſentiments peculiarly bold. But they come from the pen of the fineſt writer in eccleſiaſtical antiquity. They have the great name, and venerable character of St Chryſoſtom, for their recommendatory preface ‖:—Fear not, ſays he, on account of any of thy paſt tranſgreſſions of the law, when once thou haſt fled by faith to JESUS CHRIST. The moſt enormous and the moſt deſtructive violation of the law is, to be with-held, by the conſciouſneſs of any guilt whatever, from believing on CHRIST. When thou acteſt faith on him, thou haſt fulfilled, I might ſay, more than fulfilled the law. For thou haſt received a better righteouſneſs, than it could ever require: thou art poſſeſſed of a better obedience, than any creature could poſſibly pay.

Two or three witneſſes of diſtinguiſhed ability, and undoubted veracity, are a ſufficient confirmation of any cauſe. For this reaſon, and to avoid a tireſome prolixity, I have ſet aſide a multitude of voices; which, from the writings of our own and foreign divines, are ready to pour their united evidence.——And leſt the buſineſs of quotation, though ſparingly managed, ſhould ſeem dry and tedious; I will relieve your wearineſs, and enliven the collection, by an extract from the prince of Engliſh poetry.——Michael, the prophetic archangel, mentioning the deſtructive conſequences of the fall; and aſſerting the GODHEAD of method;—for judgment in diſcerning, and fidelity in repreſenting, the apoſtle's meaning, for ſtrength of argument in refuting errors, and felicity of invention in deducing practical doctrines, tending both to the eſtabliſhment of faith, and the cultivation of holineſs,—is, I think, inferior to no writing of the kind; and richly deſerves to be read, to be ſtudied, to be imitated, by our young divines.

* See his ſermon upon If. iii. 3. † John xvi. 8.

* Phil. iv. 3.

† Ου δι εαυτων δικαιουμεθα, ουδε δια της ημετερας σοφιας, η συνεσεως, η ευσεβειας, η εργων ων κατειργασαμεθα εν οσιοτητι καρδιας· αλλα δια της πιστεως, δι ης παντας τους απ' αιωνος ο παντοκρατωρ Θεος εδικαιωσεν. 1 Epiſt. ad Corinth. ——This quotation is explained, as well as tranſlated. But that every reader may diſtinguiſh the text from the paraphraſe, the firſt is printed in Italic, the laſt in Roman characters.

‡ Τι αλλο των αμαρτιων ημων ηδυνηθη καλυψαι, η τουτου δικαιοσυνη; Εν τινι διαιουθησαν δυναλον τας ανομιας ημων η ασεβειες, η εν τω υιω του Θεου; Ω ΤΗΣ ΓΑΥΚΕΙΑΣ ΚΑΤΑΛΛΑΓΗΣ, ω της ανεξιχνιαστου δημιουργιας, ω των απροσδοκητων δε ενος πολλους ανομους δικαιωσαι. Epiſt. ad Diogn.——Though Du Pin queſtions the authority of this epiſtle, he allows it to have been written by an ancient hand. Dr Cave, as capable a judge, thinks there is no reaſon to doubt, but it is the genuine work of Juſtin.

‖ Μη τοινυν φοβηθης, ως τον νομον παραβαινων, ενειδαν την πιστιν προσλαβη· τοτε γαρ αυτον παραβαινεις, ου δι' αυτα τα Χριστω μη πιστευσας· ως ου πιστευσας αυτω, καινην πληρωσας η πολλω πλειον η εκελευσε· πολλω γαρ μειζονα δικαιοσυνην ελαβες. Homil. XVII. in X. ad Rom.

of that glorious PERSON, who undertook to be the repairer of this deadly breach; adds,

Which HE, who comes thy SAVIOUR, shall secure,
Not by destroying Satan but his works,
In thee and in thy seed. Nor can this be,
But by fulfilling (that which thou didst want)
Obedience to the law of GOD, impos'd
On penalty of death; and suffering death,
The penalty to thy transgression due;
And due to theirs, which out of thine will grow,
So ONLY can high justice rest appaid *.

Here then is the expreſs determination of our Homilies,—ſupported by the authority of our Articles,—eſtabliſhed by the concurrence of our Liturgy,—ſtill farther ratified by the unanimous atteſtation of ſeveral celebrated Divines: whoſe lives were the brighteſt ornament to our church, and whoſe writings are the moſt unexceptionable interpretation of her meaning.——As a capital, to crown and complete this grand column, ſupervenes the declaration of the ancient Fathers, thoſe who flouriſhed, and with the higheſt renown, in the firſt and pureſt ages of Chriſtianity.——So that, if great authorities carry any weight; if illuſtrious names challenge any regard; this tenet comes attended and dignified with very conſiderable credentials.

Yet I will venture to affirm, that all theſe, conſiderable as they appear, are the leaſt of thoſe teſtimonials, which recommend the doctrine to my Theron's acceptance, and which have gained it admittance into the heart of,

His moſt affectionate,
ASPASIO.

* MILTON, book XII. 393.

LETTER IV.

ASPASIO to THERON.

Dear THERON,

THE family, in which I have the ſatisfaction to reſide, though remarkable for their genteel figure and ample fortune, are ſtill more amiably diſtinguiſhed by their benevolence, hoſpitality, and charity.——As they live at a diſtance from the market-town, the lady has converted one apartment of her houſe into a little diſpenſatory; and ſtocked it with ſome of the moſt common, the moſt needed, and moſt ſalutary medicines: which, in caſes of ordinary indiſpoſition, ſhe diſtributes to her indigent neighbours, with ſingular compaſſion, and with no ſmall ſucceſs.——This fine morning, Emilia has ordered ſome ſkilful hands into the fields, to cull their healing ſimples, and lay up a magazine of health for the afflicted poor. Camillus is withdrawn to receive his rents, and ſettle accounts with his tenants.

Suppoſe, we act in concert with theſe valuable perſons. Suppoſe, we range the delightful fields of ſcripture, and form a collection, not of ſalutiferous herbs, but of ineſtimable texts; ſuch as may be of ſovereign efficacy, to aſſuage the anguiſh of a guilty conſcience, and impart ſaving health to the diſtempered ſoul.——Suppoſe, we open the mines of divine inſpiration, and enrich ourſelves, not with the gold of Ophir, but with the unſearchable treaſures of CHRIST; or with that perfect righteouſneſs of our REDEEMER, which is incomparably more precious, than the revenues of a county, or the produce of Peru.

In pleading for imputed righteouſneſs, we have already urged the authority of our eſtabliſhed church, and the ſuffrage of her moſt eminent divines.——The opinion of excellent writers, which has been the reſult of much learning, great attention, and earneſt prayer, is no contemptible evidence. Yet we muſt always reſerve the caſting-voice, for thoſe infallible umpires, the prophets and apoſtles. If we receive, with a deferential regard, the witneſs of men; the witneſs of GOD is greater *, and challenges the moſt implicit ſubmiſſion.——Which remark naturally leads me to the intended ſubject of this epiſtle; or rather calls upon me to fulfil my late engagement, and ſhew,—that the above-mentioned doctrine is copiouſly revealed, through the whole proceſs of the ſcriptures.

Let me detach a very ſignificant portion from the epiſtle to the Romans; which, though little inferior to a deciſive proof, is produced only as an introduction to others. Now the righteouſneſs of GOD without the law is manifeſted, being witneſſed by the law and the prophets; even the righteouſneſs of GOD, which is by faith of JESUS CHRIST unto all, and upon all them that believe *. The righteouſneſs of GOD, ſignifies that righteouſneſs, which the incarnate GOD wrought out in his own all-gracious perſon †. It is ſtyled the righteouſneſs of GOD, by way of ſuperlative pre-eminence; in oppoſition to any righteouſneſs of our own, and in contradiſtinction to the righteouſneſs of all creatures whatever.——This righteouſneſs is without the law. Its efficacy has no dependence on, its merit receives no addition from, any conformity of our practice to the divine law; being complete, abſolutely complete in itſelf, and altogether ſufficient to procure the reconciliation and acceptance of ſinners.—This righteouſneſs is witneſſed by the law and the prophets; receives an uniform atteſtation from the various writings of the Old Teſtament. To inveſtigate which atteſtation, to examine its pertinency, and weigh its ſufficiency, is our preſent pleaſing buſineſs.

We may begin with that gracious declaration, made to the firſt tranſgreſſors: The ſeed of the woman ſhall bruiſe the ſerpent's head ‡; ſhall deſtroy the works of the devil, and retrieve whatever was loſt by his malicious artifices ‖. How could this be effected, but by reſtoring that righteouſneſs, which, for a while, our firſt parents poſſeſſed; which they ought always to have held faſt; but from which they ſo ſoon and ſo unhappily ſwerved?—Take the poſition in the right ſenſe, and Chriſtianity is, if not entirely, yet very nearly as old as the creation. It was comprehended in this bleſſed promiſe, as the ſtamina of the largeſt plants

* 1 John v. 9.

* Rom. iii. 21. 22.

† This explication, or ſomething to the ſame purpoſe, has occurred already. But it is hoped, the candid reader will not condemn the repetition, as a diſagreeable and jejune tautology.—Becauſe it is ſo conſonant to the practice of our great apoſtle, who repeats the term, reinculcates the doctrine, and hardly knows how to deſiſt from the favourite topic; like one, who was quite enamoured with the ſubject, who found muſic in the words, and whoſe happineſs was bound up in the bleſſing.——Becauſe it is conformable to another, and a greater example. The LORD JEHOVAH himſelf, within the compaſs of one chapter, once and again, yea, a third and a fourth time, ſtyles this wonderful obedience, My RIGHTEOUSNESS. As though the GOD of infinite perfection gloried in it; thought himſelf moſt eminently magnified by it; and was jealous to have all the honour reſulting from it. See Iſ. li.

‡ Gen. iii. 15.

‖ In ſome ſuch ſenſe, I think, our firſt parents muſt underſtand the promiſe. Otherwiſe it could yield them no effectual relief, under the diſtreſſing ſenſe of their own miſery, and the diſmal apprehenſion of their poſterity's ruin.

are

are contained in the ſubſtance of their reſpective ſeeds: every ſubſequent revelation being no more, than a gradual evolution of this grand evangelical principle; acting like the vegetative powers of nature, which, in rearing an oak with all its ſpread of branches, only expand the tunicles, and fill up the veſſels of the acorn.

This doctrine ſeems to have been typically taught, by the remarkable manner of clothing our firſt parents.—— All they could do for their own recovery, was like the patched and beggarly mantle of fig-leaves. This they relinquiſh, and GOD himſelf furniſhes them with apparel *. Animals are ſlain, not for food, but ſacrifice; and the naked criminals are arrayed with the ſkins of thoſe ſlaughtered beaſts. The victims figured the expiation of CHRIST's death; the clothing typified the imputation of his righteouſneſs.—— In perfect conformity, perhaps with a reference, to the paſſage thus interpreted, the apoſtle juſt now expreſſed himſelf; even the righteouſneſs of GOD, which is not only made over † to all believers, as a rich portion; but put † upon all, as a beautiful garment. Whereby alone their moral deformity can be covered, and their everlaſting confuſion prevented.—— Milton, it is certain, ſpeaking of this memorable tranſaction, conſiders it in the ſame ſpiritual ſenſe:

Nor HE their outward only with the ſkins
Of beaſts, but inward nakedneſs (much more Opprobrious!) with his robe of righteouſneſs Arraying, cover'd from his FATHER's ſight.

In thy ſeed, ſays the great JEHOVAH to his ſervant Abraham, ſhall all the nations of the earth be bleſſed ‡. That the ſeed here mentioned is CHRIST, the apoſtle ‖ places beyond all doubt. Both ſcripture and reaſon declare, that true bleſſedneſs muſt neceſſarily include—the pardon of ſins, and the favour of GOD,—the ſanctification of our ſouls, and the inheritance of life eternal. None of which are to be acquired by any human performances; but all are to be ſought, and all may be found, in the Root and Offſpring of Abraham, JESUS CHRIST: who is therefore moſt pertinently ſtyled, THE DESIRE OF ALL NATIONS §: the actual deſire of every enlightened nation; and the implicit deſire of all nations whatever: becauſe all, without any exception, covet, what is to be derived only from JESUS CHRIST the Righteous, real happineſs.

The patriarchal age, and the legal œconomy, bore their teſtimony to this truth, by typical perſons, emblematical miracles, and figurative uſages. Indeed, the whole ceremonial ſervice was a grand ſeries of types, repreſenting CHRIST and his everlaſting righteouſneſs. In all which this was the unanimous though ſilent language; Behold the LAMB of GOD, that taketh away the ſin of the world.——Theſe I ſhall not ſtay to diſcuſs, becauſe proofs of a more explicit and poſitive nature wait for our conſideration. Only I would juſt make a tranſient obſervation, relating to one very remarkable conſtitution in the Jewiſh ritual.

The high prieſt had, on the front of his mitre, a plate of pure gold, engraven with that venerable motto ¶, HOLINESS TO THE LORD; which was always to be on his forehead, when he performed the ſolemn miniſtrations of the ſanctuary; and for this important reaſon, that the people might be accepted before the LORD ‡. Did not this moſt clearly forethew the immaculate holineſs of our great HIGH PRIEST? and with equal clearneſs imply, that his holineſs ſhould procure acceptance for all his followers?

In the book of Job, we have ſeveral hints of this truth: and one paſſage very expreſs to our purpoſe.—— deſcribes an unconverted perſon, under the chaſtiſing hand of Providence. Whoſe life, through the extremity of his diſeaſe drew near to the grave; and his ſoul, through the multitude of his iniquities, was ready to become a prey to the deſtroyers. In this deplorable condition, if there be preſent with him, the MESSENGER * of the covenant of peace; that great INTERPRETER * of the divine counſels, who, for his ſuperexcellent wiſdom, is juſtly deemed one among a thouſand, or rather the chiefeſt among ten thouſand: if he, by his enlightening SPIRIT, vouchſafe to ſhew unto the afflicted man his own perfect righteouſneſs; that moſt meritorious uprightneſs, on which alone a ſinner may depend, both for temporal and eternal ſalvation: then the poor diſtreſſed creature, attentive to this inſtruction, and applying this righteouſneſs, is made partaker of pardon. GOD, the ſovereign LORD of life and death, is gracious unto him; and ſaith, in the greatneſs of his ſtrength, as well as in the multitude of his mercies, Deliver him from going down into the pit of corruption, as a pledge of his deliverance from the pit of perdition. For I have found a ranſom, ſufficient to ſatisfy my juſtice. I have received an atonement, in behalf of this once obnoxious, now reconciled tranſgreſſor.

But why do I ſelect one particular paragraph? It ſeems to be the main deſign of the whole book, to overthrow all pretenſions of any juſtifying righteouſneſs in man; that the wretched ſinner, nay, that the greateſt ſaint, ſtript of every perſonal plea, may rely, only on the merits of a REDEEMER. This is the final iſſue of all thoſe warm debates, which paſs between the afflicted hero and his cenſorious friends. This is the grand reſult of Elihu's calm reaſoning, and of GOD almighty's awful interrogatories. The apparent centre this †, in which all the lines terminate; juſtly therefore to be conſidered, as the principal ſcope of the whole work.

I muſt not omit an excellent obſervation, which I find in ſome critical and explanatory notes ‡ on the laſt words of David. The judicious author proving, that this ſong relates to CHRIST; that it diſplays the dignity of our REDEEMER, under the character of The KING, and The JUST ONE; adds as an explication of the laſt amiable and glorious title.——"Our LORD "JESUS CHRIST is ſo called, not ſo much for "having fulfilled all righteouſneſs, in his own perſon, "and performed an unſinning obedience to the will of "GOD, as becauſe, by his righteouſneſs imputed to us, "we alſo upon the terms ‖ of the goſpel, are juſtified, "or accounted righteous before GOD."

I think we may evidently diſcern the ſame vein of evangelical doctrine, running through many of the pſalms.——He ſhall convert § my ſoul; turn me, not only

* Gen. iii. 21.

†† Rom. iii. 22. ΕΙΣ παντας, ΕΠΙ παντας τους πιστευοντας.

‡ Gen. xxii. 18.

‖ See St Paul's comment upon this invaluable promiſe, Gal. iii. 8; &c. This commentator, we all allow, was guided by the SPIRIT, and knew the mind of GOD. According to his expoſition of the text, it is pregnant with the doctrine of juſtification by faith, and contains an abridgment of the goſpel.

§ Hag. ii. 7. ¶ Exod. xxviii. 36, 37. ‡ Exod. xxviii. 38.

 See Job xxxiii. 22. &c.—CHRIST is called מלאך The angel of the divine preſence, Iſ. lxiii. 9. The meſſenger of the covenant, Mal. iii. 1.—He is alſo, in the moſt unlimited ſenſe of the phraſe, מליץ The Interpreter of the divine counſels: he, to whom the FATHER hath given the tongue of the learned, and by whom he makes known the otherwiſe unſearchable myſteries of the goſpel.—Should any doubt remain concerning the propriety of applying this paſſage to our LORD JESUS CHRIST, the reader, I hope, will give himſelf the pleaſure of peruſing the polite Witſius Oecon. lib. IV. cap. iii. § xxxi. and Dr Grey's valuable notes upon the place, in his Liber Jobi.

† See Job xlii. 6. ‡ By Dr Grey. See 2 Sam. xxiii. 1. &c.

‖ That is, freely: or as the prophet ſpeaks without money and without price. For nothing is requiſite, in order to a participation of CHRIST and his benefits, but a conviction of our extreme need, and an unfeigned deſire to receive them; receive them as gifts of pure grace, vouchſafed to the moſt undeſerving creatures.—This point, which is ſo intimately connected with our comfort and hope, the reader may ſee more fully ſtated in Dialogue XV.

§ Pſal. xxiii. 3. I am ſenſible, the word נפשי may ſignify to refreſh or reſtore; may anſwer to the Greek phraſe and from sin and ignorance, but from every false confidence, and every deceitful refuge. He shall bring me forth in paths of righteousness, in those paths of imputed righteousness, which are always adorned with the trees of holiness; are always watered with the fountains of consolation; and always terminate in everlasting rest.—Some, perhaps, may ask, Why I give this sense to the passage? Why may it not signify the paths of duty, and the way of our own obedience?—Because such effects are here mentioned, as never have resulted, and never can result, from any duties of our own. These are not green pastures, but a parched and blasted heath. These are not still waters, but a troubled and disorderly * stream. Neither can these speak peace, or administer comfort, when we pass through the valley and shadow of death. To yield these blessings, is the exalted office of CHRIST, and the sole prerogative of his obedience.

Admitting, that this obedience is of sovereign advantage, during the years of life, and in the hour of death; it may still occur to the serious and inquisitive mind, what will be our safeguard, after the great change? When the soul departs, and our place on earth knows us no more; when the body revives, and we shall all stand before the judgment-seat; what will then avail us?—The same righteousness of our divine LORD. This, if I mistake not, is displayed in the very next psalm: which begins with a solicitous inquiry; subjoins a satisfactory answer, and closes with a most pertinent but rapturous apostrophe.——This is the inquiry, Who shall ascend into the hill of the LORD? or who shall rise up in his holy place?—This is the answer; Even he that hath clean hands, and a pure heart †. He shall receive ‡ the blessing of plenary remission from the LORD, and righteousness also from the GOD of his salvation: even that perfect righteousness, which is not acquired by man, but bestowed by JEHOVAH: which is not performed by the saint, but received by the sinner: which is the only solid basis, to support our hopes of happiness; the only valid plea, for an admission into the mansions of joy. Then follows the apostrophe. The prophet foresees the ascension of CHRIST and his saints into the kingdom of heaven. He sees his LORD marching at the head of the redeemed world, and conducting them into regions of honour and joy. Suitably to such a view, and in a most beautiful strain of poetry, he addresses himself to the heavenly portals; Lift up your heads, O ye gates, and be ye lift up, ye everlasting doors; and the King of glory, with all the heirs of his grace and righteousness, shall make their triumphant entry; shall enter in, and go out no more.

Having shewn the powerful and extensive influence of our REDEEMER's righteousness; its efficacy, in this world to justify, in the other world to glory; well may the sweet singer of Israel profess his supreme value for it, and entire dependance on it. I will go forth in the strength of the LORD GOD, and will make mention of thy righteousness only *. As though he had said, I will have recourse to no other righteousness, for the consolation of my soul. I will plead no other righteousness, for the recommendation of my person. I will fly to no other righteousness, for my final acceptance, and endless felicity.——This is that raiment of needle-work and clothing of wrought gold †, in which the King's daughter is introduced to HIM, "who sitteth in the heavens over all." This is that garment for glory and for beauty ‡, which clothed our great HIGH PRIEST; and descending to his very feet ‖, clothes and adorns the lowest members of his mystical body.

Recollecting all the foregoing particulars, justly, and on the most rational ground, does our royal author declare, Blessed are the people, that know the joyful sound; they shall walk, O LORD, in the light of thy countenance. In thy name shall they rejoice all the day; and in thy righteousness shall they be exalted §.——They are truly blessed, they alone are happy, who know the joyful sound of the gospel; not only receive it with their ears, but admit it into their very hearts; so as to partake of the sacred peace, and spiritual liberty, which it proclaims.——They shall walk in the light of thy countenance; they shall enjoy such communications of thy grace, and such manifestations of thy love, as will constitute the serenity and sunshine of their souls.—In thy name, O LORD JESUS CHRIST, in thy glorious person, and thy infinite merit, shall they rejoice: and not occasionally, but habitually; not barely at some distinguished intervals, but all the day. Their joy shall be as lasting, as it is substantial.——And in thy righteousness shall they be exalted, set above the tantalizing power of temporal things; placed beyond the slavish fear of the last enemy; and raised, when time shall be no more, to a state of celestial glory, and consummate bliss.

How thoroughly evangelical is this seraphic writer? He has joy, he has blessedness, and he looks for everlasting exaltation: yet not from his faith, his repentance, and his own sincere obedience. According to this, which is the modern scheme, faith, instead of receiving, would supplant the LORD JESUS; repentance, instead of being the gift of CHRIST, would become his rival; and sincere obedience, which is for the praise and glory of GOD, would eclipse and impoverish his grace.—But David adopts no such sentiments. David maintains no such doctrine. This is the invariable language of his heart, All my springs of hope, of trust, and consolation, O thou adored EMMANUEL, are in thee ¶.

This sense is the less precarious, I had almost said the more certain, as it exactly corresponds with the analogy of faith, and coincides with the express declarations of other scriptures.——Isaiah is styled the evangelist of the Jewish church; because more frequently and denote the comforts of the HOLY GHOST.—This verb may also bear the same signification with the participle ἐπιστρεψας, in our LORD's exhortation to Peter, when thou art converted. Not describing the first grand revolution in the heart, by which a new determination is given to the judgment, and a new bias to the affections; but expressing those subsequent operations of the Divine SPIRIT, by which we are recovered from our various relapses, and healed of our daily infirmities. And I question, whether there is any instance, in which we more frequently need these restoring aids, than in the case of adhering to our REDEEMER's righteousness. So prone are we to forget our resting-place! so liable to fall from our stedfastness in CHRIST!

* Blasted, disorderly—Let not these words grate on the ear; or if they grate on the ear, let them humble the heart. What were Job's duties? Zealous and exemplary; practised from his very youth; and neither excelled nor equalled by any person on earth. Yet these, in point of justification, were not a whit better than Aspasio represents. Let us hear the last words of this matchless saint, I abhor myself, and repent in dust and ashes. From this confession we learn, that, with all his furniture of personal obedience, he had just enough to be ashamed, confounded, undone.

† Psal. xxiv. 4. Who hath clean hands and a pure heart; he only, whose heart is sprinkled from an evil conscience, by the precious blood of CHRIST; and who lives by faith on the SON of GOD Heb. x. 22. Gal. ii. 20.

‡ The words of the apostle, ὁ λαμβανων την δωρεαν της δικαιοσυνης, are almost a literal translation, are the very best explanation, of the psalmist's language, נשא צדקה Rom. v. 17. Psal. xxiv. 5.

* Psal. lxxi. 16. There is, in the Hebrew original, and in the new translation, a very emphatical repetition; which adds weight to the sentiment, and demands a peculiar attention from the reader: Thy righteousness, even thine only.

† Psal. xlv. 13.

‡ Exod. xxviii. 31. Notabat, says WITSIUS upon the place, illud pallium justitiæ, quo indutus est, et suos induit CHRISTUS.

‖ Rev. i. 13. § Psal. lxxxix. 15. 16

¶ Psal. lxxxvii. 7.

than any of the prophets he celebrates, and more copiously explains, this and other peculiarities of the gospel.——In the very first chapter, he preaches these glad tidings: Zion shall be redeemed with judgment, and her converts with righteousness. Zion, the gospel-church, composed of fallen creatures, sometime disobedient to their GOD, and inslaved to Satan, shall be redeemed: redeemed, not with corruptible things, silver and gold, but by severe judgments executed on their glorious HEAD, and gracious REPRESENTATIVE: and not by these only, but by righteousness also; by the perfect and most meritorious righteousness of the same divinely-excellent PERSON †.

Our sacred author bears his testimony, with warmer zeal and brighter evidence, as he proceeds in his incomparable discourses. Surely, shall one say, (or, as it may be rendered, only) in the LORD have I righteousness and strength †. Please to observe, Theron; it is not said, in my own works, in my own repentance, no, nor in my own faith, but in the LORD JESUS have I righteousness:—righteousness for justification, and strength for sanctification: an imputed righteousness, to procure my acceptance; an imparted strength, to produce my holiness: the first constituting my title to the everlasting inheritance; the last forming my personal preparation for its enjoyment.—Surely, which expresses a firm persuasion, and an unshaken affiance. Only, which denotes an utter renunciation of all other confidence, and excludes every other ground of hope.—Righteousnesses ‡, the original is in the plural number: which seems to be used, not without an important design; to enlarge the significancy of the word, and make it correspond with the richness of the blessing: so that it may imply the fulness and super-eminent excellency of this gift of grace; as comprehending whatever ‖, either of suffering or of obedience, is requisite to the justification of sinners.—Insomuch that in the LORD JESUS CHRIST, and his all-perfect righteousness, the seed of Israel shall not only be justified, but rejoice; and not only confide, but glory §.

What he had just now asserted, he exemplifies in his own, and in the person of every true believer. I will greatly rejoice in the LORD, my soul shall be joyful in my GOD; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness ¶.—True believers are compared, in one of our sacred eclogues, to a company of horses in Pharaoh's chariot †: to horses, than which no animal is more stately and graceful; to Egyptian horses, which were the best and completest then in the world; to those in Pharaoh's chariot, which, doubtless, were a choice set, selected from thousands, and finest where all were fine. Here, methinks, I see the comparison realized. Christians, endued with such a spirit as breathes in this animated text, are like a collection of those gallant and majestic steeds; not destined to low drudgery, but appointed to run in the royal chariot; all life; full of fire; champing the bit, and eager for the chace. Nothing can more beautifully describe a state of exultation and ardour, than the preceding similitude, or the following words—I will rejoice; I will greatly rejoice; my very soul, and all that is within me, shall be joyful in my GOD. Wherefore? Because he has clothed me, undone sinner as I am, with the garments of salvation: because he hath covered me, defective as all my services are, with the robe of righteousness: A robe, which hides every sin, that in thought, word, or deed, I have committed: a robe, which screens from the sword of justice, the curse of the law, and all the vengeance my iniquities have deserved: a robe, which adorns and dignifies my soul; renders it fairer than the moon, clear as the sun, and meet for the inheritance of saints in light.

Having represented this righteousness, in a variety of grand and charming views,—the prophet farther characterizes it, as the unalterable and never-failing origin of our justification and happiness. This he displays by a train of images, bold and sublime to the last degree. Lift up your eyes to the heavens, and look upon the earth beneath: for the heavens shall vanish away like smoke, and the earth shall wax old like a garment; but my salvation shall be for ever, and my righteousness shall not be abolished *.——Observe the vast dimensions, and the firm foundations, both of the upper and the lower world. How strong, how stedfast, they all appear! Yet these, indissoluble as they may seem, shall perish.——This majestic globe, on which mountains rise and oceans roll, shall lose its beautiful gloss; and be laid aside, like a decayed useless garment. Even that more majestic concave, in which stars are fixed, and planets revolve, shall be deprived of its very superior lustre; and vanish away, like the dissolving smoke.—Whereas my salvation, with all the spiritual and heavenly blessings included in it, shall subsist and flourish for ever. And my righteousness, which is the meritorious cause of all, shall be an immoveable foundation for repose and happiness.—In short, whether there be moral virtues, they shall be found wanting; whether there be Christian graces, they shall prove ineffectual; but my conformity to the law, and my obedience unto death, neither need addition, nor admit of change; they are all-sufficient in their merit, and in their virtue everlasting.

When day arises on our benighted hemisphere, it breaks and spreads by a gradual increase: forming, first, the grey twilight; next the blushing morn; then the shining light; till all is heightened into the blaze and glow of noon.—When spring revisits our wintry clime, she also advances by gentle degrees: first, swells the bud, and protrudes the gem; then, expands the leaf, and unfolds the blossom; the face of things is continually changing for the better; and nature shews herself, almost every hour, in some new and more engaging dress.—This leisurely process renders the strong effulgence of the celestial orb more supportable; and the lovely expansions of the vegetable creation, more observable.

So progressive and increasing are the displays of JESUS CHRIST, exhibited in the scriptures: whose appearance is unspeakably more delightful to the soul, than the emanations of orient light are to the eye, or the entertainments of the vernal season to our other senses.—The gloom of fallen Adam was alleviated by a ray from this SUN OF RIGHTEOUSNESS.—Abraham and the patriarchs saw afar off the blessed JESUS, as the morning spread upon the mountains †.—The psalmist and the prophets beheld his nearer approaches, like the sun upon the point of rising.—To the apostles and evangelists he arose, in perfect lustre, and complete beauty. The grace and the privileges, which dawned under other dispensations of religion, are brought even to meridian light by the gospel.—This I mention, just to intimate, what you may expect from a following letter.

In the mean time, let us attend to the prophet Daniel. He records a message from heaven, which is more clearly descriptive of this great evangelical blessing, than all the foregoing texts.——He had been under much distress, and in great perplexity; afflicted

* Hanc redemptionem docet SPIRITUS SANCTUS habere nos in obedientia et sanguine JESU CHRISTI. Is. li. 27. VITRING. in loc. † Is. xlv. 24.

‡ The parallel to which, both in construction and signification, is the phrase used by St John, Δικαιωματα, Rev. xix. 8. The fine linen is the righteousness (properly the righteousnesses) of the saints.

‖ Vult dicere propheta, in JEHOVAH esse ID PROPTER QUOD peccator resipiscens et credens, a peccatis absolvi, et jure ad benedictionem cœlestem donari queat ac debeat: esse illud JEHOVÆ proprium; ab ipso quærendum; quod extra ipsum non invenitur. VITRING.

§ Is. xlv. 25. ¶ Is. lxi. 10. † Cant. i. 9.

* Is. li. 6. † Joel ii. 2.

for

for his own, and his countrymen's ſins; anxious for the welfare of the choſen nation, and the proſperity of true religion. When an angel was diſpatched to the holy mourner, with this moſt chearing news; which, received by faith, is the richeſt balm to a wounded conſcience, and the only remedy for a guilty world: Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city; to finiſh the tranſgreſſion, and make an end of ſin; to make reconciliation for iniquity; and to bring an everlaſting righteouſneſs *.——This propheey relates to the MESSIAH. It foretels, that, in the fulneſs of time, he ſhould finiſh the tranſgreſſion ‡; reſtrain and ſuppreſs the power of corruption, by purifying to himſelf a peculiar people: —ſhould make an end of ſin ‡; by ſealing up or ſecreting its guilt, and totally aboliſhing its condemning power: —ſhould make reconciliation for iniquity, by ſuſtaining the vengeance due to ſinners, and fully ſatisfying the divine juſtice for all their offences:—ſhould not barely publiſh, but accompliſh and bring in a righteouſneſs ‖; that it may be preſented both to GOD and man; to GOD, for the reparation of his violated law; to man, for the juſtification of his obnoxious perſon:—That this righteouſneſs ſhould be everlaſting; not ſuch as may be compared to the morning-cloud, which paſſeth away; or to the early dew, which is ſoon dried up; but ſuch as will outlaſt the hills, on which the latter ſhines; and outlaſt the ſkies, through which the former fails: A righteouſneſs, whoſe merits extend to every period and every action of our lives; and when once made ours by imputation, remains and will remain our unalienable property.——To this all the ſaints, who, in ancient generations, pleaſed GOD, owe their acceptance; on this, all the children of men, who, in future ages, hope for his mercy, muſt rely; by this the whole aſſembly of the bleſſed will be invariably and eternally precious in his ſight.——Exalted character! Can it be applicable to any thing leſs, than the righteouſneſs of the incarnate GOD? Surely none can imagine, that Daniel would ſpeak in ſuch a magnificent ſtrain of any human righteouſneſs; ſince, in this very chapter, he profeſſedly depretiates himſelf, his fellow-ſaints, all human performances whatever.

I forgot, in the proper place, to conſult the prophet Jeremiah. Let us now refer ourſelves to his determination. Celebrating the SAVIOUR of Judah and Iſrael, he ſays, This is his name, whereby he ſhall be called, The LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS: A determination, ſo clear and ſatisfactory, as not to leave, one would almoſt conclude, any room for appeal.——Should the ſenſe of the paſſage be queſtioned, I think, there cannot be a more authentic explication, than the preceding extracts from Iſaiah and Daniel. And having the unanimous atteſtation of two inſpired penmen, we may venture to abide by ſuch authority, even in oppoſition to ſome reſpectable names.——In the verſe immediately foregoing, the eſſential holineſs of the REDEEMER is diſplayed, under the character of the RIGHTEOUS BRANCH.——The ſanctity, which he will impart to his ſubjects, is intimated by his executing judgment and juſtice in the earth.——In the clauſe we have quoted, his imputed righteouſneſs is foretold and promiſed.——Thus the ſeveral ſentences are diſtinct; the deſcription of the SAVIOUR is complete; and he appears perfectly ſuited to the exigencies of a wretched world; in their worſt eſtate, enſlaved to Satan, and in their beſt, falling ſhort of the glory of GOD.——This therefore I take to be the grand and extenſive meaning of the propliet; not barely, the righteous LORD; not barely, the LORD who infuſes righteouſneſs into ſinful ſouls; but the incarnate JEHOVAH *, whoſe mediatorial righteouſneſs is, by an act of gracious imputation, ours,—to all the intents of juſtification and ſalvation; ours,—as much ours for theſe bleſſed purpoſes, as if we had wrought it out, each in his own perſon †.

Foreſeeing and contemplating theſe bleſſings, the enraptured Zechariah cries out, Rejoice greatly, O daughter of Zion; ſhout, O daughter of Jeruſalem; behold, thy King cometh unto thee: he is juſt, and having ſalvation, lowly and riding upon an aſs, and upon a colt the foal of an aſs ‡.—— He addreſſes himſelf to Zion and Jeruſalem, to the eccleſiaſtical and civil community. Perſons of all ranks and of every character, are exhorted to rejoice; greatly; nay, to expreſs the joy of their heart, by loud Hallelujahs, and triumphant exclamations.——What is the cauſe of this general delight? what can fill both church and ſtate with ſuch high ſatisfaction? Thy King cometh unto thee: even thy glorious KING, who rules in heaven, and rules in the heart; whoſe ſervice is freedom, and whoſe laws are love.——He is juſt: divinely righteous in his nature, and he cometh to fulfil all righteouſneſs in thy ſtead. Having ſalvation: hereby procuring ſalvation for his people; deliverance from ſin, from death and hell; from every evil thou deſerveſt, and from every miſery thou feareſt.——That none may be diſcouraged, and none deterred, from applying to this PRINCE of peace, he is, amidſt all the honours of his ſovereignty, lowly: does not abhor the baſeſt, will not deſpiſe the meaneſt; to the poor his goſpel is preached, and for the guilty his benefits are intended.——As an emblem, as a proof, of this moſt amiable and condeſcending goodneſs, he will ride; not like the conquerors of old, in a triumphal chariot, or on a richly-capariſoned ſteed; but upon the moſt mean and deſpicable of all animals, an aſs; nay, what is ſtill more deſpicable, on a rude undiſciplined colt, the wayward foal of an aſs ‖.

* Dan. ix. 24. † כלא ‡ תחם

‖ ברך I think, muſt ſignify more than to publiſh or preach. Had this been all that the angel was commiſſioned to declare, הגד or נגד would probably have been uſed.—The word implies ſuch a bringing in (the original is the ſame) as when Abel brought his ſacrifice to the altar, for the divine acceptance; and Eſau brought his veniſon into the chamber, for his father's uſe, Gen. xxvii. 31.

* Jer. xxiii. 5. 6. In theſe golden, infinitely-better than golden verſes, are characterized the divine and the human natures of CHRIST, together with his mediatorial office. The divine nature; in that he enjoys the honours of the GODHEAD, and poſſeſſes the incommunicable name JEHOVAH.—The human nature; in that he was to be raiſed up unto David, and ſpring as a branch from his root.—The mediatorial office; in that he is the righteouſneſs of his people, and the ſalvation of ſinners.

† Witſius, ſpeaking of the mediatorial righteouſneſs, has written in Latin, what Aſpaſio expreſſes in Engliſh; Per illam obedientiam tota multitudo illorum, qui ad ipſum pertinent, juſti conſtituuntur; id eſt, cenſentur jus habere ad æternam vitam, non minus quam ſi quilibet eorum in propria perſona illam obedientiam præſtitiſſet. Lib. II. cap. v.

‡ Zech. ix. 9.

‖ Becauſe ſome profane ſcoffers have preſumed to ridicule this very remarkable incident of our LORD's life, ſome interpreters of note have endeavoured to reſcue it from their abuſive attempts, by obſerving,—"That the eaſtern aſſes are much larger and more "graceful than ours; that patriarchs and judges thought it no "diſgrace to ride upon them."

This obſervation has, I fear, more of falſe delicacy, than of real truth, or Chriſtian ſimplicity. In the partriarchal ages, I acknowledge, perſons of high diſtinction thought it no diſhonour, in their journeys and proceſſions, to appear on this animal. But I very much queſtion, whether the ſame faſhion ſubſiſted, or the ſame way of thinking prevailed, in the reign of Tiberius Cæſar. See Jam. iii. 3.——Nay, I am ſtrongly inclined to ſuſpect, that this plain primitive cuſtom was ſuperſeded, even in the days of Zechariah. For long before this time I find, that Solomon had four thouſand ſtalls of horſes for his chariots, and twelve thouſand horſemen: and that horſes were brought to him out of Egypt, and divers other countries, 1 Kings iv. 26. x. 28. 29. From this period, it is probable, none but the poor and inferior ſort of people rode upon aſſes.——When Iſaiah propheſied, the land was full of horſes, Iſ. ii. 7. Under the Perſian monarchy, when Zechariah flouriſhed, horſes were

in

And now,—since my Theron confesses himself to be miserable, and poor, and naked; since the eyes of his understanding are enlightened, to see the impurity of his heart; the imperfection of his righteousness; and that he is, in himself, a lost undone sinner,—what advice, chearing and salutary, shall I suggest? O! let him listen to an ADVISER, infinitely more able and compassionate; listen to HIM, who is the ANCIENT OF DAYS, and the WISDOM OF GOD; I counsel thee, says the blessed JESUS, to buy of me gold tried in the fire, that thou mayst be rich; and white raiment, that thou mayest be clothed *.—Gold! what can this denote, but all those spiritual treasures, which are hid in CHRIST? which are, in measure, unsearchable; in value, inestimable; in duration, eternal.——White raiment! Surely this must signify the righteousness of our REDEEMER; which is all purity, and all perfection; which clothes the soul, as a most suitable and commodious garment; which covers every deformity and every sin; and presents the believer, free from shame, and free from blemish, before the throne of the MAJESTY in the heavens.

This, to use the delicate language, and amiable images of Isaiah,—this doctrine, embraced by a realizing faith, is the only pillow of rest, wherewith ye may cause the weary and heavy-laden soul to find repose; and this is the sovereign cordial, prepared by infinite mercy, for the refreshment of anxious and desponding transgressors. O! let us not be in the number of those proud and refractory creatures, who, though they infinitely needed, yet would not bear † the gracious news, nor receive the unspeakable benefit.——In this respect, and in this most eminently, is that other saying of the same sublime teacher, true; The LORD of hosts shall be for a crown of glory, and for a diadem of beauty, to the residue of his people ‡. Shall we tear from our temples, or reject with disdain this unfading and heavenly ornament, in order to substitute a mean and tawdry chaplet of our own.

Let me add a pertient passage from one of our celebrated dramatic writers; which if proper in his sense, will be incomparably more so, according to our manner of application.

——It were contemning,
With impious self-sufficient arrogance,
This beauty of our GOD, not to accept,
With every mark of honour, such a gift.

I might proceed to urge this expostulation of the poet, as I might easily have multiplied my quotations from holy writ. But, studious of brevity, I leave both, without farther enlargement, to your own meditation. Yet, more studious of my friend's happiness, I cannot conclude without wishing him an interest, a clear and established interest, in this everlasting righteousness of CHRIST. For so, and so only, can he have everlasting consolation and good hope through grace.——I am, my dear Theron,

Inviolably yours,

ASPASIO.

P. S. Opposite to the room in which I write, is a most agreeable prospect of the gardens and the fields; these covered with herbage, and loaded with corn; those adorned with flowers, and abounding with esculents: all appearing with so florid and so beautiful an aspect, that they really seem, in conformity to the psalmist's description, even to laugh and sing.——Let me just observe, that all these fine scenes, all these rich productions sprung,—from what? From the dissolution of the respective seeds. The seeds planted by the gardener, and the grain sowed by the husbandman, first perished in the ground, and then the copious increase arose.

Much in the same manner, a true faith in CHRIST and his righteousness arises—from what? From the ruins of self-sufficiency, and the death of personal excellency. Let me therefore entreat my Theron, still to take the diary for his counsellor; still to keep an eye on the depravity of his nature, and the miscarriages of his life. The more clearly we see, the more deeply we feel, our guilt and our misery, the more highly shall we value the obedience of our blessed SURETY.——In such a heart faith will flourish as a rose, and lift up its head like a cedar in Lebanon. To such a soul, the great REDEEMER's righteousness will be welcome, as waters to the thirsty soil, or as rivers in the sandy desert.

in still greater repute. Well therefore might the prophet say, with wonder and delight,—lowly and riding upon an ass!

Was it a mean attitude? exceedingly mean? mean even to contempt? I make no scruple to grant it: nay, I make my boast of it! It is for the honour of my LORD's condescension; it is for utter confusion of all worldly pomp and grandeur; and it is for the unspeakable comfort of my sinful soul.——Most charming humility! most endearing gentleness! HE, who rideth upon the heavens as it were upon an horse, and maketh the clouds his chariot, to atone for my pride, and to encourage my hope, disdained not, in the days of his flesh, to ride upon an ass.

They who would dignify this action, any otherwise than from its ever-to-be-admired abasement, seem to have forgotten the stable and the manger. They who are offended at this circumstance, and ashamed to own their LORD in his deep humiliation, have but very imperfectly learned the apostle's lesson; GOD forbid, that I should glory, save in the cross of CHRIST JESUS my LORD.

* Rev. iii. 18. † Is. xxviii. 12. ‡ Is. xxviii. 5.

LETTER V.

ASPASIO to THERON.

Dear THERON,

GIVE me leave to relate an uncommon accident, which happened a little while ago in this neighbourhood, and of which I myself was a spectator.——The day was the sabbath; the place appropriated to divine worship, was the scene of this remarkable affair.

A boy came running into the church, breathless and trembling. He told, but in a low voice, those who stood near, that a press-gang * was advancing to besiege the doors, and arrest the sailors.——An alarm was immediately taken. The seamen, with much hurry, and no small anxiety, began to shift for themselves. The rest of the congregation, perceiving an unusual stir, were struck with surprise.——A whisper of inquiry ran from seat to seat; which increased, by degrees, into a confused murmur. No one could inform his neighbour; therefore every one was left

* The reader, it is hoped, will excuse whatever may appear low, or favour of the plebeian, in any of these circumstances. If Aspasio had set himself to invent the description of a panic, he would probably have formed it upon some more raised and dignified incident. But as this was a real matter of fact, which happened in one of our sea-port towns; truth even in a plain dress may possibly be no less acceptable than fiction tacked up with the most splendid embellishments.

ſolve the appearance, from the ſuggeſtions of a timorous imagination. Some ſuſpected the town was on fire. Some were apprehenſive of an invaſion from the Spaniards. Others looked up, and looked round, to ſee if the walls were not giving way, and the roof falling upon their heads.—In a few moments, the conſternation became general. The men ſtood like ſtatues, in ſilent amazement, and unavailing perplexity. The women ſhrieked aloud; fell into fits; ſunk to the ground in a ſwoon. Nothing was ſeen, but wild diſorder; nothing heard, but tumultuous clamour.——Drowned was the preacher's voice. Had he ſpoke in thunder, his meſſage would ſcarce have been regarded. To have gone on with his work, amidſt ſuch a prodigious ferment, had been like arguing with a whirlwind, or talking to a tempeſt.

This brought to my mind that great tremendous day, when the heavens will paſs away; when the earth will be diſſolved; and all its inhabitants receive their final doom.—If, at ſuch incidents of very inferior dread, our hearts are ready to fail; what unknown and inconceivable aſtoniſhment muſt ſeize the guilty conſcience, when the hand of the ALMIGHTY ſhall open thoſe unparalleled ſcenes of wonder, deſolation, and horror!—when the trumpet ſhall ſound,—the dead ariſe,—the world be in flames,—the JUDGE on the throne,—and all mankind at the bar!

The trumpet ſhall ſound *, ſays the prophetic teacher. And how ſtartling, how ſtupendous the ſummons! Nothing equal to it, nothing like to it, was ever heard through all the regions of the univerſe, or all the revolutions of time.—When conflicting armies have diſcharged the bellowing artillery of war, or when victorious armies have ſhouted for joy of the conqueſt, the ſeas and ſhores have rung, the mountains and plains have echoed. But the ſhout of the archangel and the trump of GOD, will reſound from pole to pole; will pierce the centre, and ſhake the pillars of heaven. Stranger, ſtranger ſtill! it will penetrate even the deepeſt receſſes of the tomb. It will pour its amazing thunder into all thoſe abodes of ſilence. The dead, the very dead, ſhall hear.

When the trumpet has ſounded, the dead ſhall ariſe.—In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, the graves open, the monumental piles are cleft aſunder, and the nations under-ground ſtart into day. What an immenſe harveſt of men and women, ſpringing up from the caverns of the earth, and the depths of the ſea! Stand a while, my ſoul, and conſider the wonderful ſpectacle.——Adam formed in paradiſe, and the babe born but yeſterday, the earlieſt ages, and lateſt generations, meet upon the ſame level. Jews and Gentiles, Greeks and Barbarians, people of all climes and languages, unite in the promiſcuous throng. Here thoſe vaſt armies, which, like ſwarms of locuſts, covered countries; which, with an irreſiſtible ſweep over-run empires; here they all appear, and here they all are loſt; loſt like the ſmall drop of a bucket, when plunged into the unfathomable and boundleſs ocean.—O! the multitudes! the multitudes! which theſe eyes ſhall ſurvey, when GOD calleth the heavens from above, and the earth, that he may judge his people. What ſhame muſt fluſh the guilty cheek! what anguiſh wound the polluted breaſt! to have all their filthy practices, and infamous tempers, expoſed before this innumerable croud of witneſſes! Fly, my Theron; and fly, my ſoul; inſtantly let us fly, earneſtly let us fly, to the purifying blood of JESUS; that all our ſins may be blotted out; that we may be found unblameable and unreproveable, in the preſence of the aſſembled world; and, what is infinitely more to be revered, in the ſight of the omnipotent GOD.

When the ſwarm iſſues, the hive will burn. There is no more need of this habitable globe. The elect have fought the good fight, and finiſhed their courſe. The wicked have been tried, and found incorrigible. The important drama is ended: every actor has performed his part: now therefore the ſcenes are taken down, and the ſtage is demoliſhed.——Woe be to the earth, and to the works thereof! Its ſtreams are turned into pitch, its duſt into brimſtone; and the breath of the ALMIGHTY, like a torrent of fire, enkindles the whole. See! ſee! how the conflagration rages,—ſpreads,—prevails over all! The foreſts are in a blaze, and the mountains are wrapt in flame. Cities, kingdoms, continents, ſink in the burning deluge. London, Britain, Europe are no more. Through all the receptacles of water, through all the tracts of land, through the whole extent of air, nothing is diſcernable, but one vaſt, prodigious, fiery ruin.——Where now are the treaſures of the covetous? where the poſſeſſions of the mighty? where the delights of the voluptuary?—How wiſe, how happy are they, whoſe portion is lodged in heavenly manſions! Their inheritance is incorruptible and undefiled; ſuch as the laſt fire cannot reach, nor the diſſolution of nature impair.

But ſee! the azure vault cleaves; the expanſe of heaven is rolled back like a ſcroll; and the JUDGE, the JUDGE appears! He cometh, cries a mighty ſeraph, the herald of his approach, he cometh to judge the world in righteouſneſs, and miniſter true judgment unto the people!—He cometh, not as formerly, in the habit of a ſervant, but clad with uncreated glory, and magnificently attended with the armies of heaven. Angels and Archangels ſtand before him, and ten thouſand times ten thouſand of thoſe celeſtial ſpirits miniſter unto him.——Behold him, ye faithful followers of the LAMB; and wonder and love. This is HE, who bore all your iniquities on the ignominious croſs. This is HE, who fulfulled all righteouſneſs for the juſtification of your perſons.——Behold him, ye deſpiſers of his grace; and wonder and periſh. This is HE, whoſe merciful overtures you have contemned, and on whoſe precious blood you have trampled.

The great white throne *, beyond deſcription auguſt and formidable, is erected. The KING of heaven, the LORD of glory, takes his ſeat on the dreadful tribunal. Mercy, on his right hand, diſplays the olive-branch of peace, and holds forth the crown of righteouſneſs. Juſtice, on his left, poiſes the impartial ſcale, and unſheaths the ſword of vengeance. While Wiſdom and Holineſs, brighter than ten thouſand ſuns, beam in his divine aſpect.——What are all the preceding events, to this new ſcene of dignity and awe? The peals of thunder, ſounding in the archangels trumpet; the blaze of a burning world, and the ſtrong convulſions of expiring nature; the unnumbered myriads of human creatures, ſtarting into inſtantaneous exiſtence, and thronging the aſtoniſhed ſkies; all theſe ſeem familiar incidents, compared with the appearance of the incarnate JEHOVAH.——Amazement, more than amazement, is all around. Terror and glory unite in their extremes. From the ſight of his majeſtic eye, from the inſupportable ſplendors of his face, the earth itſelf and the very heavens flee away †.——How then? oh! how ſhall the ungodly ſtand? ſtand in his angry preſence, and draw near to this conſuming fire?

